1. PATRICK BOWMAN, otherwiſe called JOHN YOUNG, otherwiſe JOHN BOWMAN was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting John Spicer, in a certain field and open place, near the King's highway, on the 23d of October laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſilver watch, value 30s. a ſteel watch chain, value 12d. one ſteel key, value 2d. two ſilk handkerchiefs, value 4s. two pair of worſted ſtockings, value 4s. one linen ſhirt, value 2s. and one man's hat, value 12d. the property of the ſaid John Spicer.

JOHN

Court. What are you?—I am a farmer's ſervant, I am now in the hoſpital; at the time this robbery happened, I was ſeeking after a place; it was on a Thurſday night in October, ſeven weeks ago to day, I was at Bethnall-green, about ſix at night, there were two more in company with me, the priſoner was one, and one Auſtin, who has been executed, was the other.

Was you ſober or in liquor?—Very ſober, Sir, as I am now, they pretended to take me out of London to get me a good lodging, and they took me into this field, one of them ſat down to do his occaſions, and the other took my bundle.

Was it near the high road?—Yes.

Was there any path?—No path, Sir, that I ſaw, while one ſtopped to eaſe himſelf, the other took me to the corner of the field that looked over the hedge, and ſaid we cannot get over here, and then we went by this man that was doing his occaſions, I ſaid that is a nice place for you, then the priſoner took me up to this corner, I ſaid this is a comical place to carry me to for lodgings, upon my ſaying that, the priſoner immediately drew a cutlaſs from under his ſmock frock, and ſwore he would cleave me down if I did not deliver what I had, and he kept cutting away upon me as hard as he could cut, he gave me ſeveral wounds on my head, and hands, and on my leg, then I cloſed with him, and got his head under my arm, that he could not cut me any more, and I called to the other man, that is hung, Auſtin, to come to aſſiſt me, and he came up, I ſaid to him (for we had travelled together two days) I ſaid John, I hope you will help me, you will not be againſt me, will you? and with that he caught hold of the handkerchief I had on, and put it round my legs, and flung me down upon my back.

Where did you travel from?—From the Coach and Horſes at Ilford.

Did he take your handkerchief off your neck?—Yes, Sir.

Had you travelled with the priſoner alſo?—No, I never ſaw him before the evening that the miſchief was done.

Where did the priſoner join the other man?—At the White Swan, ſomewhere in London, almoſt over againſt Rag-fair, then the priſoner tied my hands, and the other ſtood at my head, and the priſoner ſwore he would cut my throat from ear to ear; and juſt as they had done tying my hands, there happened to be a gardner come up to the hedge at the inſtant, and he ſaid, what are you after? and I ſaid, for the Lord's ſake, come and help me, and they both run away, and he run after them, and would have taken them, but they turned again, and he took me up, and brought me to his maſter's.

Was you robbed when you was upon the ground?—When I was upon the ground, they took the watch out of my pocket.

Before the gardner came up?—Yes.

Which took the watch out of your pocket?—It was the priſoner I think.

Did you loſe any money?—No, I loſt no money, I never got my watch again.

When was this priſoner taken up?—The month after.

Where was he taken?——In Wapping.

Was it a light night or a dark night?—It was darkiſh, it was not over light, nor over dark when the miſchief was done, one could not ſee a great way.

How long had you been in company with the priſoner before this miſchief happened?—Two or three hours.

Has you ever parted company in the courſe of this two or three hours?—No.

Are you poſitive ſure of the man?——Yes, Sir, I am.

Did you ſee him while it was light?—Yes, Sir, we eat and drank together.

Did you part company with him at all afterwards?—No, Sir, not out of my ſight.

Do you mean to ſwear poſitively and directly that is the man?—Yes, Sir.

Have you any doubt about it?—No, Sir, I have no doubt at all.

He never was out of your ſight you ſay?—No, Sir.

You was ſober, I think, you ſay?—Yes, Sir, as ſober as I am at this time.

Priſoner. What do you ſwear to me by?—By ſeeing him, and by his ſpeech I can ſwear to him.

Priſoner. The gardner did not know me.

On that evening about ſix o'clock I heard the proſecutor crying out for help in a field near Mr. Wells's ground in Bethnall-green, I went to the man's aſſiſtance, I came to the hedge and I ſaw two men upon one, I ſaid halloo, and immediately they both got up and run away, I jumped over the hedge and ran after them; when I came to them, they turned upon me, one with a cutlaſs, and the other with a ſtick of ſome ſort.

Which had the cutlaſs?—I cannot ſay which, it was rather dark, ſo I turned back again; they ſaid they would do for me if I did not go away, I came back and picked the man up, and had him home, and waſhed his wounds, and had him to the hoſpital.

Was he much wounded?——Yes, my Lord, he had ſeveral cuts over the backs of his hands, and three or four on his head, and one on his leg.

Court to Proſecutor. How long was you in the hoſpital?—I have been there ever ſince.

Are not you cured?—I am from under the doctor's hands at preſent, but not diſcharged.

Court to Strong. Have you any recollection of that priſoner?—No, I cannot ſwear to him, it was too dark to ſwear to him.

I can ſay nothing reſpecting Bowman, any further than what Auſtin the other priſoner that was executed told me.

Priſoner. That is not my name, I never went by that name in my life, the gardner ſays he can ſay nothing againſt me, the proſecutor ſays, he ſwears to my voice, pleaſe to aſk him what dreſs I had on.

Proſecutor. He had a long ſmock frock on, and a pair of boots.

Strong. He had a ſmock frock, but I did not obſerve whether he had boots.

Court to Strong. When you came to the aſſiſtance of Spicer was he perfectly ſober?—He appeared to be very ſober what I could ſee of him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When I was apprehended, I was in the lock up room, I went into the back place, and I was walking about hand-cuffed; the proſecutor did not ſeem to take any account of me, I was put back for about an hour, and in about an hour after, he ſaid, he believed he could ſwear to me.

When they brought the proſecutor down to the King's Arms where the priſoner was, I let the priſoner out of the lock up room, and as ſoon as ever he clapped his eyes on him, ſays he, that is the man that cut me, and robbed me.

Priſoner. I am a poor lad, I was brought up in the the Foundling Houſe, I have not a friend in the world.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, the whole of this caſe depends on the credit you pleaſe to give to the witneſs John Spicer; if you are ſatisfied (and he has told you that he was ſober, and ſo the witneſs Strong ſays) that he is not miſtaken in the man, and that this priſoner was one of the men who committed this robbery upon him, there can then be no ſort of doubt of the verdict you muſt give; the only conſideration with you is, whether, as it reſts intirely on his ſingle evidence, you will think that ſufficient; now you find in the firſt place, he was perfectly ſober, in the next place he had been in company with this man for two or three hours before, it was not an accidental caſual meeting of a moment or two, as is frequently the caſe when a robbery is committed, he had eaten and drank with him, and he poſitively ſwears that he never had been out of his company ſo as to loſe ſight of him; you find too, that though Strong cannot confirm him as to ſwearing poſitively to the man himſelf, he very cautiouſly and properly declines that being ſo dark, and having only that momentary opportunity of ſeeing him, which is generally the caſe; yet he confirms Spicer in this, that one of the men had a cutlaſs and one had a ſmock-frock on.

Priſoner. The man ſays, he was in my company ſo many hours, he muſt certainly know whether I had a hanger about me or no.

Court. As to that gentlemen, we know very well that theſe kind of men do carry their cutlaſſes about them concealed under their coats, if you have ſerved on Juries here before, I dare ſay you muſt have ſeen that they carry them looſe within the coat, without a ſcabbard, and it is by no means impoſſible that the man might have ſat with him for hours, and not have diſcovered this; it may however have ſome weight with you, but if you think he is clear as to the man, and there is no miſtake at all in it, then to be ſure there can be no doubt at all of the caſe: but if you have any doubt you will acquit him.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. The man ſhould be acquainted that in all probability his execution will be ſpeedy; ſet him up again.

Mr. Baron Hotham. Patrick Bowman: we ſent for you again, not meaning now to paſs ſentence on you, the Recorder will do that, but we think in humanity to you it is right to apprize you, that your crime is of ſuch a nature, that you cannot hope for mercy, and it is highly probable, juſtice muſt be done upon you in the courſe of a very few days; and therefore, as you have but a ſhort time to live, it will behove you to make the beſt uſe of that time.

Priſoner. I am really no ſcholar, I never was brought up to any ſchool.

Mr. Baron Hotham. You will have all the aſſiſtance that can be given you from religion and humanity by the ordinary of this place; therefore apply to him.

Priſoner, kneeling. Lord bleſs me, Sir, do let me have time to make my peace with the Almighty, do, will you.

Court. It does not lay with us.

2. JAMES ROBERTS otherwiſe YARK was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Suſannah Bond, the wife of John Bond, on the King's highway, on the 15th of November laſt, and putting her in fear and danger of her life, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon and againſt her will, a ſilk purſe, value 1s. one piece of foreign ſilver coin called a dollar, value 4s. 3d. and four pieces of foreign ſilver coin called bits, value 2s. 6d. and ten ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of the ſaid John Bond. And RUTH MERCER was indicted for feloniouſly receiving, on the 16th day of November laſt, the ſaid ſilk purſe, value 1s. being parcel of the before-mentioned goods, knowing it to be ſtolen.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. There cannot be an acceſſory to petty larceny; and this purſe is laid to be only the value of one ſhilling.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner's Council.

Mr. Garrow. Council for the Proſecution. You mean as to the officers of juſtice, you cannot mean as to Mrs. Bond, and Miſs Bond.

Mr. Sheridan, Priſoner's Council. I am very ſorry to inſiſt upon it, but I am ſo inſtructed.

SUSANNAH BOND ſworn.

I was robbed on Saturday the 15th of November, in Hendon, between the hours of four and five in the afternoon, I was going from London in my own carriage; my daughter was with me, I was ſtopped on the London ſide of the ſeven mile ſtone, by two men on horſeback, it was a very ſmall diſtance from my own houſe.

Court. Was it light?—Yes, light enough to diſtinguiſh objects.

Had they any arms or weapons?—Yes, each of them piſtols, the men met us, and ordered us to ſtop; they were on each ſide of the chaiſe, I ſaw them as they came up to me, I was in a phaeton, my daughter was driving.

Did they both come up on the ſame ſide?—One on each ſide.

Had you any ſervant with you?——No.

What paſſed?—They ordered us to ſtop, the man on my ſide demanded my money, he preſented a piſtol.

Did he make uſe of any expreſſions to intimidate you?—No, I gave him my purſe containing one dollar, and four pieces of ſilver called eights; there was ſome ſilver beſides, but I cannor aſcertain how much, it was a ſilk purſe, orange colour and green mixed.

Have you ever ſeen that purſe ſince?—Yes.

How long were the priſoners with you?—A ſhort period of time.

Was it long enough for you to make any obſervations on either of the men?—Yes, I obſerved the man that took my purſe.

Have you ever ſeen him ſince?—Yes.

Be ſo good to look if you ſee him now?—Yes, I think that is the man.

Court. Have you any doubt?—Not any.

How was he dreſſed?—He had a dark great coat on.

Do you ſwear poſitively that to be the man?—I do.

Was his face uncovered?—I did not ſee any diſguiſe, he had a round hat on.

He did not behave unpolite to you did he?—Far from it, he behaved very politely and civilly, I ſupplicated him for mercy, and he behaved very civilly.

Have you ſeen the other man ſince?—No.

Do you call theſe ſilver pieces eights or bits?—Eights, but the proper name is bits.

I have belonged to Sir John Fielding's Office many years, I apprehended the priſoner on Sunday the 16th of November, about eight in the morning; I produce two bits that were taken out of the priſoner's pocket: I took the priſoner up one pair of ſtairs backwards in Princes-ſtreet, he was in bed, he got out of bed and opened the door, and he had a black handkerchief tied round his head for a night-cap; the woman priſoner was in bed with him, he got into bed again, I deſired him to get out of bed.

Court. He knew you, I ſuppoſe?—Yes, my Lord, we are well acquainted one with another; I then ſearched his breeches pocket, and there I found a half guinea, ſome ſilver, and the two foreign bits which I have now produced; he then dreſſed himſelf, and he had a brown cloſe bodied coat, ſuch a one as mine, ſplaſhed up to the ſhoulders; we went to him from a particular information, which I hope your lordſhip will not enquire into; in the fore-room, in a little cloſet, I found theſe boots wet.

Court. Whoſe lodgings were theſe?—I cannot tell, and by the ſide of the fire-place lay theſe ſpurs, the leather of which was wet, there was a whip in the room.

Mr. Garrow. Can you diſtinguiſh between town dirt and country dirt on this occaſion; I think I have heard you do ſo on other occaſions?—That muſt be left to the gentlemen.

Court. That is too nice.

(The bits produced and depoſed to.)

Proſecutrix. They are like the pieces that were in my purſe.

Mr. Garrow. Do you believe theſe are ſome of the pieces that were in your purſe?—I do.

Priſoner's Council, Mr. Sheridan. Here are two more that are pretty like them, I believe, Madam, do you recollect them alſo, (ſhewing her two other bits) you have no particular mark on them?—No, I have had them for ſome time, I have uſed them as common marking pieces inſtead of counters.

Court. There is no diſtinguiſhing theſe unleſs there was a particular mark.

Court to Proſecutrix. Was the man that robbed you and took the purſe from you and your daughter a tall man or a ſhort man?—He was on horſeback, I cannot ſay.

Had he boots on?—Yes.

Had he a whip in his hand?—I cannot ſay.

What did the other man do while the priſoner robbed you?—He ſtood on my daughter's ſide; my daughter and myſelf delivered our purſes to this man.

It was light enough to diſcern his countenance?—Yes.

Should you know his voice?—I would not venture to ſwear.

Did he ſeem to uſe his own voice or a feigned voice?—I cannot ſay.

But you ſwear poſitively to his perſon?—Yes.

Priſoner's Council. You did not ſtate it as a poſitive fact that he had a round hat on?—It was a round hat he had on.

You ſay he had a dark great coat on?—Yes, a dark coat.

Court to Jealous. Was the coat you found a great coat?—No, my Lord, ſuch a one as mine.

Priſoner's Council to Proſecutrix. You ſaid it was light enough to diſtinguiſh objects?—Yes.

Is it harder to diſtinguiſh objects or features?——I could diſtinguiſh the men.

But you could not be certain whether he had a whip in his hand?——No, becauſe his hands were conſtantly employed, he held my reins down with one of his hands, and he had our purſes to take with the other.

Where either of the men diſguiſed?——I did not notice that they were.

You ſaid at firſt, I think I ſee him now; upon a cloſer queſtion you ſaid, you verily believed that was him, and after that, that you had no doubt; I would aſk you one queſtion, there is the life of a man at ſtake; will you undertake to ſwear upon your oath, I beg you to conſider ſeriouſly of it, and the conſequences; it is not the firſt time witneſſes have been miſtaken, will you ſwear it was impoſſible it could be any body elſe?—I do not know how far I can ſwear to that, I ſwear that I know the man, and that that is the man.

Court. That is enough.

Priſoner's Council. Which ſide of the carriage was this man on?——He was on the left-hand ſide.

Counſel for Proſecution to Jealous. Did you obſerve any thing elſe that is particular to mention to the Court?—When I looked round the fire-place, I could not find any ſpurs, and at laſt I ſaw the woman priſoner hiding them under the bellows.

MARY BOND ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Was you at any time in company with Mrs. Bond when you was ſtopped?—Yes, on Saturday the 15th of November.

At what time of the day?—About half after four in the afternoon.

What carriage was you in?—A phaeton with one horſe, I drove it.

Where was you ſtopped?—About the ſeven mile ſtone in Hendon.

Was you ſtopped by one perſon or two?——Two, both on horſeback, they met us, and both deſired us to ſtop, they came one on each ſide the carriage.

Did you obſerve any fire-arms?—They had each of them a ſmall piſtol.

Any diſguiſe on their faces?——No.

What paſſed when they came up to the carriage?—They deſired us to ſtop, and the man on the left-hand of the carriage, which was Mrs. Bond's ſide, took hold of the middle of the reins of the horſe; they demanded our purſes, which we gave them immediately, both to one man.

To which of the two men?——To the man on the left-hand ſide of the carriage.

I believe there was no great prize in your purſe, Miſs Bond?——No, Sir.

What did it contain?—Four pieces of counterfeit copper money; I had another purſe in my pocket which I did not give them: it was a red and green ſtriped ſilk purſe, I have not ſeen it ſince.

Had you an opportunity of obſerving the man that took your purſe?——Hes, it was quite daylight.

Did you ſee him take Mrs. Bond's purſe?——Yes, I did.

Have you ever ſeen that man ſince?—I ſaw him at the office in Bow-ſtreet.

Be ſo good to look if you ſee him now?—I think that is the man.

How was he dreſſed?——He appeared to have a browniſh coat and a white ſhag waiſtcoat.

Was you able to diſtinguiſh what ſort of coat, a great coat or a cloſe coat?——It appeared to me to be a great coat.

Was his coat buttoned?——I do not recollect.

What ſort of a hat did he wear?——A round hat.

Do you recollect whether he had boots on?—Yes, he had.

From the whole of your obſervation of the man at the time he committed the robbery is the priſoner the man?—Yes, I think he is.

Court. Do you only think and believe, or can you be poſitive?—I could almoſt be poſitive.

Have you any doubt of it?—No, Sir, I have not.

You have no doubt but the priſoner is the man?—No, Sir, I verily belive he is the man, I have no doubt of it.

How long was he with you?—He met the carriage, I ſaw him only a trifling diſtance.

So that your obſervation commenced upon his coming up to the carriage?—Yes.

How long did he continue with you?—Only while he took our purſes; we came on towards London.

Did they behave civilly to you?—Perfectly ſo.

Are you able to identify Mrs. Bond's purſe?—Yes, I think I can.

Court to Mrs. Bond. Was you alarmed?—A good deal alarmed.

DENNIS M'DONALD ſworn.

I am one of the officers of Litchfield-ſtreet; I was called on by Jealous; I went to apprehend the priſoner about eight o'clock on Sunday morning the 16th of November, we went to the fiſhmonger's in Prince's-ſtreet, St. James's, the priſoners were both in bed together, he opened the door and got into bed again.

Did he know you?—Yes, very well; I did not knock at the door becauſe he knew my voice; Jealous found ſome pieces of money upon him, I found a purſe in the girl's pocket under her head, there was nothing in it; I ſearched his pocket and found ſome looſe powder in it, I found no fire-arms, he had a brown coat and a white ſhag waiſtcoat.

Was it a looſe coat?—No, there was never a looſe coat in the room; there were a pair of boots found in the room; I ſearched the man and found a key; he ſaid he kept a ſtick-ſhop two or three doors off.

Priſoner's Council. I think I heard you ſay that you knew this man?—I know the intention of the queſtion and am not afraid to meet it.

You know the nature of buſineſs in Bow-ſtreet very well, you know it is neceſſary when any body is robbed to give a deſcription?—Yes.

Is it uſual to ſay, Oh, I know the man, he is ſuch a one, I will go for him directly?—No, I knew where the man lodged that uſed to go on that game, I will not tell you who told me.

But I believe you muſt.—If my Lord aſks me I will tell him, but it is not fair.

Court. They ſhould not diſcover it; you ſhould aſk him what kind of intelligence he received, without mentioning the perſon.—

M'Donald. A perſon called upon me and told me, and I called upon Mr. Jealous.

To Mrs. Bond. How was the information ſent?——It was ſent by a written letter.

THOMAS CARPMEAL ſworn.

I was along with them when they took the man, and when the information came on the over night; three men came on horſeback from Mr. Bond from Hendon with a letter from Mr. Bond, and they had likewiſe fire-arms, they had been in purſuit of the two highwaymen who ſtopped Mrs. Bond, they gave a deſcription of the two men and their horſes; we had likewiſe received information before of ſuch men robbing, and we ſuſpected theſe men.

Priſoner's Council. Do not you expect a ſhare of the reward on the conviction of this man?—Yes, you know that as well as you get your own fee.

Does Mr. Jealous expect any?—Yes.

Priſoner's Council. Forty pounds for a good gueſs at a man's dreſs.

(The purſe depoſed to by Mrs. Bond and Miſs Bond.)

Court to Mr. Garrow. If this man committed a robbery, and went to bed to any woman, he might naturally give her the purſe, ſhe might not know it was ſtolen; ſhe may be ſet from the bar.

Mr. Garrow. It never can be my intention, my Lord, to preſs any thing againſt a priſoner; I ſhall leave it to the Court.

Court. Let the woman ſit down.

Priſoner's Council to Macdonald. You know the woman that was lately at the bar?—Yes.

Is ſhe a lady of eaſy virtue?—She is a girl of the town, ſhe lived with another man before him.

Was not it as poſſible for her to have that purſe from another man as from the priſoner?—I cannot tell.

He let you in directly?—Yes.

He went into bed directly afterwards?—Yes.

Mr. Sheridan. My Lord, I ſubmit there are about ten thouſand of ſuch purſes and about five millions of theſe pieces of bits, eſpecially ſince the war.

——— BOND ſworn.

Court. Look at that money, do you ever remember ſeeing it before?—I cannot ſwear to money, I gave ſuch money as this to my wife.

What coin is it?—It is the eighth of a dollar.

What is the name of it?—They call them a kind of bit.

Do you know any thing of this purſe?—That was my wife's purſe, I bought it myſelf on Ludgate-hill.

Priſoner's Council. Is there any particular mark on it?—No, Sir, I have had it in my hands frequently, and I tried to get ſuch another, but it was very hard to match it.

Then you believed there was ſuch another, or you would not have gone to look for it.

Mr. Garrow. Can you ſwear to it with as much certainty as you can ſwear to objects of that ſort?—Yes.

Was you at home when the robbery was committed?—I got down directly after the ladies, I believe the highwaymen paſſed me, I ſent an expreſs directly by one of my ſervants, and a letter to Sir Sampſon Wright.

Priſoner's Council to Mrs. Bond. Did you ſwear poſitively to this man then?——Yes.

Priſoner's Council to Mr. Bond. Where does this coin come from?—It comes from Spain.

Are they not frequently in circulation at Portſmouth?—I do not know.

Priſoner's Council. My Lord here is the man's diſcharge, he was juſt diſcharged from the Porcupine.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing at all of the matter, I have witneſſes to my character.

JAMES NOWLING ſworn.

I am a maſter taylor, I have known the priſoner a good many years, when he lived with the Hon. Mr. Stanhope.

Court. What Stanhope? there a many of them?—He lived at St. James's, in the Stable-yard.

How long ago?—I am not ſure.

How long ago is it ſince you have known him ſince he lived with Mr. Stanhope?—It is a matter of ſeven years ago, after he left him he came to me, and I did work for the man.

Has he been at ſea ſince?—I hear he was.

Have you known any thing of him ſince?—I never heard any thing elſe but he had a good character.

Court. Did he go by the name of Roberts when you knew him or by the name of Yark?—He went by the name of both.

JAMES ROBERTS otherwiſe YARK,
GUILTY, Death.

RUTH MERCER, NOT GUILTY.

The Proſecutor deſired to recommend the Priſoner to mercy.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. I will have nothing to do with it, you muſt apply elſewhere; theſe are times which require a degree of ſeverity, or elſe our lives and properties cannot be protected.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

3. BENJAMIN ROBERTS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 29th of September laſt, two black geldings, price 40s. the property of Henry Wilmot.

HENRY WILMOT ſworn.

I live at Tottenham High Croſs, I loſt two horſes on the night of the 28th of September, I ſaw them that day about a quarter paſt three in the field near my houſe, the next morning my man went to fetch them up and he miſſed them, I did not take any trouble about them; I came to town, and when I returned, a conſtable had been to my houſe with a letter from Mr. Juſtice Blackborow, that they had taken the horſes and the man, the horſes had been taken to the killing-houſe, I know the priſoner, he worked ſix months with me laſt winter, he was a labourer.

Did you ſee him that day at Tottenham?—No.

WILLIAM SEASONS ſworn.

On the 29th of September, I was ſent for, and I went into Black-boy Alley, and found the priſoner with a horſe, I caught him by the collar, and took him into cuſtody, in bringing him along he ſhed tears, ſays he, Sir, I will tell you how I came by the horſe.

Did he ſay that of himſelf or in conſequence of any thing you ſaid to him?—Nothing upon my honour, he ſaid they came from Hornſey, and he had ſtolen him and another from Mr. Harry Wilmot's; another horſe was brought to me ſoon after the examination was over, his mane was cut off and his tail, that horſe was bought by another horſe-fleſh man, I went to Mr. Wilmot's at Tottenham and informed him; theſe horſes I took both into my cuſtody, and the next day the proſecutor came and owned them.

Did the priſoner ever ſee the ſecond horſe?—No, I do not think he did, only when he took it in conjunction with another man.

One of the horſes that Mr. Wilmot owned, was the ſame that the priſoner had?—When the proſecutor came, he ſaid to the priſoner, is it you Benjamin? I thought you would have been the laſt perſon to rob me, the priſoner ſhed tears, and ſaid, he was very ſorry, and hoped he would be merciful to him.

I ſtopped a horſe on the 29th of September in Sharp's Alley, the priſoner was going to ſell him, I ſaw the horſe all of a lather, all of a ſweat, and I thought the horſe was too good to kill; I was going to work when I ſaw him, he was brought to Mr. Bowlings, a horſe boiler, the priſoner was with the horſe, I ſent for Mr. Seaſons the conſtable.

Court to Wilmot. You heard of two horſes by Seaſons ?—Yes.

Were theſe the two horſes you had loſt ?—Yes, not a doubt about it ; I have had them many years, they were horſes of very little value, and they work about home.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was drinking a pint of beer, and a man came in to me and aſked me if I wanted a job ; he ſaid will you take one of theſe horſes to Mr. Bowling's, and I will ſatisfy you ; I took them down, and a man came by and ſtopped me.

Guilty, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

4. JOHN CLARKE was indicted for that he, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, on the 5th day of November laſt, with force and arms upon one Thomas Johnſon, in the peace of God and our Lord the King then and their being, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought did make an aſſault, and with a certain claſp-knife called a welt-knife, of the value of 2d. which he then and there had and held in his right-hand, in and upon the belly of him the ſaid Thomas, near the navel of him the ſaid Thomas, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did ſtrike, ſtab, penetrate, and wound, and did then and there give to him the ſaid Thomas by ſuch ſtriking, ſtabbing, penetrating, and wounding as aforeſaid, in and upon the belly of him the ſaid Thomas, near the navel of him the ſaid Thomas one mortal wound of the depth of three inches and of the breadth of one inch, of which ſaid mortal wound the ſaid Thomas from the ſaid 5th day of November to the 7th day of the ſaid month did languiſh, and languiſhing did live; and on the ſaid 7th of November the ſaid Thomas of the ſaid mortal wound aforeſaid did die. And that the ſaid John of his malice aforethought him the ſaid Thomas did kill and murder. The ſaid John Clarke was alſo charged on the Coroner's Inquiſition with the like murder.

THOMAS CANNON ſworn.

I live in Ratcliff-highway ; I keep a public houſe, the hoop and bunch of grapes.

Court. Do you know the priſoner at the bar ?—I remember him coming into the houſe the 5th of November, at nine o'clock, as near as I can tell.

What happened then ?—He went acroſs the tap-room and reached acroſs the table, and ſtruck at one Johnſon the deceaſed man who was ſitting there ; I knew the deceaſed by ſight.

How long had Johnſon been in the room?—About ten minutes, I believe.

What was Johnſon's Chriſtian name ?—I cannot tell.

Did any body come in with Johnſon ?—Not to my knowledge.

When he ſtruck at Johnſon, what followed upon that ?—He went immediately out of the door and ſaid to Johnſon, are you coming, or come along, I do not know which.

In what manner did he ſtrike at the deceaſed, did he ſtrike a violent blow ?—I thought it was in anger, but his blow was not violent.

In what manner did he ſpeak the words come along, or are you coming, thoſe are not words of anger ?—Not outrageous.

Can you deſcribe the manner in which he ſpoke thoſe words ?—I did not ſee his face at the time to my knowledge, his back was towards me.

Did Johnſon go out ?—Immediately with him.

Did he attempt to return the blow before he went out ?—No.

Did Johnſon ſay any thing before he went out ?—No, he did not make any anſwer in my hearing, I followed him to the door immediately.

What did you ſee when you came to the door ?—Nothing more of it.

Did you go and look out of the door ?—Yes.

How far could you ſee?—About as far as where you ſit.

Was the night dark?—It was dark, and people were letting off ſquibs and ſerpents about the place.

For what purpoſe did you follow them to the door unleſs it was to look after them?—My Lord, I did not go to the ſtreet door, it was the tap-room door.

Do you know any thing farther?—No, nothing farther.

Was the deceaſed with any company in the tap-room?——There were people in the ſame box that were ſitting, he had a pint of beer, I do not know that he was in any other company, I ſaw or heard nothing more.

There were no other words paſſed between them?—No.

Was there any woman in company with the deceaſed in your houſe?—There was a woman ſitting in the ſame box that had been crying fiſh about the ſtreets.

Did ſhe come in with him?—No.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any deſire to aſk any queſtions to this witneſs?

Priſoner. I was in liquor in his houſe, I do not know what I did in his houſe.

WILLIAM DIMSEY ſworn.

I am a victualler, I keep the King and Queen in Old Gravel-lane.

Do you know the priſoner?——Yes, I have ſeen him ſeveral times.

Did you know Johnſon the deceaſed? I knew him by uſing the houſe, I did not know him any otherwiſe.

Do you remember his coming into your houſe in the afternoon of the 5th of November?—He was in my houſe that afternoon, him and the priſoner, and a woman along with them, and had five or ſix pots of beer; the woman's name is Goodman.

Who was the woman that was in company with him?—The woman is here, ſhe was the deceaſed's woman that he lived with.

Was there any other woman that was in company at your houſe that afternoon?—No, Sir.

How long did they ſtay at your houſe?——I ſuppoſe the ſpace of three hours in all.

What time did they leave your houſe?—I believe in the afternoon, about five or ſix to the beſt of my knowledge.

Had there been a quarrel or diſpute among them at your houſe?—No, Sir, all very good tempered.

All apparently very good friends?—All very good friends, not a word of anger that I heard.

Did they all go out together?—I cannot ſay, I was below ſtairs when they went out.

Did you ſee any thing either of the priſoner or the deceaſed that night again?—Yes.

How ſoon after?—The deceaſed came into my houſe about half paſt nine.

Not before that from the time they went away?—No.

What happened then?—He called for a glaſs of gin; he told me that the man that had been drinking with him all the afternoon in my tap-room called him to the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes door, and had run a knife in his belly, he pulled up his apron and ſhewed me the place; I did not ſee the wound in his belly, I only ſaw his ſhirt was all bloody, and I ſaw the blood on the floor; there was another man drinking with him beſides this man.

Did he ſay which man it was?—No, he did not mention whoſe name, nor any thing about it.

After he told you this, he held up his apron, and you ſaw his ſhirt bloody, and the blood running down on the floor?—Yes.

What became of him afterwards?—I adviſed the man to go home, and ſent my boy to lead him home. I went ſoon afterwards to the place where the deceaſed lived, which was right facing of me in ſome old houſes backwards, almoſt facing the King and Queen, to ſee how the man was.

Did you know where the priſoner lived?—He lived next door to the deceaſed.

What were they both?—Two journeymen ſhoemakers.

When you went to this houſe did you ſee him ?—I went and ſtood in the yard, the priſoner was coming down ſtairs, I heard them talking together while I ſtood in the yard, and then I ſaw Clarke come down ſtairs, and this woman with him.

Could you diſtinguiſh any of their voices ?—Yes, I heard the priſoner's voice up ſtairs.

Did you hear any body elſe ?—There were two or three voices, I heard this Johnſon ſay do not hurt me any more, for I believe you have done it already.

Court. Repeat the words as near as you can ?—Do not kill me quite, for I believe you have done it already.

Are you ſure theſe are the words ?—Yes, them were the words.

They are very different from the words that you ſaid juſt now, which were, do not hurt me any more, for I believe you have done it partly already ?—Them laſt were the words.

Repeat them again ?—Do not kill me quite, Jack Clarke, for I believe you have done it partly already.

Did you hear any thing that Clarke ſaid ?—I cannot ſay that I did, I ſtood in the yard till Clarke and the woman came down.

How long was it after you heard this expreſſion of Johnſon that Clarke and the woman came down ?—About two minutes.

Did you hear any thing that paſſed between them when they came down ?—I aſked the priſoner how Johnſon did, he told me he believed he had cut his navel ſtrings.

In what manner did Clarke expreſs that ?—I aſked him, how is Johnſon? juſt in that manner, ſays he, I believe I have cut his navel ſtrings, and away he went.

Did he ſeem to ſpeak it with concern or with triumph ?—I am ſure he was in liquor.

In what manner did he ſpeak it ?—He did not ſpeak it in an over harſh manner.

In what manner did you underſtand him to ſpeak it ?—He ſpoke it mildly like.

Did he expreſs any concern for what he had done, or any thing of that ſort ?—No, no further, and upon ſaying that, he and the woman went out together.

Did the woman ſay any thing ?—I heard them ſay they would go to ſome doctor's, and they went to the doctor's afterwards, I followed him in the highway, and I took him by Mr. Biſhop and Bayley's door, I knocked his heels up and caught hold of him, and I took him before Juſtice Green.

What did he ſay when you laid hold of him ?—As ſoon as ever I took hold of him, and threw him down on the ſtones, there was another man who aſſiſted me, and took a knife out of his pocket; ſays he that is not the knife I killed the man with.

Are you ſure that was his expreſſion ?—Yes, them were his words.

What ſort of a knife was it that was taken out of his pocket ?—A claſp knife, I took him before Juſtice Green, and they put him in the watch-houſe till the next day, there I left him.

Was he examined at all then ?—No, it was quite late at night.

Did you examine whether the knife was bloody or not ?—No, Sir, the knife was ſhut; it was not bloody at all.

Did you ſee the deceaſed again that night? —Yes, I went back, and lent the man a hand to put him on a board to ſend him to the hoſpital.

Did the deceaſed ſay any thing then ?—I heard him ſay, who could have thought that the man I had been drinking with all the afternoon, and pawned all my things to treat him with, ſhould have ſerved me in this manner. I know nothing further.

When did the man die ?—He died on the ſeventh of November.

How long have you known the priſoner ? —I did not know much of this man, I never ſaw him half a dozen times in my houſe before.

BENJAMIN SAYRE ſworn.

I keep a publick-houſe, the Duke's Head in Old Gravel-lane, the priſoner came to my houſe on the 5th of November, about half paſt nine, within a few minutes under or over.

Did he come alone, or any body with him?——He came by himſelf.

Did any thing happen while he was there?—Not at my houſe, he came dancing in as if he had come to play, he had a knife in his hand, and he ſaid I have killed a man, and I will reſign myſelf to you, ſays I, you are mad, and he appeared to me as ſuch.

You ſay now he appeared to you to be mad?—He ſeemed to be not in his mind.

Do you mean that you formed that idea from the ſtrangeneſs of the declaration at the time, or from his other behaviour?—By his coming in, in the manner that he did, to reſign himſelf to me, dancing with the knife in his hand, he ſtuck the knife in the table, and ſaid I have killed a man, and I will reſign myſelf to you; I ſaid to him you are mad, for no man that had committed murder, would have come in dancing.

Did you know him before?——A good while before, he is a ſhoemaker.

Did you know him ſhew any ſigns of inſanity before this?—Always in liquor, they always uſed to call him mad Clarke when he was in liquor.

But not when ſober?——No, I never heard any one call him mad then.

What did he ſay?—He ſat down a little while, and ſtill perſiſted he had killed a man, I aſked him where, he told me at the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes; I aſked him who, he told me Johnſon, he ſaid he ſaw his bitch, I believe, or ſomething as bad as that, getting out of the window from the man, or the door, I cannot be poſitive which, I cannot be poſitive to the words, it was getting out of a window or a door, the one from the other, but I cannot be poſitive which; if it is where he mentioned, it muſt be a door, for the pavement is raiſed.

How did you know what place he meant?——The houſe that Clarke uſed to live in.

Who did you take him to mean by his bitch?—A woman that uſed to live with him.

Do you know her name?——I cannot be poſitive to her name, ſhe went by the name of Clarke, ſhe lived with him a great many years, and had ſeveral children by him, at the ſame time my wife came in, ſhe had been out with a pot of beer, and this man was walking by the door, ſays ſhe, you ſcoundrel how can you ſay you have killed the man, and he is juſt gone by; ſo it put me out of all thoughts that he had killed any body.

Is your wife here?——No, my Lord, it is rather hard for us both to be out from our buſineſs at once.

Does your houſe lay between the Bunch of Grapes, and the King and Queen?—Yes, before you come to the King and Queen, between the one and the other.

What did he ſay upon that when ſhe ſaid the man had walked paſt the door?—He went out directly, as ſoon as ſhe ſaid that, he took the knife out of the table, and went out.

He took out the knife?—Yes, he ſtuck it into a little wainſcot table, and though the point of it is pretty ſharp, it fell, he took it up and went away; I ſhould have preſerved the knife, if I had thought any thing of the kind.

Did you obſerve any thing upon the knife?——I had no thoughts of looking at it, nor did I think he had done any ſuch thing.

What ſort of knife was it?——I was a very picked pointed one, with a ſhort handle, it appeared to me to be a ſhoemaker's knife, they call it a welt knife.

MARY ANN GOODMAN ſworn.

Court. What do you know of this matter?——I know ſo far as this, I went out with my goods.

What buſineſs do you follow?——I walk the ſtreets with fiſh and oyſters, and ſuch things.

Where had you been that afternoon before?——At home till about five o'clock, then Johnſon came over to me and I drank ſhare of five pots of beer in Mr. Dimſdale's houſe.

Are you ſure of the time?——Yes, it was about five when I went with Johnſon to Mr. Dimſdale's.

Was any body elſe in company?—Only this Clarke, Johnſon, and I.

Was Clarke with you?—Yes, Johnſon left Clarke at Dimſdale's, and came and fetched me to drink, Clarke was with him all the bleſſed day, till about half after nine at night, Johnſon left Clarke, he ſaid, he left him there, I found Clarke at Dimſdale's.

Had they been long at Dimſdale's before? —I cannot ſay how long they had been there.

You found Clarke there when you went? —Yes, along with Johnſon.

How long did you ſtay there?—I ſtaid there till a little after ſix o'clock.

Did you all come away together?—We all came away together, Clarke, Johnſon, and me, and all went up into my room together.

Who elſe was in company with you at Dimſdale's?—Nobody elſe, they went along with me to my room, which was in Johnſon's houſe, we ſtaid about ten minutes, and then I went down to borrow Johnſon a ſhilling at his maſter's, his maſter had no change, and I left Clarke and Johnſon together in the Lower Town in Shakeſpear's Walk.

Did you get the ſhilling for Johnſon? —No.

When you left them in the ſtreet or road, did you leave them together?—Yes.

That was about half paſt ſeven?—Yes.

How long was it before you ſaw either of them again?—It was almoſt nine, before I ſaw Clarke.

In this afternoon had they had any quarrel that you know off?—None at all that I know off.

No high words of any kind?—No high words at all.

What time did you come back?—I came back with my goods, and carried my baſket home when the bell rung eight o'clock, I went to my own place.

Was either Clarke or Johnſon there then?—No.

Which of them did you ſee firſt after that?—Clarke.

When did you ſee Clarke?---I ſaw him juſt before nine, I was looking after Johnſon, and I ſaw Clarke with his apron turned on one ſide, and the knife in his apron, at the bottom of Chamber-ſtreet, Ratcliffe Highway.

Clarke lives next door to you I believe, does not he?—Yes.

How did you know there was a knife in his apron?—He out with the knife and ſhewed it me.

Did he do that directly?---Yes, immediately, I aſked him firſt whether he had ſeen Johnſon, no, he ſaid, he wanted him; he ſhewed me the knife, and ſaid, that either Nan or Johnſon ſhould be the firſt that ſhould have that knife ſtabbed in them.

Who did you underſtand him to mean by Nan?---His wife.

Is he a married man?---No, Sir.

A woman that lives with him by the name of Nan?---Yes.

Did you aſk him any further queſtions? —I told him, ſays I, for God's ſake whatever you do govern your paſſion.

Did he ſay what he would ſtab them for? —He ſaid, they both jumped out of the back window together.

Did he ſay that before you told him to govern his paſſion?——Yes.

What did he ſay when you begged him to govern his paſſion?——He told me he would not.

What more paſſed?——He run into this gentleman's houſe, the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes, I ſaw him go in, but I did not follow him in, becauſe I had been in juſt before, and I did not ſee Johnſon there.

Did you ſee him come out again?——I did not, I went away.

Where did you go to?——I looked in at the door, and ſaw him reach over the table, and give ſomebody a blow on the head, and I thought it was his wife that he gave the blow to, and I thought it was no buſineſs of mine, I could never have thought it was Johnſon he ſtruck, as they had been drinking all the bleſſed day, I went away to the next publick houſe, the Bell.

What did you ſee or hear then?——I thought, I would ſee what became of her on account he had uſed her ſo ill the night before, thinks I, I will ſit me down here and ſee what comes of this, I ſaw Johnſon come out and he was almoſt double.

Where did you ſee Johnſon come out from?——From the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes, I called out Johnſon! Johnſon! three times, he was juſt going to turn back again when he heard my tongue, he turned round, and ſaid to me, he has done for me and you too; who has ſays I, Jack Clarke, ſays he.

Did you ſee Clarke come out?——I did not, I ſuppoſe he paſſed me while I turned away.

Why, when Johnſon come out directly from the entry, and ſaid, Clarke had done for him, did not you look to ſee if he was coming?——I ſuppoſe he was gone out before.

What became of Johnſon after he ſaid this to you?——I laid hold of him and croſſed the way with him, and led him right facing Mr. Dimſdales, then I heard Clarke coming out of Mr. Sayers, he ſaid, bowpots; it is a cramp word he has got.

What does he mean by that?——I do not know any more than the dead, he often crys bowpots when he is in liquor: Says I to Johnſon, ſhall I lead you home; no, ſays he, go to Clarke's for my candle which is on his table, and I went; Clarke, Clarke, ſays I, give me the candle that is burning on your table.

Did you ever know what he meant by that word?——When he was in liquor he uſed to cry it.

You knew the man?——I never knew him but about two months in my life; Johnſon deſired me to go and get my candle which was burning on Mr. Clarke's table, and he would go over immediately to Mr. Dimſdale's and get a drop of gin.

Did he tell you what candle it was that was burning upon Mr. Clarke's table?——I bought the candle myſelf, a penny flat candle.

Did he ſay how the candle came to be burning there?——No, he never did, it was Clarke's room, and Clarke went with me and I took the candle off of his table: Clarke ſaid nothing to me nor I to him, as I went for the candle.

You found the candle burning?——Yes.

Was there any body in the room?——Nobody at all.

Did you ſee Nan at all?——No.

What did Clarke ſay to you when you went into the room?——Nothing at all.

Where did you go from there?——Into my own room.

That was in the next houſe?——Yes.

Did Clarke go with you to your room?——He met Johnſon at our own door, I heard him as I was coming down ſtairs to light Johnſon up, it was not three minutes after, I heard Johnſon ſay to the priſoner, Jack, come up and ſee what you have done; I know ſays he, what I have done, ſays he, I have done it on purpoſe to kill you, I have ſtabbed you on purpoſe to kill you; Johnſon ſays to me, I wiſh you would go and fetch a doctor, Clarke ſaid, he would go, ſays I, I will go myſelf, ſays Clarke, I will go with you.

Did this paſs up ſtairs or where?——It paſſed up ſtairs, he came up into the room by Johnſon's orders, to ſee what he had done, and Johnſon ſhewed his wound to the priſoner.

What did Clarke ſay after he ſaw the wound?——He ſaid, he knew it, he had done it on purpoſe.

Did he ſay it twice or once?——He ſaid it once up ſtairs and once at the door.

Did he expreſs no concern when he ſaw him?——No, none at all.

How come he to offer to go for a doctor?——He ſaid he had done murder, and he deſired to die for it, and he ſaid ſo in both the doctors ſhops.

Court. Did he ſay deſire or deſerve?——That he deſired to die for it, that is what he ſaid in both the doctors ſhops.

Was you with him when he was tripped up and taken?——Yes Sir.

What did he ſay?——I do not know, I found he was ſecured, and I ran immediately to the third doctor, and the doctor came down.

And what came of Johnſon?—The doctors ſaid he muſt go immediately to the Hoſpital, or he would be a dead man.

He was carried to the Hoſpital then?—Yes.

Did you ever hear him ſay any thing more reſpecting it?—No, I did not.

Did you ever ſee him after?—Yes, I ſaw him the next morning.

Did you aſk him how it happened?—Yes, he told me it happened at the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes, he ſaid, he came and gave him a punch of the head, in the Hoop and Bunch of Grapes.

Did you aſk him any thing about Nan?—No, I did not, I never heard Johnſon ſay what had been the reaſon of this.

When did Johnſon die?—He died the 7th of November, about nine in morning, at the Hoſpital; this accident was on the 5th, he was carried to the London Infirmary.

JOHN MARSHALL ſworn.

I went to bed on the 5th of November, about eight in the evening; I live the corner of Mount Pleaſant; I was awaked by a ſudden noiſe, crying out he is murdered! he is murdered! I got up and put on my clothes, that was about five minutes before ten.

What did you hear and ſee?—I live on the ground-floor, and I went out of the door and I heard a woman ſay that Clarke had murdered a man; I went to the back-yard and I heard a noiſe in Johnſon's room, I did not know what it was, I went up into the room and I ſaw Johnſon laying on the bed which was on the floor, and I aſked him what was the matter with him; he told me that Clarke had ſtabbed him; he ſaid to me who would have thought this, ſuch friends as we have been all day; I aſked him whether he had any words or no, and he ſaid he had no words at all with him.

Did you ſee Clarke?—No; I went down and found the knife ſticking in the floor, I have the knife here.

Court to Goodman. Did you ſay any thing about a knife?—Clarke jobbed a knife in the floor in his own room as I was taking the candle out of the candleſtick; he damned and buggered his eyes, and ſaid if Nan was here the ſame that is in Tom Johnſon ſhould go into her.

I think you told me juſt now that you nor he never ſpoke to one another when you went for the candle.—He ſpoke them words; but he did not ſpeak them to me.

Did you tell Marſhall where he had jobbed the knife in?—Yes, I told him he jobbed the knife into the floor; it ſtuck upright.

Court to Marſhall. The woman told you that he jobbed the knife into the floor?—Yes.

Did you go up to ſee?—I went down and took the knife out of the floor.

Down where?—I went down from Johnſon's room to Clarke's room, I found the knife in the floor and the point rather bent.

Was the knife bloody?—I did not ſee any blood at all on the knife; (The knife produced and handed to the Jury; a ſhoe-maker's ſharp knife, between three and four inches long, with a ſharp point, and a common wooden handle) he was taken to the hoſpital, and he ſaid, God bleſs you, maſter, I ſhall never ſee you any more, for I am a dead man.

Did he ſay any thing of the reaſon of this?—No, he ſaid he had no words with him.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner locked up; juſt before he came to the watch-houſe, I aſked the priſoner what he had been doing, he told me he had cut a man acroſs the belly; I aſked him how he could be guilty of ſuch a thing, he told me it was through paſſion and liquor, and that after he had cut him he went to a couple of ſurgeons to get them to dreſs him, and that he hoped to God the man would not die.

Court. Where is the ſurgeon?—He left a card of his place of abode where he might be ſent for, Mr. Seaman, No. 33, Threadneedle-ſtreet.

(The Surgeon ſent for.)

Court to Marſhall. Did you ſee the wound?—Yes.

What appearance had it; what ſort of a wound was it?—It was about an inch long.

Where about was it?—The right ſide of the navel, juſt under the navel.

Did you obſerve any thing particular about it?——I did not obſerve any thing particular, but I ſaw a part of the caul of the belly hanging out of the wound.

A part of the caul?—Yes, a good part of it.

Court to Goodman. What ſtate of health was Johnſon in before he received the wound?—He had no diſorder at all.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you think there is ſufficient evidence before you now, that the wound which this man received in his belly was the cauſe of his death, in that caſe, if you are ſatisfied with the evidence now before you of that fact, it may not be neceſſary to wait for the ſurgeon, for it certainly is not neceſſary in point of law that that fact ſhould be proved by a ſurgeon; there may be caſes where a ſurgeon could not be had.

Jury. We wiſh to wait for the ſurgeon, my Lord.

Court. You cannot be too cautious in ſuch caſes, but it is not in point of law neceſſary that it ſhould be proved by a ſurgeon.

(The Surgeon ſent for, but was not at home, he was gone to the other end of the town; the Court ordered his recognizance to be eſtreated, but it was afterwards diſcharged on the application of the Surgeon.)

Court to Goodman. You ſay this man was in a good ſtate of health before he received this wound?—As good a ſtate of health as any perſon in the world.

Did you ſee his wound?—No, I could not bear to ſee it; I went to ſee him in the hoſpital three times.

Was you with him at the time of his death?—No, I was not.

Court to Marſhall. You knew this man before?—Yes.

Was he in good health?—Yes, in perfect health.

No diſorder that appeared to have indangered his life?—No, I believe by the ſtab he got his death.

PRISONER's DFFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay any farther than I knew nothing of ſtabbing him, there was nobody but the woman; I have nobody to my character; my maſter that I have worked for this twenty years did not expect I ſhould be tried till to-morrow.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, I will ſtate to you what the witneſſes have ſaid, with ſuch obſervations as it is my duty to ſuggeſt to you. (Here the learned Judge ſummed up the evidence, and then added as follows:) The declarations of the deceaſed after receiving the death-wound are always conſidered as admiſſible evidence in caſes of murder, though nothing before that wound is conſidered in that light. The reſult of the evidence ſeems to be this; that this man, as appears from ſome of his expreſſions, from ſome conceived jealouſy, the cauſe of which does not appear in evidence, or whether it exiſted at all further than in his own mind, went with a determined purpoſe, with this weapon with him, in ſearch of the deceaſed Johnſon, and finding him, called him out of the houſe where he was, and inſtantly ſtabbed him in the belly: it appears alſo, that they had been drinking together a conſiderable part of the day, and there is reaſon to ſuppoſe the priſoner was in liquor; and he himſelf ſaid to Elby that it was through paſſion and liquor. Sayer deſcribes his conduct, when he came into his houſe, as appearing to him in the light of a madman; that led me to enquire whether the priſoner had ſhewn any ſigns of madneſs, and the witneſs ſaid, only when he was in liquor on former occaſions, and then he was called Mad Clarke.

In the firſt place, Gentlemen, it is my duty to ſtate to you the law upon the ſubject. The killing a man deliberately, and with premeditated malice, is clearly and unqueſtionably murder, and is the legal definition of that crime; the killing a man at all in conſequence of an intention to hurt or injure him, is in law an high offence; but where death enſues from a ſudden quarrel, or the wound which occaſions the death is given in conſequence of a ſudden provocation at the inſtant, the law makes that allowance for the impetuoſity of paſſion, and the frailty of human nature, to reduce the crime to manſlaughter; but it is neceſſary that the provocation ſhould be ſudden, and proportioned in ſome degree to the violence of the party who kills; for a greater degree of provocation, provided it is ſudden and inſtantaneous, will reduce to manſlaughter, when the ſame degree of provocation would not juſtify the uſe of a deadly weapon, even though it was done on the inſtant: and the law has held it ſo ſtrict, as to conſider that nothing but perſonal violence will mitigate the offence of uſing a deadly weapon, however ſudden the occaſion may be; no words, however provoking, can reduce the offence to manſlaughter.

In this caſe there is no proof of any actual provocation given by the deceaſed at all; there is no evidence, except from the declarations of the priſoner, that tends to ſhew that he had conceived ſome kind of jealouſy with reſpect to the deceaſed and a woman who lived with him; now that jealouſy would not be a ſufficient cauſe, even if the cauſe of it had been proved to exiſt, in point of law to reduce that offence of killing a man to manſlaughter; but independent of that, no ſuch caſe is in proof to have at all exiſted: it is in proof to you that this man, before he gave the wound which is ſuppoſed to have occaſioned the death of the deceaſed, declared to a witneſs that it was for the purpoſe of killing him; that declaration being accompanied by the other I ſtated to you, if you take the one you muſt take the other, it is for that reaſon alone that I ſelected thoſe expreſſions of the priſoner that imported jealouſy, for he declares expreſsly his purpoſe to kill the deceaſed; he goes in ſearch of him with that deadly weapon, he finds him in a houſe where it is proved the deceaſed had been ten minutes before, he ſtrikes him a blow, calls him out, and the wound muſt then have been inſtantly given; the deceaſed afterwards declared he had received his death wound from the priſoner, and the priſoner makes the ſame declaration in a manner very extraordinary: I therefore am of opinion, that no provocation is proved in this caſe to have exiſted, that can reduce the offence from murder to manſlaughter.

The next conſideration is, whether you can upon this evidence, find any other excuſe that will reduce the crime of the priſoner. If the priſoner had been a man, really diſordered in his ſenſes, from natural and unavoidable infirmity, that act which would amount to murder in another man, would certainly not have amounted to that in him, becauſe ſuch a man is not conſidered as knowing what he does, and the conſequence of his actions; but there is no pretence in this caſe for that ſort of defence; for all the madneſs that is imputed to the priſoner, is the madneſs ariſing from liquor; and independent of the conſideration, that ſuch a madneſs is far from being an excuſe for the commiſſion of any atrocious crime; and it would be a great hurt to ſociety, if ſuch excuſes were ever admitted; but independent of thoſe expreſſions, he appears to have known what he was doing, both before he did it and afterwards; he declares, even after he had ſeen the deadly wound (which one would have thought, would have made the ſtrongeſt degree of reſentment relent) he declares after that, he did it on purpoſe, and with intention to kill the man; therefore, he clearly appears, even with that drunkenneſs, which in itſelf would not be an excuſe, he appears yet to know what he was about to do, and what he had done. It is therefore for you to conſider gentlemen, firſt whether you are clearly ſatisfied with the truth of the evidence, and that from the reſult of the whole evidence taken together, the priſoner is the man that gave the deceaſed that wound; and next, whether you are ſatisfied that that wound was the cauſe of the man's death, for however criminal the conduct of the priſoner may have been, yet unleſs you are ſatisfied clearly from the evidence, that he was the actual occaſion of the man's death, he is not guilty of murder; and with reſpect to that part of the caſe, to be ſure the evidence is leſs leſs complete and perfect than it ſometimes is in other caſes, from the abſence of the ſurgeon who had examined the deceaſed, and dreſſed his wound and attended him; for that evidence would have put it out of all doubt, it is not however neceſſary, at all, in point of law, that that fact ſhould be proved by the evidence of a ſurgeon particularly, provided it is proved without ſuch evidence; but it is fair to make alſo this obſervation, that though it is clear that the preſence of a ſurgeon is not neceſſary, yet where a ſurgeon has examined the wound, his evidence in that caſe is the beſt and moſt ſatisfactory that can be had, and where he is abſent, a leſs degree of evidence appears before a Jury, than would be before them if that ſurgeon was examined. Subject, therefore, to that obſervation, gentlemen, you will conſider the evidence as it ſtands; this man is in health, he receives his death wound, he, himſelf, declares his own idea of it, that it will be mortal; that wound is deſcribed as a wound in the belly, near the navel, a very dangerous place, where all the inteſtines are expoſed to injury from the wound; and a part of the caul of the inteſtines is deſcribed as hanging out of the wound; under theſe circumſtances he is carried to the hoſpital, between nine and ten that night, and on the morning of the ſeventh he dies; the witneſs who ſaw the wound who is not a man of ſkill or judgment, he ſays, he has no doubt but the wound was the cauſe of his death; it therefore remains under the circumſtances I have ſtated to you, upon the deſcription of the wound, the place in which it was given, the manner of giving it, the ſtate of health of the man before, and the time he died: If from all theſe circumſtances you are clearly ſatisfied, that the wound was the cauſe of his death, and are alſo clearly ſatisfied with the truth of the reſt of the evidence, and that the reſult of that evidence is proved clearly to your ſatisfaction, that the priſoner is the man that gave the wound, I am then obliged to tell you that I am of opinion there is nothing in this caſe that can reduce the crime below that aggravated crime of murder; and it will in that caſe be your duty to find the priſoner guilty of this indictment: If on the other hand you think there is any room to doubt the truth of the evidence, or that believing the truth of the evidence is not ſufficient proof that the priſoner gave the wound, or that the wound was the cauſe of his death, in that caſe it is your duty to acquit the priſoner wholly; or if there appears any circumſtances that would reduce the crime to manſlaughter, in that caſe you may find that verdict, but there does not appear to me any ſort of evidence to take that middle line: Therefore, give your verdict according to your own conſciences, you muſt be clearly ſatisfied of the fact of a crime ſo heinous in its nature, and ſo penal in its conſequences, and then it is your duty to the public and to juſtice, to find the priſoner guilty. If on the other hand you think there is any reaſonable cauſe for doubt, either upon the fact of his wounding the man, or of the wound being the cauſe of his death, you will acquit him.

Guilty of the wilful murder. Death.

The Concluſion of this will be in the Second Part.

The Continuation of the Trial of John Clarke.

Mr. Reynolds. John Clarke, you ſtand convicted of the wilful murder of Thomas Johnſon, what have you to ſay why this Court ſhould not give you judgment to die acording to law.

Silence being proclaimed, Mr. RECORDER paſſed ſentence as follows.

John Clarke, you have been convicted upon the cleareſt and moſt ſatisfactory evidence, by a Jury as much inclined to mercy as any I have met with, of a crime, one of the moſt heinous, both in ſight of God and man, that can be committed by the moſt wicked of mankind. The act of wilfully depriving a fellow creature of life, is a crime, which in all civilized nations has been juſtly puniſhed with death, the law of God as well as man, decrees, that whoever ſheddeth man's blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed; you have been unfortunately a prey to thoſe violent and outrageous paſſions of malice and revenge, which have led you to perpetrate this horrid crime; when I ſay you have been a prey to violent and outrageous paſſions, I do not mean thoſe infirmities of nature, for which the laws of man, and I hope of the Almighty alſo, will make ſome allowance; but you have been a prey to thoſe dark and malignant paſſions, which have led you deliberately to ſeek the life of your fellow citizen, and that fellow citizen your acquaintance and your friend, with whom you had ſpent the day in harmony and ſociality! Guilt ſo aggravated, can have no hope to eſcape the puniſhment of the laws: I hope therefore, that the impreſſion made upon you by the dreadful ſentence which you muſt now receive, will ſo operate on your mind as to correct that malignant temper, which has rendered you unfit to continue a member of ſociety here, and ſo to correct it as to entitle you to that mercy hereafter, which is infinitely more important for you to obtain, and that the ſhort period of time which you have now to live, will be ſpent more in regretting and lamenting that crime, than even the miſerable conſequences that muſt follow upon it; I hope the remorſe of your own conſcience will be ſuch as to make the only atonement that is left you in this life, and ſuch as to obtain mercy for you at the throne of him whoſe mercy is infinite. It therefore only remains for me to fulfil my duty, and pronounce upon you the dreadful ſentence of the law; which is, that you be hanged by the neck (on Monday next) untill you are dead, and your body be afterwards diſſected and anatomized according to the ſtatute, and the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

5. HENRY HORNE and ALEXANDER KENNEDY were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Stephen Thurſton Adey. Eſq; on the King's highway, on the 28th of September laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one gold watch, value 10l. two ſtone ſeals ſet in gold, value 40s. one ſilk watch ſtring, value 12d. one ſtone ring, value 10s. one gold mourning ring, value 10s. and fifteen guineas in monies numbered, his property.

STEPHEN THURSTON ADEY, Eſq; ſworn.

On the 28th of September laſt, I was robbed between twelve and one o'clock, on Sunday morning, in Pall Mall, juſt at the corner of John-ſtreet turning into St. James's-ſquare; I was walking, and two men came after me, they uſed no violence; they ſtopped me, and demanded my money and watch without delay; I gave them my money and watch, my purſe contained fifteen guineas and upwards; they immediately ran away; they were not more than three minutes with me, one of them preſented a piſtol to me, and the other ſtood at a little diſtance.

Do you know either of the men?—Not enough to ſwear to them, I think they are the men that ſtopped me, but not to take my oath to it, the one had a blue coat with a red cape on; I went to Bow-ſtreet and laid an information, and theſe men were taken.

I am ſervant to Mr. Henry Lee of Petticoat Lane; on the 28th of September in the morning, the priſoner at the bar came and knocked at my maſter's door about five o'clock, I got up and let him in, they aſked for my maſter.

What is your maſter?—He carries on the buſineſs of a ſilverſmith, he kept a pawnbroker's ſhop, he left off the pawnbrokery buſineſs; I aſked them what they wanted, I ſaid, it was too ſoon to diſturb my maſter, Horne ſaid, he had a gold watch to ſell, and two rings, I told him he might leave them with me till my maſter was up; they left them with me and returned in about an hour and half, then I went up and called my maſter, he came down in his morning gown to the foot of the ſtairs, and I ſhewed them to him, he bid me aſk them what they aſked for them, they ſaid, twenty guineas for the watch and rings; he told me to bid them four guineas and a half; which they agreed to take; my maſter gave me the money to pay for them, I came down and I paid them, and they went away.

What became of them afterwards?—I do not know, my maſter bid me put the watch ſafe up and take particular care of it, till he went to give information to Mr. Clarke.

Did you know who the priſoners were and their names?—Yes, I had ſeen them once or twice before, I had drank with Horne before, I knew him by name, but not the other.

Your maſter knew them I ſuppoſe?—Yes.

Did he know where they lived?—No.

Then how could he give information?—Mr. Clarke found out where they lived.

Had your maſter bought things of them before?—No, Sir, not as I know of, I never ſaw them at our houſe before.

How came he to think of giving information after he had bought theſe things?—I do not know.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for Priſoner Kennedy. How long had the melting pot been off the fire that morning?—I do not know what you mean.

Do not you, why Henry Lee No. 19, Petticoat Lane, is known as well as any perſon in this Court; well then the crucible had not been on the fire that night?—I do not know what you mean.

Why what does your maſter melt his plate in?—He does not melt any.

He buys it all ready made, does he?—Yes.

What is he by trade?—He deals in the ſilverſmith trade, he buys any thing that he can come honeſtly by, he will ſhew receipts for every thing that he has bought.

Where is the receipt for this watch?—I do not know about that, we have no receipt for that.

He is not here?—He did not think he ſhould be wanted.

How long have you lived with him?—Two years and a half.

During that time upon your oath you have never ſeen any plate melted in that houſe?—No, Sir, none at no time.

And as to the goods that are bought they are bought in an open way?——Yes, Sir, I can mention ſeveral working ſilverſmiths that he buys his goods of.

He buys all kinds of goods you know, he is not very nice?—It is nothing to me.

You are preſent, are not you?——No.

Oh, he does not truſt you with that; however Clarke knows him very well.—Very likely he does, he knows him to make a diſcovery of many things.

You knew the watch was gold?—Yes, it was bought as ſuch.

What were the rings gold?—One was a mourning ring, and one an enamelled white head.

There was a ſeal to the watch and a ſtring?—Yes.

All for four guineas and a half, that is the honeſt way your Maſter deals.—That is the way he dealt for that.

JOHN GRAY ſworn.

I ſold a pair of piſtols to the priſoner Kennedy on the 14th of Auguſt, that is all.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

On Sunday after the robbery was committed, Mr. Lee came up and aſked if there had been any robbery of a gold watch, I did not know then, I went to enquire at the office, and underſtood a robbery had been committed in Pall-mall; I brought him the beſt deſcription of the watch. I know nothing more, only the Tueſday following I ſearched the place belonging to Kennedy, where I found a pair of piſtols.

Mr. Sylveſter. You know Lee of old?—Yes, Sir.

You have had him often?—No.

Was it you that made the affidavit in the King's Bench about the pot boiling always in his houſe?——No, Sir.

It was another officer then?——Yes, Sir.

I had this watch from the young man Donnedy, at Lee's houſe, this is the ſame watch.

Donnedy. (Looking at the watch.) This is the ſame, I am ſure of it, and theſe are the two rings upon it.

(The watch and rings depoſed to by the Proſecutor)

PRISONER HORNE's DEFENCE.

I never ſaw this man Donnedy but once before; he then ſaid, that the gentleman in the red coat ſold him the watch; he made a remark of the young man in the red coat, and Sir Sampſon Wright aſked him once or twice. I will leave it to the gentlemen whether they did hear him or not.

Court. Mr. Adey how is that?——Donnedy ſwore that the man in the light coat gave him the watch; the one had on a blue coat and a red cape, and the other a brown coat.

Court to Horne. Have you any witneſſes?—Yes, my Lord.

Priſoner Kennedy. I leave it to my Council.

The Priſoner Horne called two witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

The Priſoner Kennedy called three witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, the fact with reſpect to the priſoners reſts on the evidence of Donnedy; there is no doubt but Mr. Adey's watch was found on Lee by his information: Donnedy and Lee certainly ſtand under circumſtances of particular diſcredit; and it is evident what ſort of a houſe Lee keeps; and if the circumſtances reſpecting Lee had come out any other way than they have done, I ſhould not have heſitated to have bound over Donnedy an evidence to ſupport a proſecution againſt Lee as a receiver.

Henry Horne, Guilty, Death.
Alex. Kennedy, Guilty, Death.

Jury. My Lord, we humbly beg leave in the ſtrongeſt manner to recommend the priſoners to mercy.

Proſecutor. I beg leave to join in the recommendation.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recoreer.

6. ROBERT CROSS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Sir William Jarvis Twiſſden, Baronet, on the King's highway, in the pariſh of Friers Barnet, on the 10th of November laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will one repeating gold watch value 10l. one black ſilk ribbon value 1d. two red cornelian ſeals ſet in gold value 6l. one yellow cornelian ſeal ſet in gold value 40s. one baſe metal watch key value 1d. one ſilk purſe value 12d. and ſix guineas in monies numbered, his property.

Sir WILLIAM JARVIS TWISSDEN, Baronet, ſworn.

On the 10th of November, I was travelling in a poſt-chaiſe about five o'clock.

What ſort of an evening was it?—It was rather a foggy evening; I was ſtopped before I came to the turnpike.

Court. In the pariſh of Friers Barnet?—I believe it is in the pariſh of Whetſtone; a man came up on the ſide of Captain Garforth, who was with me; my ſervant was gone on before; he told the poſtboys to ſtop, we had four horſes, the boys did not pay any attention to him at firſt; then they ſtopped; he came to the ſide of Captain Garforth, and ſaid, gentlemen your money and watches.

Were the glaſſes up or down?—Up.

Did he preſent a piſtol?—He did, the glaſſes were immediately pulled down; I gave him my ſilk purſe which contained ſix guineas, or ſix guineas and a half, and my gold repeating watch.

What ſeals were there to it?—Three gold ſeals, two red cornelian and one yellow, and a baſe metal key.

Court. Did Captain Garforth deliver his money too?——He did, the higwayman immediately turned his horſe and gallopped away towards London.

Had he any diſguiſe on his face?—No.

Did you give him the money acroſs Captain Garforth?——Yes.

Was your glaſs down or up?——I think my glaſs was down, or partly down.

Can you ſpeak to the countenance of the man?——Perfectly well.

Was the priſoner at the bar the perſon?——The very ſame.

You ſwear that was the man?——Yes.

Did he turn himſelf towards you, ſo that you had a full view of his countenance?—He was rather muffled up.

Did you ſee his face?—I cannot ſay I ſaw all his face, I ſaw his countenance.

You are ſure that is the man?——Yes, as ſoon as he went away from us the poſtboys were going on, I immediately hallooed out to them to ſtop; I jumped out of the carriage, I had a pair of piſtols but they were not loaded; I ordered one of the poſtboys to unharneſs his horſe immediately and ride after him, I ſwore he might take them if he pleaſed.

Did he do ſo?—Yes, he is here. We ſtopped on the Common about half an hour, then we went on with three horſes to the Red Lion, at the bottom of the hill; in about half an hour the poſtboy returned, and ſaid the man was ſecured; upon which I went back.

Did you ſee the man that night or the next morning?—The next morning.

You knew him again very well?—Directly.

Priſoner. I aſk no queſtions, my Lord, I acknowledge I am guilty of the crime that is laid to my charge.

CAPT. FRANCIS GARFORTH ſworn.

I was in the poſt-chaiſe when it was ſtopped, the highwayman came to my ſide, the glaſs was up, I put the glaſs down, he aſked for our money, I gave him mine, and my watch.

What ſort of a night was it?——It was rather foggy, and about five in the evening.

Had he any diſguiſe on his face, or was he muffled up at all?—Not the leaſt.

How was his great-coat?——It was buttoned.

Was that the man?——Yes, my Lord.

Did you get out and direct the purſuit, or did you remain in the chaiſe?——I got out and walked about; and when I got to the Red Lion I had an account the man was taken.

You are poſitive that is the man?——Confident.

Were the things found?——Every thing found upon him.

I was one of the poſt-chaiſe boys that drove theſe gentlemen.

Are you a London poſtboy?—Yes.

What inn did you come from?—The Swan-yard, in Oxford-ſtreet.

What time in the evening might you ſet out with theſe gentlemen?——When we went by Oxford Chapel the clock ſtruck four; we were ſtopped about a quarter of a mile on this ſide the eight mile ſtone; we got there in leſs than an hour.

Court. What pariſh is that?—I do not know.

In what manner was your chaiſe ſtopped?—He came up to the chaiſe, I heard ſomebody ſpeak, I thought it was a gentleman that wanted to ſpeak to Sir William; I ſaw a piſtol in his hand, I heard him cry ſtop, I ſtopped directly.

Was it light enough for you to ſee his countenance?—Yes.

The gentlemen were robbed, were not they, as you believe?—Yes.

Could you ſee the highwayman's face at the time he was by the chaiſe?—Yes.

Was that the man?—That is the man.

Then you muſt look back.—I did.

He took nothing from either of you poſtboys?——No.

Which way did he go?—To London as faſt as he could gallop.

Had he a good horſe under him?——A very poor horſe.

I ſuppoſe you took the beſt of your horſes to purſue him?—I took the horſe I rode, and I purſued him; Sir William deſired me to purſue him.

What coloured horſe did the highwayman ride?—A grey mare.

How ſoon might it be before you overtook him?—I overtook him in the ſpace of a mile, at the Green Man, he walked up the hill, and I kept ſight of him about 2 or 300 yards behind; I had no piſtols.

How ſoon did you venture to get up with him?—When he came to Highgate, I got as near him as I could, then I hallooed ſtop thief, I was juſt got up the hill oppoſite the Bull; there were three men going through Highgate on horſeback, they tried to ſtop him but did not; he kept going down the Holloway road, and when he came about half way down the hill, I was obliged to run my horſe up againſt a waggon, or elſe I muſt have gone by him; my horſe went ſo faſt I could not ſtop him: I then heard two reports of a piſtol, I was then about fifty or ſixty yards from him; after that I got cloſe to him and met with a horſe patrol, and he would not aſſiſt me; I called to him to aſſiſt me, and told him of it, and he would not; there happened to be two gentlemen on the road, one going to London and the other to Whetſtone, one Mr. Dalton and one Mr. Cooper, and they inſiſted on the patrol coming to aſſiſt me; with that the patrol came up and ſaid to the gentlemen, that it was a falſe report; then the highwayman came forward, and he and the patrol and me were all ſide by ſide, I thought he was going to catch hold of us; the patrol had arms. Then the patrol went back again and would not aſſiſt me; the gentlemen went about their buſineſs; I told him I would not want any aſſiſtance if he would lend me his hanger; the patrol would not; then the priſoner rode away from me for the ſpace of eight or ten minutes; the patrol went and ſent three men but he never came himſelf: then the priſoner was taken.

Who took the priſoner?—I am not ſure whether I caught hold of the reins firſt, or whether the patrol did.

Did the priſoner make any reſiſtance?—No, my Lord, he begged the favour of them to let him ride on his horſe; he was taken to the Half Moon at Holloway, we took him off the horſe and he walked.

Was he ſearched there?—Yes, we found two gold watches and a purſe; we ſearched him after he got into the room.

What were the two firings that you heard?—He fired firſt at the watchmen, and then the watchman fired at him.

You ſwear the priſoner is the man?——Yes.

Court. It ſeems to me a little extraordinary, that as he had fired at the watchman and the watchman had fired at him, that he did not make the beſt of his way to town?—He made the beſt of his way, but his horſe would not go.

THOMAS BROWN ſworn.

I am a watchman from Whittingſtone to the Crown at Highgate.

Do you remember any thing happening on the night of the 10th of November laſt, when you was on the watch?—I was on my duty about the middle of the hill, and I heard a great noiſe of ſtop thief, ſtop thief; I went off the foot-path into the road; I ſaw horſemen and footmen coming down the hill, and then there came a man by on a grey horſe, and he fired at me.

How came he to fire at you, did you attempt to ſtop him?—I did not.

What did did you do then?—I fired at him; he rode on, I did not take him.

Can you tell whether that is the man or no?—No.

You was not there when he was taken?—No.

THOMAS FISHER ſworn.

I keep the Half Moon in Holloway.

Do you recollect any man being brought to your houſe on the 10th of November?—Yes.

Who brought him in there?——John Prince, he is one of the patrol.

Who was with him?—William Scott, they are both patrols.

Was the poſtboy with him?—I cannot recollect whether he was or no.

It was the priſoner that was brought in.—Yes.

What time of night might that be?——About half paſt five to the beſt of my knowledge.

I ſhould think it muſt be later.—No, I think not; it was a grey mare the priſoner rode, he is the man, he was ſearched in my parlour.

(The watches produced and depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay; I do not wiſh to give the Court any unneceſſary trouble; I have people for my character that I never was guilty of any thing before.

—— SCOTT ſworn.

Was you one of the patrol?—Yes.

Who took him?—Prince and me.

Was the poſtboy with you?—He was hard by, he did not lay hold of him; he put the piſtol to my head and I took it from him, one piſtol was loaded and the other was unloaded.

FOR THE PRISONER.

JOHN UXLEY ſworn.

I am a turner in Hart-ſtreet, Cripplegate; I have known the priſoner about fifteen months to the beſt of my knowledge.

What is the priſoner?—He has been a Captain in the navy.

Court to Priſoner. In whoſe ſervice was you, Sir?—My Lord, I was in the ſeafaring line, but not in that line.

Uxley. I lodged in the houſe with him; I underſtood he was a Captain in the navy, and had a great deal of prize money and lived upon it; I ſpent many evenings with him both at home and abroad, and I took him to be a very honeſt man by his behaviour and conduct.

Court to Priſoner. Was you ever in the King's ſervice?—Yes, my Lord.

In what capacity?—I was maſter at arms.

JOHN MALKIN ſworn.

I have known the priſoner three months; I am a taylor, I always worked for him, I never knew any thing but juſt and honeſt by him.

MARY SIDDALL ſworn.

The priſoner lodged in my houſe fifteen months, he behaved very ſoberly and very orderly; I had a good recommendation of him when he came into my houſe from the beadle of the pariſh; my houſe is in Frying-pan Alley, Wood-ſtreet; he always was at home by ten; he had a firſt floor one part of the time, and the other a two pair of ſtairs room.

What buſineſs did he follow?—When he came to me I underſtood he had money, he was recommended to me.

ELIZABETH GLOVER ſworn.

I live at the next door, I have known the priſoner upwards of twelve months; he was always very orderly and ſober, and a civil neighbour, I never thought any thing amiſs of him till I heard this affair.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, I examined theſe witneſſes to ſee what his general character was; it is ſurprizing that nobody knows any thing of this man before theſe laſt fifteen months.

Mr. Baron Hotham to Priſoner. What ſhip was you maſter at arms in?—The Gibraltar.

How came you not to go with the Gibraltar abroad?—I came on ſhore ſick.

Was you diſcharged?—Yes, my misfortune is at preſent that I am far from my acquaintance and friends.

What countryman are you?—An Iriſhman; I was in a line of life ſince I came to London that I maintained myſelf without going out in any ſuch way, but a ſcene of loſſes and misfortunes brought me to it; it was my firſt offence, I hope your Lordſhip, and the Gentlemen of the Jury will look upon me as an object worthy to be recommended to mercy.

GUILTY, Death.

Priſoner. I never, ſo help me God, intended to hurt the man, but as any man in my ſituation would wiſh to get clear when they came up on each ſide; but, ſo help me God, I no more intended to hurt the man, any more than I do now to fire at your Lordſhip.

Jury. My Lord, it is the general ſenſe of the Jury to recommend the priſoner for mercy.

Court. You look upon it to be his firſt offence then I ſuppoſe, Gentlemen?—Yes, we do, my Lord.

Court. Let Robert Mead the poſtboy have 20l. the two patrolmen, Prince and Scott, 7l. 10s. each; Brown the watchman 4l. and Fiſher 20s.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

7. REBECCA BIDWELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th of December, ſix pair of ribbed cotton ſtockings, value 21s. the property of William Saunders, privily in his ſhop.

I am a hoſier, I ſell by retail.

Did you loſe any ſtockings on Tueſday?—Yes, ſix pair of fine cotton ribbed.

Was you in the ſhop at the time?—Yes, I am chiefly in the manufactory way.

I am ſervant to Mr. Saunders, on Tueſday night about nine o'clock, the priſoner and another woman came into my maſter's ſhop in Broad-ſtreet Bloomſbury, and aſked for ſome clocked worſted ſtockings; I went backwards to get ſome ſtockings, and while I was there, the priſoner took a paper of cotton ſtockings with ſix pair in it, my back was turned to her, I did not ſee her take them, they were ſix pair of ſuperfine ribbed cotton.

What may be the value of them ?—One pound one ſhilling.

Court. That is three ſhillings and ſixpence a pair ?—Yes.

Did you ſerve the other woman with ſtockings ?—No, ſhe would not have them at that price, I aſked eighteen-pence, and ſhe wanted them for ſixteen-pence, the other woman told this woman to go out and mind a jackaſs that they had out of doors; I ſuſpected then that they had got ſomething; and I told the maid as ſoon as they were gone that they had got ſomething.

Did you examine to ſee if you had loſt any ſtockings ?—Yes, one Mr. Meecham came who had taken the ſtockings upon her, he aſked me if we had loſt any ſtockings, I ſaid, I would look, I told him, I thought I had by two women who juſt then went out.

Did Meecham tell you what ſtockings he had taken ?—He ſaid, he had taken ſome ſtockings, I looked, and miſſed theſe ſix pair of ribbed white cotton, I had put them in the window about five minutes before; I then went with Mr. Meecham to a public houſe, next to Juſtice Walker's in High-ſtreet, and there I ſaw the ſtockings.

GEORGE MEECHAM ſworn.

I belong to the public office in High-ſtreet, Bloomſbury, and I am one of the deputy keepers of New Priſon, about half after nine o'clock on Tueſday morning laſt, I met one Mary Wright, and I ſuſpected her, knowing her to be a ſhop lifter, ſhe ran up Bow-ſtreet; and I met the priſoner in Hyde-ſtreet, and I ſuſpected ſhe had ſomething, I ſaw ſomething of a bundle ſtick under her cloak, I pulled her cloak on one ſide, and ſaid, what have you here, ſhe ſaid, nothing, immediately from under her arm I took this bundle of ſtockings, there are ſix pair, they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, ſhe ſaid, ſhe found them in an alley.

(The ſtockings depoſed to by Holland, marked by himſelf, and alſo by Mr. Saunders.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay, I found the ſtockings, and I met Meecham, and I told him what I had got, I took him to the place where I picked them up, that I am ſure of.

Court to Holland. When you went backwards did you obſerve whether the priſoner moved from the place where ſhe was or not ?—When I went backwards I ſaw her at the counter and nobody elſe, and I ſaw her pull her cloak over ſomething, I ſuſpected her then.

Court to Holland. Is that the ſelling price ?—Yes.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

8. WILLIAM MAYNARD and WILLIAM RICHARDSON were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting George Noble, on the King's highway, on the 1ſt of November laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one handkerchief, value 1s. one guinea, value 21s. one crown piece, value 5s. a ſilver ſixpence, and ſix copper halfpence, his property.

GEORGE NOBLE ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Jackſon in James-ſtreet, near Buckingham-gate, I was coming home from Chelſea the firſt of November laſt, about half paſt nine o'clock, and the two priſoners were walking towards London before me, about the middle of the road, about half a mile from town.

Did you know them before ?—No, it was in the Five-fields Road, they were about two hundred yards before me, I overtook them, and then Maynard turned round and took hold of me by my arm, and he told me to make no noiſe, and the priſoner Richardſon pulled out a piſtol and ſtood over me with it, he did not ſpeak; Maynard deſired me to be quick about it; he had hold of my arm at the time, and the priſoner Maynard ſearched my fob for a watch but I had none, then he put his hand in my right-hand breeches pocket and took a crown piece and a ſixpence, then he put his hand in my left-hand breeches pocket and took a guinea, then he put his hand in my waiſtcoat pocket and took threepence halfpenny or fourpence halfpenny, but I am not ſure to the number of halfpence; then he put his hand in my jacket pocket and took my pocket handkerchief.

This was all you loſt?—Yes.

Did Richardſon ſtand with the piſtol over you all the time Maynard was ſearching you?—Yes, Maynard turned me round and told me to go about my buſineſs, which I did.

Court. I ſhould be very glad to know how you can ſwear to either of theſe priſoners?—It was quite moon-light.

JONN SHARRARD ſworn.

I am one of the officers of Bow-ſtreet, I apprehended the priſoners on the 7th of November in Hyde Park, a robbery having been committed that night, we took them on foot, we went in ſearch of them, they made no reſiſtance, I ſearched them both, I found round Maynard's knee this handkerchief, his breeches was torn.

Did you find any piſtols on them?—No, there was one found juſt on the ſpot.

(The handkerchief ſhewn to Noble.)

Noble. I am poſitive to this handkerchief by the border, and a faint impreſſion of the border, and two remarkable holes, one hole was bit by a perſon's teeth.

(The handkerchief ſhewn to the Jury.)

Court. Were the holes all bit?—I do not know, but I remember the holes.

I was preſent when theſe priſoners were taken, there was no piſtols about them, this handkerchief was round Maynard's knee, I thought I ſaw Maynard fling a piſtol over the rails, and I afterwards found a piſtol there, the piſtol was charged.

Court to Proſecutor. What ſort of a piſtol was it Richardſon held over you?—It was a large horſe piſtol.

(A large horſe piſtol produced, which was loaded with a marble.)

PRISONER MAYNARD'S DEFENCE.

I never ſaw the man before in my life, I have not been at Chelſea for above half a year.

PRISONER RICHARDSON'S DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay, only leave it to the mercy of the Court.

The Priſoner Richardſon called one Witneſs who gave him a good character.

WM. MAYNARD, WM. RICHARDSON,	GUILTY Death.

They were both humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

49. MARY HUMFREYS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Jones, the younger, on the King's highway, on the 24th of November laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one guinea, value 21s. and two ſhillings and ſixpence halfpenny in monies numbered, his property.

I was robbed the 24th of laſt month, between 8 and 9 o'clock at night, in Charlotte Buildings, Gray's Inn Lane; I was ſent from Mr. Parry's Chambers in Gray's Inn, to go into Holborn on ſome buſineſs for him, and the priſoner laid hold of me by the collar, and dragged me into thoſe buildings againſt my will; I reſiſted and ſtruck her ſeveral times over the arm, I felt her hand in my pocket, with that ſhe let go her hold and ran away from me, I followed her, and another woman met her, and they both went into a houſe where they lodged, which was over the ground floor, they attempted to ſhut the door, I ruſhed in, and when they got in, they wanted to ſhut the door upon me; as I ruſhed in, I heard ſome pieces of money thrown down; I got out and called the neighbours to my aſſiſtance, one of them ſaid, he would look in the chimney piece, and ſee if ſhe had thrown any thing there, and he looked, and he found a half-crown, I loſt a guinea and a half-crown, and a halfpenny: I had two guineas in my pocket, and half-a-crown, and a penny, I have only found the half-crown.

Court. I thing you ſaid, that at the time you was in the alley you ſtruck her and ſtruggled with her, did you feel her hand in your pocket all that time?—No, not all the time.

Did you know then ſhe was endeavouring to take your money?—No, not till I felt her hand in my pocket, I ſent for a conſtable, and for my governor, and my father and the priſoner was taken up.

Priſoners. Whether he did not firſt come up the court where we were ſtanding, and make many impudent ſpeeches, which I was aſhamed of, as he was ſo much of a child. Did I drag you into the court?—Yes, you did.

Priſoner. Lord have mercy upon your wicked Soul! did not you come into the court?—It is falſe.

Did I pull you up the court?——Yes, you did.

GEORGE BELL ſworn.

I was coming down the court between 8 and 9 at night to my father's, and I ſaw a number of people round a door, I went to ſee what was the matter, and I ſaw this young gentleman crying, he ſaid, he had loſt a guinea, and half-a-crown, and a halfpenny, and he ſhewed me a guinea and a halfpenny that he had left; I went and fetched his maſter, then two or three people were in the houſe, I looked in the fire place, and in ſifting the aſhes, I found half-a-crown; the gentleman's father is here, he ſaw me pick it up.

Is that it?—I cannot ſwear to the half-crown.

JOHN JONES ſworn.

I live in the court juſt on the ſpot, I heard a great noiſe, I went to ſee what was the matter, the young gentleman ſaid he was robbed, he could not tell who it was, and a woman told me, it was one that was called Hell-fire Moll, and that ſhe was gone into ſuch a houſe, I was determined ſhe ſhould be taken, I ſecured the door and window, and word was brought that no conſtable could be found, I went and got a conſtable and took her, ſhe denied the fact, I only ſtepped out to ſatisfy my wife where I was; and at that time the half-crown was found.

WILLIAM MARDEN ſworn.

I am a paſtry-cook in Middle-row, Holborn, one of theſe young fellows came to call me to take the priſoner, I went to the houſe deſcribed, where the priſoner was delivered into my charge, I ſearched her, and looked round the room, I found a halfpenny.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going down Gray's-inn-lane, and I met an acquaintance of mine, who told me her huſband had been licking her concerning ſome money, ſhe aſked me to go and eat a bit of ſupper with her, it rather miſled with rain, he was coming into, or going out of the court, he came and ſpoke to me, ſeeing him ſo much of a child, I was aſhamed to ſpeak with him, we went home to her apartments, for I do not lodge there, this young lad puſhed open the door and came in after us, he ſaid I will give you ſomething to drink, he put his hand into his pocket and pulled out a guinea, I told him to go along, ſomebody came up and the boy ſaid I had robbed him, I was ſearched from head to ſtern, I never offered to ſtir, I am as innocent as your Lordſhip, I have no witneſſes to my character, becauſe I did not ſend for any, beſides I have not any, I do not keep any company.

Priſoner to the Proſecutor. Did not you ſay to me that you had been with a woman before, and was as knowing as a man of twenty?—Proſecutor. It is falſe.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

10. GEORGE WEST was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting John Rogers in a certain field and open place near the King's highway, on the 1ſt of November laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one half crown, value 2s. 6d. and one ſilver ſixpence, value 6d. the property of Mary Cox, widow.

JOHN ROGERS.

Court. How old are you?—Fifteen.

Do you know what a ſerious thing it is to take an oath?—Yes.

What is it?—An appeal to Heaven that I ſpeak the truth.

Court. Go on.

I was going to Pancras on foot between eleven and twelve o'clock, in the day time, and a man came down after me and overtook me, and he began talking to me about his being a ſoldier, and what countries he had been in, this was in the high road, he ſaid he had been in very cold countries, and very hot, that he could not bear them; when we came about half way down the fields, he aſked me where I was going, whether I was going to Kentiſh Town or to London, I told him to Kentiſh Town, he told me he would ſhew me a nearer way, for he was going that way to ſpeak to his brother-in-law, who was hedging and ditching that way; I went with him, he took me acroſs two or three fields, till we came into a foot-path, he went along there a good way, and came paſt a good many people that was at work there, and when we got under a little hedge, he damned me, and told me to give him all the money I had, he took me by the collar, I gave it him, and he let looſe of me, and bid me go to hell; he ſtruck acroſs the fields towards London, I ſuppoſe, he ran away, I went on and got through ſome yards into Kentiſh Town; I never was in that place where I was robbed before in my life, I went to the houſe where I was going, and I told the people what a misfortune had happened to me.

Do you know the man again?—Yes.

Was he a tall or a ſhort man?—A tall thin man, that is him, he had a ſtriped waiſtcoat, ſuch as the lamp-lighters in general wear.

Can be you be poſitive about him, do you think you may not be miſtaken?—No, Sir, I am very ſure it is him, I have ſeen him before in Kentiſh Town doing the lamps, I fancy he had a job there for a few days.

I was informed this man had robbed this lad, I was ſent after him, and I took him the 5th of November in the morning about half after ſix, in the fields between Highgate and London; he was deſcribed by ſeveral people to me.

Did the man ſay any thing when you took him?—He confeſſed that he robbed the lad before me, and the ſame before the Juſtice, when he was committed to priſon.

Did you ſay any thing to him to induce him to confeſs!—No, I aſked him how he came to do ſo, he pretended he was a little in liquor.

THOMAS SAVAGE ſworn.

I am a conſtable, the laſt witneſs brought the priſoner to me, and before the Juſtice I heard him ſay if he had not been in liquor he ſhould not have done it.

Court to Rogers. Did he appear to be in liquor at the time?—No, I do not think he was in liquor, he talked very well to me; it was before twelve o'clock.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am innocent, I have no witneſſes.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. What, have you been a ſoldier?——Yes, I was diſcharged about ſix months ago, I was in the 56th regiment.

GUILTY, Death.

Court to Rogers. Who is your father?—He lives in the country.

What friends have you here?—I have no friends here, I live with Mrs. Cox the brewer at Highgate; I am a ſervant lad.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

CATHERINE READ ſworn.

I live with Lord Teynham in Clarges-ſtreet, Piccadilly, I am Lady Teynham's maid, I have lived with her thirteen years; my Lord's houſe was robbed laſt month, I cannot tell the day, I came to town the 11th of laſt month, and I miſſed two blankets from up ſtairs, I aſked what was become of the blankets, then I looked after the linen that was brought home from the waſh, containing ſheets and ſhirts, and table-cloths, the things that are mentioned in the indictment; all the clean linen was ſent to the waſh when we went out of town, the waſherwoman's name was White, I cannot tell when ſhe brought them home, as I was in the country, I ſaw the furniture of the bed, and I put down on a piece of paper what I found in the baſket, after the woman had ſhewn me what theſe were, upon looking over that account, I found all theſe things miſſing; I know nothing of the robbery, I only came to ſwear to the things.

Court. Who had the care of the houſe?——The family had been out of town five months, the priſoner Moody had the care of the houſe, and was permitted to have her huſband there.

I live at Mr. Cooper's a pawnbroker in Great Wild-ſtreet, I produce a ſilk baſket, and two ſilver fiſh pools.

Who brought them to you?—The priſoner Bridget Price brought me one of them, I cannot tell which, for they are all alike, ſhe brought it to me on the 15th of November, I do not know who brought the baſket, ſhe pledged it in the name of Ann Price for ſix ſhillings, the reſt were either taken from her, or as coming from her, ſometimes ſhe uſed to ſend people.

Did ſhe ſay how ſhe came by it?—No, ſhe did not, they had been at the ſhop before and fetched again, and brought again.

(The fiſhpool depoſed to.)

Mrs. Read. There was no mark on them, there were four, and the priſoner Moody confeſſed ſhe took them.

Court. You ſpeak of Moody confeſſing, where did ſhe confeſs, before the magiſtrate?——Yes, before Sir Robert Taylor, it was pawned on the 11th, and taken out again, and pawned again on the 15th.

Court. Is there any confeſſion in writing, Mr. Reynolds?—No, my Lord.

Court to Mrs. Read. Was you preſent when ſhe confeſſed any thing, was any thing ſaid to her to induce her to confeſs, was ſhe adviſed to confeſs by any body?—Not as I know of.

Did any body threaten her, that it would be worſe for her, or better for her?—No, I heard her ſay that ſhe knew there were three pools up ſtairs in my Lady's dining-room, in a large china jar, in a white ſilk bag; and there were the fiſh and counters belonging to them, that was all ſhe ſaid.

Then ſhe did not confeſs ſhe took them?——No.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for Bridget Price, to the pawnbroker. Do you know this young woman?—Yes.

Do you recollect her telling that ſhe pawned them for ſomebody elſe?—No, I knew her very well, I aſked her no queſtions at all.

To Mrs. Read. This young woman, Price, attended before the magiſtrate, and was let go?—Yes.

She came back again of her own accord?—Yes.

She came back again the ſecond time?—No, not the ſecond time, the third time ſhe came.

She came of her own accord?—Yes, ſhe was not in cuſtody.

Was it mentioned in your preſence by any body who they were pawned for?—No.

JAMES COLLINS ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, No. 5, Little Poultney-ſtreet, I have a ſilk gown, two petticoats, a ſheet, a table-cloth, a pair of clogs, a flat iron, and a tea-ſpoon; the priſoner Elizabeth Parker brought them to me, ſhe made uſe of the name of Frances Freelove, I have known her three or four years, and ſhe always made uſe of that name, ſhe brought them to me the 27th of June.

(The things depoſed to by Mrs. Read, being her property and left in the houſe.)

Collins. This ſattin petticoat was brought to me by the priſoner Anne Parker, ſhe brought it to me on the firſt of September, the remainder part of the property was taken from Elizabeth Parker, to the beſt of my recollection, from the 3d of June to the 12th of September.

Jury to Collins. Did you take in that ſeparate or with the other goods?——I lent eight ſhillings upon it, ſhe told me ſhe had a ſacque of the ſame, or a gown.

Did you believe her?——I did.

Jury. Is the ſpoon marked;——No.

Jury to Mrs. Read. What is that petticoat worth;—It coſt 19s. a yard, there is ſix breadths in it.

JAMES PAGET ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, I live in John-ſtreet, Golden-ſquare; I produce three gowns, two petticoats, and a quilt, I took them from Elizabeth Parker, they were pawned in that name, I had them from the 7th of June to the 20th of October.

I live in Jermyn-ſtreet, I have a black ſilk gown and petticoat, that is all I took in myſelf; there is another ſilk gown, a pair of ſhoes, and a white apron; I took the gown and petticoat from Mary Moody, the 2d or third of October; the gown for 2s. and the petticoat for 1s. 6d. ſhe ſaid ſhe brought them for Ann Price; I knew her before.

(Theſe things depoſed to.)

Priſoner Moody. He knows I pawned them in my own name.

WILLIAM MANSELL ſworn.

I live in Piccadilly; here is a pair of tea tongs and five ſpoons, they were brought by Moody.

Mrs. Read. They are my property; I cannot ſwear to the ſpoons, they are new, but to the tea tongs I can; a plain gold ring I loſt.

Manſell. Some of theſe things were brought by Moody, and ſome by Parker the elder; the tongs and ſpoons by Moody, the ſheets by Parker.

JOSEPH DOBEY ſworn.

I live with Mr. Cooper in Great Wild-ſtreet; I received theſe from the priſoner Ann Price, ſhe always went by that name in our ſhop; ſhe brought one ſacque, a table-cloth and two ſilver fiſh-pools.

The ſacque depoſed to, being the ſame as the petticoat.

Jury. Do you remember what was lent on that ſacque?—One guinea.

Priſoner's Council. Did you aſk any queſtions?—She ſaid ſhe brought it from an acquaintance.

THOMAS BARRY ſworn.

I am a conſtable; on the 12th of laſt month my lady's ſervant came to me at the Rotation Office, and told me my lord had been robbed, that ſhe came to town the night before, and came there for advice; I went with her, ſhe ſaid the woman that robbed her had been there over night, and going along we met Mrs. Moody; ſo ſays Mrs. Read, Mrs. Moody, how well you have got me theſe things in; ſays Moody, I have been with an acquaintance that promiſed to get them in to day; ſays I, is this the woman; ſhe ſaid, yes; I took Moody into cuſtody, I took her into a public-houſe; ſays Mrs. Moody, have you any thing about you; ſhe ſaid, no; ſays I, I will ſee, and in her pocket I found this green bag with eighteen duplicates in it, with ſome in the name of Parker, ſome Price, ſome Moody; and I pulled out of her pocket this key; the ſervant ſeeing the key in my hand, Lord, ſays ſhe, Mrs. Moody, that is my key, I hope you have not been in my trunk; ſhe ſaid, no; I found nothing elſe upon her, I put her into the watch-houſe, and then went to my lord's houſe to ſee what was miſſing, we went up ſtairs and opened the trunk, Lord, ſays ſhe, my things are all gone; we took an account of the articles that were miſſing for me to give an account to the magiſtrate; I enquired where the huſband worked, and went to his apartments and took him up; I ſearched his lodgings, there was nothing of their property: I took them both to the Rotation Office; ſhe ſaid if I would enquire at a little pawnbroker's-ſhop in Knave's Acre, I might find them out; I went to enquire after them, they ſaid they would not tell where they lived; I was directed to the taylor's in St. James's Market; I found the other priſoners two or three days after, and apprehended them, but I found no duplicates but what I found on Moody. About twenty minutes before I apprehended Price, ſhe had pawned the fiſh-pool for 6s.

(The key depoſed to by Mrs. Read.)

Court to Mrs. Read. How came Mary Moody by that key?—I left my key of my trunk in a drawer in the garret when I went into the country.

Where were all theſe things left in the houſe?—Mine was in my trunk, my lady's things were in her drawers not locked, ſhe did not think but the perſon was very honeſt.

When you came home, did you find Moody in the houſe?—Yes.

When did ſhe leave the houſe?—The next morning; I came from the ſtage between ſeven and eight, and miſſed two blankets; then I aſked for the linen that my lady left to be waſhed, and ſhe could not find them, ſays ſhe, I will get them for you; why, ſays I, ſure miſtreſs you have not pawned my lady's ſheets; ſays ſhe, I have, I will bring them to you in the morning; ſhe laid in the parlour, and the next morning ſhe was gone. Not finding her come back, I aſked a gentleman what I ſhould do, he told me to go to the Rotation Office, which I did.

Mr. Sylveſter to Barry. This young woman, Price, was let go upon her promiſing to come again?—Yes, by two people anſwering for her coming again.

And ſhe came voluntarily?—Yes.

ELIZABETH SAUNDERS ſworn.

I know nothing but what Mrs. Moody told me the morning ſhe left my lord's houſe; ſhe has lodged in my houſe three years, and I always found her to be a very honeſt woman; ſhe told me, that morning that Miſs Price came to her and ſaid ſhe was in great diſtreſs for ſome money, and begged her to lend her ſomething to make a trifle of money on, and ſhe rather refuſed it.

Priſoner's Council. Price was not there?—No, ſhe ſaid ſhe gave her ſome liquor, and made her rather in liquor, and ſhe had ſome things out of the houſe, and ſhe had been to her that morning, and ſhe had promiſed her to get them that day, that is all I know.

Priſoner's Council. Price was not there?—No.

Court. Is Price any relation of her's?—Not that I know of, I heard her ſay they were country people.

PRISONER MOODY's DEFENCE.

I have not much to ſay for myſelf; I acknowledge that I pledged ſome of the things, and got tickets of them to take them out, and I had wrote down to my brother for ſome money; I ſhould have made up the money, for my lady told me I ſhould have a month's notice, and ſhe came to town and gave me no notice.

PRISONER E. PARKER's DEFENCE.

My ſiſter gave me a trifle to pawn for a ſhilling or two, and I always gave it to her, but I did not pawn half or a quarter of theſe things, only they put them in my name.

ANN PARKER's DEFENCE.

When I went with that petticoat Mrs. Moody was with me; I did not ſee the pattern of the coat, nor know what it was before I went to the pawnbroker's, nor I did not ſee the coat then, I ſtood in a little box in the ſhop.

PRISONER PRICE's DEFENCE.

The things that I carried was a ſacque and a table-cloth, and one of theſe ſilver things, Mrs. Moody gave them to me, and deſired me to carry them.

Priſoner Moody. I lent them her for herſelf.

The priſoner Bridget Price called three witneſſes, who gave her a good character.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the four priſoners are all indicted for a capital offence; your conſideration will therefore be, whether, in the firſt place, all or any of them ſtole goods in a dwelling houſe; and if you are of that opinion, you are then to find what the value of theſe goods ſo ſtolen is, if it is leſs than forty ſhillings their lives are ſaved, if it is above forty ſhilling that makes it a capital offence: You are farther to enquire, whether they were ſtolen in the dwelling houſe; now I think if they were ſtolen at all, they were taken in the dwelling houſe; the general ſtory you find is, that Mrs. Catherine Read, who is my lady's woman, ſays ſhe was ſent to town, &c. (Here the learned Judge ſummed up the evidence and added.) Upon this evidence you will determine whether you think all or any of them ſtole all or any of theſe goods; and to what amount; if you are all of opinion, that any of them have ſtolen goods to the amount of forty ſhillings (as I told you before) is a capital offence; but then you muſt be ſatisfied that the goods to that value were ſtolen at one time, becauſe unleſs you are, there is no particular theft amounting to that value; and ſo it ſeems to me extremely difficult for you to ſay upon this ſtate of the evidence, that at any one time goods to the value of forty ſhillings were ſtolen.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. What is the value of one of theſe ſilk gowns?

One of the Jury. I can tell you my Lord. (Looks at it.) One of them are not worth forty ſhillings.

Mr. Baron Hotham. Under this difficulty there is nothing elſe involved but that flowered gown and coat, which were pawned at two times, and therefore the gown might be taken one day, and the coat another; and where it comes to ſuch a nicety as that, perhaps you will think yourſelves at liberty to ſuppoſe in favour of life, that nothing was taken at any one time to the value of forty ſhillings, and you will then ſave the lives of theſe people; it will then remain for you to conſider which of them you will charge with ſimple felony: Now you find that every one of them has pawned ſomething, there is no evidence againſt any one of them, but what ariſes from the act of pledging theſe goods; but that is an act ſufficient to put the party upon giving an account how they came by them; for at firſt view it is a diſhoneſt thing to have your goods or mine in another perſon's cuſtody, they having nothing to do with them; now they have given no account how they came by theſe goods; and if it was to relieve them in an inſtant neceſſity, they would not want to take ſuch a number of things, eſpecially for five months together; if you ſuppoſe that they really intended to plunder the houſe, and that the fact really was that they were ſurprized by the ſudden return of Mrs. Read, and flattered themſelves with the expectation of this month's notice, which would have given them time to have accommodated matters, either for their excuſe or for facilitating their eſcape, then to be ſure you will ſuppoſe all that they did was with a different purpoſe; and with reſpect to the diſtinction of the different perſons, Moody was the perſon entruſted with the care of the houſe; ſhe is the only perſon that lived in the houſe, therefore it is to be preſumed that ſhe having pawned ſome of theſe things, that ſhe was the hand that took all the goods; and there are theſe two ſtrong circumſtances againſt her more than againſt the reſt, that of making her eſcape in the morning, and when ſhe was taken being found with the key of Mrs. Read's box in her pocket; that key Mrs. Read ſwears was up ſtairs in a drawer in the garret, when ſhe went out of town; therefore it is impoſſible that ſhe could have any buſineſs with that key; another circumſtance is, that ſhe had the poſſeſſion of the duplicates, not only of the things that were pawned in her name, but as the conſtable ſays, ſome in the name of Price, ſome in the name of Parker, ſome in the name of Moody. All of them were in her poſſeſſion; that imports very ſtrongly that they were pledged for her benefit, at leaſt in common with the reſt. With reſpect to the two Parkers, they are relations to her, and they did pledge at ſeveral different times part of this property; if you are of opinion that they were concerned in taking theſe things, and that they knew they were not Moody's property, but the property of Lady Teynham, and were alſo inſtruments of pawning them, you will connect them with Moody, ſo as to include them in the ſame guilt; if on the other hand, you only think them guilty in the light of receivers, then that is a different ſpecies of offence, with which they are not now charged, but which may hereafter ſubject them to other puniſhments; but if you ſuppoſe them principals in the fact, then they are equally guilty, and that involves the caſe of Price alſo, becauſe ſhe pledged ſeveral of theſe things in the name of Ann inſtead of Bridget; ſhe however has this peculiarly attending her caſe, which ſpeaks ſtrongly in her [illegible], that were taken up [illegible] this [illegible] and [illegible] the same volun-tarily again. As for Mary Moody she appears to be the principal in this matter, and as to her, I think there can be no doubt of her guilt, and the only doubt is whether you think the other three were principals or receivers.

MARY MOODY, GUILTY, Death.

ANN PARKER,
ELIZABETH PARKER, } GUILTY
BRIDGET PRICE,

Of ſtealing to the value [illegible]

Ann and Elizabeth Parker to be confined to hard labour twelve months in the Houſe of Correction, and Bridget Price to be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

WILLIAM CROUCH and WILLIAM HAINES were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Robert Beckett on the King's highway, on the 1ſt day of December laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſhilling and nine pence farthing, in monies numbered, his monies.

ROBERT BECKETT ſworn.

I am aſſiſtant to the Hackney poſtman, on the 1ſt of December I was at Fulham at a quarter paſt ſeven, I was attacked by two perſons, when they met me firſt, it was about a quarter of a mile on this ſide the Four-mile-ſtone, they ſaid nothing to me at firſt, I bid them a good night.

Was it a dark night or a light night?—It was moon-light, but very foggy, they ran after me very quick, they told me to ſtop, they unbuttoned my clothes, and they pulled out a bludgeon, the priſoner Haines took me by the collar, and I gave him all the money I had, I gave him about one ſhilling and nine pence, then with a deal of perſuading they let me go, they did not hit me, but they threatened me, and Haines ſwore have you got no more.

Can you ſwear to the perſons of the men?—Yes, I have known Crouch ſome time.

Can you ſwear to Crouch?—Yes, I can.

Do you know his voice?—Yes.

Can you ſwear to Haines?—Yes, I picked him out of a good many people.

Can you ſwear that Haines was one of the men that robbed you?—Yes, I can.

You ſwear to them both?—Yes.

Was it light enough for you to ſee their faces?—Yes.

Where was Crouch while Haines robbed you?—At the ſide.

What did he ſay?—I cannot ſay that he ſaid any thing.

Had he a bludgeon in his hand?—Yes.

He was in company with the other?—Yes, they were taken about three quarters of an hour after, I followed them, I went to Acton, I came to Shepherd's Waſh, and got ſome people to go with me, I found Haines in a publick-houſe, and Crouch near his own door; at the time he ſtood by while I was robbed, I knew Crouch particularly.

Priſoner Crouch. My Lord I am deaf, I never ſaw him nor knew him in my life.

WILLIAM BOYER ſworn.

I conduct the patrol belonging to Bow-ſtreet, the priſoners were apprehended by me on the information of the proſecutor, the robbery was about a mile and three quarters on this ſide Acton, near the Four-mile-ſtone, we had information of it, we got to Acton about twenty minutes after eight, we ſearched ſeveral publick-houſes, there were ſeveral people in each houſe, we went into the Red Lion, there were twelve or fourteen people, and the proſecutor picked out the priſoner Haines from them, and ſaid this is one of them that robbed me, I immediately took him into another room, and ſearched him, I found nine penny worth of halfpence on him; we then went to enquire for the priſoner Crouch, upon information that we received at the Red Lion, and within about twenty yards of his door the proſecutor ſaw him in the ſtreet and ſaid, that is the man that robbed me, he ſaid ſo before any body pointed him out; in his pocket I found ſome money and a crooked farthing, which the proſecutor ſaid he believed to be his.

Jury. The proſecutor has not mentioned any crooked farthing.

Court to Proſecutor. What do you ſay as to the farthing?—I cannot be poſitive to it, I had a crookod farthing, it was taken from me, I believe this to be it.

Bowyer. The priſoners both denied it then, but on their examinations before Sir Sampſon Wright you will find they confeſſed the robbery. (The confeſſions which were taken in writing before the Juſtice ſhewn to him.) This was Haines's confeſſion which I ſaw him ſign, it was read over to him before he ſigned it, it was free and voluntary; it is ſigned by Mr. Addington: Crouch made the confeſſion firſt, and on Haines being ſent for over, he immediately confeſſed it; they were both read over to them, indeed Crouch read his himſelf; he ſaid he was induced to commit the robbery by Haines, who firſt propoſed it.

(The confeſſions read.)

"The examination of William Crouch,
" charged for a felony on Robert Becket,
" taken before me William Addington,
" Eſq. one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the " Peace, the 2d of December 1783; that
" he, this examinant, in company with
" Haines now preſent, robbed the ſaid Ro-
" bert Becket laſt night about half paſt ſe-
" ven, a little on this ſide Acton, of eleven
" pence farthing in copper and a ſixpence,
" and that they parted the money.

(Signed) "William Crouch."

(The confeſſion of Haines read to the ſame effect.)

PRISONER CROUCH's DEFENCE.

I never ſaw the man in my life; I did not know it was a confeſſion that I ſet my name to, they bid me ſet my name to it.

PRISONER HAINES's DEFENCE.

I did not know it was a confeſſion; I do not know any thing of the robbery.

The priſoner Crouch called three witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

The priſoner Haines called two witneſſes who gave him a good character.

Bowyer. My Lord, Crouch bears an extraordinary good character from every body on the road.

WM. CROUCH, }
WM. HAINES, } GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

They were both humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

13. MARGARET MORING was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of November laſt, four pair of mens leather ſhoes value 14s. the property of Richard Johnſon, privily in his ſhop.

I am a ſhoemaker at No. 180, High Holborn; I loſt a great many ſhoes laſt month. On the 21ſt of laſt month the priſoner came into my ſhop, I told her never to come into my ſhop again; on the 24th ſhe came again; ſhe bought nothing: after ſhe was gone we purſued her into Drury-lane, and took the ſhoes upon her.

I had been over the way of an errand, and I ſaw the priſoner go into the ſhop and come out again; I ran over to my huſband, and aſked him if he had ſerved any body in a blue cloak; he ſaid, no; I purſued the priſoner down Drury-lane, I ſaw her give ſomething to another woman in Drury-lane, then I tapped her on the ſhoulder, and ſaid ſhe muſt go into Holborn with me; ſhe damned me and ſaid ſhe would not go with me, me; I took thoſe ſhoes from her, and ſhe ſaid ſhe would ſtick me; I held her faſt till my huſband came up, and he took her up.

ANDREW JOHNSON, ſworn.

I ſold thoſe ſhoes to the proſecutor, they came from a factor in the country.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never had any of the ſhoes.

Court. What is the value of thoſe ſhoes?—The four pair fourteen ſhillings.

GUILTY, Death.

14. ELEANOR M'CABE and ANN SHERLOCK were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Roſſiter Linton in the dwelling-houſe of Elizabeth Martin, on the 7th day of November laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will one watch, with the inſide caſe made of metal and the outſide caſe made of ſhagreen, value 10s. and 5s. and 6d. in monies numbered, the property of the ſaid Roſſiter Linton.

ROSSITER LINTON ſworn.

I am a weaver; I met the two priſoners in Drury-lane on the 7th of November, and they aſked me to go with them to their room; it was between nine and ten.

Was you drunk or ſober?—I was ſober.

Really ſober?—Yes; I agreed to lay with one of them for one ſhilling, and I gave it her; that was the priſoner Sherlock.

Did you go to bed?—No, I was not in bed; when I had got ſome part of my clothes off ſhe called the other up, and they threw me down on the bed, and one of them lay over me, and the other took my breeches from me and ran down with them, and took my watch and money out; I had the breeches in my hand at the time they threw me down; there was 5s. 6d. and my watch in my breeches; it was M'Cabe that ran down ſtairs with it; Sherlock ſwore ſhe would take away my life if I made any reſiſtance; ſhe threw me the breeches again, and I put my things on, and went down; ſomebody without cried lock the door, and the ſtreet-door was locked on the outſide; and they ſtopped me at the ſtreet-door, and ſearched if I had any more money about me, and they pulled off my ſhoes.

What did they do with your ſhoes?—They let me put them on again when they ſaw there was no money in them; they ſearched all my pockets, and took my breeches down the thigh to ſee if there was any money in the breeches; then they let me go.

How long might you be kept in the houſe?—About a quarter of an hour from firſt to laſt. There were only theſe two up ſtairs; M'Cabe had gone down ſtairs, and then Sherlock called her up again.

Had you any candle in the room?—Yes.

Could not you make any thing of a ſtruggle againſt theſe women?—I dare not do it, they ſwore they would take my life if I did, and there were more of them at the door.

Jury. What ſtreet was it in?—In Croſs Lane.

Did you ſee any knife, or any thing of that ſort?—No.

Are you poſitive them were the two women?—Yes.

You are poſitive?—Yes.

When were they taken up?—About an hour after; the watch was found upon them the next day.

Priſoner Sherlock. The next morning when he took us up to the juſtice, he ſaid if I could raiſe five ſhillings and ſixpence he would make it up; I ſent this handkerchief and an apron to pawn, and a gown that I had, and I made up five ſhillings and ſixpence.

Proſecutor. No, my Lord, ſhe kept hugging me and pulling me about in the room, but I had nothing to ſay to her.

Continuation of the Trial of Eleanor M'Cabe and Ann Sherlock.

I am conſtable of St. Giles's; the priſoners were taken up by the watchmen, I believe the very night the man was robbed; I was at the Public Office in Hyde-ſtreet, the next morning, and the magiſtrate ordered me to ſearch them; I ſearched Sherlock, and under her arm-pit I found this watch.

To Proſecutor. Is that your watch?—Yes.

How long had you had it?—Not above five or ſix hours, I only bought it that afternoon.

Are you ſure it is your watch?—Yes.

Who did you buy it of?—I changed it with a young man a companion of mine.

THOMAS WELLS ſworn.

I am a watchman; as I was attending the priſoners in the juſtices yard, I ſaw Mr. Lucas take a watch from the priſoner Sherlock.

PRISONER M'CABE's DEFENCE.

As I was going down Croſs-lane I heard a great noiſe, and I went in, and the proſecutor was ſtanding, and he ſaid he was robbed; I went to a public-houſe, and the conſtable came and took us.

PRISONER SHERLOCK's DEFENCE.

I met the proſecutor, he aſked me if I would have any thing to drink, and we went together into Croſs-lane; I told him I had no apartment, but I would take him to a place I knew, and I took him to one Mrs. Martin's; he ſaid he had no money; he ſaid, if I would let him ſleep all night he would let me have his watch for a crown; I ſaid then I will call up the woman of the houſe. We had not been [illegible] quite an hour before he demanded the watch, and I would not let him have it without the five ſhillings; the watchman took us both to the watch-houſe, and the next morning he ſaid if I would give him five ſhillings and ſixpence and his watch he would make it up; I ſent my handkerchief and gown to pawn, and when the five ſhillings and ſixpence came and his watch, that watchman [illegible] went out to him and told him not to make it up at all. We have no witneſſes.

Court to Wells. You took them up that night?—Yes.

What time of night was it that you took them up?—Eleven o'clock.

Was the proſecutor ſober?—Yes, to all appearance.

What did he tell you then?—He told me he had loſt a watch and five ſhillings and ſixpence.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is a very ſerious ſtory, becauſe the priſoners ſtand charged with a capital offence; and if you are ſatisfied with the evidence, there ſeems to be nothing in the caſe that authorizes me to wiſh you to reduce the offence from what the law deſcribes it to be; for a robbery, you well know, is a taking by force and violence the property of another, from his perſon; it is not often indeed that we meet with robberies of this kind committed under circumſtances of violence on the perſon; but when we do meet with caſes of this ſort, they certainly deſerve puniſhment; though women of this bad character muſt of neceſſity be in ſuch a country as this, yet they ought to confine themſelves to their trade, bad as it is; and in this caſe undoubtedly they have committed a plain robbery on this man, and if you are ſatisfied as to the evidence you are bound to find them guilty.

ELEAN. M'CABE, }
ANN SHERLOCK, } GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

15. JOHN HARVEY, otherwiſe SEAGRAVE, was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 25th of November laſt, one gold pin with a diamond ſet therein, value 40l. one linen ſhirt value 10s. one pair of leather breeches value 20s. one pair of leather boots value 15s. one pair of cotton ſtockings value 3s. one woollen cloth dreſſing gown value 3s. one pair of ſilver knee buckles value 3s. the property of Sir George Oneſiphorus Paul, Baronet, in the dwelling houſe of Benjamin Harden.

JOHN HARDING ſworn.

I am butler and valet to Sir George Oneſiphorus Paul.

Court. Does your maſter live in a houſe of his own, or does he take lodgings when he comes to town?—He rents a houſe, and theſe things were at Mr. Harden's club-houſe, which goes by the name of Boodle's club-houſe, he dined there on the 25th of November, he loſt his pin while he was in the houſe; it was a diamond pin ſet in gold, a pin he always wore in his boſom when he was dreſſed; he had it not in his boſom then; he ſent there for his things to dreſs after dinner; he lives in Charles-ſtreet, Berkley-ſquare; I carried to Mr. Harden's the things mentioned in the indictment, except the leather breeches and boots, which he changed; he changed the leather breeches for ſattin ones, and the boots for ſhoes.

Court. I ſuppoſe theſe things, excluſive of the pin, are worth more than forty ſhillings?—Yes, my Lord, for they were almoſt new; I carried the things to dreſs my maſter a little before night, and they were loſt between ſeven and eight; I aſked for a room for Sir George to dreſs in, and I was ſhewn into a room up one pair of ſtairs, I put the things there, and there he dreſſed all he did dreſs; there was a fire made on purpoſe; he only changed the breeches and boots, and the cotton ſtockings for ſilk ſtockings, and put on a clean neckcloth; he was not long dreſſing himſelf, and then he went into the room again where he dined: I packed his things up directly after, and put the pin in the coat; I pinned the diamond pin in the coat, and I brought the things all out of that room, and put them into the porter's hall; the boots were dirty, I wrapped them up in paper, and put them inſide; I went down the ſtreet for ſome tea, a little lower, which was for my own uſe; I intended to take the things home myſelf, I thought I would not take them to the tea warehouſe, but call for them as I came back; I was abſent about ten minutes, and when I returned, the things were all gone; they were wrapped up in a linen packing-cloth; I immediately enquired after them, and aſked the waiter; there is an outward door and a door within that door; all the family of the Harden's lay in the houſe; when I miſſed them I immediately informed Sir George. I have ſeen part of the things ſince. I firſt heard of them on the 28th of November; I was at home at Sir George's own houſe, and there came a man from the Office in Bow-ſtreet, and informed us of them; I do not know his name.

I belong to Bow-ſtreet; I believe there were hand-bills of theſe things of Sir George Paul's; I firſt heard of them on the 28th, when I came to the Brown Bear in Bow-ſtreet, I had been home with ſome priſoners, and I found the priſoner in cuſtody, he was ſtopped about a pin, we ſent to let Sir George know.

Court. How came you to think of Sir George?——Becauſe the pin anſwered the deſcription of Sir George's; I took him back and ſearched him, and he had a ruffled ſhirt on, and it was marked G. P. No. 14, the ſame that was in the advertiſement; I found nothing elſe upon him.

Court to Harding. Look at that ſhirt.—This is my maſter's ſhirt, I marked it myſelf, I have another of the ſame ſet in my pocket.

Can you recollect whether it was the ſhirt you carried that day to Boodle's?—Yes, I carried it clean, that mark will not wear out.

Mr. Shepperd, Priſoner's Council. As to this pin you pinned it in that coat.—Yes, I put the pin in the coat again.

This porter's hall, I believe, is at the entrance of the houſe?—Yes, there is a door which goes with a ſpring, any body may open it on the outſide.

Was there any porter in the hall when you left it?—There was not.

There are a vaſt number of waiters and ſervants in this houſe?—A good many.

You left this bundle behind the door without any body to take care of it?—Yes.

Jury. Do you ſwear that you marked both theſe ſhirts yourſelf?—Yes.

How do you account for the one ſhirt and the other being marked differently?—They are not.

Yes they are, there is a dot in the one ſhirt between the names, and not in the other.

Priſoner's Council. What makes you ſo ſure that was the ſhirt you carried that day?——That was the only ſet of ſhirts I had in town.

JOSEPH CLARKE ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker in Wild-ſtreet, on the 28th of laſt November, between two and three; the ſhirt-pin was brought to my ſhop by a woman, ſhe came to offer it to pawn to my wife, I was not within, ſhe wanted to pledge it for eighteen pence, I came in as ſhe was going away, we do not take in any thing but wearing apparel, therefore my wife did not look at it, and I aſked the woman what ſhe wanted, ſhe ſaid ſhe wanted eighteen pence on that pin, I told her we did not take in thoſe things, I then took it out of her hand, and threw it along the counter to my wife, telling her if ſhe had a mind to have ſuch a thing, I would give a ſhilling for it, not imagining it to be of any value, the woman ſaid ſhe could not ſell it, for it was not her property, I deſired her to ſend the perſon who did belong to it, ſhe ſaid ſhe would, ſhe was gone about three minutes and brought in the priſoner, I aſked him what he aſked for that pin, he ſaid ſix ſhillings, I pretended not to know whether it was gold or no, I told him to leave it ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, till I ſaw whether it was gold, he did ſo, I then took it to Mr. Heather's in Long-acre, he is a pawnbroker, and he deſired me to leave it and bring the perſon that brought it, when I came back to my ſhop the priſoner was not come, but he came in a few minutes, and I went with him to Mr. Heather, who aſked him how he came by it, and to the beſt of my remembrance, the man ſaid he took it for a bad debt, for ſeven ſhillings and ſixpence, a man came from Bow-ſtreet, and he was ſtopped and taken to the Brown Bear, we went with him.

Priſoner's Council. A woman came with this pin firſt?—Yes.

The priſoner aſked only 6s. at firſt?—Yes.

She left it very readily?--Yes, and he went vrey readily with me to Mr. Heather's.

I am a pawnbroker the corner of Broad-ſtreet Long Acre. on the 28th of November about three o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Clarke brought this pin to my houſe, to value it, I knowing Clarke and ſeeing it a valuable pin, I aſked him how he came by it, he told me a cuſtomer wanted to pawn it with him for one guinea, I told him, I ſhould ſtop the pin, and I bid him go back immediately and ſtop the party that offered it to him, he did not return quite ſo ſoon as I expected, and I went after him to his houſe, I was rather uneaſy for fear the perſon might not come along with him, when I came to his houſe, Mr. Clarke and the priſoner were gone to my houſe, I miſſed them, they came thro' the court: The priſoner at the bar appearing to me not to own ſuch a valuable pin, I immediately ſent down to Bow-ſtreet for a conſtable, and took him into cuſtody.

What did the priſoner ſay?—The priſoner told me he had it of a man for a bad debt of ſeven ſhillings and ſixpence, but I did not believe that; I am a judge of things of this nature, I believe it to be worth forty pounds, I would give forty pounds for it; it is a diamond ſet in gold, that is the pin I received from Mr. Clarke.

Court to Clarke. Is that what you received from the woman and then from the man?—Yes, it is.

What was the meaning that you ſaid to Heather that a cuſtomer of yours wanted to borrow a guinea upon it?—I wanted to know how to act, and aſcertain ſome ſort of a value on it.

(The pin depoſed to.)

Court. Is not that a very fine brilliant Mr. Heather?——Yes, my Lord, a very fine brilliant.

(The pin ſhewn to the Jury.)

I am a waiter at Boodel's, I know Sir George's ſervant Mr. Harding; I remember his leaving ſome things at the Porter's Lodge on Tueſday the 25th of November, I ſaw the bundle there in the Porter's Lodge, and I ſaw the ſervant coming down ſtairs, as I was coming up ſtairs, I ſaw them there about four or five minutes after Harding went away.

Did you ſee the priſoner there?——No: there is a little room above the Porter's Lodge for gentlemen to dreſs in, the bundle was left behind the door, there is an outſide door towards the ſtreet which is always open, then there is a door that goes into the Porter's room, and is generally ſhut, it ſhuts of itſelf.

Priſoner's Council. How long was it between the time you ſaw the things there, and the time they were loſt?—The value minute.

I think you ſay you never ſaw the priſoner about the houſe?——No.

You do not know him?——I do not.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I met one Paterſon that I lent ſeven ſhillings and ſixpence to in March laſt, at Margate, this day week about one o'clock, and he aſked me to drink, I ſaid, I would with all my heart: we walked a little diſtance, ſays he, I want to go in here, and he went to a pawnbroker's ſhop, and aſked ſeven ſhillings and ſixpence on this breaſt pin; I ſtood the outſide of the door, and the pawnbroker examined the pin, he ſaid, it was not gold, he could buy as good a pin for eighteen-pence, he would lend him a ſhilling: Paterſon ſaid he gave twelve ſhillings for it at Margate, he then came out and went to another pawnbroker's, he ſaid to me, I have no money but he pulled out this ſhirt and gave it and the pin to me, and ſaid, get the ſhirt mended, it was tore in the collar, and pawn the ſhirt and the pin and bring me a duplicate: I then went to another pawnbroker's, and he ſaid, it was of no ſervice to him, then we went into a public houſe, and a woman came in, I aſked her to drink; he then aſked me, to aſk the woman to go pawn it, ſhe went, and the pawnbroker offered her a ſhilling to ſell it right out; with that ſhe came back for this Paterſon, and he deſired me to go in his ſtead; I went and told Clarke I would not ſell it for ſix ſhillings; ſays Clarke the pawnbroker, if you leave it for the ſpace of a quarter of an hour I will get it examined; I ſaid, I would; I left it, and in half an hour afterwards I called for the pin, he then told me, the pin was in Long Acre ſtopped; I ſaid, I did not care who ſtopped it; they ſent for a conſtable, I was in the ſhop for the ſpace of five or ten minutes and no ſoul there but himſelf.

Court. What is become of Paterſon? —I cannot find him, he told me to bring a duplicate to him to No. 5, Charles Court, Strand.

How long might you be with Paterſon, before ſuch time as you ſent this woman to pawn the pin?——About half an hour.

How came you to have this ſhirt on your back?——I was going to ſee a friend, and this ſhirt was rather cleaner than my own, I took the ſhirt off and put that on.

Mr. Heather. You will hear my Lord from Mr. Macmanus how the ſhirt became torn, it was by the priſoner making a reſiſtance, for I had ſent Macmanus to ſee if he could find any ſuch a man as Paterſon.

Court to Harding. Was the ſhirt tore when you carried it to Boodle's?——No.

I took the priſoner at Mr. Heather's, he ſaid, he had it of one Paterſon, who lived at No. 7, Charles Court, in the Strand, and that he took it for ſeven ſhillings and ſixpence, I went to enquire, and there was ſuch a man lived there near four years back; then he was preſſed very hard to know where he lodged, he did not like to tell his lodgings, at laſt he ſaid at Ratcliffe Croſs; I took the directions, I went there the ſame night, and no ſuch man ever lodged at the place, nor they did not know ſuch a man: Harding went with me, I think the ſhirt was tore in ſtruggling to get away from Mr. Heather, and Clarke, and me, in Broad-court.

Court. Did he endeavour to get away?——Yes.

Priſoner's Council to Harding. Had you examined the ſhirt before that time?——No, Sir.

Then you do not know it was torn before?——No, I do not.

Court to Atkins. What account did he give of this ſhirt?——I took the ſhirt off his back, and I ſaw it anſwered; I ſaid to him this will affect you, and he ſaid you need not take it over the way.

(Mary Stewart called who went to pawn the pin. She did not appear.)

Court to Clarke. Did the woman that came to pawn this pin tell her name?——She went by the name of Sarah Warrington.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any witneſſes to your character?——No.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

16. JOHN OLDFIELD and RICHARD PHILLIPS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th of October laſt, ſixteen pounds weight of lead, value 4s. belonging to Abraham Adams, and affixed to a certain building of the ſaid Abraham, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

SAMUEL WILD ſworn.

I am clerk to Mr. Abraham Adams, he is a builder, he loſt ſome lead on the 27th of October, off a new houſe in the Circus by Portman Square; it was an unfiniſhed houſe, it had been laid on ſometime, there were to the amount of upwards of two hundred pounds ſtole in the whole, but there was about eighteen pounds fixed to the dwelling, the piece of lead that I took from the priſoner Phillips, I matched it and it exactly fitted, this was the 27th of October in the evening, he was in the houſe.

How came the priſoner in the houſe?—Some part of the area was broke down and he went in that way, I ſuppoſe or elſe at the door way; it was about ſix o'clock in the evening, it was quite dark, nobody was with the priſoner, he had the lead on his ſhoulder.

(The lead produced.)

Court. What may the value of it be?——It coſt when it was laid on twenty-two ſhillings a hundred, here is about twenty-eight pounds.

That is about two or three ſhillings for theſe pieces?——Thereabouts.

How was it ſeparated from the gutter?——It ſeems to be cut by a knife, I found a part of a knife in the gutter.

What did he ſay for himſelf?——He owned himſelf guilty; he ſaid, he was going to take it to a public houſe, to the priſoner Oldfield, who was to ſell it for him. I ſaw the lead there before.

On the 27th of October a little after ſix o'clock, Mr. Wild aſked me to go with him to this houſe, I waited within the houſe a few minutes, and the priſoner came down, and I took him with the lead on his ſhoulder.

PRISONER PHILLIPS's DEFENCE.

I was going by there between ſix and ſeven o'clock, and ſaw a man go along with a ſack on his ſhoulder, I followed him and he ran away, and I found this lead at the bottom of the ſtair-caſe.

Proſecutor. He owned to me he took it himſelf, and he went up with me to the gutter, and ſhewed me where it was taken off.

RICHARD PHILLIPS, GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

JOHN OLDFIELD, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

17. JOHN TAYLOR was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th of October laſt, one copper tar kettle, value 4s. the property of Griffith Hoare.

GRIFFITH HOARE ſworn.

I am a ropemaker, I uſe a good deal of tar, I loſt a copper tar kettle, ſometime in September; the priſoner worked with me as a carpenter in the repairs of the building: I ſaw my kettle afterwards by accident at the Rotation Office in Whitechapel, ſometime the latter end of September, I went there on other buſineſs, the priſoner had long worked for me.

(The tar kettle produced and depoſed to.)

Court. What is the value of it?——More than twenty ſhillings I ſuppoſe.

How had the priſoner behaved?——He was rather idle, he worked for me two or three years backwards and forwards.

Is he a married man?——Yes.

Has he any family?——I believe he has.

Did you ever know any harm of him before?——No.

On the 15th of September, I was called up in the morning between five and ſix, and informed two men had got a large copper: I purſued them, the priſoner was one of the men, the other man is at large, his name is John Wakefield, I purſued them into one Mr. Wingfield's, in the highway, when I came into his yard I ſaw the priſoner and the other man, they were going to ſell Wingfield the kettle: They both ſaid it was their property, and that they brought it from Whitechapel: The other man ſaid, he was hired as porter by the priſoner, and was to have two ſhillings, I apprehended them both, they were committed for further examination, and no proſecutor appeared, I advertized the copper and then the proſecutor came to the office, I am ſure this is the ſame kettle, the priſoners were at large three or four days, they were diſcharged for want of proſecution : after that I took the priſoner when I found a proſecutor, and the other man Wakefield has flew ever ſince.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going to work in the morning, and I met Wakefield, and he aſked me to go and have part of a pot of beer, and I went with him, and he and I were ſtopped with this property, I do not know how he came by it.

Court to Proſecutor. Did the priſoner work with you after the 15th of September ?——I believe he did.

Orange. The priſoner came to the office and demanded the copper, and ſaid, his maſter had left it him four years back.

Proſecutor. My Lord, Wakefield worked for me as well as this man.

The Priſoner called one Witneſs to his character.

GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

18. JOHN BARNETT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of May laſt, one man's ſaddle, value 10s. one woollen girth, value 6d. and one leather ſurcingle, value 6d. the property of William Haley.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

Court. What are you ?——A baggler by trade.

What do you ſell ?—I have a green cart, I buy greens at Covent Garden, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, but I cannot tell the day, it was ſometime in May, I was riding on the ſaddle on horſeback, and I called at one Mr. Matthews's, a publican in St. Giles's ; I alighted from my horſe and had a pint of porter : When I came out I miſſed the ſaddle, it was valued at fifteen ſhillings ; I found it four months afterwards, I offered half-a-guinea reward for it : The priſoner was in the houſe at the time I loſt it, but he was not in company with me ; I was ſober ; on the Monday morning I took up the landlord and another man, on ſuſpicion : And about three months after I heard from the priſoner, that he knew the perſon that had my ſaddle, he ſaid, he was ſomething indebted to Matthews, and if he would not trouble his head with him, he would not trouble his head with Matthews ; I found the ſaddle afterwards in a cellar belonging to Matthews, next door to his dwelling houſe, and I took Matthews up again.

Court. What have you to charge the priſoner with ?——Only what Mary Daly ſaid.

What is ſhe ?——She lives along with Mr. Matthews, he calls her a houſe-keeper.

MARY DALY ſworn.

You live with Mr. Matthews ?——Yes.

What are you, his wife ?——No.

His houſe-keeper ?——Yes.

Do you remember this ſaddle being found in your maſter's cellar ?—I know nothing at all about it, any further than the priſoner came to me in the kitchen, and aſked me for a knife to cut ſome ſtirrups.

Did you ever ſay Barnett was the man that ſtole this ſaddle ?——No.

Court to Proſecutor. What do you call this woman for ?——She ſwore before the juſtice that the priſoner was the man that ſtole the ſaddle.

Daly. I never ſwore any ſuch thing in my life, I know nothing of it.

I was conſtable at that time, I found a ſaddle in a cellar belonging to Mr. Matthews in Bambridge-ſtreet, St. Giles's.

Do you know any thing againſt the priſoner?——No. I was at the Juſtice's when Mrs. Daly ſwore he took the ſaddle off the horſe's back.

Court to Mrs. Daly. How is this?

Mrs. Daly. I never ſwore ſuch a thing in my life.——

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

19. JOHN HUDSON (A child of nine years old) was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Holdſworth, at the hour of one in the night, on the 10th of October laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one linen ſhirt, value 10s. five ſilk ſtockings, value 5s. one piſtol, value 5s. and two aprons, value 2s. the property of the ſaid William.

Court to Priſoner. How old are you?—Going in nine.

What buſineſs was you bred up in?——None, ſometimes a chimney ſweeper.

Have you any father or mother?——Dead.

How long ago?——I do not know.

Court. I wanted to ſee whether he had any underſtanding or no, we ſhall hear more of him by and by.

I live in Eaſt Smithfield, I am a chymiſt: On the morning of the 17th of October, about eight o'clock, the maid informed me we were robbed; we have parted with her ſince; I got up and went to a back dining-room and found the ſhutters ſecure, but on opening them I found the ſaſhes had been thrown up to the top, the ſhutters were faſtened within-ſide, I immediately went down into the parlour and found ſome glaſs on the floor, and one of the panes in a narrow ſky-light on the top of the ſaſh was broken, part of the glaſs had been carefully taken out, and laid on ſome leads; the other part had fallen down into the parlour; I found upon the window ſhutter the marks of toes, as if ſomebody had ſlided down the window, in the inſide of the ſhutters.

Court. Were they ſmall toes or large toes?——They were ſmall toes, I obſerved a table that ſtood very near the window, there I found the mark of ſooty feet, I ſaw a bar bent that went acroſs the window curtain; I took the impreſſions of the foot and toes that were on the table upon a piece of paper as minutely as I could.

(The paper produced.)

Court. What reaſon have you to ſuſpect the priſoner?——None, I did not hear till the next day any thing about him: We found the things were loſt that were mentioned in the indictment, which were my property. On the next day I ſent to the pawnbroker's: The boy denied the robbery till the time that his foot was examined by this piece of paper, and then he acknowledged it.

Court. How do you apprehend the boy got out again?——He ſaid there was another boy with him.

Court. I do not much like the confeſſion of a boy of nine years old, I would rather do without it if I could. How high was your ſky-light?——About three yards from the ground, it was impoſſible for him to get out by himſelf.

SARAH BAYNES ſworn.

I lodge in Eaſt Smithfield at a ſhoe ware-houſe at Mr. King's, going down on Friday morning the 17th of October about ten into the yard, into a little place that belongs to the lodgers, I ſtaid there about five minutes, and coming out I found the priſoner at the water-tub, which was too high for him to reach without getting to the edge of the tub, I aſked him what buſineſs he had there, he ſaid, he was going to waſh himſelf; he was all ſooty: I told him it was water we made uſe of for drinking, and I did not chuſe he ſhould waſh himſelf there; on putting him away; there is a place that formerly been a kitchen, and there are ſtairs that go up either into the ſtreet or into the lodging place; in this place where dirt is kept, I found a damaſk table cloth: I called to the boy, for nobody had been down but the boy and me, he ſaid, he knew nothing of it: I found afterwards a parcel of ſilk ſtockings in the ſame place, I believe there were five tied up in a parcel: I then called in two men who found a parcel of things in the ſame place: Two aprons and a black ſilk ſtocking; upon the ſink in the ſame place there was a piſtol put in a thread ſtocking: One of the men going up ſtairs ſaw the priſoner coming out of the yard, and they fetched him back, and ſaid he was the ſame boy: At firſt he ſaid he knew nothing of them. Then Mr. King ſaid, he would fetch ſomebody that would make him know, then the boy ſaid, that there was another boy.

Court. That is threatening him, I cannot take a boy's confeſſion after that.

I am a pawnbroker, on the 17th of October, the boy at the bar brought this ſhirt to pledge about ſeven in the morning; he ſaid it belonged to his father, I aſked him who ſent him with it, he ſaid, his mother, I ſtopped him.

(The ſhirt depoſed to by proſecutor who ſaw his daughter making it: It had never been waſhed.)

I apprehended the priſoner.

Court to Proſecutor. What paſſed before the Juſtice, were there any promiſes or threats made uſe of?——He firſt denied it, and then he told the Juſtice that there was another boy with him, and that the other boy broke through the window and got into the room; after the foot was meaſured by the paper he then confeſſed he had been in the houſe.

(The piſtol and ſtockings depoſed to.)

Court. Did the boy ſeem to want underſtanding before the Juſtice?——He ſaid very little.

Court to Baynes. Did he appear to you to want underſtanding?——No; the runners ſaid it was the third time they had had him within ten days.

Court to Jury. The boy's confeſſion may be admitted, in evidence, but we muſt take it with every allowance, and at the utmoſt it only proves he was in the houſe; now he might have got in after daybreak, as the proſecutor was not informed of it till eight the next morning. The only thing that fixes this boy with the robbery is the piſtol found in the ſink; that might not have been put there by the boy: his confeſſion with reſpect to how he came there, I do not think ſhould be allowed, becauſe it was made under fear; I think it would be too hard to find a boy of his tender age guilty of the burglary; one would wiſh to ſnatch ſuch a boy, if one poſſibly could, from deſtruction, for he will only return to the ſame kind of life which he has led before, and will be an inſtrument in the hands of very bad people, who make uſe of boys of that ſort to rob houſes.

Court to Proſecutor. Could the boy go through this hole without ſcraching himſelf?—The glaſs was taken perfectly out.

GUILTY.

Of the felony, but not of the burglary.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

20. JAMES GODFREY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the firſt day of December inſtant, thirty yards of ſcarlet woollen cloth, value 14l. the goods of Edward Shepherd, privately in his warehouſe.

I am clerk to Mr. Shepherd, a Blackwell-hall factor; on the firſt of December he loſt this cloth.

Court. Is his warehouſe the place where his goods are uſually expoſed to ſale?—Yes.

Does he ſell by retail?—No, by commiſſion.

Was you in his warehouſe any time the firſt of December laſt?—Yes, on the firſt of December, between eleven and twelve in the morning, I ſaw the priſoner with this piece of cloth on his ſhoulder.

What quantity?——About thirty-four yards, or thereabouts, I cannot ſay to half a yard.

How far might that be from your warehouſe?——Juſt outſide the door.

Had you ſeen him in your ſhop before?—Upon ſeeing him with the cloth, I ſuppoſed he had taken it out of our ſhop, he was going off with it in Baſinghall-ſtreet, and I followed him, at the corner of Baſinghall-ſtreet, he looked to ſee if any body purſued him, he attempted to run away from me when I collared him, he pitched down the cloth when he ſaw me come up, I aſked him where he was going with it, he ſaid a man ſent him for it, I aſked him what man, I told him it was Mr. Shepherd's cloth, and took him back to Mr. Shepherd's.

Court. In this warehouſe your maſter ſells goods by commiſſion?—Yes.

They are never expoſed to ſale in this warehouſe?——Not till a perſon aſks for them, we ſell none by retail, it is for home trade or exportation.

Court. You do not know at all how the cloth was taken out of your warehouſe?—No.

How near the water ſide was your warehouſe?—It is in Baſinghall-ſtreet, juſt by Guildhall, I ſaw the cloth about half an hour before, it ſtood upon its head.

(The cloth depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I have had the drum of my ear broke, I have not heard a word of what the Gentlemen have ſaid.

Jury. Did the priſoner return with you?—I led him back, I never loſt ſight of the priſoner till I took him, nor of the cloth.

(The cloth depoſed to by Mr. Shepherd.)

EDWARD SHEPHERD ſworn.

I am a Blackwell-hall factor, I never ſell any goods by retail.

Do you break bulk before you deliver the goods?——No.

Some of your goods are diſpoſed of to home cuſtomers, and ſome to foreign?—Yes.

Are theſe locked up or open?—They are put up in papers and done upon ſhelves.

Are theſe ſhelves open?—Yes.

You never expoſe any of your goods on the outſide of your ſhop?—No, I was from home, the cloth is my property, conſigned by a clothier in the country upon commiſſion.

Court to Blades. Is that the piece of cloth you took from the priſoner?—Yes.

Had you examined that piece of cloth before you delivered it to the other perſon?—When I purſued the priſoner up Baſinghall-ſtreet, the number was towards me, it never was out of my ſight, it was about three times the diſtance from here to your Lordſhip.

(The cloth ſhewn him.)

By what do you know it?—By the mark and the number upon it.

Had you ſeen that piece of cloth before?—Yes.

Whoſe mark is it?—It is the mark of the clothier that manufactured the cloth.

But may not other people employ the ſame clothier?——No, my Lord, not the ſame number.

Jury to Blades. Do the doors in your warehouſe ſtand open?—Frequently.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

As I was walking along as another perſon may do, I ſaw another man come along with the ſame coloured coat as mine, with a piece of cloth, he put it down, and he began to run, I heard a cry of ſtop thief, this gentleman came and laid hold of me, my friends are not here, I work hard for my living.

Court to Jury. I think gentlemen it is a doubt whether this is a warehouſe within the act of parliament of the tenth and eleventh of William the third, chapter twenty-third. There was a caſe determined here in 1751, before Juſtice Parker and others, for ſtealing goods in a warehouſe; the proſecutor kept a warehouſe by the water ſide, where merchants uſually kept goods till they could be put on board, that was held not to be a warehouſe within the meaning of the act. In this caſe, gentlemen, there are two reaſons why the priſoner ſhould be acquitted of the capital part; firſt, he was not ſeen in the warehouſe, and ſecondly its being a doubt whether this is a warehouſe within the act.

The priſoner called three witneſſes who gave him a good character.

Court to Taylor, one of the Priſoner's witneſſes. Did the priſoner's wife lodge at your houſe?—Yes, your honour, and ſhe is with-child.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not privately.

To be confined to hard labor ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

21. JOHN JONES was indicted for that he with Walter Ballington, and John Foſter, on the 5th of February laſt, falſly and feloniouſly did make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſly made, forged, and counterfeited, a certain paper writing, purporting to be a receipt and acquittance for payment of money, to wit, for the ſum of 759l. 14s. under the hand of William Creſſall, and which ſaid receipt is in the words and figures following, that is to ſay, "Received the 5th of "February 1783, of Mr. Walter Bal- "lington 759l. 14s. in full for goods ſold "and delivered, which is in full of all de- "mands, William Creſſall. Witneſs Wil- "liam Dixon." with intention to defraud the ſaid William Creſſall.

A ſecond count for uttering the ſame, knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

William Creſſall, Charles Grubb, and Abraham Parſons, were called on their recognizances, and not appearing, the priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

22. JAMES MANNIKAY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 23d of October laſt, fifty-four pounds weight of lead, value 4s. belonging to Jacob Jammett, and affixed to a certain building of his, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

LEFEVRE ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor in Spitalſquare, on the 25th of October, going to examine the gutter, I diſcovered ſome lead had been ſtolen, I informed ſome of the neighbours, and on the Monday following I was informed a man was in cuſtody for ſtealing lead, which lead was brought to our houſe the next day, and examined with what remained there, and three pieces exactly correſponded in three particulars; firſt that one of the pieces that was indented fitted exactly, ſecondly, that the hole that was driven through the lead was ſo plain in the wood to which it was faſtened, that I ſaw the hole in the wood, by looking through the hole in the lead; thirdly, part of the letters of the name of Jammett were on theſe pieces of lead, and the remaining part of the letters on that which was left on the roof.

I met the priſoner in Spitalfields pariſh, within a few hundred yards of where the lead was ſtolen, with a ſack on his ſhoulder, on the 25th of October, about nine in the morning, I aſked him what he had got there, he ſaid ſome lead he had found that morning; I took him before the magiſtrate, and marked the lead.

THOMAS JACKS ſworn.

I went after the priſoner was in cuſtody and ſearched his lodgings on the 24th of October, and I found concealed in a little back place adjoining the room where he lives, a parcel of old lead, I ſuppoſe about thirty or forty pounds weight, covered over with different cloths and rags, and I brought it away with me, and in his box I found a thing that the brewers uſe to pull out bungs with; this piece of lead has the letters on it.

(The lead produced, being the ſame that was marked by Yardley.)

Lefeure. My Lord, part of theſe premiſes have been in the poſſeſſion of a brewer.

Court. What may the value of that lead be?—Four or five ſhillings.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I found theſe four pieces of lead in a ſack ſtanding againſt a door, and I kicked againſt them, and I thought I had a good right to go and ſell them, Yardley met me and took me.

Court to Priſoner. Was all the lead you found in a ſack?—Yes, I took two pieces to ſell, and left the other at home, I know nothing of their being covered over.

The priſoner called five Witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

Court to Jury. You obſerve nobody has told us when this theft was actually committed, and nobody ſays the priſoner was ſeen actually on the premiſes, but the conſtable ſays he took him about two hundred yards from the houſe.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron Hotham.

23. MARGARET DUVALL, otherwiſe HENSHAW, was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 2d of September laſt, one pair of linen ſheets, value 8s. two pillow-caſes, value 2s. the property of John Hibbett, in a certain lodging let by him the ſaid John to her the ſaid Margaret againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count for ſtealing the ſame things at common law.

MARY HIBBETT ſworn.

I am the wife of John Hibbett, I live at No. 1, in Poland-ſtreet, we let a lodging to the priſoner on the 2d of September, ſhe did not ſleep there, ſhe took it on the Tueſday morning, and on the Tueſday night ſhe came in with a band-box tied up in a handkerchief, ſhe went up and came down and aſked me where we had our beer from, I told her at the corner of the ſtreet, ſhe went out of the ſtreet-door, and I bid her ſhut the door after her, I told her it was always ſhut, ſhe did not return, ſhe had not been at the publick-houſe, at about half paſt ten I went up and ſhe had taken the ſheets and the pillow-caſes, and left the band-box empty behind her.

Had you ſeen the pillow-caſes and the ſheets there that day?——Yes, I put them on myſelf, I gave her a clean one, and ſhe took away the dirty one and the clean one.

Was there any body elſe in the room from the time you ſaw them there, till the time ſhe came in and went out again?—No.

What was the value of theſe ſheets and pillow-caſes?—Half a guinea.

Were they new?—One of them had been waſhed but twice.

Did you know the woman before?—No.

When did you take her up?—The Wedneſday month after.

Where did you find her?—She came by the end of the ſtreet again.

Priſoner. I am a Swiſs, I cannot underſtand properly.

Court to Priſoner. If you do not underſtand what the witneſs has ſaid I will repeat it to you?—Priſoner. If you pleaſe.

(Repeats it.)

HANNAH MADAN ſworn.

I lodge with the proſecutrix, ſhe keeps a ſhop, I went in to buy ſome butter, and the priſoner was enquiring for a lodging, the proſecutrix ſhewed her a lodging, ſhe liked it very well, I ſaw her return a little after ſeven, and ſhe went out again, as Mrs. Hibbett has mentioned, when ſhe was taken up I knew her to be the ſame perſon.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never was in the houſe in my life, this gentlewoman muſt have taken me for another perſon, ſhe ſaid if I would pay her for the ſheets, ſhe did not wiſh to proſecute me, ſhe ſaid it would be very hard for me to be in gaol five weeks, and it is now three months ſince I have been in gaol.

Court to Mrs. Madan. Did you obſerve her to be a foreigner?——Yes, my Lord, her tongue will betray her.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any witneſſes?—I had laſt ſeſſions.

How long have you been in England?—Three years laſt March.

What buſineſs?—I was a ſervant for one twelvemonth, and a mantua-maker for two years.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. She has been a good while in gaol.

GUILTY.

On the recommendation of the Jury to be confined in Newgate one month.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

24. MARY DODD ſworn.

I live in Wych-alley, Wych-ſtreet, the priſoner came to aſk me leave to waſh a gown, as I take in a little waſhing, I was very ill at the time, I had the yellow jaundice, I gave her leave to waſh the gown, and ſhe ſaid if I had any thing elſe to waſh ſhe would waſh it for me, I gave her ſome cloathes to waſh, and then I miſſed a ſmock which was gone out of the waſhing, ſhe came to me the month before laſt, ſhe ſtaid with me the courſe of a week, on the firſt or ſecond day I miſſed a ſmock, I was afraid of my huſband; next I miſſed a handkerchief, I told her I ſhould have a great noiſe if I did not have it againſt Sunday; on Sunday my boy came in and undreſſed himſelf, and his coat and waiſtcoat, and three pair of ſtockings were gone, ſhe bid us all a good night and came back no more, we found her afterwards, the things are here, ſhe ſent to me afterwards to let me know where the things were, after we had a warrant for her; ſhe went with me to the pawnbroker's in Drury-lane, with the conſtable, there I found a handkerchief of mine pawned for ninepence.

Had that handkerchief any mark on it? —None but the ſelvage, I alſo found my boy's coat and ſhirt, and three pair of ſtockings, and a handkerchief; the priſoner would not own to them, I did not ſee her afterwards.

Mr. Tomlins, Priſoner's Council. There are two handkerchiefs as I underſtand?—Yes.

What ſort are they?—One is a blue and white, and the other is a purple and white.

Where was the blue and white one found? —With the bundle.

What name were they pawned in?—She pawned them in the name of Mary Jordan, as the pawnbroker ſaid.

Did you ever know the priſoner by that name?—I heard ſhe went by that name, I did not know her by it.

You miſſed theſe things on Monday morning?—Yes.

What time did you go to bed on Sunday night?—Soon, I bolted my door, nobody came in.

Do you never leave your door open to let lodgers in?—My huſband gets up to let them in.

How long did the company ſtay that night after the priſoner went away?——I cannot ſay.

Did they ſtay in the room where theſe goods were?—They did.

WILLIAM NORRIS ſworn.

I am ſhopman to Mr. Rochford the pawnbroker; to the beſt of my knowledge the priſoner brought the things to me, but I cannot be poſitive, they were pledged in the name of Mary Jordan.

Priſoner's Council. Was there any handkerchief pawned with theſe things?—Yes, a blue and white handkerchief.

Had you ever any goods pawned in that name before?—I remember the name of Mary Jordan, but not goods pawned by the priſoner.

ANDREW DICKSON ſworn.

I am ſhopman to Mr. Manning in Drury Lane, I received a handkerchief from the priſoner at the bar on the 9th of September, I am ſure it was the priſoner, I took notice of the handkerchief.

Mr. Tomlins. What ſort of handkerchief was it?—A white handkerchief with red ſpots, a common pattern.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have known the proſecutrix a long time, and about ten or twelve days before the robbery I called on her, and found her very ill; I offered my ſervice to ſtay with her till ſhe could get ſomebody elſe; I ſtaid with her till ſhe took me up on ſuſpicion, on the evening I went out and left ſome company, I returned about ten o'clock and found the door open as it always uſed to be, the next morning ſhe charged me with the robbery, and I and another perſon were ſearched: I have been between eleven and twelve weeks in priſon, and ſo ill I did not expect to live.

The Priſoner called one Witneſs who gave her a good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

27. JOHN CODD was indicted for feloniouſly returning from tranſportation, and being found at large, before the expiration of his ſentence, on the 25th of September laſt, without any lawful cauſe.

(The Record of the conviction read by Edward Reynolds, Eſq; Clerk of the arraigns, and the indictment examined at the ſame time by the Court.)

Do you know the perſon of the priſoner? —Yes.

Was you preſent when the priſoner received ſentence?—I was not.

Where did you find him?—I found him in the pariſh of St. Clement Danes, on the 25th of September about eight o'clock, he was then at large: I laid hold of him, and he behaved extremely well indeed, he fell a crying directly, and made no reſiſtance.

JOHN TOWNSEND ſworn.

I was preſent when your Lordſhip paſſed ſentence of tranſportation on him.

Priſoner. My Lord, I would not wiſh to give the Court any trouble, I own myſelf to be the perſon.

Guilty, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recoreer.

---

28. JOHN JONES was indicted for feloniouſly returning from tranſportation, and being found at large, before the expiration of his ſentence, on the 19th of September laſt, without any lawful cauſe.

(The Record read and examined as before.)

Do you know the perſon of the priſoner? ——Yes, very well, I found him in the pariſh of Whitechapel, on Friday the 19th of September, he was then at large, his behaviour was extremely well when I took him.

JOHN OWEN ſworn.

I was preſent in July ſeſſions, when the priſoner received ſentence of tranſportation, he is the ſame man.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

Guilty, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

---

29. JOHN HALL was indicted for feloniouſly returning from tranſportation, and being found at large, before the expiration of his ſentence, on the 23d of September laſt, without any lawful cauſe.

Priſoner. I would not wiſh to give the Court any trouble; I am the man.

Court. There can be no harm in recording his plea, becauſe there can be no doubt of his conviction.

Priſoner. I humbly beg for the mercy of the Court.

Court. It reſts entirely with the King, whether the ſentence ſhall be carried into execution or not; it is not in my power to mitigate the ſentence of the law.

Guilty, Death.

---

30. ELIZABETH KNIGHT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of July laſt, one ſtuff window curtain, value 6s. one pair of linen ſheets, value 5s. one copper ſaucepan, value 2s. one braſs candleſtick, value 18d. two flat irons, value 1s. one linen napkin, value 6d. two prints in frames, value 2s. twenty pound weight of feathers, value 10s. and three delf plates, value 1s. the property of William Davis, the ſame being in a certain lodging room, in the dwelling houſe of the ſaid William, and let by him to her, againſt the ſtatute.

ELEANOR

I live in Dean-ſtreet Red Lyon Square, laſt July I lived in King's-gate-ſtreet; I let the priſoner a one pair of ſtairs back room at three ſhillings per week; ſhe was with me a fortnight and two days, I inſiſted on ſeeing my property on the 24th of July, and as ſoon as I ſaid that, the priſoner ſaid, ſhe would go and get a penny-worth of beer, her ſiſter lay with her, ſhe gave her ſiſter the key and went out, ſhe never returned; I went up directly with the priſoner's ſiſter and another woman, and miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment, the things were never found again, they were in the room when I let it to her.

MARY KNIGHT ſworn.

I am ſiſter to the priſoner, I lay with her at night, on the 24th of July I went home to go to bed, and the priſoner was at the public houſe next door, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was coming home preſently.

Priſoner. My ſiſter knows I complain often about the key, and ſhe has often got in without the key; that night I met an acquaintance whoſe wife was in labour, and I went with him and his wife died: I have got in myſelf without the key.

Mary Knight. I never got in without the key.

Jury to Proſecutrix. Were there other lodgers?—Yes, people of character.

Court. When was this woman taken up?—The 3d of Auguſt, and ſent to gaol the 7th.

GUILTY.

To be impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

31. WILLIAM BRANSBY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d of December inſtant, twenty-one yards of printed callicoe, value 5l. the property of Clement Bellamy.

BENJAMIN HOWELL ſworn.

I was going with a knot load to Ratcliffe Croſs, and under my right-arm I had a piece of Britiſh callicoe, containing twenty-one yards.

Court. Is that the ſame thing as printed cotton?—The ſame thing, I put the bundle on the bulk where I pitched my other load, the corner of Lime-ſtreet, I ſaw the bundle as I was taking the other load on my head move on my right-hand, I did not ſee who was moving it at that time, I looked round me and ſaw the priſoner with the bundle under his right-arm, he walked up Lime-ſtreet, and I went after him, I left my load at the corner, I caught the priſoner, and he threw the parcel down in the kennel, I ſaw him throw it down, I had hold of him at the time he threw it down, I ſtooped to recover the piece of goods and let him go, I called ſtop thief, and he was ſtopped, he was about a minute out of my ſight, I am ſure it is the ſame man, there was a lamp gave me a great oppprtunity of ſeeing him, I never ſaw him before, it was about half after five on the 2d of this month, the day-light was pretty near gone, he turned again on the left-hand, and I then came upon the ſide of him and ſaw his face, I am ſure it is the man.

Jury. Was he dreſſed then as he is now?—He had a brown great coat, and a green coat, and a red pluſh waiſtcoat, I had the bundle in my own care all the time, till the priſoner was committed, then it was in the poſſeſſion of the conſtable, I wrote my name upon it, it is now in Court.

Was the bundle that you gave to the conſtable the ſame bundle that you picked up?—Yes.

Priſoner's Council, Mr. Sylveſter. The man turned up Lime-ſtreet immediately?—Immediately.

Then you purſued him behind?—Yes.

You had not then an opportunity of ſeeing his face?—No.

Then you laid hold of a man and the bundle, and the man inſtantly got away?—He croſſed over and went about the length of this place, I ſaw him by the light of the lamp, I ſaw him particularly and his clothes, I can ſwear to his face.

Had he a hat on?—Yes.

Round or cocked?—I cannot poſitively ſay.

You could not obſerve him for a ſecond?—I ſaw the ſide of his face when he croſſed over, and I particularly took notice of the waiſtcoat, and the brown coat with the yellow buttons.

Who took the man?—A taylor, his name is Bull, he gave a falſe direction, he ſaid, he lived in Hare Court, Alderſgate-ſtreet, and he had not lived there for ſame time.

How was Bull dreſſed?——I do not know.

Why you had longer time with him than the priſoner?—He had a rough head of hair, I did not ſee the man when he was taken, they brought a man to me.

Which man you never ſaw before nor knew nothing of him?—I ſaw him plain enough that night.

Not plain, friend?—I ſaw the ſide of his face, I ſaw it plain enough.

You never ſaw but half of his face?—Yes, I met him in front.

Court. Do you mean that Bull gave you a falſe direction or that you could not meet with him?—He gave a direction that he lived No. 9, Hare Court, Alderſgate-ſtreet, he had lived there about eight or nine weeks, he was a ſtout thick man, he had no great coat on.

Could you miſtake Bull for the priſoner?—No, they are as different as any two in the world could be, Bull had a rough head of hair, and the priſoner's hair was tied, I obſerved that at the time.

——— HOTINE ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I produce the bundle.

(The bundle depoſed to by Howell who wrote his name on it.)

(The things depoſed to by Clement Bellamy as his property.)

The Priſoner called one Witneſs who gave him a good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

32. RICHARD BULL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th of October, three ſilver table ſpoons, value 15s. two ſilver tea ſpoons, value 2s. one ſilver muſtard ſpoon, value 6d. one ſilver pepper box, value 8s. one cream pot, value 6s. the property of Sarah Woodman, widow.

SARAH WOODMAN ſworn.

I live at Southall, I keep a public houſe near Uxbridge, in October laſt about the 3d or 4th, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, we had between forty and fifty people to dinner, we laid down the things in a hurry, and this man was drinking, and we ſuppoſed he might take them, there were many other people in the houſe.

Who was in the room where you put them down?—I cannot ſay.

How long might it be that you miſſed them after you laid them down there?—Ten or twenty minutes.

I ſuppoſe in that time a good many people might have gone backwards and forwards?—I cannot ſay, this man was writing a letter, he was a good deal in liquor, he went away, and we miſſed them in about ten minutes after, it was about three o'clock in the afternoon, I immediately ſuſpected him, he was purſued and taken in a field, and brought back, the things were found upon him.

I was a conſtable, I had the priſoner in my cuſtody, he was taken between two and three o'clock, in the road to Greenford, at a little diſtance from the houſe in a field, he had been drinking, I found upon him 3 ſilver ſpoons, and a pepper box; the things were taken out of his waiſtcoat pocket.

Did he ſay at that time how he came by them?——He confeſſed before the Juſtice that he took them out of the room.

Was there any confeſſion taken in writing before the Juſtice?——No.

(The things produced and depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went in to have a pint of beer, I aſked to write a letter, ſeveral men came in while I was there, I paid for the beer, I was there about twenty minutes, I aſked my way to Greenford, they directed me down the lane oppoſite to the houſe, I ſaw two men before me, I looked back, and ſaw a man throw ſome things out of his pocket, I picked them up, I was ſurrounded with five or ſix men. I ſaid I had picked them up; this is the firſt charge that was ever brought againſt me.

The priſoner called two witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

33. MARY MURRELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 24th of October laſt, ſixty-eight yards of black ſilk lace, value 15l. the goods of John Brown, and ——— Pope, privily in their ſhop.

On Friday the 24th of October, about eight in the morning, William Podd, another witneſs, came to my houſe to receive ſome money, he brought with him a piece of black lace, and aſked me the value of it, Podd deals in china and other things, I do not know what buſineſs he calls himſelf; when he ſhewed me the lace, he had ſeveral times before brought laces to me to aſk me the value of them, and when I have told him, he ſaid he could buy them much cheaper, I thought he might have bought this on the ſame ſcore, I told him it was worth ſix ſhillings and ſixpence per yard, he then told me he could ſell it for five ſhillings, and if he bought it for four ſhillings and ninepence, whether it would be a bargain, I told him it really would, the matter dropped for the preſent, I mentioned it at breakfaſt to my partner, that Mr. Podd had been there with a piece of the ſame lace we had ſome of, I aſked him if he ſhould buy it of him, he ſaid why ſhould we, we had a piece of it in the box; Podd did not receive the money when he came before, and he came again between eleven and twelve, and Mr. Pope and me were both in the ſhop, I deſired Podd to ſhew the lace to Mr. Pope, he ſaid he had left it at home, but he would go and fetch it, I ſaid he need not, I would ſhew Mr. Pope the ſame, I ordered one of my ſervants to give me the box of black lace, I took it up, and then miſſed this piece of lace.

Court. Then you ſuppoſed that you had in your box a piece of the ſame ſort of lace with that Podd had ſhewn you, but upon looking into the box you miſſed it?—Yes, I then ſaid to Podd, this is our lace, if it is ſays Mr. Podd, I will tell you the length of it, O ſays I, I will tell you the length preſently, I went to the invoice book and ſaw the length of it correſponded with the lace, Podd then fetched that lace, he lives in Bell Savage-yard, Ludgate-hill, he brought it to our houſe, the piece of lace he fetched was ours; Mr. Pope ſays this is our lace, you muſt tell us where you got this lace.

Court. Did you charge Podd as ſuſpecting him?——No, my Lord, we called upon him to declare where he got it.

I live in Bell Savage-yard, I am a haberdaſher and dealer in china, I ſell to the china trade, I do not keep any ſhop, I keep my goods at home, I was apprenticed to the haberdaſhery, and my wife minds the millinery buſineſs; on the 16th of October I went to Mrs. Banks's ſhop behind the New Church in the Strand, ſhe keeps an open piece broker's ſhop, with a deal of lace in the window, and I [illegible] in there, and ſhe ſhewed me a pattern of a very fine grounded black lace, ſhe aſked me what I thought I could give for it, I told her I could not tell unleſs I ſaw it, ſhe ſaid ſhe had ſeen it, and it was a very good made one, and ſhe ſaid ſhe would ſell it to me for a penny a yard profit, ſhe ſaid ſhe would ſhew it me in the afternoon, I ſaw this piece of lace, and from the deſcription ſhe gave of it, I thought I might buy it, I gave her four ſhillings a yard, ſhe ſaid ſhe gave three ſhillings and eleven pence, or near it, and for the ſake of turning a penny ſhe could ſell it for that ſmall profit; I bought another piece of her that ſame day, and gave her twenty pence a yard for that; I have frequently ſeen laces in the window with a ticket to them, which led me to go into the ſhop, ſometimes I thought them very dear, I have been in that line, I travelled for a capital ſhop ſome years ago.

Did not this appear to you extremely cheap?—No, it did not, I ſhewed it to the trade, and I offered it for five ſhillings, I offered it to Mr. Collier in Holborn, at the bottom of the hill, he keeps a large haberdaſher's ſhop; on the twenty-fifth, I went to Mr. Brown's houſe at eight in the morning, and told him I had got a fine lace, and ſhould be much obliged to him to tell me the worth, I aſked him if he thought it dear at four ſhillings and nine pence, he ſaid he thought it cheap. I ſaid if he would give me five ſhillings, for three pence a yard profit, I would ſell it him.

Court. Was that true?—No, it was not true, but I did not know that a tradeſman was obliged to tell his profits.

No, but you was not obliged to tell him falſe, every man is bound to tell the truth if he tells his profit at all.

How long have you dealt with this Mrs. Banks?—Not a great while, ſometimes I have looked at the window and ſeen lace with a ticket to it at ſuch a price, ſometimes I have bought ſome twelve or fourteen yards, no particular length.

You have had this lace in your poſſeſſion then from the 16th of October to the 24th.

Court to Mr. Brown. It ſtruck you when this lace was produced by Podd that it was a lace of the ſame ſort that you had in your box, how long before had you ſeen this lace in your box?——The 4th of October my partner had it with him on a journey, and returned to town on the 3d with this lace, it was then in that box, I did not tell your lordſhip that the lace coſt me eight ſhillings per yard.

Had Podd been at your houſe between the 4th and 24th of October?——I had not ſeen him.

Do you know any thing of the priſoner?—I do not of my own knowledge.

Do you know any thing of this Mrs. Banks?—Not till I went to her houſe.

The lace that was ſo produced by Podd, have you it here?—Yes.

By what circumſtance do you know it to be yours?—It is a lace of a particular texture, and a particular pattern, and very uncommon.

Was there any ſhop mark or private mark upon it when it was brought to you by Podd?—Not that I ſaw.

Might there not be other lace of the ſame texture and pattern at other ſhops?—It is poſſible the length and pattern and texture correſponded with my own lace.

You examined your books, I think you ſay, to ſee that the length correſponded, and the length correſponded exactly?—Yes, it was twenty-ſeven yards and an half.

Do you mean it was nearly about that meaſure or exactly that meaſure?—It was either twenty-ſeven yards and an half or three quarters.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of Mary Murrell.

What meaſure was that lace that was brought to you by Podd?——It was ſomething more than twenty-ſeven and an half.

Now, though the reſemblance of the pattern ſtruck you, you had no ſuſpicion of its being your lace till you miſſed your lace?——I had not, having known Podd ſome years.

You have had it in your poſſeſſion ever ſince it was bought by Podd?—Mr. Pope has it.

Had you ever any lace of the like pattern and fabrick in your poſſeſſion before?——Never.

Are black laces of the ſame length commonly, or do they vary in length?—They vary, there is no certainty at all.

——— POPE ſworn.

I was preſent when Podd produced the lace the ſecond time, this is the ſame piece. I brought it home with me on the 3d of October, I had it in my poſſeſſion ſix weeks before that.

Had Podd been at your ſhop from the time you came home to the 24th?——Not that I know of.

Had you ſeen Mrs. Banks?——I never ſaw her before.

Have you ever ſeen the priſoner before?——I think I have ſeen her in the ſhop, I cannot be poſitive, but it muſt have been ſome months back.

Then you do not recollect having ſeen her between the time of your coming home and this lace being brought by Podd?—No, Sir.

Do you know that lace?——I have no doubt in the world but it is our lace, it is a remarkable fine lace, I am well acquainted with the pattern, and the length exactly correſponds with our invoice-book.

Is there any private mark on it?—It is not upon our card.

Jury. I preſume more of the ſame pattern and fabrick may have been made?——Very likely.

I underſtood this piece of lace was not ſeen either by you or your partner, later than the 3d of October, and on the 24th of October Podd brought you this lace, a ſpace of twenty days, is it uſual for goods of that nature to lay ſo long?—O yes Sir! frequently.

Podd. My Lord, Mr. Brown ſaid he had the lace on the 18th, I therefore told him, I ſuppoſed it could not be his lace.

Court to Podd. Have you ever taken it off the card, ſo as to ſee whether there is any mark on the card.

Podd. I put it on that.

What was upon it when you bought it?—I believe it was on a card covered with paper.

Why did you take it off one and put it on another?—I believe it was too large to put in my pocket, I believe there was more lace on it, I left it at Mrs. Banks's.

Court to Pope. What paſſed then?——Podd heſitated, he ſaid, he came by it very honeſtly, he had bought it at a very reputable ſhop, he would not tell us the name of that ſhop, he had no right; we went to go to this ſhop, and we never knew where we were going till we came into Fleet-ſtreet; this is the ſame I had of Podd, it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

Podd. I likewiſe told Pope and Brown, I had bought lace that morning, if they had loſt lace, I would ſhew it them.

Court to Podd. When did Brown ſay he had ſeen the lace?——On the 24th; I think on the morning, or on the next evening, I am not quite clear, I told him I ſuppoſed it could not be his lace, for he ſaid, he had it in his ſhop on Saturday, and ſhewed it to a lady on Friday; I told him I had had it in my poſſeſſion ever ſince the 16th: On the 26th in the morning, he ſent his apprentice to my houſe, to meet him in Bow-ſtreet about the fine lace; the boy ſaid, Mr. Brown ſays, he had it in his houſe on Saturday, and ſhewed it to a lady on Friday; Miſs Royle, who is now in Court heard Mr. Brown ſay ſo.

Court to Brown. Is this true what this man ſays?—I do not know whether I might not ſay, I believe I ſaw it on the Friday.

Court. What are you?—A milliner and piece broker behind the New Church, in the Strand.

Do you know William Podd?—Very well, I have ſeen him ſeveral times.

Do you remember ſelling him a piece of lace on the 16th of October?—I did.

What price did you ſell it at?—For four ſhillings, I bought it for three ſhillings and elevenpence.

You have dealt in that buſineſs for ſome time?——Twenty-five years: I bought ſome fine lace of the priſoner, I was buſy, I told her I had not time to look at it, I was afraid it was a died blond, and ſhe left me a pattern.

What is the priſoner?——She has ſome time dealt in lace and other articles.

Where does ſhe live?——Somewhere by Alderſgate-ſtreet, I have known her about ten months, I have bought ſeveral things of her; I can make lace on a pillow, and I have dealt theſe many years in lace, I thought it was a fine lace but not a ſerviceable one, ſeveral ladies loooked at it, and did not like it.

Did not you know at the time you bought it, that it was worth a great deal more than that price?—I abſolutely did not, and I have dealt a great deal in lace. When the priſoner brought it it was put up in half yards, I put it on a large card, which is half a yard long and a quarter broad, which I keep on purpoſe that the thieves ſhould not rob me.

THOMAS WILKINSON ſworn.

I ſold the piece of lace to Mr. Pope and Brown, that very piece of lace, for eight ſhillings a yard; I believe it to be the ſame, it was lace of the ſame pattern and quality.

Whoſe manufacture is it?——I cannot ſay, I bought it in the trade.

Is not it very common when anew pattern is made to make a number of pieces of the ſame pattern?——A number of pieces cannot be made in a ſhort time of that pattern.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen: It ſeems that you can hardly have ſufficient certainty, that this is the ſame lace, without which, there is nothing at all to affect the priſoner; if I thought there was a ſufficient ground to put the priſoner on her defence, I would then hear what ſhe has to ſay.

Jury. My Lord, we are by no means ſatisfied as to the identity.

Court. I did not think you would, it is too ſlight evidence, even to put the priſoner upon her defence, in my opinion.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

34. CHARLOTTE WARE and ELIZABETH FAGAN were indicted for aſſaulting George Holland, on the 29th of November laſt, in the dwelling houſe of William Saunders, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, five pair of worſted ſtockings, value 10s. the property of the ſaid William Saunders.

A Second Count for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the ſame day, and at the ſame place, five pair of worſted ſtockings, value 10s. the property of the ſaid William Saunders, privily in his ſhop.

GEORGE HOLLAND ſworn.

How old are you?——Sixteen.

Do you live with Mr. Saunders?——Yes.

Did you ever ſee theſe two women before?—Yes, I ſaw them both in my maſter's ſhop the 29th of November, about five o'clock in the evening, they came and aſked me to ſhew them ſome ſtockings at fifteen pence, my maſter and miſtreſs were in the ſhop, I went backwards to fetch them ſome, and as I was returning, the priſoner Ware was endeavouring to conceal a bundle containing three pair of worſted ſtockings, under her cloak; my miſtreſs ſaw her, and ſhe took the paper up; then I ſhewed her ſome woman's black, ſhe put her leg on the counter to ſhew me how bad her laſt were; and with her other hand ſhe ſhoved two pair down: She put her ſhoe on, and ſhe put theſe two pair up her petticoats.

Did you ſee her do this?——Yes, ſhe ſaid then, the ſtockings would not do for her, and was going out, I told her, ſhe had ſtole two pair; ſhe ſaid, ſhe had not, ſhe then pulled her apron off and ſhook her petticoats, and they fell from her: I locked them both in the ſhop, I put the key in my pocket for ſhe wanted to go out; my maſter ſent the maid for a conſtable; The priſoner Fagan, then aſked me to let her go out, I told her I would not, for ſhe was as bad as the other: Fagan then ſtruck me and knocked me down againſt the ſtairs, and Ware ſtruck me ſeveral times: I ran up ſtairs and called one of the journeymen down, and went down ſtairs again, then Charlotte Ware ſtruck me again, and ſwore ſhe would rip me up with a knife, which ſhe was feeling for in her pocket, I then ran backwards where there were piſtols loaded, I told her if ſhe came near me I would blow her brains out? my maſter and miſtreſs cried out do not ſhoot, and they were very much frightened; I held my hand down then, or elſe I had it pointed up to ſhoot her: Then I threw the piſtol down the cellar, then ſhe knocked me down and pulled my hair, and tried to choak me: then one of the men came down and got me from her: She then ſtruck one of the men, and when the conſtable came, the priſoner Ware ſtruck the conſtable and ran away; ſhe was taken again: The other woman ſtruck the conſtable ſeveral times, and they were both ſecured, and we went to the Juſtice's, and then ſhe told me ſhe would finiſh me.

WILLIAM SAUNDERS ſworn.

Theſe two women came into the ſhop, and aſked for ſtockings, they walked to the upper end of the ſhop where they had no right, and one took up a paper with three pair of ſtockings, I obſerved her, and when ſhe ſaw I took notice of her ſhe dropped the paper: Then they aſked to ſee ſome black ſtockings, the boy ſhewed them ſome, and one of them clapped her leg on the counter, and with one hand ſhewed the ſtockings ſhe had on: and ſhe put two pair under her petticoats. Then a hamper of wine and brandy came in, I went backwards, and the priſoner Ware followed me and took up a bottle, I do not know whether it was full or empty, ſhe ſaid, damn your eyes you old blood of a bitch! If you do not open the door and let me out, I will daſh your brains out! She held me by the collar at arm's length, and ſtood over me with this bottle, and ſwore ſhe would knock my bloody brains out! I was frightened very much indeed: There were two men at work in the garret, and one of them was called down, and he ſaid, you ſhall not kill my maſter, and he took her away, and juſt then the conſtable came to the door, what became of the bottle I cannot ſay, I expected nothing but to be knocked on the head.

Court to Proſecutor. I hope you will be exceeding good to that little boy, for he ſeems to have conducted himſelf, not only with a great deal of prudence and propriety, but alſo with a great deal of perſonal courage.

Priſoner Ware. The proſecutor ſaid, when he took me up, he had tranſported four or five, and he would hang me for an example.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you ſay ſo?—I never ſaid any ſuch thing, ſhe was the terribleſt woman I ever ſaw in my whole life, but I never ſaid any thing about hanging or tranſporting.

THOMAS ELLIOTT ſworn.

I was up ſtairs at work, the boy came up ſtairs and called for aſſiſtance; I came down behind him, when I came down, he ſaid, I have detected theſe women in ſtealing ſtockings: The priſoner Ware ſaid, you little ſcoundrel, if you ſay ſo, I will knock you down: Then ſhe knocked the boy down, and I went to his aſſiſtance: after that I was ſtanding on the foot of the ſtairs, and ſhe came forward, and ſtruck me in the forehead and the eye, and cut me in three places: She then took up a bottle that was ſtanding on the back counter, and held it over my maſter, and ſwore ſhe would knock his bloody brains out: Then the other man came forward and laid hold of her and pulled her down, and ſaid, ſhe ſhould not hurt his maſter: Then the conſtable went out, and ſhe got from him and was retaken.

GEORGE PEDLEY ſworn.

I was at work with this man up ſtairs, and George came up ſtairs and called us down, I ſaid, run Tom, he ſeems frightened, I thought there was ſome fire; when I came near the bottom of the ſtairs I ſtopped, and he was telling Tom how ſhe had ſtole ſtockings: She then put her hand to her pocket, and ſwore ſhe ſhould rip him up; then the boy went to the back part of the ſhop and took up a piſtol, and I heard my maſter ſay do not ſhoot, and afterward I ſaw her go to the back part, and there was a ſcuffle enſued, I went to their aſſiſtance; the woman had got the laſt witneſs by the throat, with the finger and thumb; and the other had hold of his ear: I was forced to uſe all the ſtrength I had to open her hand, ſhe was very ſtrong indeed: We pulled her off of him, and he run up ſtairs; then my maſter went backwards, and ſhe got hold of a bottle, and ſwore ſhe would knock his bloody brains out, if he did not let her out, I ſaid, ſhe ſhould not ſtrike my maſter; then the conſtable came, and he deſired me to go with him to priſon, and while I put on my coat Ware got away from the conſtable, and the other was ſtriking him: Ware was found in a public houſe, and the conſtable ſaid, I durſt not meddle with her, for there is a great number of thieves, ſo ſhe got away once or twice, and I fetched one Collins and Mitchell from another houſe, and ſhe was taken.

I was the conſtable, I took the two women in the ſhop.

(The ſtockings depoſed to by Saunders and Holland.)

PRISONER WARE's DEFENCE.

I was coming down Drury-lane, I met with Fagan, and we went into the proſecutor's ſhop, and I kicked the paper before me, and I gave it to the gentleman, he kindly thanked me, I offered him ſixteenpence for a pair of ſtockings, and that little boy jumped over the counter, and he made uſe of a very bad expreſſion, and at a diſtance behind him, there lay them two pair of ſtockings, they muſt have come off with his coat, he then locked the door, and ſaid if I went he would ſhoot me, I went to take the piſtol out of his hand, and his foot ſlipped, and he fell down; I was beat and ill-uſed in a mercileſs manner, I have a poor fatherleſs child, left to the mercy of the neighbours, I have not a friend in the world.

PRISONER FAGAN's DEFENCE.

I went with the young woman to buy a pair of ſtockings, the boy aſked eighteen-pence, ſhe offered him ſixteen pence, he ſaid, ſays he, you bitch you have got ſome ſtockings under your-apron, ſhe ſaid ſhe was willing to be ſearched, and behind him, juſt where he came from over the counter, there were two pair of ſtockings lay; he ſaid, what have you chucked them here, ſo he went and locked the door, and put the key in his pocket, ſays I, may not I go out, no ſays he, you bitch, you are as bad as her, ſays he, if ever a one of you offers to ſtir, I will blow your brains out, I might ſhove him I was ſo frightened, ſays he, you bitch, you ſhall not go, he ſtruck me ſeveral times on my breaſt, I have it to ſhew what a ſhocking breaſt I have got.

Court to Jury. With reſpect to the two capital charges, I think you can have no difficulty at all about them, you muſt acquit both the priſoners of both the capital charges, for there is no evidence at all of any robbery having been committed on George Holland the boy, and there can be no evidence of the goods being privily ſtolen in the ſhop: after you have heard both the witneſſes ſay they ſaw them taken at the moment, but yet you are at liberty to find them guilty of the ſimple felony, if you are ſatisfied that they took the ſtockings.

CHARLOTTE WARE, GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

ELIZABETH FAGAN, GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labor twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

34. JOHN FENDLOW was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Ann the wife of John Roots, in the King's highway, on the 1ſt of November laſt, and putting her in fear, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon, and againſt her will, four pair of cotton ſtockings, value 4s. three linen ſhirts, value 15s. one white corded dimity waiſtcoat, value 4s. three linen handkerchiefs, value 3s. four linen ſtocks, value 3s. and two pair of lawn ruffles, value 4s. the goods of the ſaid John Roots.

ANN ROOTS ſworn.

I am wife of John Roots, I was going through High-ſtreet, St. Giles's with two bundles of clean linen, and a boy ſnatched one out of my hand, the top-one was ſnatched off, I gave a ſcream out, I was very much frightened.

Court. Did the boy ſay any thing to you before?—No.

Who was the boy?——I believe it to be the priſoner, but my fright was very great, I cannot ſwear poſitively to him, but that is him to the beſt of my knowledge, I ſcreamed out, a man cried out ſtop, and he dropped ſome of the linen, and I picked it up, and he threw down the remainder, and the man picked it up; I got all the linen again, and the boy was taken.

I live in the ſame ſtreet where the robbery was committed, I went to order a pint of porter acroſs the way, and I ſaw the proſecutrix with two bundles of linen. and I ſaw the priſoner take the uppermoſt bundle, and make acroſs the way.

Court. Can you ſwear to the boy?—Yes.

Why it was dark?—Yes.

Had you taken notice of the boy before? —I have frequently ſeen him going round the ſtreet following gentlemen to pick their pockets, I have no doubt of the boy at all.

Did you purſue him?——Not at firſt, I looked at the woman and at him, and he was taken about thirty or forty yards diſtance.

Priſoner. If he ſaw me picking pockets, why did not he excuſe me, Sir.

Mr. Juſtice Willes to Priſoner. How old are you?—Going on ſixteen, I have a mother alive and a father-in-law, my own father is dead; I was bred up to a whiteſmith.

THOMAS HILLIARD ſworn.

I am headborough of St. Giles's; on the 3d of November laſt I was going to the Round-houſe with a young lad about the ſize of that, who had ſtole a card of lace, and returning I heard the proſecutrix ſcream out very much, I heard the cry of ſtop thief, I was on the oppoſite ſide of the way, and I ſaw the priſoner at the bar run very faſt, I nearly met him, and ſomebody knocked him down in going over the way, I had a candle and lanthorn in my hand, I took him and brought him to the Round-houſe; I have had the linen in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

(The linen produced and depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I know nothing of the things, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY

Of the felony, but not of putting in fear.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Court to Priſoner. In compaſſion to your youth, the Jury have ſaved your life, but in compaſſion to the publick, you may aſſure yourſelf you will not continue in this country.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

35. THOMAS SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly receiving on the 16th of Auguſt laſt 5320 pounds weight of flour, the property of John Peacock, well knowing it to have been ſtolen.

Mr. Reeve, of councel for the proſecution, thus opened the caſe.

Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an indictment againſt the priſoner, Thomas Smith, for receiving a quantity of flower knowing it to have been ſtolen, and for which theft one Wareham was indicted and convicted in Surry; and this charge is againſt the priſoner for being an acceſſary to that felony. The proſecutor, Mr. Peacock, is a dealer in flour in a very conſiderable way. Thomas Smith, the priſoner, is a corn chandler in a retail way, and deals with Mr. Peacock; he was thereby enabled to practiſe a fraud on Mr. Peacock for a conſiderable time, which the law conſiders as a felony, and puniſhes as ſuch. Mr. Peacock frequently miſſed ſeveral ſacks of flour, and at laſt ſuſpecting the clerks intruſted in ſending out flour and keeping the accounts of it, he taxed them with the defraud, upon which they confeſſed very plainly to him, that they had for ſometime been in the habit of ſending flour out of his houſe, and ſelling it under price to the priſoner: upon this they went before a juſtice of the peace, where the two clerks, Gilbertſon and Wareham, confeſſed theſe facts, Gilbertſon was admitted an evidence, and bound over to proſecute Wareham for the felony, and alſo to proſecute Smith the priſoner at the bar as an acceſſary to that felony in receiving the goods. Upon the trial of that indictment in Surry, Wareham was convicted, and Mr. Peacock now comes here to have that juſtice done againſt Mr. Smith, which has already been done upon Wareham. This caſe, now before you, being for receiving goods knowing them to be ſtolen, it is not neceſſary in the trial of an acceſſary to ſtate all thoſe facts over again which were proved on the conviction of the former priſoner; yet this caſe is ſo very particular, that you muſt have the ſame facts told you that were told on the former trial in Surry; but although this caſe depends on circumſtances, and on the guilt confeſſed by the parties, yet, thoſe circumſtances and that guilt are ſo explicit, that there can, I think, remain very little doubt in your minds that the priſoner is guilty. The fact, among many others which I ſhall ſelect for your conſideration, in order to fix upon the priſoner the offence with which he is charged is this: I ſhall prove to you, that on the 1ſt of Auguſt laſt, ſix ſacks of flour were taken in Mr. Peacock's cart by Mr. Peacock's man to Mr. Smith's houſe in White-Chapel. I ſhall prove that by the evidence of the man who carried it, and alſo by the perſon who aſſiſted him in the delivery; I ſhall alſo prove by Mr. Peacock, that there was no entry in his book of ſuch ſacks being iſſued from his warehouſe, which is the uſual way when the trade is a fair one, and conducted by clerks, not for their own benefit, but that of their maſters. I think when theſe facts are proved by Gilbertſon the clerk, and that the priſoner who dealt with Peacock paid but half the value for theſe ſacks of flour, you can have no doubt but the priſoner bought this flour knowing it to be ſtolen, and that it was not flour he bought of Mr. Peacock in the common way of trade.

JOHN PEACOCK ſworn.

You live in the Borough I believe, Mr. Peacock, and deal very largely in flour, and keep a large wharf for other people, as well as yourſelf?—Yes, in the latter end of June, July, and Auguſt I was kept in doors with the gout, and in the courſe of that time, I loſt about 140 ſacks of flour; ſome was my own, and ſome what I had as a factor; I began to be very uneaſy when I got about again, I accuſed my two clerks, Gilbertſon and Wareham, and they confeſſed.

Mr. Silveſter, Priſoner's Council. You muſt not tell us what they ſaid, unleſs this priſoner was preſent.—The priſoner was preſent at the time when they confeſſed it; I took them into the parlour, and as ſoon as ever they confeſſed they had ſold this flour to Smith, I went with a friend and brought Smith to my own houſe, he denied it at firſt, but afterwards he owned it, and ſaid he was willing to pay for it. They owned to ſelling Smith about 18 ſacks of flour, or thereabouts, and after the priſoner heard what they ſaid, he then ſaid he was very willing to pay his ſhare; that he had bought the flour at a guinea a ſack, the ſame flour that coſt me two guineas, and that he was very ready to pay his ſhare of the money back again. He paid me two guineas a ſack himſelf for ſome that I ſold him in a fair way.

Have you looked at your books, and ſeen whether there is or is not an entry of any flour delivered to Mr. Smith the firſt of Auguſt?—There is a memorandum I gave that gentleman juſt now.

Mr. Silveſter. That paper cannot be evidence.

Mr. Reeve. No, I offer it only that he may look at it, and refreſh his memory.

Mr. Silveſter. This circumſtance cannot affect the man at the bar, it may affect the clerk, who ſhould have made the entry.

Court. I do not think it evidence to go to the jury, the jury muſt judge only from facts that are within his knowledge; you may leave it to the jury whether they will preſume this was a fair ſale at a guinea, when he bought the ſame ſort of Mr. Peacock at two guineas.

Mr. Reeve. Then I am not to aſk him whether there is an entry on the firſt of Auguſt.

Court. You may aſk him as to his knowledge of it.—I know of none after the 26th of July; he then bought five ſacks the firſt of Auguſt, he charged one ſack.

Mr. Silveſter. I know you are in very great buſineſs Mr. Peacock, very great indeed, therefore your buſineſs is not conducted by yourſelf, but by your clerks?—Yes.

—You was ill ten weeks?—Yes.

Then what flour was ſold, was not ſold by you, but by your ſervants?—I ſold ſome.

Therefore you have no knowledge of any corn or any flour ſold by yourſelf after the 26th of July?—No.

They might have ſold it and not made an entry; you could not tell you know?—No.

While you was ill you was obliged to truſt to your ſervants.—There was none booked much after that time.

Your clerks, though they have turned out bad, yet they have dealt and ſold to a great many people.—Not to a great many.

They have not always entered what they have ſold fairly.—I do not find any miſ-entries.

There have been ſome ſold to others, I ſuppoſe?—I cannot find where the flour is gone.

Gilbertſon himſelf had the power of ſelling your flour, and receiving your money for you.—Certainly.

What was Wareham?—He was the clerk that uſed to look after the carts and keep the books.

They were both concerned in a fair way of trade, in ſelling your property and receiving your money.—Wareham ſeldom did.

Now who ſhould I have applied to if I had come and you was ill, I ſhould have applied to your ſervant, to your clerk?—The general rule was, they uſed to come in to me.

But ſuppoſe I had met him at the market?—He would have ſold it.

Court to Mr. Silveſter. Your way of examining would be very good, if the priſoner was indicted with the man who ſtole, becauſe, if you could ſhew it was not felony in the principal, it certainly would not be felony in the acceſſary; but in this caſe here is a conviction of the principal; and is not a conviction concluſive evidence?

Mr. Silveſter. I believe I, as councel, may controvert that conviction; there is a noted caſe in Foſter, the caſe of Daniel and Egan.

Court. I wiſh to ſee it; it is a nice and ſubtle diſtinction, becauſe it is a general principle of law not to permit evidence to be given againſt a record. (Looks at the caſe.) I ſee the authority goes the full length of what you ſay; I am ſatisfied with it; it is an exception to a general rule of law, and the reaſon is very accurately given by Mr. Juſtice Foſter, becauſe the record is concluſive only againſt the party to that record: therefore you may certainly go on with this examination.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, I have got the fact I wanted, that theſe are both clerks intruſted by Mr. Peacock to ſell his property and receive the money.

Mr. Raeve to Mr. Peacock. You ſay Wareham had not that authority which Gilbertſon had.—He very ſeldom received money, and had no authority to ſend goods out of the yard.

Court. Wareham and Gilbertſon were both in your employ, Gilbertſon was clerk and book-keeper?—Yes.

What was Wareham's particular employ?—To look after the carts, and take the orders in, and ſend the goods out.

He was in fact principal carman, that was his particular province.—He has ſometimes received little ſums, but it was not a part of his buſineſs, his buſineſs was entirely to look after the carts, and manage the wharf buſineſs.

Had Wareham any authority to ſell things out of your warehouſes?—Yes, to common cuſtomers.

Then he was ſo far intruſted, that if cuſtomers ſent and Gilbertſon or you was out of the way he might ſell?—Yes, he has many and many times to paſtry-cooks and others, little orders.

Now Gilbertſon during your abſence conducted the buſineſs and had authority to ſell?—Yes; when I am well I always go to market myſelf.

Court. If theſe goods were ſtolen by any body, it is very ſtrong evidence that this man received them knowing them to be ſtolen; and I am of opinion, and it has been ruled over and over again, and is every day's practice, that a ſervant though intruſted with the cuſtody of his maſter's property, and to whom it is intruſted for cuſtody only, or for carriage, or for any other ſpecial purpoſe, diſpoſing of that is felony; the truſt repoſed in the ſervant does not take it out of the principal truſt, the property remains unaffected; but that caſe ſeems to be very materially different from this; where a ſervant is entruſted to ſell, and then contrary to that truſt ſells at an inferior price, and does not carry the money to account.

Mr. Silveſter. It is a groſs fraud to be ſure.

Court. What is become of Gilbertſon? —He is admitted an evidence.

Court. Why he is the moſt guilty man of the three.

Mr. Reeve. He was admitted an evidence to convict the other clerk.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, I am very ſorry in this caſe, though a groſs fraud, that the law cannot reach this defendant upon this indictment, as an acceſſary to that fraud; but no deſire of bringing offenders to juſtice muſt induce us to tranſgreſs the principles of Law.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

35. SAMUEL BAKER and SAMUEL ABRAHAMS, otherwiſe ABRAHAM YOWELL, otherwiſe THOMAS UGLY, were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Benjamin Neale on the King's highway, on the 3d of November laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one bag, value 1d. four ounces of beaver, value 4s. ſix ounces of goats wool, value 6s. and ſix ounces of rabbits wool, value 6s. the property of Richard Swaddle.

BENJAMIN NEAL ſworn.

Court. How old are you?—Fourteen laſt Auguſt.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—Yes: Mr. Swaddle gave me a bag to carry from the 'Change to Frying-pan Alley, Petticoat-lane; I was going along and at the bottom of Widegate Alley, the priſoner Baker ſtooped and took it out of my hand by force, he ſnatched it, he ran away, I halloo'd Stop thief! and ran after him, and the priſoner Abrahams ran after me; I ran into a ſhop.

Court. What makes you ſay Baker took it by force?—He took hold of the bundle and turned it round; they were not taken till the next day; they were taken by two hatters; I ſaw them the next day; I knew them again.

Court. What time was it?—Between eight and nine o'clock at night.

It was rather dark, was not it?—Yes, it was.

Are you quite ſure theſe are the two men?—Yes.

Were they dreſſed as they are now?—No.

Were they dreſſed the ſame the next day?—Yes.

Jury. Did you ever ſee them before they robbed you?—No.

Court. Did you ſee them whilſt they robbed you?—Yes.

Were they ever out of your ſight?—Yes, when they turned into Gravel-lane.

RICHARD SWADDLE ſworn.

I am a hatter; I ſent the laſt witneſs on the 3d of November, about a quarter paſt eight o'clock, with the things mentioned in the indictment.

FANNY MARDEN ſworn.

While I ſtood with my neighbour at the corner of Frying-pan Alley, I ſaw the priſoner Baker run by me very faſt with a paper bag in his hand, I knew him before perfectly well by ſight, but never ſpoke to him or knew what he was; I am ſure it was Baker, and Abrahams is the man that run after him; I heard the boy cry Stop thief! but paid no attention to it, for it is very frequent in that neighbourhood; the child came up directly and aſked if we ſaw any body run by, I ſaid, yes, two men and they got out of my ſight.

Jury. Did you ſee the paper bag in Abrahams's hand?—No, in Baker's.

On the 3d of November I went to Mr. Jones's wine vaults, at the end of Widegate Alley, and I ſaw Baker ſnatch this bundle from the boy, I am ſure it was him, I have ſeen him ſeveral times, but never ſpoke to him: they ran by the ſide of me.

Court. Did he lay hold of the boy or attempt to knock him down, or make uſe of any violence of that kind?—No, Sir, Abrahams went up to the end of Gravel lane and made a retreat back again; I cannot ſay they were in company, he was ſtanding there; the boy was ſtanding at the end of Widegate Alley when they ſnatched the bundle from him; but whether he ſtopped of his own accord, or whether they ſtopped him I cannot ſay, I ſaw Baker ſnatch it from him.

Court to Neale. Were the things ever found?—No.

When did you firſt ſee Abrahams?—I ſaw him the next day, and I ſaw him that night juſt before they took the bundle from me.

Did you ſee Arahams with Baker, juſt before Baker ſnatched the bundle?—Baker and Abrahams ſtood talking together at the corner before Baker ſnatched the bundle from me.

Are you ſure of that?—I am quite ſure of that.

Did either of them ſay any thing to you?—No, neither of them.

PRISONER ABRAHAMS's DEFENCE.

I was apprehended on Tueſday morning about twelve o'clock; I was brought up to Juſtice Wilmot's Office and had my hearing; this little boy ſwore to me; I was ſent to gaol for another examination on Friday; then this little boy could not ſwear to me.

PRISONER BAKER's DEFENCE.

I was at work on the Monday that this was done; I came home at dinner time and worked till half after eight o'clock at night; I went to bed before nine; the door is always locked up at nine.

The Priſoner Baker called four Witneſſes who gave him a good character.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, this offence is ſtated to be that of a highway robbery, and the indictment ſtates all the requiſites of ſuch an offence: the diſtinction that is eſtabliſhed in point of puniſhment between a common theft and an highway robbery, is intended to protect the perſonal ſafety of individuals; therefore it is that the law which makes a common theft only what we call a ſingle felony, and always allows to it the benefit of clergy, puniſhes highway robbery with death: but in order to conſtitute a highway robbery, there muſt in point of law either be a putting in fear ſo as to excite an apprehenſion of perſonal danger to the party who is robbed, and by that means intimidate him to deliver his property, or elſe there muſt be actual force and violence uſed to his perſon: without one or other of theſe requiſites a highway robbery cannot exiſt in point of law, and in all caſes where theſe requiſites are not found, if the Jury are ſatisfied that property is taken by a perſon, it becomes a ſimple theft and not a highway robbery. Now in this caſe there is no pretence to conſider this as a highway robbery: one of the priſoners ſnatched the bundle, he never laid hands on the boy, he never ſpoke to him to threaten him, and though it was ſnatched with a degree of force to get it out of his hands, that is not the kind of force that the law means in the caſe of a highway robbery, for in this caſe there was no previous putting in fear, neither was there any violence uſed to the perſon of the boy, ſo that I am clearly of opinion that the evidence in this caſe will not ſupport that part of the indictment which makes it a capital felony: but the indictment contains in it a ſufficient deſcription of a common theft, therefore thoſe words which would make it a capital offence if wanted, may be ſo far ſeparated from the reſt of the indictment, as that you may find the priſoners guilty of the ſingle felony, without that aggravated circumſtance, if you are perſuaded that thoſe are the perſons who committed the fact. Now ſubject to that obſervation in point of law, I will ſtate to you the evidence. (Here the learned Judge ſtated the evidence to the Jury.)

SAMUEL BARKER, GUILTY

Of felony, but not of putting the perſon in fear.

On the recommendation of the Jury to be publicly whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the houſe of correction.

SAMUEL ABRAHAMS, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

37. JOHN PONTINE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 25th of November laſt, ſeven yards of printed cotton, value 10s. the property of Anthony Twiddle, privily in his ſhop.

On the morning of the 25th of November laſt, between ſeven and eight o'clock I was called up, and when I came down the priſoner was in the ſhop, he was ſtopped; I aſked him how he came there, he ſaid, they had made a miſtake and taken the wrong perſon, my apprentice and journeyman was there, he is not here.

Court. How old are you?—Fifteen.

Was you in the ſhop when the priſoner came in?—Yes, he came in between ſeven and eight o'clock, him and another came in to buy ſome cloth for ſhirts; they ſtaid about five minutes, they bought nothing; as ſoon as they were gone out I miſſed a piece of cotton for a gown, I run after them and caught the priſoner by the coat and tore his coat, and as ſoon as I tore his coat I ſaw him let the piece fall from under his coat.

Are you ſure he was the man that dropped the piece?—Yes, he was never out of my ſight; I picked up the piece of cotton and brought it home; it was the ſame piece I ſaw the priſoner drop.

WILLIAM BOX ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I apprehended the priſoner, and have kept the cotton ever ſince.

(The cotton depoſed to.)

Priſoner. The boy ſaid before the Lord Mayor, that the piece was dropped between the other man and me, and he could not tell which, now he makes a different ſtory.

Richard Twiddle. I ſaid, I did not know which took it, not that I did not know which dropped it: the priſoner was the man that dropped it.

Priſoner. I am innocent of the fact.

The Priſoner called four Witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 4s. 6d.

To be twice publicly whipped and imprisoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the first London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

38. WILLIAM COX otherwiſe VANDERBANK, CATHERINE SMITH and ELIZABETH WHILEY were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of James Leggatt, about the hour of twelve o'clock in the night, on the 8th of November laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one ſtuff gown, value 3s. two ſcarlet cloaks, value 4s. two petticoats, value 2s. a pair of ſtays, value 2s. fourteen yards of corderoy, value 28s. ſix ſhirts, value 24s. two pair of ſilk breeches, value 10s. three bed ticks, value 6s. two table-cloths, value 3s. two bolſter ticks, value 4s. two great coats, value 4s. ſix cloth coats, value 8s. eight waiſtcoats, value 4s. one other waiſtcoat, value 1s. three pair of breeches, value 2s, and two pair of thickſet breeches, value 1s. his property.

I am a taylor and ſaleſman, I live on Great Saffron-hill: on the 8th of November I ſecured this houſe, when theſe things were as uſual, I did not ſleep there that night, and I ſhut it up between three and four o'clock in the afternoon; this houſe has four lodgers in it, but they have no communication to the ſhop door, the back door has no communication with the ſhop or parlour. About three o'clock the next morning, the watchman informed me this houſe was broke open; I went there and found the place in great confuſion, the ſtreet door was open, and the things that were left were laid on the floor: I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment: I called a conſtable, and we went down a court that is juſt facing the ſhop and we heard a noiſe in ſome rooms on the left hand ſide of the court: we were informed by a woman, where the property was, and we went and found it, I think it was in the ſame room where the noiſe was; neither of the priſoners were in the room; half an hour after, we met one of them coming down ſtairs, and we took Cox at a publick houſe afterwards, and the two women were alſo taken.

GEORGE GEARY ſworn.

I am conſtable of St. Andrew's pariſh: on Sunday morning, the 9th of November laſt, I was called up by the proſecutor, and we went to this houſe, and we found it all in confuſion; juſt then the watchman picked up a bit of ſilk lining, I went to the place where he picked it up and found a bit of cotton: we went into the room afterwards where I believe the two women priſoners inhabited; I met Smith on the ſtairs; when I went into the room the ſhirts were on a chair and his black ſilk breeches under the bed tick; we found all the things; neither of the priſoners returned, but as we were coming down ſtairs we met the evidence Thomas Dunks and took him into cuſtody, and he gave information of the two priſoners.

Court. Then it was in conſequence of his information that you took them up?—Yes.

My father keeps the King's-head, I believe it is; no, it is the Queen's-head, in Caroline-court, Saffron-hill; the priſoners were in our houſe about eleven o'clock at night, that night the robbery was done, and they all went away together.

SARAH SAUNDERS ſworn.

Depoſed to the ſame effect.

MARY SEAL ſworn.

I live in Blue-court, between twelve and one o'clock on this Sunday morning, I was going out for a pitcher of water to the ciſtern, I was waſhing, and I met two men coming down juſt by the corner, and another young man came round with a bundle, and he threw the bundle into a cart, and ſaid he muſt make his bed in the cart, and he ſaid he could not, he muſt take it away; the priſoner Cox was one of theſe two men, the other was in ſailors cloaths; they called him Buggey; they ſaid, come along Buggey; he went in and dropped part of his things.

Court. You cannot tell what he dropped?—No.

Court to Jury. Upon this ſtate of the evidence I cannot think of calling Dunks the accomplice.

WILLIAM COX, otherwiſe VANDERBANK,
CATHERINE SMITH,
ELIZABETH WHILEY,
} NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

39. JOHN SPENCE otherwiſe PEARCE was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Silvanus Hopping, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 18th of November laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one tin canniſter, value 6s. five pounds eleven ounces of green tea, value 45s. one other tin canniſter, value 3s. and eight pounds of bohea tea, value 50s. his property.

SILVANUS HOPPING ſworn.

I live in Ratcliffe-highway; on Tueſday the 18th of November, between ſeven and eight o'clock in the evening, a man came into my ſhop and aſked for a penny-worth of tobacco; I ſerved him; the tobacco is on one ſide, and the grocery on the other; he leaned over the counter, and when I had ſerved him he gave me a bad half-penny and a good one; a woman came in and wanted ſome tea; the man ſtood in the door way and damned me, and ſaid there was not half an ounce of tobacco: I went into my parlour; I faſtened one of the ſhop doors, and the other goes with a ſpring bolt; when I had been in the parlour about ten minutes I heard a rumbling in the ſhop, I turned my head and ſaw a perſon peeping through the glaſs door; I went into the ſhop and the priſoner was in the ſhop; the door was ſhut but not quite cloſe, and the priſoner had the caniſter in his arms before him: As ſoon as the perſon that was looking through the door ſaw me coming into the ſhop, he gave a whiſtle, and threw the door open for the man in the ſhop to run out; upon which he run out a few yards from the door, I purſued him and knocked him down with the canniſter in his arms; I ſaid, you raſcal, I have got you; he ſaid, yes you have ſure enough: I brought him into the ſhop, he denied knowing any thing of the other canniſter, or of this either; I do not know how he got into the ſhop, the door only opens on the inſide, and there was nothing broke; there was a mark between the crack of the door where ſomething had gone in: I am very poſitive I faſtened the door; I went on purpoſe to faſten it.

Might not you ſhoot the bolt?—No.

Depoſed to the ſame effect.

SARAH MARSHALL ſworn.

I ſaw the proſecutor lay hold of the priſoner, with the canniſter in his arms.

GEORGE FORRESTER ſworn.

I took charge of the priſoner: I ſaw the mark in the door.

(The canniſter depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going along, and juſt as I came facing his houſe, he collared me and ſaid I robbed him, I never was nigh the ſhop before, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing to the amount of 39s. but not of the Burglary.

Tranſported ſeven years.

Tried by the Second Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

40. WILLIAM BROWN was indicted for burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Anderſon, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 25th of November laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein twelve ſilver handled knives, value 6s. and twelve ſilver handled forks, value 4s. his property.

I am waiter at Mr. Anderſon's, the Surry-ſtreet Tavern in the Strand; on November the 20th I was very full of buſineſs, and I was obliged to have a man to aſſiſt me, and I told him to wait while I ſtepped home, and when I returned, I came down Strand-lane, I came up the paſſage under part of our houſe where the things were taken from, I met a man ſeeming to have ſomething in his arms, that was between ſix and ſeven; ſoon after I met two more juſt under the window, and one ſays to the other, go and ſee if he is at home, the other ſays I will, and then come and let you know; I went up ſtairs into the room where theſe things were miſſing, and I met my fellow-ſervant at the top of the ſtairs, and he followed me into the room, and I immediately miſſed the ſilver handled knives and forks, which were on the window ſeat, I aſked him where they were, he ſaid he did not know, the knives were gone, and the window was up; this was up one pair of ſtairs; a perſon came from the next door, and ſaid he had taken a perſon with ſome ſilver handled knives and forks, which were the ſame I loſt.

SAMUEL PIDGEON ſworn.

On the 25th of November I was employed to aſſiſt at the Surry-ſtreet Tavern, and in the evening between ſix and ſeven, I did not ſee any body, I thought I heard the foot of one at the back of the window upon the leads, the place is about twelve feet high, the leads are for keeping of flower-pots, the window looks into Strand-lane, there is a wall about ten or twelve feet high, and I thought I heard ſome people go down the ſteps into the lane, and afterwards I miſſed the caſe of ſilver handled knives and forks.

I met the priſoner on the 26th about noon, I ſtopped him, he denied having any thing about him, but on ſearching him, there were the knives and forks concealed in his apron, tied up in this cloth, with this ſtring round them, they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, he ſaid he found them on the ruins where the fire was in the Strand, I took him into cuſtody.

CHARLES YOUNG ſworn.

Depoſed to the ſame effect, being with the laſt witneſs.

(The knives and forks depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was walking in the Strand about ſix in the morning, it was not quite light, and I found theſe and put them in my apron, I then went to Leather-lane to look after a place of work, and theſe men took me.

The Priſoner called three Witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

41. JOHN ROBERTS was indicted for feloniouſly and burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Robert Salter, on the 29th of November laſt, about the hour of eight in the night, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein ſix ſilk handkerchiefs, value 18s. the property of the ſaid Robert Salter.

ELIZABETH SALTER ſworn.

I live in King-ſtreet, Tower-hill, on the 29th of November laſt, between ſeven and eight my ſhop window was broke, and theſe handkerchiefs taken out, I did not ſee the priſoner, it made a very great noiſe, I was behind the counter, the handkerchiefs were lying in the window.

Court. Did you ſee any hand put in?—I did not, I was very much frightened, I had a boy behind the counter, I told him to run out and cry ſtop thief, for the window was broke, the priſoner at the bar was ſtopped and brought back with the handkerchiefs; this was in the ſpace of three minutes.

Court. Are theſe the ſame handkerchiefs?—I am poſitive they are the ſame handkerchiefs, I have had them ever ſince, William Walker brought back the priſoner and the handkerchiefs, I laid them in the window in the morning myſelf, and I ſaw them in the courſe of the day ſeveral times.

Priſoner's Council, Mr. Keys. There is no ſhop mark on them?—No.

Then they are only ſuch ſort of handkerchiefs as you loſt?—They are ſuch ſort as I am poſitive they are my handkerchiefs.

It is a very common pattern?—No, it is not.

There are dozens and dozens of them in London?—I cannot tell how many may be made of them, I never had any of this pattern before.

How far is your houſe from the corner of the ſtreet?—Four houſes.

It was a pretty dark night was not it?—I believe it was.

It was on a Saturday night?—Yes.

And a great number of people in the ſtreets?—Sometimes there is.

WILLIAM WALKER ſworn.

I live in Roſemary Lane, about five houſes down after you come out of King-ſtreet, I was ſtanding at the door, and there was a ſudden alarm with the cry of ſtop thief! I looked out and ſaw the priſoner running, I ſuſpected him to be the thief, I immediately croſſed the way and caught him in my arms with the property upon him, theſe were the handkerchiefs I delivered to Mrs. Salter; when I caught him in my arms, he fell down and threw the handkerchiefs from him, and a man that ſtood by picked them up, I am ſure he had the handkerchiefs upon him when I ſtopped him, becauſe I ſaw them.

Priſoner's Council. Did you ſay before the Juſtice that you ſaw the handkerchiefs drop from him?—Yes, I ſay now what I ſaid then, and no more.

Was Mr. Stewart by at the time?—He ſaw the window broke.

JOSEPH STEWART ſworn.

On Saturday evening between ſeven and eight o'clock, I was going down King-ſtreet, I obſerved the priſoner ſtanding in the middle of the ſtreet below Mr. Salter's ſhop, I thought him to be a ſervant to a friend of mine, and croſſed to ſpeak to him but found he was not the perſon I thought he was; I was only going a little way to the Poſt Office, and I came back immediately, when I turned round, I obſerved another perſon ſtanding with him in the middle of the ſtreet, the man and himſelf were the only people I believe in the ſtreet, I then ſaw them go to the corner of Mr. Salter's window, and look into the window, and immediately the window was broke, the other perſon had a blue great coat on, the priſoner at the bar made a ſnatch at ſomething, it was very light being oppoſite to the tobacconiſt's ſhop, and the light of Mr. Salter's ſhop, the priſoner turned down

Roſemary Lane, I perceived ſeveral things fall down on the ground, I am not miſtaken in the perſon.

Priſoner's Council. Do you conſider that this young man's life depends on your evidence?—Yes, I well remember his dreſs.

What did you ſay before the Juſtice?—I ſaid, I ſaw the priſoner in the ſtreet, when I went down the ſtreet.

Have not you ſaid, Sir, that you thought it was the other boy that broke the window?—One of them certainly did it, for there was nobody elſe cloſe to the window, I cannot ſay the priſoner broke it.

Was you preſent when the handkerchiefs were found?—No, I only went to the corner, and cried ſtop thief! One of them had gone down Roſemary Lane.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When that gentlemen was before the Juſtice, he could only ſay that he ſaw the handkerchiefs in my hand as I was running, and if the gentleman was to ſpeak God's truth now, he knows to the contrary.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen; doubts have at ſometimes ariſen what ſhould be conſidered as a ſufficient breaking or entering to conſtitute the crime of burglary, and upon that ſeveral determinations have been made, and the Judges have from time to time decided what caſes were in their opinion within that law, and they have been very ſtrict in their conſtruction of this law, and have conſidered any opening of any thing that was ſhut and faſtened, to be a ſufficient breaking, and any the leaſt entering, even the putting in a hand, to be a ſufficient entering: In this caſe to be ſure the breaking and entering does not appear to be very ſtrongly within the law of burglary, for the intention of that law was moſt certainly to protect people in the hours of reſt from injury and depredation; to protect them in the ſecure enjoyments of their dwellings, was certainly the original and principal reaſon of the law with reſpect to burglary; and if therefore, ſuch caſes as this at the bar were new and undecided upon, I ſhould have doubted very much whether they came within the reaſon of that law, but it is my duty to tell you, that this circumſtance of breaking a ſhop window has been decided by the Judges to be a burglary; therefore, I am bound to ſtate to you the law, if you believe the fact it is ſufficient to ſupport the indictment.

Guilty,

Of ſtealing to the value of 10s. but not guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

41. SARAH SLADE and MARY WOOD were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th of November laſt, one ſcarlet cloak, value 12s. one cotton gown, value 5s. one ſilk and ſtuff gown, value 20s. one linen ſheet, value 5s. one gown, value 10s. one pair of ſtays, value 12s. ſeven linen handkerchiefs, value 4s. four ſilk handkerchiefs, value 4s. one ſilk and cotton handkerchief, value 6d. three pair of linen ſleeves, value 2s. three aprons, value 3s. one linen ſhift, value 1s. one pair of ſtone ſleeve-buttons ſet in ſilver, value 1s. the property of Robert Eggleſton, in the dwelling houſe of Lea Freeman.

I live in Dall-ſtreet Spittlefields, I lodge in Lea Freeman's houſe, when I went out from my breakfaſt I locked the door, it was on the 7th of November, nine o'clock, there was nobody in my apartment, my wife and me were both at our daily employment, and we came home together, when we came home the drawers were open, and every thing taken out, my wife can give the beſt account of the things, they were found, ſome of them, afterwards.

The Priſoners having no Council, Mr. Garrow undertook to croſs-examine the Witneſſes for them.

You are a lodger in this houſe?——Yes.

Did you or your wife, go out firſt?——I went out firſt.

This is a lodging houſe?——Yes.

You did not go home till you heard your things were loſt?——Yes.

Had not your wife been home before?——I am ſure my wife was not there till I went with her, I locked the door.

Somebody who had the key opened the door?——Yes.

Who, you do not know?——No.

ELIZABETH EGGLESTON ſworn.

I went out between ſix and ſeven o'clock, before my huſband, we are ſilk throwſters; I came home between twelve and one, and found the door upon the latch, my huſband ſtaid about two or three hours after me in the morning: my things were beſt part gone, there was nothing left but one petticoat, a coarſe ſheet, and a coloured handkerchief; the things mentioned in the indictment were loſt.

Mr. Garrow. You was not preſent when they were found?——No.

This is a common lodging houſe?——Yes.

You did not find the door broke open?——No, it was opened.

I was walking near Shoreditch Church, in Kingſland Road, I met the two priſoners at the bar, on the 7th of November, about twelve o'clock at noon, I paſſed them at firſt: I recollected they had been in my cuſtody before.

Mr. Garrow. You know you are not to tell us that?——I am telling you the reaſon why I ſtop them.

But you are not to tell us your reaſons.—I am not talking to you, I am talking to my Lord.

Mr. Garrow. I ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that this man who is an officer of juſtice, is not to tell us his reaſons, why he ſtopped them.

Court to Yardley. You knew them before and therefore you ſtopped them?——Yes, they are mother and daughter, I aſked the young one what ſhe had got in her lap, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was moving from the other end of the town, and had taken lodgings in Kingſland Road, I then aſked the mother whether ſhe knew it to be a fact, that the daughter was moving, ſhe ſaid it was a fact, and ſhe was aſſiſting her; I then inſiſted upon knowing what ſhe had in her apron; there I found two gowns, and a ſcarlet cloak, and a ſheet; I carried them before Juſtice Wilmot, the young one (Slade) ſaid, ſhe had fetched them out of pawn in Oxford Road, I then aſked the Magiſtrate leave to enquire into the facts; in the mean while the proſecutor's wife came up to the office, wringing her hands, and ſaying they were robbed, I told them to make themſelves eaſy, I ſhewed them the things, and the woman ſaid they were hers.

Court. Were there any other things found but theſe?——No, they were in the priſoner Slade's lap, and this key I found on her, which opens the proſecutor's door.

Mr. Garrow. How do you know that, did you ever try it?——No.

Then do not tell us any thing of it.

Court. Who was preſent when it was tried in the door?——The wife.

Court to Mrs. Eggleſton. Did you go with him when he tried that key?——I cannot recollect.

Mr. Garrow to Yardley. What did you do with the key you found on the priſoner?——I delivered it to one of our officers, he is not here. I received this key from him.

I want to underſtand a little further about this key, whether you are entitled to introduce it, in the manner you have done, to the jury; you having found a key on one of the priſoners, delivered that key to one of your officers, who is not here?—Yes.

Who was he?—I cannot recollect.

You have now a key in your hand which has been delivered to you by ſomebody.—Yes.

From whom did you receive it?—I cannot recollect.

So that you do not recollect to whom you gave that key, nor from whom you received this?—I do not, I know it was a very remarkable key.

By what was it remarkable, Sir?—It was worn with ruſt.

Now I want to know, Mr. Yardley, whether in the whole courſe of your life, as a thief-taker, you ever knew a key identified in ſuch manner; is it by a key being worn with ruſt, Sir, that you affect to identify it in a court of juſtice?—There is not a doubt in my mind.

It is not your ſaying bluntly here, that there is not a doubt in your mind, that will induce the Court or Jury to believe it: by what marks Sir, will you make the Court and Jury believe that that is the key which you took on the woman, which key you gave to you do not know who, and have received a key from ſomebody you cannot deſcribe. How will you make us believe it is the ſame key?

Court, looking at the key. It is a very remarkable key.

Mr. Garrow. Not, my Lord, becauſe it has been eat up with ruſt.

Court to Yardley. You gave it to one of your officers, you cannot recollect which, to go to try the door?—Yes.

How ſoon afterwards was the key returned to you?—In the courſe of three quarters of an hour.

Did you take particular notice of the key, and obſerve the wards and the ſhape of it?—I have not a doubt of the key.

But anſwer my queſtion.—I did, becauſe it was an old worn out key, I thought there was not ſuch another.

Did you examine the wards, and the ſhape?—I cannot take upon myſelf to ſay as to the wards, but I know it was much eaten with ruſt.

(The things that were produced depoſed to by the proſecutor's wife.)

Court to Proſecutor. Do you remember any circumſtance of a key being given to open the door with?—I know Yardley gave me a key to try to open the door, I am ſure of that; I tried it, and it opened the door readily.

Was the key you opened the door with, the ſame you gave to Yardley again?—Yes.

Court to Yardley. Was the key you gave him to open the door with, the ſame you found on the priſoner Slade?—It was.

You have not changed it;—I could not, I had none to change it with; I know I gave it to one of our officers, but whether I gave it to the woman I cannot ſay.

Was it not changed when you gave it to the officer?—I am ſure it is the ſame key.

Was it out of your ſight?—It was in a box, but I am ſure it is the ſame I gave the officer.

PRISONER SLADE's DEFENCE.

I buy and ſell old clothes, my huſband gave me a guinea that morning, I bought theſe things of a woman, I gave her twenty-ſix ſhillings for them; that gentleman is a very falſe man; they told me they would hang me, if it was only for the ſake of the money; he not only ſaid ſo, but the juſtice himſelf: as for the key, it is the key of my door, and they went home afterwards and ſtripped my room.

Yardley. There was a deal of other property in the houſe, tea cheſts, and other things; I ſent another officer to her room with the key.

ELIZABETH COCKSON ſworn.

I know Slade, I have ſeen her in Roſemary-lane, I ſaw her buy a red cloak, and a couple of gowns and a ſheet, ſhe gave twenty-eight ſhillings for them.

Of who?—Of a women at the Blue-Boar; I went and had a penny worth of twopenny at the ſame time when they came in.

What time of the day?—It was 10 o'clock which I was in, and I was in ſome time before them; It was about a quarter after 10 o'clock when they came in.

Court. What character does ſhe bear?—I have ſeen her up and down the lane, but as to her character I can ſay nothing about.

Did ſhe ſeem to know the woman that ſhe bought the things of at all?—I cannot ſay, the woman aſked her a guinea and an half, and ſhe bad her twenty-eight ſhillings. It was a linen gown, but I cannot ſwear to any thing of the property: it was a red cloak, but I did not take any notice of it: I know there were two or three dealers there.

How long did you ſtay at the public-houſe after ſhe bought them?—I went out directly, I left them there.

The priſoner Slade called two other witneſſes who gave her a good character; and one of them alſo gave the priſoner Wood a good character.

Sarah Slade, } Not Guilty.
Mary Wood, }

42. THOMAS MARTIN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 8th day of November laſt ſeventeen linen towels, value 17s. one dimity petticoat, value 5s. the property of William Wells, Eſq. one ſilk handkerchief, value 4s. one ſilk petticoat, value 4s. the property of John Simpſon; and one linen apron, value ſix-pence, the property of Elizabeth Price.

KENNETH M'CLOUGH ſworn.

I live with Mr. Wells, in New-ſtreet, Spring-Garden, I was in town on the 8th of November laſt, the family were not in town; I had been out about three-quarters of an hour, and when I returned, coming down the area ſteps about a quarter of an hour paſt one, I caught the priſoner coming out of the houſekeeper's room, about a foot from the door, I collared him, and aſked him what he wanted, he ſaid he wanted one Mr. Butler.

Is there ſuch a ſervant in the houſe as Mr. Butler?—No, I am the butler. I aſked him what houſe, he ſaid he could not tell, only one Mr. Butler, in New-ſtreet. I ſhook him. There were two women in the houſe, the cook and the woman who keeps the houſe; the houſekeeper's room is backward, the kitchen is next to it backwards, the ſecond door on the right hand. I took him into the kitchen and aſked the women to ſee if there was any thing miſſing, and one of the women ſaid, Lord there are ſeventeen towels gone, and the cook ſaid, her miſtreſs's petticoat was gone.

Gone from whence?—I cannot ſay where they laid, the women know. I took him into the houſekeeper's room, where the women went to look what was miſſing, and I ſaw he had a ſilk handkerchief between his coat and his waiſtcoat in his right hand, and I ſaw him drop it down, and the woman that keeps the houſe took it up, her name is Ann Simpſon. He began to cry, and ſaid he never touched any thing, and then he ſaid he never would do the like again if I would let him go; ſo on the left hand ſide on the floor going into the room there were ſixteen of the towels, and a woman's petticoat rolled up in an old check apron, which hung upon the back of a chair a little before; then they found a petticoat wrapped up in the ſeventeenth towel, which I ſaw pulled out from under the dreſſer.

Continuation of the Trial of Thomas Martin.

Court. Was you coming home, or was you fetched home ?—I was coming home, but as I came along, a lamp-lighter told me, be believed there was a thief gone down Mr. Wells's Area, I made what haſte I could, I was rather lame, I went out of the great door, and I believe the area-gate was open ; there is a partition which divides the houſe-keeper's room from the kitchen ; the women were waſhing the kitchen, and with their pattens on the ſtone floor they made ſuch a noiſe that any body might come in and not be heard.

ELIZABETH PRICE ſworn.

I am cook to Mr. Wells. On the 8th of November I was at home ; Mrs. Simpſon had the care of the houſe, there were no other perſons in the houſe but the laſt witneſs, and me, and Ann Simpſon, we were waſhing the kitchen down after the plaiſterers, about half after twelve I ſaw the priſoner go from the houſe-keeper's room, I told Mrs. Simpſon there was a ſtrange man (which was the priſoner) gone out of the houſe-keeper's room, this was juſt before M'Clough came home, I was at the pump which is backwards, drawing a pail of water, and I aſked Mrs. Simpſon to go and ſee if any thing was loſt, then M'Clough came in and brought the priſoner back immediately, then I ſaw the towels bundled up in a checque apron of mine that hung upon a chair, I ſaw them the evening before.

Did the things lay in ſight of any body that paſſed in the ſtreet ?—No ; I was not preſent when the handkerchief dropped from the priſoner.

I met M'Clough with the priſoner by the collar, Price called to me that there was a ſtrange man, and I immediately went to the houſe-keeper's room, and I miſſed the towels directly, I ſaw them in the morning when I opened the windows at half after ſix, I had been in the room a great many times, and I ſaw them about twenty minutes before, I ſaw my handkerchief under the priſoner's coat, I had it in the evening, but on the morning I would not put it on, becauſe I was about dirty work, and I chucked it upon the dreſſer, I ſaw it about twenty minutes before.

(The things produced and depoſed to by the three witneſſes.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was ſent of an errand by a gentleman in Faſhion-ſtreet, Spital-fields, to New-ſtreet, Spring-garden, to Mr. Butler's ; I looked all the way on the doors, and I came to this place, and I went down thinking to ſee ſome of the ſervants, I knocked at the door and this gentleman came down the area ſteps, he took me into the room and the woman came in, and ſeeing the handkerchief, ſaid, I believe he has dropped it. I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

43. SAMUEL MATTHEWS and DANIEL CHAMBERS were indicted for feloniouſly and burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Paterſon, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 24th of November laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one red leather pocket-book, value 2s. one gold breaſt pin, value 2s. one ſilver ſeal, value 2s. and ſeven hundred and twenty copper halfpence value 30s. the property of the ſaid John Paterſon.

I keep a publick-houſe, the Marquis of Granby, in the Almonry, Weſtminſter; on the 24th of November, about ſeven at night, I was in the houſe, and my houſe was broke into at a one pair of ſtairs window.

Mr. Reeve, Priſoner's Council. How do you know that?—There was no other way for any body to get in, there was company in the houſe, I did not hear any particular noiſe to ſuſpect any thing of that ſort, one of my ſervant girls, who is not here, went up into the room, it is a bed-chamber facing Duke's-court, and upon her informing me I went up ſtairs, there is a caſe of drawers in the room, and I ſaw one of the drawers taken out from the caſe, and laid empty on the bed, the ſaſh was down, but not faſtened, and the door ſhut; it did not appear how any body got in, I was at this drawer about fifteen minutes before, I cannot ſay whether it was locked or not, the things mentioned in the indictment were miſſing, the window is about nine feet high, the room door was locked, and I had the key.

Then how did the maid get in?—I gave her the key a minute before, I have [illegible] papers which were in the pocket-book, which were found in a publick-houſe in Downing-ſtreet, I have none of the reſt of the things.

What leads you to ſupect the priſoners?—I ſhould not have ſuſpected them for it, but when I came down ſtairs again, I went to the door, and there were four men ſtanding in the court, who informed me of them.

Are any of them here?—No.

Mr. Reeves. Do not you know theſe two men the priſoners?—Yes.

They frequented your houſe?——Yes they do.

Do not they belong to a club at your houſe?—Yes they do.

Are they not very decent reſpectable men?—I know nothing ill of the men, I ſay nothing againſt them.

JOHN PEPLOW ſworn.

I am ſervant to a publick-houſe in Downing-ſtreet, the two priſoners came into our houſe about half after ſeven on a Monday night, and had a pint of beer.

Court to Proſecutor. Is that the night you mention?—Yes.

Peplow. They ſat down in one of the left-hand boxes, and they pulled a parcel of papers out of their pocket.

Did you obſerve the papers?—No.

Were they in a pocket-book?—No they were looſe.

How long did they ſtay there?—About a quarter of an hour.

Do you know the priſoners?—Yes.

They frequent your houſe?—Yes, after they went away I picked up theſe papers on the Tueſday morning.

But you had other company in your houſe?—Yes.

Who has the papers?—My maſter gave them to Mr. Paterſon.

Is your maſter here?—No.

Can you read?—No.

What was on the papers?—There is on on one of them twenty pounds paid to the brewer, my maſter read them, and one of them is a bill of parcels, I ſaw my maſter give them to Mr. Paterſon.

If you cannot read, how can you be ſure that the papers you delivered to your maſter, he delivered to the proſecutor: Where is your maſter?—He is at home.

JOHN BEST ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoners on the 24th between ſeven and eight.

Court. How came they to be apprehended on the 24th, when the papers were not found till the next morning?—That was when he had the information firſt, I found nothing on them.

Court. There does not ſeem to me to be any evidence to affect the priſoners.

Priſoner's Council. My Lord, here are a great many reſpectable people to appear to their characters if it were neceſſary.

44. THOMAS WESTON and HENRY SOLOMONS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 20th of November laſt, one carcaſs of a ſheep, weight ninety-four pounds, value 20s. the property of William Williams.

I am a butcher, I loſt the carcaſs of a ſheep on the 20th of November at night in Harrow-alley, Whitechapel, from a ſlaughter-houſe, and on Friday morning I was informed by ſome officers that the ſlaughter-houſe was broke open, and that I might ſee the carcaſs and the two priſoners at the watch-houſe, I ſaw my ſheep at the Rotation office on Friday morning.

How do you know that ſheep was yours?—I cannot poſitively ſwear to it, I believe it to be my property, I had ordered ſix ſheep to be killed, and five were left in the ſlaughter-houſe.

Had this carcaſs a head on it when you ſaw it at the Rotation-office?—No.

Then of courſe you can ſpeak nothing againſt the priſoner?——No.

JOHN COLUMBINE ſworn.

I am a watchman of Whitechapel pariſh, as I was going eleven, I ſaw the priſoners come down Buckle-ſtreet, and Weſton had the carcaſs on his back, when he came to the middle of the ſtreet he ſhifted it to Solomon's ſhoulders, I then followed Solomons to the middle of Red Lion-ſtreet, I loſt Weſton inſtantly, I aſked Solomons where he was going with that ſheep, he ſaid to Shoreditch, and that he brought it from his maſter at Leadenhall, but he did not ſay who his maſter was; I took him to the watch-houſe.

FRANCIS RAMSAY ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Williams; on the 20th of laſt month my maſter ordered me to kill three beaſts and ſix ſheep, I did ſo, and left the place about ten, and in the morning between two and three the officer informed my maſter that the ſlaughter-houſe was broke open, I went down and found the windows open, and the carcaſs gone, I ſaw it at the watch-houſe.

Court. Can you ſwear to the carcaſs?——Yes, here is a ſhoulder of it now in Court.

Can you ſwear it is one of the ſheep you killed?—Certainly, Sir, every man has a different mark to the ſheep he kills, my maſter knows this to be my mark, there are nine cuts.

Does no other butcher mark them ſo?—Yes, but there are different ways of marking them, I can ſafely ſwear this is my own mark.

How have you preſerved it from the 20th of November till this time?—By hanging it up in the air, it has never been touched ſince, I cut it off in the Rotation-office, Juſtice Staples deſired it might be kept.

It was marked before it was cut off?—We cannot mark them after they are killed.

Court to Columbine. Was you preſent when this good man cut off that ſhoulder?—I was.

Is that the ſhoulder he cut off?—Yes, I can be upon my oath it is.

Prisoner Solomons's Defence.

This young fellow (Weſton) is innocent; as I was going home between ten and eleven at night, I met a young fellow, and he aſked me to go to Shoreditch, and in Buckle-ſtreet he ſaid he was tired of the ſheep; this other priſoner was not with me, that young fellow that I met, ſaid, follow me, and when he got round the corner I miſſed him, up came the watchman and took me to the watch-houſe.

Court to Columbine. You told me before that the priſoner Weſton parted company with Solomons, and you loſt Weſton; when did you take Weſton after?—I took him out of bed the next morning, I had information where he was.

When Solomons was brought in, our conſtable talked to him, and adviſed him to tell the truth, and he perſiſted that he had it from Leadenhall-market, at laſt he ſaid then I will tell you, then the conſtable took him out, and when he came in again, the conſtable ſaid, you know who it is, I ſaid I judge who it is, that was Weſton, then we went and took him out of bed from behind his mother.

Priſoner Solomons. I never ſaid any ſuch thing.

Priſoner Weſton. I am innocent of the affair.

Mathews. Columbine picked out Weſton from ſeveral priſoners, and ſaid he was the man he had ſeen with Solomons the night before.

Jury to Columbine. Did you know Weſton before?—No, only when I came up as they were ſhifting the carcaſe; I held up the lanthorn to his face, I knew him again next morning.

THOMAS WESTON, }
HENRY SOLOMONS, } GUILTY.

45. JOHN ANDERSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d day of May laſt, one ſilver watch, value 4l. one ſteel chain, value 2s. two ſtone ſeals ſet in metal, value 2s. and one guinea, value 1l. 1s. the property of John Robertſon.

I am a gentleman's ſervant; I live with Doctor Marſhall; I loſt a watch, a chain and ſeals, and a guinea, on or about the 2d of May, but I am not poſitive; I was coming along Fleet-ſtreet, about four o'clock in the afternoon, and the priſoner came up to me, it was a pretty warm day, and the priſoner ſaid it was not ſo warm in his country, I looked round at him and he ſaid he came from Scotland, and on ſaying theſe words he looked down on the pavement, and picked up a green ſilk purſe; he ſaid, here is ſomething; I aſked him what was in it, he ſaid, he ſuppoſed it was bank notes, as he felt ſomething ſoft, he ſaid, I had a right to part of it, or he would give me part of it, and he propoſed to go to the other ſide of the way to ſee what was in it, for he ſaid, if we opened it in the ſtreet ſome perſon would come and own it, and we went into a houſe at the end of Chancery-lane; on opening the purſe there was this ring, and a receipt for a gold diamond ring from one Mr. Smith, a Jeweller in London, for two hundred and twenty-ſeven pounds eighteen ſhillings and ſix-pence. (The ring and purſe ſhewn to the Court.) Then another young man came in, and the priſoner aſked him to read the receipt; he ſaid he would; he ſaid he was a clerk to Mr. Drummond, of Charing-Croſs, the Banker: I never had the receipt, the priſoner kept it: the young man aſked the priſoner where he found it, the priſoner ſaid he found it juſt now, the other young man told me after reading the receipt, I need not be afraid of him, for he was a clerk; the priſoner ſaid he would give money for my part, for he had a friend going to the Eaſt Indies, and it would be of more ſervice to him, and he would leave the ring with the other gentleman, the pretended clerk, while he went to ſeek his friend; he went, and returned, and ſaid his friend was not at home: the pretended clerk ſaid, it was dangerous to let him go away, for there were a great many ſharpers about London: as the priſoner ſaid he would call again, the clerk ſaid, there was ſo many ſharpers about, it was not ſafe to let him go away with it, ſo I gave him my watch and a guinea, and he left me the ring.

Did you ever get your watch again?—No, but it is here.

When was the priſoner taken up?—I think it was the 28th of October: I found him coming along the Strand; he came and beckoned to me as if he wanted to make an acquaintance of me; I thought I knew him, I held him and kept him faſt, and carried him to the Juſtice.

Mr. Chetwood of Council for the Priſoner. My Lord, this is an indictment for a felony; I humbly ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that on the part of the proſecutor there was an agreement entered into; the proſecutor left the watch in the hands of the priſoner, and the purſe was put into the hands of the proſecutor, and therefore if there was any depoſit whatever, either on one ſide or the other, I ſhould humbly apprehend that it is not a felony, but a contract.

Court. I remember ſuch a caſe here at the Old Bailey; I am trying to recollect the particulars.

Mr. Chetwood. My Lord, there was a caſe where the man was convicted, but that was for ſnatching money.

WILLIAM COLLIER ſworn.

—There was a gentleman came on Monday morning to me, and he ſaid he would deliver the property, as the proſecutor was a lodger of mine, if the man could be ſet at liberty.

Court. That is nothing at all.

SARAH NORRIS ſworn.

I keep a publick houſe in Ruſſel-court, and three ſtrangers came in with the laſt witneſs, they aſked me to take hold of the watch and the guinea till they came back again, they ſaid it was no harm.

Court. Then the whole of this charge reſts upon the evidence of the proſecutor.

Mr. Chetwood. Did you pick up the purſe, or did the priſoner find it?—The priſoner found it.

You ſaw him pick it up?—I did.

Could you read?—Yes.

It ſeems the priſoner could not?—I do not know.

How was the bargain made between you, about who ſhould have the ring?—Anderſon ſaid, he would not take the money for his part of the ring, but he would give me the money for my part.

Did you ſettle upon any price that he was to pay?—The half of the receipt.

Who had the ring?—I had it, I gave him my watch and a guinea, till his friend came home, and he was to call by ſeven o'clock with the money.

Court. Has Mr. Norris the watch and guinea now?—Yes.

Court. Give them to the proſecutor.

Court to Proſecutor. Now in the firſt place put that watch and guinea in your pocket.

Mr. Chetwood to Proſecutor. Upon your oath was it the priſoner or the banker's clerk, that you gave your watch to?—I cannot ſay I gave it to the priſoner, but he took it out of the houſe.

You did not give it to him?—I cannot ſay I recollect.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury. This priſoner, John Anderſon, is indicted for ſtealing this watch and a guinea, and the proſecutor luckily for public juſtice was too wiſe to accept the watch and guinea again, but has brought the priſoner before you. This is what is vulgarly called a ſwindling tranſaction; an evident ſharper who makes it his buſineſs to pick up unwary countrymen of this kind, to impoſe on them in this manner by ſo groſs a fraud: It has happened to myſelf ſince I have had the honour of ſitting here, to try two or three of theſe people, but not exactly under the ſame circumſtances; two I think, I tried, and they were both convicted, but the circumſtances were different from this; however, I have talked with the Recorder, and alſo with Mr. Reynolds and Mr. Sheldon, who are extremely converſant in the buſineſs here, and they concur with me, that there have been caſes of this kind where priſoners have been convicted of a felony: And it has been determined by the Judges, that a man ſhall not under a pretence and guiſe of fraud, be enabled to plunder an innocent man, and they have gone to the bottom, to the true ſound principle to guide them by, they have enquired why, with what view was it, that all this was done, and as in this caſe, for what was it that this man produced this ring, for what was it that he ſaid, he would go to his friend and get money for this ring, for what purpoſe was all that done, but to obtain from this proſecutor the watch and the guinea; if the intention was fair, if in truth there was ſuch a friend, then it would be a fair tranſaction, a fooliſh one on both ſides, but a fair one. But it is to be left to you gentlemen of the Jury, whether under all the circumſtances of the caſe you believe the whole to be a fraud and impoſition on the proſecutor, and if you do, you will then conſider what was the intention of the priſoner in holding this diſcourſe, and in the whole tranſaction; whether it was with intent to get into his poſſeſſion the watch and guinea, never intending to reſtore them: And if ſo, of courſe then you will conclude that he intended feloniouſly to obtain the watch and guinea: If a man hires a horſe and rides away with it, it is felony: So here, if this man got poſſeſſion of the watch and money by this pretence, with intention either to ſell the watch or convert it to his own uſe, it is a felonious intent. If you ſuppoſe the tranſaction was a fair one, and that the priſoner had ſuch a friend, in that caſe to be ſure you will acquit him; but if you think his intention was felonious in obtaining this watch and the guinea, in that caſe you will find him guilty of the charge in the indictment.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

46. SAMUEL NEWTON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th of November, one mare of a bay colour, price 40s. the property of Edward Watſon.

I live at Lambeth, I loſt a bay poney mare, on the 28th of November, between four and five o'clock, from Mr. Riley's in Queen-ſtreet, I had ſome buſineſs at Mr. Riley's, and I left her with a poor man that was begging in the ſtreet, his name is John Hinde; I ſtaid about an hour, and I went out to ſee if the man was with the horſe, he was, I ſaid take care of my horſe, I ſhall return preſently; about half an hour after, when I wanted to go away, I could find neither man nor mare, Mr. Riley ſent his porter to ſee after him, and I went down to the green-yard at the Talbot Inn in the Strand, where they take in ſtray horſes; I found the mare there without a ſaddle, and I afterwards found the poor man, Hinde, in a court in Drury Lane, I took him into cuſtody; this was about two hours and a half after, we took him to the Round Houſe, he ſaid, he was innocent, a man came up to him at Mr. Riley's door and made a pretence to go in at the door, and came out again, and ſaid, how long have you had my maſter's horſe, ſays he, about an hour and a half, ſays he, poor fellow! he has ſtood a long while at the door, my maſter has ſent you out threepence halfpenny, I ſhall put him in the ſtable, the priſoner then took him from him, and took away the ſaddle, and took him to the Green-yard, we lodged this poor man in Covent Garden Round Houſe, and I went with the conſtable to the Green-yard, the man left it in the name of Samuel Newton, No. 4, in Leiceſter-ſtreet, we went there, and no ſuch perſon lived there, we went into the watering-houſe, and heard of him in Hedge Lane, at a bawdy houſe, we went there and took him into cuſtody; when we came to Bow-ſtreet, the ſame man pointed the priſoner out directly.

Did you ever get your ſaddle again?—After I was bound over to proſecute, and the man went back to the Brown Bear, I aſked him what was the reaſon he would not let me know where my ſaddle was, that I might have no further trouble about it, I ſaid, I muſt proſecute you, and I ſhall go to the ſeverity of the law; the priſoner ſaid, if you will be tender with me, you ſhall have your ſaddle at ſeven o'clock to night preciſely; and at ſeven at night, it was ſent home.

The gentleman gave me his horſe to hold at the Freemaſons Tavern in Queen-ſtreet, the priſoner came out and aſked me how long I had been there, I ſaid an hour and a half.

Did you ſee him go in the tavern?——Yes, about five minutes before, it was about half paſt ſix, it was dark, then he ſaid here is three-pence halfpenny, that is all my maſter ordered me to give you, ſays he, I am going to take the horſe to the ſtable; the halfpence were all bad; I let him have the horſe, and went to my lodging, that is the man; the ſaddle was ſafe upon the mare when he took it, it was a bay mare, a white ſtar on the forehead, and a ſhort tail.

A poney?—Yes.

Court to Watſon. Had your mare a white ſtar and ſhort tail?—A nag tail and white ſtar.

Hinde. I went to my lodging, and they came and took me, I gave the beſt deſcription of the priſoner I could, I ſhould know him among a hundred; I pointed him out directly.

Priſoner. I never gave the man a halfpenny in my life.

Hinde. He aſked me if I was a ſea-faring man, I told him, yes, then ſays he, I know you can chew tobacco, here is another halfpenny for you.

JOHN MACKLAND ſworn.

On Friday the 28th of November, a perſon brought a little poney (a mare) to the Talbot Inn in the Strand, I aſked him his name, he ſaid, it was Samuel Newton, it was dark, rather nearer eight o'clock then ſeven at night, I aſked him where he lived, he ſaid, No. 4, Leiceſter-ſtreet, Leiceſter-fields; and the proſecutor came to enquire for a ſtray horſe, and I told him there was one with a bridle but not a ſaddle, he ſaid, the mare and bridle were his.

Is that the man that brought the mare? I believe it is the ſame man.

Did you ever ſee him before?—Never before that I know off.

Do you think that was the ſame man?—I am not poſitive, but I think it is the ſame man.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I had been to Smithfield laſt Friday was fortnight, and ſold a horſe, and coming home, I ſaw this horſe about the top of GreatQueen-ſtreet looſe, I laid hold of the horſe, and took home the ſaddle for ſafe cuſtody, and took the horſe to the Green-yard, I told the proſecutor I would ſend the ſaddle home to the Green-yard, ſays he to me, if you ſend the ſaddle home I would not wiſh to hurt any young man; I did not take the horſe with any intent to ſteal it, if I had, I ſhould not have taken it to the Green-yard.

Mr. Juſtice Willes to Mackland. What did he ſay when he brought her?—I aſked him where he found her, he ſaid, near Queen-ſtreet.

Did he bring her to you to take care of? —He brought her to me as a ſtray.

Then he could not have had the mare again from you?—No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. That puts quite a different complexion on the buſineſs.

Mr. Baron Hotham. Gentlemen of the Jury, he certainly could not get the mare again, but I ſee the tranſaction in this light, that his object was not to keep the mare, but to get the ſaddle to ſell, and to get the ſhilling from the Talbot Inn.

Mr. Juſtice Willes. He is not indicted for ſtealing the ſaddle, but for ſtealing the mare.

Mr. Baron Hotham. This is not a common caſe of horſe ſtealing, it is more of a ſwindling buſineſs: If you have any doubts about it, of courſe you will acquit the priſoner.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

47. MICHAEL YOUNG was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 3d of December, inſtant, three piſtols mounted with ſilver, value forty ſhillings, the property of William Galloway.

SARAH GALLOWAY ſworn.

The priſoner and another man came into my houſe the 3d of this month, they were both in ſailors clothes: I keep a little ſhop, theſe piſtols lay juſt within the door; the priſoner whipped up three piſtols, and ſwore an oath, and ſaid they were pretty piſtols; the priſoner ran away with them, I after him, and held him, the other made off; the priſoner gave me a punch and blaſted me, and ſaid, what did I want; he had the piſtols under his arm, and I got ſome neighbours around me, and I took them away. I ſent for a conſtable, and the priſoner threatened my life and my huſband's; ~~he blaſted and bugger'd us, and he was~~ committed.

ELIZABETH WRIGHT ſworn.

I live in the proſecutor's houſe, I was on the ſtairs, and I ſaw the priſoner take the piſtols and conceal them under his arm, and run off with them, and I ſaw the piſtols taken from under the priſoner's arm, under his jacket.

(The piſtols depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Going along Tower-hill, I met with a gentleman at a public-houſe there, he came from the Iſland of Guernſey, he aſked me to drink, he ſaid he would buy a pair of piſtols; and he ſaid, as I was in the army I might be a judge. We went into this woman's ſhop, there was no body elſe in the ſhop, ſhe aſked two guineas; I told her to go along with me, and ſhe went between thirty and forty yards; ſays ſhe, young man I can go no further, then I came back with her and laid the piſtols on the counter; and there was another young fellow in the ſhop dreſſed in ſailors clothes, ſhe ſearched me, and found nothing.

GUILTY.

49. WILLIAM HALL, otherwiſe HALLEY, was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 28th of November laſt, one deal box, value 6d. three linen ſhifts, value 25s. ſix pair of white ſtockings, value 6s. one dimity gown, trimmed with muſlin, value 10s. two womens linen riding ſhirts, value 10s. two womens riding waiſtcoats, value 10s. two linen handkerchiefs, value 2s. one deal box, value 12d. two worked muſlin aprons, value 10s. one plain lawn apron, value 4s. one plain muſlin ſhort apron, value 3s. two tambour muſlin gowns, value 20s. one printed muſlin gown, value 10s. one ſattin gown, value 10s. one white ſarcenet cloak, value 10s. two yards of white ſtriped gauze, value 10s. a pink ſilk petticoat, value 10s. two muſlin neck handkerchiefs, value 4s. two muſlin night caps, value 2s. one ſilver tiſſue pocket-book, value 12d. one leather pocket-book, value 2d. one baſe metal handkerchief ſlider, value 6d. the property of Mary Ann Hardcaſtle, ſpinſter.

And JOHN FIELD was indicted for receiving the ſame goods, knowing them to be ſtolen.

MARY ANN HARDCASTLE ſworn.

I am governeſs to Mr. Goſling's daughters; the family live in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and their country houſe is at Langley, in Bucks, I packed up my box on the 27th of November, I never ſaw the box afterwards, 'till I ſaw it in Hall's lodging, the houſekeeper who is here ſaw them packed up.

MARY CARTWRIGHT ſworn.

I am houſekeeper to Mr. Goſling, theſe boxes were packed up at Langley, and directed to Mr. Goſling, they were ſent by Thomas Webb the carrier; I ſaw them put on the waggon.

THOMAS WEBB ſworn.

I am the Langley Carrier, I took theſe boxes to bring them to town, I left an empty hamper at Knight's Bridge, and a woman at Hyde-park Corner; and when I came to the Running Horſe, juſt below Park-lane, I miſſed two boxes, the tilt was tore, and the ſkewers taken out; I had a great many other perſons goods; there were two trunks taken out; this is one of the boxes that was loſt, the other was much larger and heavier.

Court to Webb. Where were thoſe two trunks and boxes?—In the middle of the waggon.

Could they get out?—Not without the waggon was overturned, and then they could not.

Do you apprehend the things were loſt out of the waggon after the woman got out, or before?—I think after; ſhe ſat juſt againſt them, they were cut out of the ſide of the waggon.

I went by information to the priſoner Field's houſe, No. 7, Park-lane, on this day week, between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning, Hall lodged with Field up-ſtairs, but there was nothing found in his room. When we went to the houſe I met a woman, which I thought was Mrs. Field, and I aſked her if one Hall lodged there, ſhe ſaid he was down in the kitchen; ſhe called Hall, and ſomebody anſwered, I went down, and found the priſoner Hall; he looked at me, and ſaid, I ſuppoſe you came after this box; I did not know what he meant by that; I ſaid, yes, I am come after the box, where is it? he ſaid, it is up ſtairs; ſays I, have you made away with any of the things? no, he ſaid he had not, the things were all ſafe. When we had got up ſtairs, ſome of Mr. Goſling's people came up; the trunk was in Field's bed-chamber; then Hall and I went into Field's room and Mrs. Hardcaſtle looked at the box and found it was locked, and ſhe pulled out a key and unlocked it after ſome difficulty; there were ſome things in it, but ſhe miſſed ſeveral things; I turned round to Hall, and ſaid, did not you tell me the things were all ſafe? Oh! ſaid he, they are all to be found; and he went down into the kitchen were I found him firſt, and I went down with him, and he pulled the things that are in this handkerchief out of the drawers; they were brought up and ſhewn to Mrs. Hardcaſtle, and ſhe ſaid there were ſtill ſome more things wanting; then Hall ſaid, there was an apron and ſome ſort of a locket or thing that ladies wear about their neck; he ſaid he had ſold them: he ſaid, the trunk was found at the end of Park-lane, going into Picadilly: Field was not at home; he came home while ſhe was there, I ſtopped him; there was a good many of the things wanting; ſo Hall ſaid to Field, your wife has taken ſome of the things out here; he ſaid, he did not know any thing at all of it; ſays he, damn your things; if my wife has got any of them you muſt have them; I will break the drawers open and you ſhall have them; then he took ſome keys that we had tried before, and could not open the drawers, but he got them open; I believe he ſent for ſome keys, but he opened three drawers which we could not get open.

Did he open the drawers with thoſe keys or with any other keys?—I do not know, I believe the keys lay on the eſcrutore; and all the things that are in this white handkerchief were found in the drawers; Mrs. Hardcaſtle and Mrs. Cartwright were preſent all the time.

(The things depoſed to.)

Mr. Chetworth Council for the Priſoners. Field was not at home?—No.

I believe he came in from his work; had not he a pail in his hand?—He had two pails.

Did Field appear to you, from the obſervation you made when he came in, to have any knowledge of the things being in his houſe?—I cannot think he could miſs ſeeing this box, becauſe it ſtood by the bed ſide; but from his conduct I had every reaſon to think he did not know the things were in his drawers.

I believe the Juſtice was of the ſame opinion?—I believe every body has a good opinion of him.

Did not Hall ſay to him theſe words, I believe your wife has ſome of the things in her drawers?—I believe he did.

Did not he take up a poker to break open the drawers, and was perſuaded not?——I believe he did.

You enquired after him?—Yes.

What character did you learn of him?—A hardworking honeſt man.

Mrs. Hardcaſtle. There were keys found on the top of the drawers; Macmanus opened ſome of the drawers; there were two drawers that could not be opened till Field came, he opened one with a key, the other he could not open; Macmanus ſaid, they muſt be opened, there is a poker; Field immediately took the poker and attempted to open the drawers; he ſeemed very concerned and very much ſurprized when my things were found in his poſſeſſion: I had ſeveral letters in my box, ſome directed at me at Mr. Goſling's, Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and ſome in the country. I had a large parcel of manuſcripts, poetry, and bills and receipts, and many things that I valued very much, and Hall had burnt them the night before: the gentleman went down into the kitchen and found ſeveral ſcraps of my papers half burnt; I had likewiſe a common leather memorandum book which Hall ſold for two-pence with the papers that were in it which I valued exceedingly: I had likewiſe a very large parcel of poetry; Hall afterwards, when I aſked him why he burnt them, ſaid, for fear of leading to a diſcovery, becauſe he meant to ſell my clothes.

Court. Was there any promiſe made him to induce him to ſay this?—None in the world.

PRISONER HALL's DEFENCE.

I ſaw ſomething lying in Piccadilly, I did not know what it was; my landlady lent me the key; it contained woman's apparel, I never found it advertized; there was advertized a trunk and box: I got it honeſtly and I had ſold two or three of the things out of it, which I redeemed with my own money; the things were found in my landlady's drawers unknown to me; nobody can ſay a wrong word of me.

PRISONER FIELD's DEFENCE.

I came in doors about eight o'clock in the morning; the lady was there in the room, I ſtept in and ſaid what is the matter; ſays they, here is ſo and ſo; I ſaid, if there is any thing belonging to you, I will take the poker and wrench the locks open, I will be damned if I do not; I went to do it: Macmanus ſaid get the key: I went right acroſs the way, and my daughter had the key; ſays I, why do not you give me the key, what do you keep me in this purgatory for: I am innocent of the thing as a child unborn.

The Priſoner Hall called ſix Witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

The Priſoner Field called four Witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

50. CHARLES BIGGS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 3d of November laſt, one deal box, value 2s. one linen ſhirt, value 2s. two linen waiſtcoats, value 4s. one pair of nankeen breeches, value 5s. one ſtone ſtock buckle ſet in ſilver, value 12d. ſix guineas, value 6l. 6s. and 3s. 6d. in monies numbered, the property of William Bryant.

I am ſervant to Mr. Stackpoole, in Groſvenor-place: on the 3d of November, I ſaw the priſoner in my maſter's ſervants hall, with a deal box in his hands, it was between one and two, there was nobody in the hall but himſelf till I came in; he had the box in both his hands, and the door was open to the area; I came down ſtairs with a baſon in my hand, I had been dreſſing Mr. Stackpool; I happened to ſtep into the ſervants hall, and there I ſaw the priſoner with the box in his hands, he was looking towards the area, and I ſaw another ill looking fellow looking through the rails at him: I took him by the collar; the box was my property; it was in the ſervants hall, in a clothes preſs, that was the uſual place for it to ſtand in: the box contained the things mentioned in the indictment; and ſeveral other articles too numerous for me to mention.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went down into the area, and I knocked at the door, and I aſked if one Mr. Wright lived there, and the footman ſaid no; he aſked me what buſineſs I had there, and ſaid I had hold of the box; I had not hold of the box; he would not ſay ſo before the Juſtice for ever ſo long; he only ſaid he believed it.

Court to Bryant. How is that?—I ſaid that I took him by the collar with it in both his hands: I look upon it that if I had been one minute later, I ſhould have loſt my box and my property.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

51. ELIZABETH CUMBERBEGE NORRIS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 12th of November laſt, eight linen caps, value 2s. one pair of ſleeves, value 1s. one handkerchief, value 6d. two pillow caſes, value 1s. and one flannel petticoat, value 1s. the property of John Simcock.

The Proſecutor not appearing the Priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

---

52. The ſaid ELIZABETH CUMBERBEGE NORRIS was again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th of November laſt, a ſilver top of a caſtor, value 10d. a ſilk cloak, value 10s. three ſtocks, value 2s. a linen handkerchief, value 1s. two neckcloths, value 5s. a ſilk bonnet, value 5s. and a pair of pattens, value 6d. the property of William Blakemore.

SARAH BLAKEMORE ſworn.

I am wife to William Blakemore; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; I miſſed them on the 16th of November, about eleven o'clock they were in my apartment; I ſaw them on the 15th; I found them again; nobody was with me but the priſoner; I took her in, as ſhe had lived with a relation of mine, becauſe ſhe was in diſtreſs, with intent to have got her another place: ſhe ſlept with me four nights; ſhe pledged ſome of my things on the 14th, and on the 15th, and on the 16th, ſhe ſaid ſhe was going for ſome clean clothes, ſhe begged I would not go out that day; ſhe took the pattens off the window and went down ſtairs; the ſilver top was found in the man's houſe, where her box was lodged.

WILLIAM READ ſworn.

I found theſe two ſtocks under her ſtays; I ſearched her in the houſe where her box was, in Red-lyon-ſtreet; it was the 15th of November; ſhe owned the box to be hers; I aſked her for the key of the box; theſe things I found upon her.

(The cloak and two ſtocks depoſed to.)

I am a pawnbroker, I have a bonnet, a handkerchief, and two neckcloths, which I received of the priſoner on the 14th and the 15th of November, in the name of Elizabeth Norris, I lent three ſhillings on the bonnet, two ſhillings on the two neckcloths, and eighteen-pence on the handkerchief; ſhe ſaid, ſhe brought them for her miſtreſs.

PHEBE IVES ſworn.

I lived ſix weeks fellow-ſervant with that young woman, on the 16th of November, ſhe came to me in the afternoon, and aſked me to go and take a walk which I objected to, ſhe aked me why, I told her I had never a cloak to put on, ſhe had two cloaks on, ſhe lent me this cloak, I know it by the cut of the lace, which I told the Juſtice, ſhe went with me to drink tea, we ſtaid ſome time, ſhe ſaid, ſhe lived in Covent Garden, and if ſhe did not go home before eight, ſhe ſhould be locked out, I told her it was ten then, and ſhe went home and ſlept with me and the woman I ſlept with, becauſe ſhe ſaid ſhe ſhould be locked out of her lodgings.

Court to Mr. Blakemore. Where do you live?—In upper Marybone-ſtreet.

PRISONER'S DEFENCE.

When I lived at the Star in Lincoln's-inn-fields, Mrs Blakemore came to our houſe, and ſaid, what a pity it was we two girls ſhould live at a public houſe, ſhe ſaid, ſhe could help us to a place, I went to be with her, and I had not been there above a day or two before ſhe ſent me to pawn a linen gown in her name, and there was a young man boarded with her, and ſome of the money ſhe gave him, and ſome ſhe put into her pocket, a night or two after ſhe ſent me to pawn the bonnet, and bid me pawn it in my own name; on the ſunday ſhe ſent me to pawn the cloak, I told her they were all ſhut up, ſhe ſaid, there was plenty of common pawnbrokers open, and ſhe beat me, I went to a perſon that I knew, and ſhe ſaid, I was to blame if I returned, Mrs. Blakemore ſaid, ſhe would hang me if it was only for the ſake of a little money.

Phebe Ives. I heard her ſay nothing.

Court to Mrs. Blakemore. Did you ever ſend her to pawn any thing?—Never in my life.

GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labor ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

53. GEORGE HOLLIDAY and ALEXANDER HASEMAN were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th day of November laſt, twelve buſhels of coals, value 10s. the property of John Nicholls.

(Stephen Weſt who was admitted to bail by the Juſtice on a charge of receiving the above, was called into Court on his recognizance, and not appearing the recognizance was ordered to be eſtreated.)

I am watchman at New Brentford; between three and four o'clock in the morning of the 11th of November, I ſaw the priſoner Holliday come in with a boat up the Creek; I was on duty, he had in the boat ſome empty ſacks, he got out of the boat and got into a barge of coals belonging to John Nicholls, I worked for Nicholls; I ſtopped and let him ſtay in the barge ſome time, and then I hallooed to him, and called him by his name; I aſked him if he meant to get the barge of coals in as ſoon as ſhe was afloat, and he told me yes; when the clock ſtruck four, I went and cried the hour and came back again; and I ſaw the priſoner Holliday and the priſoner Haſeman in the barge with him; I had not ſeen him there before; ſeeing them ſo buſy, I went up and called Mr. Nicholls's foreman, Stephen Collins, that was between four and five: Collins came with me, and we ſaw them fill a ſack and put into a boat: Then we went to them, and ſaw they had filled five ſacks: They were put into a boat.

How many buſhels might they contain?—Twelve buſhels when we came to meaſure them.

What may be the value of that?—Ten ſhillings.

What did they ſay for themſelves?—I ſaid nothing to them; Holliday got into his boat and puſhed the boat off to another Creek.

How can you tell there were five ſacks filled?—We purſued them directly, and found 5 ſacks, Haſeman was left in his barge to get it in, he was the bargeman; Haſeman is a ſervant or apprentice to Holliday. We went down to the key, and expected them to come in there, and Haſeman came down and looked round the water-ſide, and gave Holliday a ſignal not to come in: Haſeman went away, and preſently came again; and I took him; I aſked him for Holliday, and he told me he was gone down to the Three Swans to Stephen Weſt's; then it was about five: We were going down there and we met Holliday, I ſtopped him and took him into cuſtody; then it was half after five: Soon after when I had locked them in the cage, I aſked him what he had done with the coals, he ſaid, he had taken them to Stephen Weſt's; I came juſt by the Three Swans, and Weſt was walking backwards and forwards, I went down the ſtairs immediately, and there was Weſt's back door open, and a candle burning, and there were five ſacks of coals lay juſt by on his premiſes.

What reaſon have you to think theſe were the coals taken out of Mr. Nicholls's barge?—I am ſure they were, becauſe I ſaw him take them out.

Did you meaſure the quantity of coals you found at Weſt's?—Yes.

How many buſhels?—Twelve buſhels.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. It was not light?—It was full-moon. I was ſix or eight yards off.

Then they might ſee you as well as you ſee them?—Yes.

You could not ſee where the boat went to?—No.

STEPHEN COLLINS ſworn.

I am foreman to the proſecutor, on the 11th of November, the watchman called on me, and I went with him, and ſaw the two priſoners fill a ſack of coals out of my maſter's barge; their boat lay alongſide the barge, I ſaid nothing to them; I only ſaw them fill one ſack, they put it into the boat, I could not ſee how many ſacks were in the boat, becauſe it was by the ſide of the barge: Holliday rowed away, I ſaw at Weſt's five ſacks of coals about three quarters of an hour after.

Should you know the boat that Holliday was in from another boat?—I do not know that I ſhould.

Mr. Sylveſter. Have not you declared that it was ſo dark you could not ſee this?—No.

Only that you knew the men by their voices?—I know them by their voices, It was as light as day.

Do you know James Lands?—Yes, he is a brother watchman, I never declared I did not know them.

PRISONER HOLLIDAY'S DEFENCE.

I lent this man a hand up the Creek with the barge, and he went and treated me with two pots of beer, he went aboard his barge and I went home.

PRISONER HASEMAN'S DEFENCE.

This man lent me a hand up the Creek, and afterwards I treated him with two pots of beer, then I went aboard and he went home.

FOR THE PRISONERS.

I am a brother watchman with Richards.

Did he at any time declare to you it was ſo dark he could not ſee the people in the barge?—It was moon-light, but it was cloudy, one could not ſee a great way.

What did Richards ſay to you about it?—No otherwiſe than that there were three people filling out coals, and he ſaw them fill out a ſack.

Did he ſay he knew one of them or not?—He mentioned the name of one Holliday.

Did he ſay how he knew them?——By their ſpeech.

Did he ſay whether he ſaw their perſons or not?—I did not hear him ſay ſo.

Could he ſee from his ſtand to the barge?—Not to tell who they were particularly I think.

The Priſoner Holliday called two Witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GEORGE HOLLIDAY, GUILTY,

To be confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

ALEXANDER HASEMAN, GUILTY,

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

54. JAMES CHERRICK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt of November laſt, ten yards of black ſilk lace, value 30s. the property of Thomas Hilliard, privily from his ſhop.

ANN HILLIARD ſworn.

I am wife of Thomas Hilliard in Great Ruſſel-ſtreet, I keep a milliner's ſhop; on Saturday night the 1ſt of November, I was was ſerving in the ſhop behind my counter, and I ſaw ſomebody at the door catch out ſomething, immediately I ſaw a boy take the card of lace from the window, I immediately ran, and a neighbour of mine that is in Court ſaid, that is the boy that has got your lace; I then followed him, there were five of them in a gang.

Court. Did you ſee the boy at the time he took your lace, ſo as to know him again?—Yes, they were there near an hour, five in a gang, he was taken in a minute, I have not found the lace again.

I live next door but one to the proſecutor, I was ſtanding at our door, and I ſaw the priſoner with two more ſauntering about the door, and by and by two more came up to them; and they all ſat down upon the iron rails before the ſhop window; this boy ſat next to the door: It was about nine at night, this boy ſtep, in, takes ſomething with his left-hand out of the window, I could not tell what it was, he gave it to another boy with his right; he then went one way and the other the other: Mrs. Hilliard came out that minute, I ſaid, that is the man that has the property, I am ſure this is the ſame boy.

Court to Mrs. Hilliard. Was there any lace near enough for the boy to get at by putting his hand in?—Yes, all along the window, there were about ten yards on that card that he took: It is valued at thirty ſhillings, but it is of more value.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

Court. How old are you?—Going on eleven.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not privily.

Court. I think in order to break theſe gangs of boys, it is neceſſary to tranſport this boy, young as he is, to America for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

55. ELIZABETH HARRISON and HANNAH CARTER were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th of November laſt, a ſilver watch, value 40s. a pair of ſilver ſhoe-buckles value 20s. a pair of ſilver knee-buckles, value 5s. a ſtone ſtock-buckle ſet in ſilver, value 3s. a ſtone breaſt-buckle ſet in ſilver, value 12d. a ſtone hat-buckle ſet in ſilver, value 6d. a ſilk hat band, value 2d. a ſilk handkerchief, value 1s. and a linen handkerchief, value 2d. the property of John Petty.

JOHN PETTY ſworn.

Laſt Sunday three weeks as I was coming down Iſlington, about 11 or 12 o'clock at night, by the Bank-ſide, I met with one of theſe priſoners, Carter, the corner of a ſtreet, I aſked her if there was any houſe open, as I could not get a lodging, ſhe perſuaded me to go with her, I cannot ſay where ſhe took me to, but I have been ſince informed it was Three Kings Court; ſhe took me to the houſe where ſhe lodged, I treated her with bread and cheeſe and beer and liquors, the other priſoner was in the houſe, and ſhe went and fetched the bread and cheeſe and beer and gin, after that I made an agreement to lay down with her the whole night for half a crown; I undreſſed myſelf, and put my ſhoe buckles and knee buckles in my right hand breeches pocket; the priſoners were both in the room, ſhe lay down ſome time after, I cannot juſtly ſay when, my watch was alſo in my pocket, my breaſt buckle was in my left hand breeches pocket, my ſtock buckle was in my black velvet ſtock, in my coat pocket, the buckle was taken out and the ſtock left, and a red ſilk handkerchief with croſs bars, and a white handkerchief were in my coat pocket; I fell aſleep, and when I awaked the two priſoners were gone.

Where was the priſoner Harriſon when you fell aſleep?—To the beſt of my remembrance ſhe lay down by the ſide of me.

Was you quite ſober?—I was not ſober, but I was not any ways in liquor.

Are you ſure that the other priſoner was in the room at all, when you went to ſleep. Yes.

Was there a light in the room when you went to ſleep.—Yes, and when I awaked: I awoke about one or two, and my things were all gone. I am ſure theſe things were all in my pocket when I went to bed; I immediately went to the watchman and the officer of the night, but every thing was gone.

JOSEPH HAWES ſworn.

I found part of the property upon Harriſon, I took the priſoner in White-croſs-ſtreet, in a houſe; I found this pair of ſhoe buckles, and this pair of knee buckles, and this ſhirt buckle and ſtock buckle, and a band, and this linen handkerchief upon Harriſon, the other witneſs found the other property upon the other, they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

JOHN GREEN ſworn.

I found this watch and this ſtock buckle upon the priſoner Carter.

JOHN MAXEY ſworn.

I am a watchman, the proſecutor came to me, and I was preſent when the property was found, it was found upon theſe two priſoners.

PRISONER CARTER's DEFENCE.

About 11 o'clock I went to the Fleet-Market to an acquaintance, to have ſome ſupper; coming home about half after, I met the proſecutor, he aſked me the way to Dock-head, I told him it was a great way from thence; it was in Cheapſide I met him, I told him he might go home with me if he choſe it, he came home with me, and he ſent for ſome bread and cheeſe and a pot of beer; he was very much in liquor, at laſt he went to bed, and he gave me ſome things to take care of till he awaked, and he ſaid if I took care of them till the morning he would make me a handſome preſent.

Court. How came you to go away with them then?—I only went into the ſame ſtreet to a public houſe to get a drop of purl to warm me; before I came back that gentleman waked, and was out in the ſtreet, I have not a friend in London.

PRISONER HARRISON'S DEFENCE.

I was not in the houſe when the man came in, I called for ſome cloth I had left in her room, I fetched two pots of beer and went home, I could not get in; coming back again, I did not like to come to her houſe, and went into this public houſe where ſhe was drinking; I had a pint of purl by myſelf, ſhe was much in liquor, ſhe ſaid, I wiſh you would go home with me, and take care of theſe things, for if the man ſhould wake, he will think I am gone off with them; ſhe gave me theſe things for fear ſhe ſhould loſe them. Carter was very much in liquor.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you give this woman the things to take care of?—No, not in the leaſt.

Court to Hawes. Where were theſe women when you firſt found them?—At the ſign of the Ship, in White-croſs-ſtreet, about three or four hundred yards from where they live.

What were they doing when you firſt ſaw them?—They were drinking.

Not coming away that you ſaw?—No, I aſked the priſoner where the man's property was when I laid hold of her; ſhe ſaid, ſhe had no property but what was her own.

ELIZABETH HARRISON, } GUILTY.
HANNAH CARTER, }

To be both privately whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

56. ROBERT DEWAR, otherwiſe DEWARS, otherwiſe DEEWAR, was indicted, for that he, on the 25th of July laſt, did falſly and feloniouſly make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſely made, forged, and counterfeited a certain will and teſtament, partly printed, and partly written, purporting to be the laſt will and teſtament of Shaw Ferguſſoon, deviſing to his brother, John Ferguſſoon, all his wages, and appointing him executor; and which ſaid forged will was dated the 22d of July, 1780, with intention to defraud our Sovereign Lord the King. A ſecond count for uttering the ſame with the like intention. A third and fourth counts the ſame as the firſt and ſecond, with intention to defraud Iſaac Barre, Eſq. And a fifth and ſixth counts, with intention to defraud Donald Farquharſon.

Mr. Silweſter of Councel for the Proſecution, thus opened the Caſe.

Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an indictment for the crime of forgery, and before this offence could be carried into effect, the perſon committing it muſt alſo have been guilty of the crime of perjury, for he muſt have ſworn he was the executor under that will, by which means he obtained the probate. Some time ſince, a man of the name of Farquharſon died; the priſoner by ſome means heard, that enquiries were making for his executor, for there was a great deal of wages due to him. That gave the priſoner the idea of ſetting up a will; he immediately went to the Commons, and there produced a will in the name of Shaw Furguſſoon; he then obtained from the Pay Office, at Chatham, twenty-four pounds, ten ſhillings and ſix-pence, as wages due to the deceaſed: but to avoid any enquiry that might be made of him, he then produced a power of attorney, made from the ſaid John Ferguſſoon, to him, Robert Dewar; there he produced the will and the power of attorney, and he actually received the ſum of twenty-four pounds, ten ſhillings and ſix-pence. There was a further ſum of eight pounds, ten ſhillings and ſix-pence due to the deceaſed at the Pay Office, in Broad-ſtreet, for ſerving on board the Charles-town; he there applied to a gentleman of the name of Giles, a navy agent, to receive thoſe wages; Giles received the wages at the Office, but before he had paid it over to the priſoner, a man of the name of Donald Farquharſon applied for the wages really due; he applied and produced letters of adminiſtration taken out to his brother, who died inteſtate. The priſoner when he came to receive the money was detained, and upon enquiry it was found out, that this man died inteſtate, but never had any brother of the name of John. Gentlemen, it will be in proof to you, firſt of all, that the priſoner went to the Commons in the name of John Furguſſoon, and obtained the probate of the will; then he applied to Chatham, in his own name of Robert Dewar, under a power of attorney from that ſuppoſed John Furguſſoon, by which means he received that money; he alſo applied to Mr. Giles, by the name of Dewar, his real name, under that power of attorney. It will alſo be in evidence to you, that Donald Farquharſon is the brother of the deceaſed, that the will is not the hand-writing of the deceaſed, and that he never had a brother of the name of John. Gentlemen, this is a complicated offence, involving in it, not only the crime of forgery, but the aggravated crime of perjury; and if the facts are proved to your ſatiſfaction, I doubt not but you, by your verdict, will find the priſoner guilty of the offence charged againſt him in the indictment.

Court. As the priſoner has no councel, I muſt have the indictment to compare it with the will.

I am a clerk in the Prerogative Office, I produce the original will from the Commons.

Do you know any thing of any probate being granted on that will?—I remember ſearching for it, and entering the name on the calender; Mr. Luſhington's clerk came to me, and I entered it in the book.

To whom was the probate granted?—To the perſon whoſe name is there.

Do you know that perſon?—I do not.

Has that probate been called in?—Yes it has, and revoked by interlocutory decree.

Court. That is no evidence; this goes no further than that the probate of a will of which that is the original, was granted to a man that came with Mr. Luſhington's clerk.

I am clerk to Mr. Luſhington, the priſoner at the bar applied to me about a will, I believe it was the 15th of July, it will appear by the jurata on the will, he applied to me in the name of John Furgurſon, he ſaid he had got a will to prove, I took the will and looked at it, and in the uſual way I wrote the jurata at the back, he ſaid he ſpelt his name Furgurſon.

Did he take the uſual oath?—He did, it was adminiſtered to him by Dr. Ducarrell.

Court. What is the name of the deceaſed on that will?—The name is ſpelt differently, Furgurſoon.

What is the Chriſtian name?—Shaw.

Is that the will that you have in your hand that he produced as the original will?—Yes.

What is wrote on the back?—It is only the deſcription.

Who gave it you?—The priſoner gave it me, except two words that are written by the clerk (reads) "Teſtator Shaw Furgurſoon, alias Farquharſon, alias Furguſſon, was late belonging to his Majeſty's ſhip Roebuck, Charles Town "and Providence, and died 16th April, "1781." Probate has been granted on that will, and has been called in by act of Court.

(The act of Court produced by Mr. Clarkſon.)

Court. Was citation ſerved on the priſoner?—I do not know that it has, but it muſt of courſe.

Court. We cannot take that for granted.

(Reads.) "Farquharſon againſt Dewar."

(This is the certificate of the decree, it is entered ſhort.)

"The parties being called and not ap-"pearing, the Judge on motion of the ad-"vocate, has by his interlocutory decree "confirmed the admonition of Donald Far-"quharſon."——The name being ſpelt ſo very different after the probate had been granted, the brother got adminiſtration in the real name.

Court to Clarkſon. What is that book?—It is a minute book.

Do you afterwards draw up a regular form of the Court's proceedings?—They are afterwards extended, they are regiſtered on large folio paper, and bound up, but this is not entered yet; this is the minute of the ſentence, it is the beſt and only proof we have at preſent.

The will read and compared with the indictment by the Court.

Signed "Shaw Furgurſoon." Signed, ſealed, publiſhed and declared, in the preſence of James Styeels, Robert Dewar. "15th July 1783, John Furguſſoon, brother of the deceaſed, and ſole executor, was duly ſworn, &c. and that the deceaſed died " and Col. Ducarrell. Teſtator Shaw Furguſſoon proved at London, by the oath of John Furguſſoon to whom adminiſtration was granted.

Captain GREGOR FARQUHARSON ſworn.

Court to Mr. Sylveſter. This evidence that you are now enquiring into is not evidence of the forgery, for Shaw Farquharſon might leave this to a brother that is dead; this is confirmatory evidence.

Mr. Sylveſter to Captain Gregor Farquharſon. You are brother to Shaw Farquharſon?——I had a brother on board the Roebuck of the name of Shaw Farquharſon.

What relations beſides yourſelf are living now of that brother?—There is another brother Donald, and a ſiſter.

Did he leave any children ?——Neither wife nor child.

Court. Then he is intitled, if his brother died inteſtate, to a ſhare of his wages as his perſonal repreſentative; the will is an act containing an abſolute bequeſt to John Furguſſoon, and to him alone, and afterwards appointing him ſole executor, he is therefore certainly an intereſted witneſs.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord he ſhall execute a releaſe.

JAMES RUTHERFORD ſworn.

Mr. Sylveſter. Did you know a man of the name of Shaw Farquharſon ?—Yes.

Did you know that Gregor Farquharſon? ——I cannot ſay I did, I knew Shaw Farquharſon, he was a ſervant of mine.

What was his name ?—Shaw Farquharſon.

Do you know his hand-writing ?——I have a letter in my pocket from him.

Have you ſeen him write ?——Yes, many times, he lived a ſervant with me longer than four years, (looks at the will) this is not his hand-writing, I can take upon me to ſay; he went from me to the Roebuck, I have a letter in my pocket from him from Corke on board the Roebuck, he had been a voyage in her and returned again, but whether he went on board again I do not know.

Do you know Donald Ferguſſon ?——I do, he was at my houſe many times.

They were brothers ?——He always called him his brother, I cannot ſay whether they were or not.

Court. Are you pretty clear that is not his hand-writing ?——I am clear about it.

Donald Farquharſon called into Court.

Mr. Sylveſter. Is that the perſon you mean ?——Yes it is, that is the perſon he always called brother.

Do you recollect how he ſpelt his name? ——Yes.

How was it ?——Farquharſon.

Does that reſemble his hand-writing at all ?——Not at all, that name is wrote with a ſmall F, he always uſed a large one.

You think it is not his hand-writing, and has no reſemblance to it ?——I think it is not, I am ſure it is not.

PETER FARQUHARSON ſworn.

You are no relation to Shaw Farquharſon, I believe ?——None.

Did you know the family ?—That brother only.

Did you know Shaw Farquharſon ?—— Perfectly.

Did you know that man Gregor Farquharſon ?—I only ſaw him a few times, I laſt ſaw Shaw Farquharſon at New York on board the Roebuck, between Staten-Iſland and the main land, I have known them go as brothers for ten years.

Have you frequently ſeen him write ?—I have.

Look at that (Looks at the will) ?—No, I cannot think this to be any of his writing.

Is it part his hand-writing ?—None at all as far as I can judge, it is neither ſpelt nor wrote like it.

GEORGE ARNOLD ſworn.

I produce the Roebuck book, it is there ſpelt Shaw Ferguſon.

Is there any other Shaw Ferguſon in the Roebuck book ?—There is no other Shaw Ferguſon of any kind of ſpelling in the Roebuck book.

Court. Have you examined the book thoroughly ?——I have looked every name through with great care, and there is no name of Shaw Ferguſon but that one, there is no name that is like it.

Continuation of the Trial of Robert Dewar.

Jury. Who writes the names in that book?——The Captain's clerk.

JAMES ENGLISH LAWTON ſworn.

This is the Charles Town book, in which he died the 16th of April 1781, the name is Shaw Furgeſon.

What ſhip did he come from?——From the Providence into the Charleſtown.

Arnold. He was diſcharged from the Roebuck to the Providence the 17th of May 1780.

JASPER ALLEN ſworn.

This is the Providence book.

Is there a man named Shaw Ferguſon there?——Yes, it is ſpelt Ferquhoſon, he came from the Roebuck the 23d of May 1780, to the Providence; there is no other Shaw Ferguſon on board the Providence, he was diſcharged the 14th of July 1780, to the Charles Town frigate.

Lawſon. He is entered here the 15th.

I am clerk to the treaſurer of the navy, for paying ſeamens wages at Chatham.

Did you ever ſee the priſoner?—I cannot call to my mind that I have, I have paid ſo many thouſands of pounds ſince, I cannot recollect; a perſon came to the Pay-Office by the name of Robert Dewar.

Court. I cannot admit any evidence of another perſon.

Mr. Sylveſter. Do you know who you paid the money to?—I cannot recollect.

What entry did you make in your book?

Court. The entry is no evidence.

Mr. Fielding. You know the name?

Court. That will not do.

Mr. Fielding. He may ſay what he knows, and that may be carried into evidence as ſtrong as can be by and by.

JOHN GILES ſworn.

I am a navy agent.

Was you applied to at any time by the priſoner?—Yes, I was.

For what?—To receive ſome wages belonging to one Shaw Ferguſon, for the Charles Town.

Had you any converſation with him?—Nothing particular, he only brought the neceſſary papers to receive the wages.

What papers?—The probate of Shaw Ferguſon's will, with the will annexed, and a power made to him by the name of Robert Dewar.

Is that the paper?—I cannot be particular to it, it was a power of attorney to one Robert Dewar; he told me his name was Dewar, and that he had that from John Ferguſon, who was executor to Shaw Ferguſon: I received 8l. 10s. 6d. the firſt time I applied; I hold the money ſtill, becauſe another probate appeared at that time.

Had you ever any converſation with him about the Roebuck?——No, never, only about the Charles-Town.

Court. For what purpoſe did the priſoner apply to you?—To recover for him the wages due to Shaw Ferguſon, of the Charles Town: he ſaid his name was Dewar.

Did you receive thoſe wages for him?—Yes.

Jury. Do you know the perſon of the priſoner?——He is the ſame man that brought the papers to me, I have not the leaſt doubt of it; I am very ſure of it.

Did you ever ſee him before?—No.

GEGORY FARQUHARSON ſworn.

(A releaſe was produced to the Adminiſtrator in order to qualify him for a Witneſs.)

Court. Have you received any promiſe from Donald Farquharſon to give you the releaſe back again, after the tryal is over?—None at all.

Or to pay you the ſhare notwithſtanding?—None at all, nor would I take it.

Mr. Sylveſter. What other brothers have you?—This is the only brother now alive; there were many brothers, but they are all dead in the ſervice.

Have you any one of the name of John?—None, that ever came to maturity; I recollect one that died an infant.

Look at the will; is that at all like your brother's hand writing?—It is not at all.

Do you know of his being on board the other ſhip as well as the Roebuck?—Yes, he wrote to me.

Court. You muſt not tell us what he wrote.

Court to Mr. Sylveſter. You ſhould identify that power of attorney; how came it into your hands.

Giles. I delivered the power of attorney to Donald.

Court. Look at it.—That is the ſame ſigning.

Look at the witneſſes?—I think to the beſt of my knowledge, it is the ſame paper: I believe it to be the ſame from my inſpection of it at the time.

Court. You cannot, to be ſure, upon memory, undertake to ſwear poſitively that it is the ſame, but you believe this to be the ſame?—Yes, I believe it to be the ſame.

Court. This appears upon the face of it, to have been executed by a man calling himſelf John Ferguſon, before the Lord Mayor.

Court to Sweetenburgh. Be ſo good as to recollect back as diſtinctly as you can, the particulars that paſſed between the priſoner and you, when he firſt applied to you, and that was to procure probate of a will for him which will be produced?—Yes.

Did he apply to you at firſt as John Ferguſon the executor, or as acting on his behalf?—He applied as the executor of the will; I am quite ſure of that, otherwiſe he muſt have produced a power of attorney; I am very ſure he produced none.

Can you trace the day on which he applied to you?—It appears by the jurata of the will, the 15th of July.

Court. This letter of attorney is not dated till the 4th day of September.

Court to Priſoner. Now is your time to make your defence.

Priſoner. I am deaf, I have not heard a word of what has been ſaid.

(Here the learned Judge recapitulated the whole of the evidence aloud to the Priſoner.)

PRISONER's

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had two witneſſes here but they failed me, as my trial did not come on laſt ſeſſions; they knew this John Ferguſon gave me theſe papers: I had but little acquaintance with him, I only ſaw him about February laſt; he ſaid nothing to me then, but in about a fortnight afterwards he called on me; ſays he, Mr. Dewar, I have a brother dead in America, and he has wages due, and he ſaid, he had been offered money to let a man adminiſter, but the man could not ſtop till the money was paid; ſo he went away: I ſaw no more of him till I think it was the 22d or 23d of July: will you aſk that gentleman, Whether the man that gave him the will had not a red coat on, or a frock on; he ſays it was me?

Court to Swittenburgh. How was the fact?—The priſoner had a red coat on; he was alone.

That was the corporal belonging to the marines, a townſman and countryman of this John Ferguſon's, that had lent him the money to adminiſter; his name was Cameron: John Ferguſon is dead; he died the 12th of September laſt; and this Cameron and him were conſtantly together, and about a week after I came from Chatham, they came and brought me this probate, I had never ſeen them before, I would not take it: one of the Crimps ſaid, you had better go and receive the money yourſelf; I ſaid, I would have nothing to do with it; ſays he, be ſo good, when my money is received, to take the money and I will write to you to remit me ſome; I told him I would not, and Mr. Giles knows very well that he had it till the 1ſt day of September; it was on Monday I think, I called on him in the morning: I had a letter from this John Ferguſon; I called on him and ſaid, have you received any money; ſays he no; ſays I, I am going to Chatham to night; then ſays he, take theſe papers with you, and receive the money: I took the papers along with me, and I received the money, twenty-four pounds, ten ſhillings, and ſixpence, I received faithfully and honeſtly. I came home the ſame night, and John Ferguſon he came to me, and I paid him part of the money: I told him there is an account between you and I: this corporal he came along with him, I appointed him to come on Friday and ſettle; he came on Friday; I was not at home; he did not come any more till Monday, then he came about eleven o'clock, and he aſked my wife if I had any money for him; ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not know, and ſhe gave him a little money, and he ſtaid and had ſome victuals: when I came home he was laid down on the bed, he ſaid he was ſick; he ſaid he muſt go to his quarters, when he got up he could not ſtir or wag; he ſaid he would not go home, he lived ſomewhere about Spitalfields, I got him a bed, I ſaw him in bed; the next morning I went to ſee how he was; I employed an eminent ſurgeon that lives down in Wapping, I employed a woman nurſe and laundreſs and every thing I could get, and he lived till the next Monday, and he died; he had a ſiſter, I went and told her and ſhe came; he did not want too ſee her, ſhe had affronted him ſome how or other, ſhe went and brought a Roman prieſt to him, that was the firſt time that ever I knew he was a Roman or papiſt: after the prieſt was gone, I ſaid, ſays I, John, I did not know you was a papiſt? ſays he, all our family are! ſays I, I am very ſorry for it, I never had much liking to them in my life; if I had known you had been a papiſt I would have had nothing to ſay to you; he died on the Monday, and on the Wedneſday he was buried: I took a thought within myſelf, as Mr. Giles had got the power of attorney and the adminiſtration, now this man is dead, theſe things are of no value, I will go and aſk Mr. Giles for them: when I came to him he aſked me to ſit down; he ſaid, ſays he, there has been a young man who ſays he is the brother of Shaw Ferguſon, ſon, and this will to John Ferguſon is a forgery; ſays I, I have lived forty-nine years in his Majeſty's ſervice, and never had a blemiſh in my lifetime, I ſaid, if I get into trouble as I am not at all concerned in the affair, I will ſee the end of it, if it coſts me my life: Says he, when will you call again; now it was not likely I ſhould come again by my own conſent to ſee my proſecutor: I am a man that never robbed man, woman, or child: I am no more guilty of forgery or any thing of the kind, than any gentleman in this houſe.

Court to Giles. Is the circumſtance he has related true?—A few words of it are.

After you told him this was ſuſpected to be a forgery, did he afterwards appoint a time to come and meet the brother of Ferguſon, and did he come?——Yes: I followed him, after I had received the money, I told him, if you come next Saturday I will endeavour to ſettle with you, and he came on the Friday following, ſays I, come to-morrow to my houſe, and he came accordingly,

Court to Giles. Did you know this man at all?—I never ſaw him before.

Jury. Was his coming to you voluntary?—Entirely voluntary.

Court to Arnold. When was Shaw Farquharſon turned over from the Roebuck to the Providence?—On the 17th of May, 1780.

Court to Lawſon. When did he paſs from the Providence to the Charles Town? —The 15th of July, 1780.

Court. He died on board the Charles Town, the 16th of April, 1781?—Yes, Robert at ſea.

Are there any men on board the Charles Town of the name of James Styeels or Dewar?

Lawſon. I do not find any ſuch names either on that or the Roebuck.

Mr. Sylveſter. Is there any on board the Providence?—No.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any witneſſes to prove there was ſuch a man as John Ferguſon?

Priſoner. Lord bleſs you, they are all his relations, there is his ſiſter lives down in Wapping, ſhe ſaid, before the Lord Mayor, becauſe I had ſcandalized her brother, that if ſhe could, ſhe would go to Tyburn and pull my feet down, there are people, I can prove, and I can bring the man and the woman that buried him; one Mr. Britain in Church Lane that buried him, and I went to church with him myſelf.

Court. You have no witneſſes here to prove that?—No I have not, but I can get them if you will give me time; when this Donald Ferguſſon went to Mr. Giles's, when I went to wait on him there, he and I had ſome words, and ſo when he looked over the will, and ſaw this Shaw Ferguſon was only [Ferguſon, and his name is Farquharſon, he ſaid, and Mr. Giles heard him, ſays he, this can not be the man, we had better let him alone, till we find out the certainty of it: He was gone almoſt an hour, and I ſat with Mr. Giles, and he came back and brought a conſtable and ſent me to the Compter. On the Sunday after I was there, there came an elder brother of this Farquharſon, ſays he, I want to aſk you a queſtion, I am Donald Ferguſon's brother your proſecutor, ſays he, come in here, I went into the little room, ſays he, did you know one Shaw Ferguſon belonging to the Roebuck; no, Sir, ſays I, ſays he, they are all fools together, for my brother Shaw Ferguſon is not dead now, I have a letter I received from him: I have ten witneſſes that can prove that.

Court. Who ſaid ſo?——Gregor Farquharſon; I ſuppoſe I have ten witneſſes in the Compter that heard it, and will take their oaths of it.

Gregor Farquharſon. My Lord, ſhall I relate the ſtory?

Court. Is what he ſays true?——Some words are, but not all.

Did you tell him that your brother Shaw Farquharſon was not dead, but you received a letter ?—I told him I had not heard of my brother's death till I ſaw it in the newſpaper.

Did you tell him that your brother was not dead ?—No, I did not.

Or that you received a letter from him ? —No, I did not.

Priſoner. I belonged to the army, I have a man here ſomewhere that was in the regiment along with me ; I ſuppoſe I have one of the beſt of characters in the army ; I receive a penſion from his Majeſty's ſervice; for forty-nine years and one month, I ſerved my King and country, and now I am ſeventy-two years of age.

ROBERT RICE ſworn.

I am a ſhoe-maker, I live in Great Montague Court, Little Britain ; I knew the priſoner about two years, and during the time I knew him, he had an exceeding good character, no man could bear a better ; I was diſcharged from the ſaid company that he commanded five years laſt Auguſt.

The Jury withdrew for ſome time, and returned with a verdict

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

57. JAMES JOHNSON and DAVID BIRMINGHAM were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th of November laſt, five printed bound books in quarto, value 30s. and one other printed book bound, in quarto, value 2s. the property of John Hayes, privily in his ſhop.

JOHN HAYES ſworn.

I am a book-ſeller in Holborn, the books charged in the indictment were in my ſhop window, on the 28th of November, they were the five firſt volumes of Olivet's Edition of Cicero, the whole quantity were in the window, and a firſt volume of Hooke's Roman Hiſtory in quarto ; I miſſed them on the 19th, I then with a friend, made ſome enquiry at different pawnbrokers at that part of the town, where I thought they might be offered for ſale, on my return I called at a book-ſeller's ſhop in Middle Row, St. Giles's, Mr. Ruſhton's, who is my next witneſs, and immediately as I entered the ſhop, I ſaw the firſt volume of Cicero lay on the counter, he told me, the perſon who brought it for ſale, ſaid he had other volumes, and he offered them to him for ſale, and he told him to go and fetch the remainder, and he expected him in a quarter of an hour, in that time the two priſoners came in with the remainder of the books ; I found there the firſt volume of Hooke, which I underſtood from Mr. Ruſhton's wife, he had purchaſed before.

Court. Had you any marks in your books ?—Theſe books were not marked, but the ſingularity of the binding renders them beyond a doubt, I can ſwear to them, that word Olivet has been lettered under the firſt lettering piece, owing to a miſtake that was made.

Have you any mark in your books that Mr. Ruſhton might know them to be yours ? —No.

Court. What is the value of the ſet ? —About four guineas I marked them in my catalogue.

——— RUSHTON ſworn.

I am a book-ſeller, on the 29th of November, the priſoner, Birmingham, brought the firſt volume of Hooke's Roman Hiſtory, for which I gave him eighteen-pence.

Did he ſay how he came by it ?—He did not ſay, he ſaid he was in diſtreſs and wanted money, and it was all he had, he was decent, and I did not imagine it was ſtole, it is valued at two ſhillings, ſoon after he came again and brought the firſt volume of Cicero, he ſaid, he had ſome more at home, I told him, I could not buy them, unleſs I ſaw the whole to know whether it was compleat, for it was a book I was not acquainted with, I had never ſeen the book before; he then left the firſt volume on the counter, and ſaid he would go and fetch the reſt, they were in the poſſeſſion of a young man. In the mean time Mr. Hayes, the proſecutor came in, I told him, and he waited in my back room: when the priſoner Birmingham returned, the priſoner Johnſon came with him; Mr. Hayes immediately went out and fetched a conſtable, whilſt I kept them.

Did they ſay, when they were there, how they came by them?—No, they did not; Mr. Hayes's friend was in the ſhop with me, they ſaid they came honeſtly by them, that they bought them of a man in Wapping.

Did they both ſay ſo?—Johnſon particularly ſaid ſo before the conſtable came.

Are you particular in that, that Johnſon ſaid they had bought them in Wapping?—He ſaid ſo in the ſhop.

In the ſhop when they were ſtopped and apprehended, did Johnſon ſay he knew nothing about the matter, and had nothing to do with it?—No, he did not.

Priſoner Johnſon. I bought them in Wapping, and gave eight ſhillings for them.

Court to Ruſhton. Did not you entertain ſome ſuſpicion when you ſaw ſuch a man as this bring you ſome Latin books, how could he come by Latin books?—I did after he was gone, I rather began to think he had ſtole them, and when he came back again I did not intend to buy them.

Mr. Hayes called on me on the 29th in the morning, I went round with him to the Pawn-brokers, and we called at Ruſhton's; he informed us as you have heard, and we waited till the two priſoners came in, I then went into the ſhop, Mr. Hayes went for an officer; I looked at the books, and aſked Johnſon what he expected for the books; Johnſon ſaid, half a guinea; I obſerved they were Latin, I ſaid, did he read Latin; he ſaid, no, he could not read Latin; I then ſaid they were not compleat, there were other volumes of the work, and it was extraordinary he ſhould have books he could not read, I aſked him where he got them, he ſaid, he bought them of a man in Wapping the night before, he ſaid he did not know who he was, he believed he was a ſmuggler, he bought them in the ſtreet; this was merely for the purpoſe of amuſing them till Mr. Hayes returned with an officer, I then expreſſed my ſuſpicions, that they were not honeſtly come by, he ſaid he gave eight ſhillings for them, then Mr. Hayes came in, and they were taken before the juſtice. I believe Birmingham was the perſon who brought the books, but I do not recollect he ſaid a word about them; Johnſon was the man that ſaid he had bought them, and deſcribed the manner of them before the juſtice; Johnſon ſaid, a man offered him the books in Wapping, and that Birmingham told him they were valuable, and perſuaded him to buy them, that he might get ſomething by them; they were there examined apart: Birmingham ſaid they bought them at Wapping, they diſagreed in the time, one ſaid they were up at Holborn with them at ſix o'clock, and the other at ten, they deſcribed their lodgings very differently, one ſaid they lay together in the ſame bed, and the other, that they lodged in the ſame ſtreet in ſeparate rooms.

Court to Mr. Hayes. What is the value of theſe books?—To me they are of much more value than to another; I have valued them at thirty ſhillings, I thought I could not do leſs.

PRISONER JOHNSON's DEFENCE.

I was coming up Wapping, and I met a man accidentally, he aſked me to buy theſe books, he aſked me eight ſhillings, and I gave him eight ſhillings, I then came home to bed, I ſent Birmingham the next morning to ſee if he could ſell them; my ſiſter maintains me at preſent.

PRISONER BIRMINGHAM's DEFENCE.

I carried the books for this man, I thought to diſpoſe of them, Johnſon told me he would pay me for my trouble; the firſt ſhop I came to, I ſaid, they did not belong to me; I ſold the firſt for eighteen pence, and gave this man the money.

Court. Who did you ſell them for?—For this man, and gave him the money.

The priſoner Johnſon called two witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

JAMES JOHNSON,
DAVID BIRMINGHAM, } GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of four ſhillings and ſix-pence.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

58. JOSEPH BISHOP was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 4th of November laſt, five ſilk handkerchiefs, value 12s. a cotton handkerchief, value 2s. one linen handkerchief, value 12d. the property of Samuel Milſom, privately in his ſhop.

SAMUEL MILSOM ſworn.

I keep a pawn-broker and broker's ſhop, in Wentton-ſtreet, White-chapel. On the 4th of November I went out about ſome buſineſs, about nine o'clock in the morning, and left my ſervant, Ann Perry, to take care of the ſhop; I returned about one o'clock; my ſervant told me I had been robbed, and I looked on the ſhelf and miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment; they were there when I went away, they are now in Court.

ANN PERRY ſworn.

My maſter went out between nine and ten o'clock, and before eleven o'clock this Joſeph Biſhop came to our houſe, and aſked me what he had to do, I told him the ſame as uſual; he was employed by my maſter in ſawing wood; I went into the kitchen to give the child ſomething to drink, I left him in the ſhop, I heard ſomebody ſtep in the ſhop, I looked in the ſhop, I did not ſee any body, nor I did not ſee him, I did not look at the place where the handkerchiefs were, I went back to the kitchen, then I heard ſomebody walk in the ſhop again, I looked towards the handkerchiefs, and I ſaw Joſeph Biſhop puſhing ſomething aſide; I ſaid, you have taken ſomething, He ſaid, he had not, I laid hold of him, and by my pulling him I unbuttoned his waiſtcoat, and down dropt the handkerchiefs mentioned in the indictment. (The things depoſed to.) another man came in to my aſſiſtance, and I had him ſtripped; my maſter was not at home, and in his breeches there was theſe; then my maſter came in.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going into the ſhop, and I ſaw theſe handkerchiefs lay upon the ground, and I was going to pick them up, the maid came out directly, and ſaid I was going to rob my maſter, and ſhe would ſwear my life away if ſhe could.

GUILTY,

Of ſtealing, but not privately.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

59. JOHN WESTBROOK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 9th of September laſt, a pair of chariot harneſs, value 20s. the property of Arthur Pigott, Eſq.

JOHN FIDLER ſworn.

I am a ſtable-keeper in Lamb's Conduit-ſtreet, Mr. Pigott keeps his horſes with me, the priſoner drove him.

Court. Had you ſeen the harneſs?——I cannot ſay I know the harneſs, Mr. Pigott's harneſs has no creſt upon it.

HENRY WHEELER ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Fidler, I ſaw the priſoner take the harneſs out of the yard on Monday morning, as they came in over night, they were all over dirt, he ſaid he was going to the coachmaker's to get them altered.

I am a hackneyman, I bought a pair of harneſs of the priſoner for twenty ſhillings, I delivered them up at Hicks's Hall.

Are thoſe now produced the ſame that you bought of the priſoner?——I cannot recollect.

You bought a good bargain did not you? —No.

You bought them at an under price I fancy?——I gave rather more than the value of them, I believe them not to be worth 20s. they are old.

CAPTAIN WILSON ſworn.

About a month ago I was at Mr. Pigott's houſe, when the priſoner came to it, Mr. Pigott was out, Mrs. Pigott informed me that it was the priſoner, and that there was a warrant out againſt him for ſtealing Mr. Pigott's harneſs, and ſome livery, the priſoner came to beg forgiveneſs, upon which he was detained till the legal officer came to take him into cuſtody, he went down ſtairs, and attempted to go out of the door, but the ſervant had put the chain up at the door, he did not endeavour to eſcape by any precipitation, I deſired him to go into another room, I aſked him ſeveral queſtions reſpecting the harneſs, where he had taken them to, and what he had done with them, at laſt he told me they were at a certain perſon's houſe, whoſe name I have really forgot now, though I took it down in writing, he told me he had taken them and pawned them, and told me the name of the place or the ſtreet.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am innocent of the charge; the harneſs I ſold Mr. Jones was my own property.

ARTHUR PIGOTT, Eſq; ſworn.

The priſoner left me at Tunbridge Wells, he came to town about the 7th of September at night, he diſappeared, quitted my ſervice, and about that time harneſs was miſſing, and all the clothes I had given him, being a coat, great coat, waiſtcoat, and a ſilver-laced hat; I enquired after him, he never could be found, at length a warrant being out againſt him, he came one night to my houſe, for what purpoſe I do not know, I do not know the harneſs.

Priſoner. I had my friends here laſt night and to-day, but being Saturday night, and they capital tradeſmen, they could not appear for me.

Court. Here is nobody to identify the harneſs.

NOT GUILTY.

61. WILLIAM WOOLFORD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 5th day of November laſt, twenty pounds weight of leather, value 20s. the property of Thomas Holmes and John Pace.

JOHN GRIFFITHS ſworn.

By the directions of our maſters Thomas Holmes and John Pace, of Long-acre, Coach-makers, having loſt many things, we were directed to watch, on the 4th of November, I cut ſome leather for a chariot, I marked it by my maſter's directions, and left it in the workſhop, and in the morning it was gone, the priſoner was a labourer in my maſter's yard, I and the witneſs Rowcroft went to the priſoner's lodgings, and a man, one Cole, who is a witneſs, came in and went out, and came in and went out again with a parcel, Rowcroft followed him, and I waited to watch the priſoner, he went to his work.

JAMES ROWCROFT ſworn.

I watched with the laſt witneſs, I ſaw Cole come out of the priſoner's lodgings, I followed him and ſtopped him, and he had this bundle of leather tied up in this cloth.

I am a currier.

Where did you get the leather you was ſtopped with?—Of the priſoner at the bar, I have known him for years, he called me up and aſked me to buy ſome leather, I offered him ſeven ſhillings for it, it was cut in ſquare pieces, I do not know the uſe of them.

Do you ſay upon your oath that you do not know what theſe pieces were cut out for?—They were cut out for coach work.

Did you know where this man worked?——Yes.

How came you to buy leather that was cut out for coach work of this man, who worked as a common ſervant to a coach-maker?——I did not think any harm of it.

Court. If this evidence had come out from any body but yourſelf, I ſhould have directed you to have been indicted.

(The leather depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When I went in the morning to open my maſter's ſhop, I went to make water at the next gateway, and this leather was thruſted into the next gate, and I met this man and aſked him to buy it, I might have been a thief many times, I was in my maſter's houſe going on five years.

The Priſoner called three Witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

GUILTY.

Whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice WILLES.

64. JOHN RICH was indicted (with HENRY PALMER and WILLIAM COX, otherwiſe VANDERPLANK, not in cuſtody) for feloniouſly and burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Probart, on the 19th of October laſt, about the hour of three in the afternoon, no perſon being therein, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, two ſilk gowns, value 3l. one ſattin gown, value 40s. ſeven cotton gowns, value 6l. one ſtuff gown, unmade, value 10s. one ſilk and cotton gown, value 30s. one bedgown, value 5s. ſeven petticoats, value 30s. one dimity petticoat, value 6s. and one white linen petticoat, value 6s. the property of Rebecca Bruce, ſpinſter.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

REBECCA BRUCE ſworn.

I lodge at Mr. Probart's, No. 2. Broad-yard, Turnmill-ſtreet, I went out at twelve in the day on Sunday the 19th of October, I locked my boxes and my room, I left one Thomas Tonks in the houſe, he and his mother lodge in the ſame houſe, when I returned between nine and ten at night, ſeveral people who belonged to the houſe were fetched home before me, and I found the door had been broke open, and two boxes and a cheſt with drawers in it were alſo broke open, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, nothing has been found, I know nothing of the robbery.

THOMAS TONKS ſworn.

I ſtaid at home after Mrs. Bruce went out for two hours, I went out about two o'clock, I left my mother at home, her name is Elizabeth Tonks.

Court. Did any thing particular happen before you went out ?—No.

What time did you come home ?—Between nine and ten o'clock.

What did you ſee then ?—I ſaw Iſaacs the conſtable, he took me to priſon.

What for ?—On ſuſpicion of the robbery.

Do you know any thing of the robbery ?—Yes.

You were a party concerned in it, were you ?—Yes.

Then you muſt ſtand down till we examine the other witneſſes ; had your mother any thing to do with the robbery ?—No, ſhe had not.

ELIZABETH TONKS ſworn.

I remember Rebecca Bruce going out, on the 19th of October, me and my boy were at home, and the woman that rents the houſe was at home ; my boy went out as ſoon as he had dined, between one and two o'clock ; I went out at three to church, and came home a little after four ; while I was out it all happened ; when I went out I left nobody in the houſe to my knowledge ; I locked the door.

Are there two doors to the houſe ?—No, only one ; I took the key with me, the reſt of the family were out, I have lodged eleven years in the houſe ; when I came home the door was locked ; when I went up to go to my own room, I ſaw this young lady's room door, which was oppoſite to mine, open, and I called to her, and nobody anſwering I looked in and ſaw the things laying about, and I thought the room had been robbed ; I went over that minute to call the neighbours, and one Mr. Eden was the firſt that came ; and Mr. Proburt's ſon named John Proburt.

How do you ſuppoſe any body could get into the houſe ?——Not unleſs they had a falſe key.

JOHN PROBURT ſworn.

I left the houſe about one o'clock ; I was not at home when Rebecca Bruce went out, I was at church ; I came home about one and went out again, and left Tom Tonkes at home ; I was ſent for between five and ſix o'clock at night ; they told me the houſe was broke open and robbed ; I ſaw that the room door was forced open, and a chiſel and chopper left, ſeveral more locks were broke, the things were all thrown about the floors.

Do you know any thing of the priſoner yourſelf ?—No.

THOMAS ISAACS ſworn.

I was ſent for to this houſe in the afternoon, about a quarter after four o'clock, on Sunday the 19th of October ; I found the ſtreet door wrenched open, it had been ſhoved back ſeemingly by this, and going up ſtairs theſe things were found, in the proſecutor's rooom I ſaw the padlock, and the door burſt all open, the locks of all the drawers and boxes were all entirely broke off, and a vaſt quantity of things laying about, they then told me they ſuſpected one Tonks to be concerned in the robbery, I waited till he came home, and took him in cuſtody, but he denied every thing, upon that we had ſome hand-bills printed for the things.

MARY GREARSON ſworn.

I was looking out of window about a quarter before four o'clock in the afternoon that the robbery was committed, I live about two doors from the court, and I ſaw two men paſs by with large bundles, I heard no more of it till next morning.

Do you know who theſe men were?—I cannot poſitively ſwear to the priſoner at the bar, but he was very much like to one of them.

How near was you to them?—I was at a two pair of ſtairs window, and I am very near ſighted.

You ought to uſe proper caution if you are not ſure who it was, but if you really know who it was and have no doubt, you are bound upon your oath to ſay ſo.

It was out of a two pair of ſtairs window, and I am very near ſighted; I cannot poſitively ſay that he was the man.

What reaſon have you for thinking that he was the man, did you know him before?—Not at all.

ANN GREARSON ſworn.

I live at the ſheeps head ſhop, in Turnmill-ſtreet.

How far is that from Broad-yard?——Cloſe to it, the laſt witneſs is my ſiſter; on Sunday the 19th of October, ſhe and I were looking out of window a little before four o'clock, I ſaw two men go down the ſtreet with large bundles under their arms, and in about ten minutes after, they came down the ſtreet again.

Do you know any of them?—To the beſt of my knowledge I think the priſoner was one of them.

Are you ſure he was one of them?—To the beſt of my knowledge I think he was.

Did you ever ſee him before?—Not to notice him much, I do not think I ever have; I ſaw him at the Rotation-Office about a fortnight ago, I then ſaid, to the beſt of my knowledge I believed him to be the man.

What do you mean by the beſt of your knowledge; can you be ſure that he was the man, or that he was not?—I think to the beſt of my knowledge that he is the man; when I ſaw him again, I thought I knew him again.

Are you ſure he is the man, or have you any doubt of it?—No, I have no noubt of it at all but he is the man.

You are ſure he is the man?—Yes.

Did you ſay ſo at the Juſtices?—Yes.

What opportunity had you of obſerving him at the time?——Becauſe ſeeing them paſs in ſermon time made me take more particular notice of them, as they went down the ſtreet, and came up again, and the other ſtopped and tied up his garters, and Rich croſſed the way.

Did you ſee theſe men's faces?—I could ſee Rich's face very plain, he had a cocked hat on, but the other had a hat over his face.

Priſoner. She ſaid at the Juſtice's, that ſhe could not ſwear I was the perſon, ſhe ſaid I had my hair curled?—His hair was in curls in his neck.

Priſoner. I never wore my hair any otherwiſe than it is now.

Court. What clothes had he on?—A white coat, a black waiſtcoat, and a cocked hat.

Do you know any thing further?——Nothing.

JOHN SAYER ſworn.

I received information that the priſoner John Rich was wanted for a burglary, I took him in cuſtody in Leiceſter-Fields; this was a fortnight after the robbery was done; I carried the priſoner to the Cock, in Litchfield-ſtreet; I ſearched him, and found this pocket book and a hand-bill of the robbery.

I live near Broad-yard, in Turnmill-ſtreet; I was ſtanding up at a one pair of ſtairs window on the day this robbery was committed, between three and four o'clock, and I ſaw two men go by with large bundles under their arms, one was in a red handkerchief, and the other was in a yellow one, the priſoner was one.

Had you an opportunity of obſerving him, ſo as to know him again?——Yes, I have ſeen him ſeveral times in the ſtreets.

So that his face was known to you?—Yes.

You did not know any thing of him before, who he was?—No, I never ſpoke to him in my life, I am ſure he was one.

THOMAS TONKES called again.

It was agreed on, on the Saturday night by the priſoner at the bar and William Vanderplank, and Henry Palmer, and myſelf, to go and break into this houſe on the Sunday following; we were at the Carpenter's-arms, White-hart-yard, Drury-lane.

What was agreed on?—To break into this houſe.

Why was this houſe pitched on?—Becauſe we thought there was good clothes there.

Who told them ſo?—Myſelf.

What plan was laid?—To get into the houſe by the way of a falſe key, they went out on the Sunday, and got into the houſe.

Was you with them on the Sunday?—I was not with them, I ſaw them bring the clothes to Vanderplank's lodgings, in Jacob's-court, Cow-croſs; it was about four o'clock.

Was the priſoner there?—Yes.

What did they do with the things?——They ſold them to a perſon that ſame evening, which I do not know, the perſon came to the room and they turned me out, they ſaid he was a Jew; that is all I know.

How much of the money did you get?—one guinea, I do not know how much money they ſold them for, they told me they ſold them for four guineas.

How long have you been connected with them?—About two months.

Have you made a diſcovery to the Magiſtrate of every thing that you know of theſe people?—Yes.

What of every thing elſe as well as this?—Yes.

Did they ſay how they got into this houſe?—They got in at the bottom with a falſe key, and broke the top door with a chopper.

Did you ſee the chiſſel and chopper?—Yes, theſe are them, the chopper belongs to John Rich.

What is Rich?—I do not know what he is, his father keeps a ſale ſhop in Holborn; the priſoner brought a chopper with him, the chiſſel is Henry Palmer's; I ſaw them on the Sunday at Vanderplank's lodgings about two o'clock.

I ſuppoſe you went to tell them when the houſe was empty?—Yes, I did.

How came it you did not ſtay at home to let them in?—Becauſe they meant to have it ſeem that people got into the houſe, they had a key to get in by.

How did they know that key would open the door?—Becauſe it was tried before.

Who tried it?—I did on the ſame Sunday.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

About a week after this robbery was committed, I ſaw Tonks at the Carpenters Arms, and a quarrel inſued between him and me, and I took and ſtruck him, and he ſaid, he would be revenged of me.

The Priſoner called one Witneſs who gave him a good character.

Court to Tonks. How far is it to Vanderplank's lodgings?—About three minutes walk.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

69. THOMAS KNIGHT and MARY MOORE (two children) were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, twenty-eight yards of ſtuff called camblet, value 28s. the property of Robert Huſſey.

ROBERT HUSSEY ſworn.

I live in Ruſſel-court, I am a linen-draper, on the 28th of November, I was behind my counter; I heard a noiſe of ſtop them or ſtop thief, and I went and found on the priſoner Moore, a piece of ſtuff, it was taken from the outſide of the door, it was faſtened round with two ſtrings.

(The piece produced and depoſed to.)

Court to Priſoners. Children what have you to ſay.

Priſoner Moore. As I was coming along I ſaw this piece of ſtuff lay, and this gentleman ſtopped me.

Court to Moore. How old are you?——Between eleven and twelve.

How old are you Knight?—Juſt turned of ten.

Proſecutor. When ſhe was taken to Bow-ſtreet they knew her, ſhe was tried at Weſtminſter for the ſame offence, ſhe then ſaid, ſhe was ſixteen.

STEHPEN GAGNAN ſworn.

I ſaw the boy come firſt with a knife, and cut the ſtring, and the girl came after and took the piece under her cloak.

BOTH GUILTY.

Court. The beſt thing that can be done with them is to let them both be very ſeverely whipped and then diſcharged; ſtaying in gaol will do them no good.

Court to Priſoners. Children, let this be a warning to you, the next time you are brought here you will not get off with a whipping; you may loſe your lives.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

70. JOHN SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 22d of November laſt, two half-crowns, value 5s. and one ſhilling in money, the monies of Robert Womerſly, and Henry Womerſly.

BENJAMIN RAWLINS ſworn.

On the 21ſt or 22d of November, Mr. Womerſly left word at my houſe, that he wanted to ſee me, I went there, and he told me he had a ſuſpicion of his ſhopman robbing him, that was the priſoner, we agreed to mark ſome money, I marked ſome money, and went at five o'clock, and bought ſome articles amounting to thee pounds nine ſhillings and ſixpence, the money was all marked, I came out afterwards, and told Mr. Womerſly, and in about half an hour after the priſoner was brought to my houſe by an officer, and the two Mr. Womerſlys: They ſhewed me ſome money which the officer ſaid he had out of the priſoner's pocket, and they aſked me if I knew any thing of it.

Did you ſee it taken out of his pockets?—No.

Had it your mark upon it?—Yes; one half-crown piece and one ſhilling I know of, the officer has the money.

JOSEPH NIBLOW ſworn.

I am the officer, I have two half-crowns and a ſhilling, I was called on November the 22d to take up a ſuſpicious perſon, I went to Mr. Womerſly's ſhop, and he charged the priſoner with taking money out of the till, and inſiſted on ſeeing what money he had in his pocket, he made no heſitation, he put his hand in his right-hand pocket, and pulled out three guineas, four half-crowns, and three ſhillings and put down; among the money were theſe two half-crowns and this ſhilling, that was marked; his maſter ſaid then, John, I am afraid thee haſt not done right; he is a Quaker, ſays he, here is ſome of the money that was taken out of the till, ſays the priſoner, Sir, I have taken ſeven ſhillings which you borrowed of me in the morning, and had repaid myſelf out of the till, he ſaid, John, I paid thee that in the morning.

Court. Is the maſter here?—No, he is a Quaer, and he will not ſwear.

Court to Jury. As it depends on the priſoners aſſerting on the one ſide, that his maſter had borrowed money of him, and his maſter aſſerting on the other ſide that he had paid him again, and as the maſter does not come here to ſwear it; it would be a great deal too much to convict the priſoner.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

71. JANE DAVIS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 29th of November laſt, one large ſilver table ſpoon, value 6s. the property of Luke Riley.

LUKE RILEY ſworn.

I keep the Freemaſon's Tavern in Great Queen's-ſtreet, on Saturday the 29th of November, I loſt a large table ſpoon about ſix in the evening, we found one miſſing, the priſoner was a ſervant of mine about this time two years, and had come in to enquire about ſome of the family, I met her that day in the coffee-room.

Court. Do you know what her way of life has been ſince ſhe left you?——I have heard ſhe has been in ſervice ſince, for my wife made enquiry, having ſome reſpect for the girl.

On Saturday night the 29th of September, the priſoner came to my ſhop and aſked me if I would buy old ſilver, and what I gave an ounce, I ſaid it was impoſſible to tell without I ſaw it, ſhe then produced part of a ſpoon which had a cypher on it, I aſked her if it was her own, but turning it round to ſee where it was broke, I ſaw Freemaſon's Tavern on it, I aſked her where ſhe lived, ſhe ſaid in Tichfield-ſtreet, I ſaid this ſpoon belongs to Mr. Riley, ſhe ſaid it did belong to him, for her aunt lived there, I ſaid, then how came you by this broken ſpoon, ſhe ſaid Mrs. Riley was her aunt, and ſhe had made her a preſent of three of them when ſhe went to houſe-keeping; and the child had the misfortune of breaking this one, I told her I muſt ſtop the ſpoon and ſend to Mr. Riley, ſhe ſaid it was very hard, but to prove her innocence, as her mother lived but three hundred yards off, ſhe would go and fetch her, ſhe did not appear to be at all confuſed, ſhe went out, and I ſent to enquire whether it was ſo: The priſoner did not come back, they took her into cuſtody in Litchfield-ſtreet.

(The part of the ſpoon depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I went to ſee Mrs. Riley, and I was coming out, a ſpoon lay on the ground, and I trod upon it, and I was frightened, and I put it into my pocket: I went to this gentleman and aſked him if he bought or changed old ſilver, I did not know what to do with it when I found it; I did not not intend to ſteal it.

Court to Riley. Has ſhe any relation that lives with you?——Not that I know of, my Lord, I have a good many ſervants: She was firſt hired as a kitchen-maid, and my wife thought her too decent a perſon for a kitchen-maid, and ſhe made her houſe-maid.

What made you part with her?——I believe my wife did not like her ſervitude, not for any theft I will aſſure you; if ſhe had gone up ſtairs among all the plate I had, I ſhould not have ſuſpected her.

The Priſoner called three Witneſſes who gave her a very good character.

GUILTY.

Upon the recommendation of the Proſecutor, to be privately Whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

72. HESTER GERMAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th of November laſt, one watch, with the inſide caſe made of baſe metal and the outſide caſe made of ſhagreen, value 40s. one ſteel chain, value 12d. one ſteel key, value 6d. and two ſtone ſeals, ſet in baſe metal, value 12d. the property of Francis Smithſon.

FRANCIS SMITHSON ſworn.

I am a higler; on the 27th of November, I loſt a watch about ſeven o'clock in the evening, at the Black-boy, in St. Catherine's-lane; I went there for an old woman that ſells fiſh, and cries them about for me, ſhe was not there, and I was going out again; going athwart the door I met the priſoner, and ſhe catched me round the middle, and aſked me to give her a glaſs of ſomething to drink; I ſaid, I did not care, I gave her a glaſs of ſhrub, and ſhe aſked me to go in the other room, I ſaid, I ſhould not, then ſhe caught me round the middle again, and kiſſed me; going along the paſſage ſhe pulled the watch out of my pocket, I am poſitive I had it in my pocket at the bar, I was only with her in the publick room, not a quarter of an hour: I was as ſober as I be now: I thought I miſſed my watch, and I clapped my hand to my pocket and ſhe was running away; I called after her, and ſhe went away: we ſought after her, and in two or three hours ſhe came in again with two or three ſailors, I got up and caught hold of her, and one of the ſailors knocked me down, then the priſoner fell on me: the next day I took her up, and the man too: we could not find the watch: I am ſure it is the woman.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was in this publick houſe, and this man came to me and aſked me to drink a glaſs of liquor, I ſaid, I had rather not; I left him, I was not in his company; he was in other women's company beſides me, I did not ſee him for an hour afterwards.

For the Prisoner.

JOHN WATSON

(Sworn on the New Teſtament, but on being aſked by one of the officers of the Court if he was not a Jew, he anſwered yes, and was then re-ſworn on the Hebrew Bible, which laſt oath he took without putting on his hat, as is the cuſtom of the Jews.)

Court. What do you mean by taking the oath as you did?—I never took an oath in my life; I am a butcher; I know the priſoner: I was ſitting in a publick houſe, and I ſaw this good man come in, and he ſays to the priſoner come here my girl, I want to ſpeak with you, and ſhe ſays, if you want to ſpeak to me ſpeak it out.

Court. Pray friend do not you know when people of your profeſſion take an oath, they always put on their hats?—I work among Engliſhmen, and I always was among Chriſtians.

Do you mean to take the oath as a Jew or a Chriſtian?——I can call myſelf a Chriſtian, becauſe I am never among the Jews.

What do you call yourſelf, are you Jew or a Chriſtian?—I do not know, pleaſe your honour; what you pleaſe to call me.

I wiſh you would underſtand that it is an exceeding indecent thing in you, or any man, to come here to trifle with any religion, in the ſort of way that you do?—I follow more the Chriſtian ways than I do the Jews.

Court. You are a good for nothing fellow, I dare ſay, whatever you are: ſtand down.

Jury to Proſecutor. Did you miſs your watch directly as the woman ran from you?——Yes, that moment; ſhe was in ſight when I miſſed it.

GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labour twelve months in the houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

73. WILLIAM HILL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 7th day of December 20s. and 8½d. in monies numbered, the monies of John Liddington.

SUSANNAH LIDDINGTON ſworn.

I am wife of John Liddington. The priſoner came on Sunday the 7th of December, a little after 6 o'clock, and ordered a pot of beer and change for a guinea; we keep the ſign of King Henry the eighth, in Great St. Andrew's-ſtreet, Seven Dials, I gave the ſervant eighteen ſhillings, in ſingle ſhillings, and a half crown piece, and two-pence half-penny, and ſhe was to bring me the guinea: the ſervant came back for another pot of beer and a paper of tobacco, and ſhe was to have the guinea when ſhe returned: ſhe came back crying and ſaid the man was gone.

Did you ſee the priſoner in your houſe?—I did not.

I am ſervant to Mr. Liddington, I ſaw the priſoner when he came to order the beer, which was about a quarter after ſix, he ordered change for a guinea; I went and drew the beer, and came to the bar to my miſtreſs, and aſked her for the change, and ſhe gave it me, and I went with the beer, and he was ſtanding at the door; Says he, God bleſs me, you have been a long while coming with the beer, my maſter thinks you take no heed about his beer; he ordered the beer for Mr. Purſer, in the ſame ſtreet; I ſaid, I was very ſorry, but I was getting the change, and ſo I held my hand open and he took the change out of it; he ſaid, have you brought the change; I ſaid, yes Sir, and he ſaid give it me, and I held my hand open and he took it.

Did he give you the guinea?—No, he told me to go back directly, for another pot of beer and a paper of tobacco.

Did you aſk him for the guinea?—I ſtopped at the door when he took the pot of beer and the change out of my hand, he ſaid he had knocked at the door, and when I came back with the other pot of beer, he would give me the guinea; I went back with another pot of beer and a paper of tobacco, and when I went he had ſet the pot of beer down and was gone; I knocked at the door, but the gentlewoman of the houſe ſaid he was not there.

Priſoner's Councel. Did you know him at all before?—Yes, he came into the kitchen to order the beer.

Had you ever ſeen him before?—No, I am ſure it is the ſame man, I ſaw him at the door, and there was a lamp at the door.

Priſoner. I never was in the houſe in my life.

Continuation of the Trial of James Macauley.

Are you to ſpeak the truth here or not?——Speak the truth.

Suppoſe you do not ſpeak the truth, what will become of you?——Go to the bad bad place.

E. THOMPSON, the younger, ſworn.

On the 17th of November I was going home about half after eight, I was going from my father, I live with my mother.

Your father and mother do not live together then?—No, I had a ſhirt and neckcloth and a pair of ſilk ſtockings, the ſhirt and neckcloth were my father's, and the ſilk ſtockings were mine, and a ſilk handkerchief which was my mother's.

What is your father?——A hair dreſſer.

Did you carry them home?——No.

How came you not to carry them home?——Becauſe I went with the man to the watch-houſe, they took him to the watch-houſe, Mr. Macawley ſtopped me, I ſaw by the light of the lamp at the tobacco ſhop, the priſoner is the man, he ſaid nothing to me, he ran by me, he took my bundle, and run away with it, I never ſaw him before; after he ſnatched the bundle out of my hand, I ran into the tobacco ſhop, and I ran out again, he ran all the way, I cried, ſtop thief, and a man in a waggoner's frock caught hold of him in about five minutes, a boy ſaw him throw the bundle away, a man gave me the things, and I took them to the watch-houſe.

Priſoner. He ſaid it was another man, till the people that were round him perſuaded him to ſay it was me.

Court. Was you always ſure that was the man, was you ſure of him at firſt?—Yes.

How was he dreſſed?——A jacket, a pair of ſtriped breeches, and a handkerchief about his neck.

EPHRAIM SHALER ſworn.

On the 17th of November I ſtopped the priſoner, I did not ſee any any thing with him, he fell a fighting with me and ſwore he would not be taken by me, I ſaw a bundle found a little way from me, I did not ſee him drop it, the little boy was ſure then that that was the man, he was dreſſed in a jacket, I cannot ſay what trowſers he had on.

What hat had he on?—A round hat.

Whereabouts was this?——In Raven-row, Spitalfields.

SAMUEL LE MAINE ſworn.

On Monday the 17th of November I was coming home from work, I ſaw the priſoner James Macawley, I heard the child cry out ſtop thief, the laſt witneſs ſtopped him, and as he ſtopped him, he turned the bundle and threw it down, I ſaw him throw the bundle down, I am ſure of that, I ſaw a woman pick it up, when he was ſtopped he offered to fight me, I ſaw him taken to the watch-houſe.

WILLIAM MOORHOUSE ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I produce the bundle.

(The things depoſed to by Mrs. Thompſon.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming along, I was a little in liquor, and that gentleman took hold of me, and one of them ſtruck me, I ſtruck him again, I did not know what I was taken for, they told me I had taken the bundle from the child, and they brought the boy before me, and he ſaid I was not the man till I went to the watch-houſe, then the boy ſaid it was me. I have no witneſſes.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, this priſoner is indicted for a highway robbery upon this boy, now it ſeem to me, and Mr. Recorder agrees with me in thinking that the evidence does not amount to a robbery on the highway, for though he ſnatched the bundle away, yet there was not that degree of force nor of terror that is neceſſary for a party to be under to conſtitute a robbery, and it would be too much therefore to make it ſo ſerious an offence as the law conſiders a highway robbery to be; but you are at full liberty to find him guilty of the larceny, and acquit him of the capital part.

GUILTY,

Of the larceny but not of putting the perſon in fear.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

88. OATEN BATLY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 10th day of November laſt, one ſilver watch, value 40s. one ſilver ſeal, value 1s. and one ſteel chain, value 6d. the property of John Purvin, privately from his perſon.

On Monday the 10th of November I was in Cheapſide, between one and two o'clock; I was ſtanding at the top of Queen-ſtreet, and a man came thronging before me, I told him I thought there was no reaſon for it; he went into the midſt of the ſtreet, immediately a man collared him, and ſaid ſomething of a watch; I recollected I had not put the chain of my watch in about five minutes before, and I found my watch was gone; I went up to the man that collared the priſoner, and ſaid, I could deſcribe the marks of my watch; I did ſo, and it proved to be my watch.

You did not perceive him take it from you?—No, I did not, I had no certain knowledge of it at the time, nor did I miſs it for a few minutes after.

Is the watch in Court?—Yes, I left it in the hands of a friend, as my health is but very indifferent, his name is Robert Hinxman, he gave it me again.

ROBERT HINXMAN ſworn.

Did you return the proſecutor the ſame watch he gave you?—Yes.

(The watch produced and depoſed to.)

Proſecutor. There is a cypher on the back, with two initial letters on the outſide caſe; the maker's name is Blagden, Chicheſter: the watch has been in my poſſeſſion theſe twenty years.

Priſoner. Did the gentleman take the watch from me?—I cannot ſay for certain how I came by the watch again.

THOMAS HAINS ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner take the watch out of that gentleman's pocket, and I took hold of him immediately with the watch in his left hand; I did not take the watch from him, he attempted to put it in the waiſtband of his trowſers; the gentleman came in front, and he laid hold of the chain of the watch, and he ſaid that is my watch, I will ſwear to it.

You are ſure you ſaw him take it?—I am ſure I did.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never had the watch in my hand, there was another man they took hold of as well as me. The captain of a ſhip I belonged to has been here theſe two days.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing but not privily.

Tranſported for ſeven Years.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

89. SIMON SOLOMON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 28th of November laſt, ſix linen ſhirts value 3l. and one linen waiſtcoat, value 5s. the property of James Simpſon.

REBECCA PAYTON ſworn.

On the 28th of November laſt, a little before five o'clock I was at my door and ſaw a man take the things out of the head of Mr. Carter's cart, I ſaw him up Devonſhire-ſtreet; he was purſued, and two men took the linen from him, I ſaw him brought back again, I am ſure it was the ſame man, the priſoner is the man that was brought back, and he took the things out of the cart.

JOHN WALTER ſworn.

I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and ſaw a man running with a white bundle, I caught him in my arms, bundle and all, he dropped the bundle, and my ſhop-mate picked it up.

JOSEPH FIELD ſworn.

I picked up the bundle which the priſoner dropped. I delivered up the bundle at Mr. Carter's houſe.

(The bundle depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was in liquor, I picked up the things, the proſecutor ſent a letter at firſt that he would not proſecute me. I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

To be twice whipped, and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the firſt London Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner.

MATTHEW BROOKS ſworn.

I came out of the country in expectation of getting into buſineſs, and the priſoner frequented the White Horſe at Cripplegate, before I came there, and he took me the night the fire was in Alderſgate-ſtreet along with him, and I came back to my lodgings between nine and ten in the morning, the priſoner left me about two o'clock: The priſoner came to me the next day between eleven and twelve, we were in company a little time at the White Horſe, and I fell aſleep about twelve or a little after, and I ſlept till four; the priſoner was with me when I fell aſleep, and when I awaked, my watch was gone out of my pocket, I had it when I went to ſleep, there were two or three people in the room, when I came in, that know I had it, I did not go out after till my watch was ſtolen, I never got it again.

When you fell aſleep who was ſitting with you in the box?—There was the priſoner and another perſon, who did not ſtay long.

Who was that other perſon?—I do not know.

What time did he go away?—I cannot tell, but it was before I fell aſleep or very ſoon after.

Where was your watch?—On my right-ſide.

Which ſide did the priſoner ſit?—On the left-ſide.

How came you to ſuſpect the priſoner took it?–I could ſuſpect nobody elſe becauſe he was the only perſon in company.

Yes there was another perſon.—But he did not ſtay long.

So much the more likely.—He did not ſtay long.

I know the proſecutor and the priſoner were in my tap-room, and during that time I ſaw the priſoner ſitting upon the end of the table of the ſame box where the proſecutor was aſleep, and when he awaked, he ſaid, he had loſt his watch.

Who was near him in the box?—There were many during the time that he lay there by the box.

My maſter is a pawnbroker, the priſoner came into my maſter's ſhop on the 5th of November, he offered a watch to pledge, and he ſaid he wanted a guinea, and I gave him fifteen ſhillings and a duplicate, and in about two hours after another man came with the duplicate and took it out: In the evening the proſecutor came to know whether ſuch a watch was pledged: I am ſure the priſoner brought the watch, it was about one o'clock: I never ſaw the other man ſince.

Court to Froſt. What time did the priſoner go away when this man was aſleep?—I did not ſee him go away.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing of the watch, I never pawned a watch in my life, I never know the proſecutor had a watch, I never ſat near him nor drank with him in the morning at all.

Court to Pretty. Are you ſure the priſoner is the man that pawned the watch?—Yes, I have known him a twelvemonth.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECOREER:

95. JOHN BOWMAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th of November laſt, one cloth great coat, value 3l. the property of Thomas Wellings, Eſq; privily in his coach houſe.

JOHN MAPES ſworn.

I am a coachman to Thomas Wellings, Eſq; I loſt a great coat, I left the ſtable about ſeven o'clock and came home about eight to put my horſes to, and my coat was gone, I left it on a nail by the pump in the ſtable.

Court. Was the ſtable door ſhut?—Yes, locked.

Was it locked when you came back?—Yes, he got in at the coach houſe adjoining, and came into my hay-loft, and ſo into the ſtable; on the 21ſt of November, I found my coat at the Marquis of Granby's Head: the conſtable has the coat.

On the 20th of November, I was going about my buſineſs, and I heard there was a coat advertized, I went to the perſon who advertized it, but it did not appear to be the ſame coat, I went to the priſoner, and told him, I had heard he had a coat, he ſaid, he had a brown coat with a red collar, I went with him to the perſon that had it to ſell, and the coachman deſcribing it, the woman firſt ſaid, her huſband had taken it into Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and then ſhe ſaid, good God! It is a blue box coat with three capes and yellow buttons; I then took the priſoner to a Magiſtrate, and while I was talking to another perſon he ran away.

Court to Mapes. Is that your coat?—Yes, it is my maſter's property.

On the 28th of November, I met the priſoner going to work, he ſaid, where are you going, Tom? I ſaid to work, he ſaid, if you will call at dinner time I want to ſpeak with you, I called, and we drank ſome beer, and when we were going, he ſaid, he had a great coat to ſell, and aſked me, if I would buy it; he went and fetched it, he ſaid, he bought it of a Jew for a half-guinea, and had had it four months, and I ſhould have it for that money, and not for leſs; there was a watchman ſaid he wanted a coat, and deſired I would get a great coat for him, I was going to take it to him, and a coachman of my acquaintance aſked me what I was to do with it, I ſaid, I was going to ſell it; he ſaid, he would buy it of me, and aſked me the price, he ſaid, he would give me five and twenty ſhillings for it.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going down the Minories, and I met a man, and he aſked me if I would buy a great coat, he ſaid, I ſhould have it for nine ſhillings, I looked at it and bought it of him.

NOT GUILTY.

MARY ELIZABETH SILVESTER ſworn.

I heard a noiſe, and a knocking noiſe in this houſe, I looked in the kitchen and ſaw nothing, about eight in the evening, I went over the way to Mr. Spiers.

JOHN SPIERS ſworn.

Mrs. Silveſter came over to me, I took a candle and went down and looked all about, I could ſee nobody, and as I was coming away I turned round and looked up the chimney and ſaw a man's legs, and I went to the door and called ſomebody, and while I was at the door ſome perſon withinſide ſhut the door, and I found it faſtened upon me: Garret and me went round and got over ſome pales, and looking in a neceſſary I found the priſoner, we took him into cuſtody, he ſaid he got over the wall with me on hearing the cry of thieves.

Court. You did not ſee any thing but the man's feet in the chimney?—I ſaw the whole body except the face.

Was there any fire in the chimney?—No.

RICHARD GARRETT ſworn.

I was coming by this houſe in Berner's-ſtreet, they ſaid there were thieves; when we got over the wall and opened the door we found the priſoner.

Did any body get over the wall at the ſame time that Mr. Spiers and you did?—Nobody but ourſelves.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

What did the priſoner ſay?—He ſaid he had nothing about him, and he unbuttoned his breeches, he was ſtanding cloſe up in the corner to hide himſelf from being ſeen, he ſeemed in the poſture of hiding himſelf, he ſaid, going to the Juſtices, he was no thief.

Did you compare the pieces of pipe that were cut off and laying down on the kitchen floor with the pieces of pipe that lay on the wall?—Yes.

Were his breeches down?—No.

THOMAS AYRTON, Eſq; ſworn.

My Lord, it is very difficult to ſwear to property in lead pipes, I can only ſay, about three months before this happened, I had a quantity of lead pipe put in the kitchen for the convenience of lodgers, when I went on the Saturday after the robbery was committed, the pipe was then gone; I cannot ſwear to the identical pipe.

Garrett. I ſaw the pipe entire the day before.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming down Berner's-ſtreet, and I ſaw ten or a dozen men had got into the yard, and I was a fool to get over to ſee what was the matter, there was a puddle of water, and I ſtept in the neceſſary becauſe I would not ſtep in the wet; they ſaid, here is a thief, I ſaid, ſearch me.

GUILTY.

Court to Priſoner. I am very ſorry to ſay that you have been very frequently tried here before, though you are ſo young, and therefore depend upon it, you will not remain in this country.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

101. JAMES BOWEN was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Henry Bowen between the hours of two and five in the afternoon, on the 26th of November laſt, no perſon being therein, and feloniouſly ſtealing one ſilver watch, value 30s. one ſteel chain, value 6d. one ſilver ſeal, value 12d. two cotton gowns, value 12s. two linen gowns, value 10s. one black crape gown, value 10s. ſix check linen aprons, value 6s. five white linen aprons, value 10s. two pair of ſtockings, value 10s. one black ſilk cloak, value 10s. one ſcarlet cloth cardinal, value 10s. one dimity petticoat, value 3s. two ſtuff petticoats, value 20s. five caps, with laced borders, value 6s. one yard of ſtuff, value 2s. and one linen napkin, value 18d. the property of Mary Price, widow.

A ſecond count for ſtealing the ſame goods in the ſame dwelling houſe, omitting the breaking and entering.

MARY PRICE ſworn.

I live in Mr. Henry Bowen's houſe, in Somers-ſtreet, in Cold-bath-fields: Mrs. Bowen is the priſoner's mother: on the 26th of November, I went out about ſeven o'clock in the morning, I left the landlady in the houſe, and every body that lives in the houſe, I ſtaid till almoſt ten o'clock; when I came home, I went to unlock my door, and found it open: I lodge up two pair of ſtairs, I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment, the priſoner confeſſed, on the 27th of November, when he was taken up, that he ſold the clothes for a guinea and an half, I urged him to tell me: I told him I would not trouble him if he would confeſs, but he never would tell where they were, nor what was become of the watch; he came up the next morning that I made the alarm, and I told him I had loſt my keys of my trunk, and he bid me look upon the bed under the things, and there I found them.

RICHARD HANWIN ſworn.

The priſoner ſent for me on the 26th of November, at ſeven o'clock at night, out of my work which was in Hare-ſtreet, Cold-bath Fields, and when I came over there, he gave me five ſhillings for ſome clothes that his maſter bought of me, a coat and waiſtcoat, and he aſked me to drink, and then he gave me a watch to keep for him till morning, he ſaid he was afraid of loſing it, I gave him the watch again, it was a white watch, I cannot be poſitive whether it was ſilver, and a white ſeal, and a ſteel chain, or an iron one.

Mrs. Price. Mine was a ſilver caſe, inſide and outſide, and a ſmall ſilver ſeal.

JOHNATHAN REDGRAVE ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner on an information, and took him before the magiſtrate: at firſt he totally denied any knowledge of the robbery, and we aſked him whether if the perſon was brought that he gave the watch to he would deny it then, he ſaid, there was no ſuch perſon, then we brought the laſt witneſs, and he told the priſoner to his face, that he did deliver ſuch a watch to him, and deſcribed it, and the priſoner ſeemed angry with him for acknowledging it: then he altered his mind, and ſaid he was the perſon that did commit the robbery, and that he had ſold the things to one Mr. Woolley, that keeps an old iron ſhop, for a guinea and an half, and half a crown, and the watch he had left with a man, but had not ſold it; we went immediately and ſearched the man's houſe, but could not find the things; we brought the man before the magiſtrate; then the priſoner denied the man, he ſaid, he was not the man; he then cried and ſaid, what a fool and villain am I to myſelf, this is the man I ſold the things to.

JOHN DINMORE ſworn.

What Redgrave has ſaid, is what paſſed before the magiſtrate, word for word.

RICHARD BROWN ſworn.

I had the priſoner in cuſtody, and during that time they went out and left him with me, he told me he ſold the watch to a man in Mutton-lane, and the man was brought before the magiſtrate, and then he denied that was the man, and when he was taken to gaol he ſaid it was.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

They took me to the publick houſe and gave me ſome beer, and they perſuaded me to ſay things that I did not know off the next morning.

Court. Was he ſober ?—Yes.

Court to Proſecutrix. What was the value of the things you loſt ?—I dare ſay ten or twelve pounds, they were almoſt all new things, he took all but what I had on when I was at my labour, and has entirely ruined me.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 30s. but not of breaking and entering.

Court to Priſoner. You have been, I am informed, capitally convicted three ſeſſions ago, and you have now had a very narrow eſcape indeed : if you come here a third time, in all probability it will be the laſt time you will ever come here at all.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

102. WILLIAM JONES was indicted for feloniouſly receiving on the 21ſt of October laſt, fourteen locks made of ſteel and braſs, value 4l. and ſeventeen iron keys, value 17s. the property of James Oldham, whereof William Lennard was at the laſt ſeſſions convicted of ſtealing, knowing them to have been ſtolen.

I am an ironmonger in Holborn, William Lennard was my ſervant, Mr. Blackborough ſent two of his people with ſome locks, deſiring me to look at them, they had been found in a houſe that he ſuſpected for ſtolen goods, I knew them immediately to be mine, they were patent locks, and had my marks on them, I went to Mr. Blackborough, he aſked me ſome queſtions which led me to ſupect the warehouſeman, he was a weekly ſervant, and we agreed that when he went home in the evening, he ſhould be followed and his lodgings ſearched, they followed him, and in a ſhort time they returned with him, and a conſiderable deal more property than had been taken that evening, in taxing him with it he was a good deal moved, and frankly confeſſed that he had robbed me of ſeveral things, then he equivocated by and by, and ſaid he intended to pay me two guineas which he had borrowed the next morning before the Juſtice.

Mr. Chetwood, Council for the Priſoner. I beg that Mr. Oldham may be ſtopped as to any thing that the other priſoner ſaid.

Mr. Oldham. After theſe people were taken up, the priſoner Jones came and appeared to be very buſy in getting theſe people off.

Are theſe part of the locks of which Lennard was convicted ?—Yes.

—— ISAACS ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I produce theſe locks, they were produced on the trial of Lennard.

Mr. Chetwood to Proſecutor. You ſell vaſt numbers of theſe locks ?—Yes Sir, I do, but I have the numbers down of all of them.

Did you know theſe were loſt before Lennard was apprehended ?—Theſe locks were marked and put into a particular ſhew-glaſs for gentlemen to ſee, they have been ſtolen out of that ſhew-glaſs, and have never been ſold, and they were hudled together with wrong keys.

Mr. Iſaacs. On the 21ſt of October a perſon came to Mr. Blackborough's office for a ſearch warrant to go to ſee for ſome property that had been ſtole from him, I went where I was directed to Mr. Dunn's in Turn-mill-ſtreet, I found nothing there that I went after, but on looking in a cloſet, concealed, I ſaw a quantity of theſe locks, I aſked Mrs. Dunn whoſe they were.

Mr. Garrow, another Council for the Priſoner. You muſt not tell us what ſhe ſaid.

Mr. Sylveſter Council for Proſecution. He muſt tell his ſtory.

Mr. Garrow. Then I will apply to the Court whether this man is to tell us what Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. Brett ſaid.

Court. No, Certainly not.

Mr. Sylveſter. When Jones was preſent what did they ſay?—Mrs. Brett declared ſhe had the property of Jones, and Jones has repeatedly at my houſe, offered Redgrave and me five guineas a piece not to ſay any thing about it, and that we might do what we would with the locks.

Where does Jones live?——In Fleet-lane.

What kind of a ſhop does he keep there?—An old iron ſhop.

You knew him before?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. You had no information on the ſubject of theſe locks?—No.

Your information was againſt Mrs. Dunn or her houſe?—Yes.

In which houſe Jones did not live?—No.

In which houſe he had no ſhop?——Not that I know of.

And in which houſe Jones did not carry on any buſineſs?——That I do not know, he might.

You and I have very different accounts of this offer?—Very likely.

Where did this happen?—At my houſe, he was a priſoner then.

In what way do you mean?——He was taken for receiving theſe things by Mrs. Brett's declaring ſhe had theſe things from him.

Was this an offer to ſuppreſs the evidence againſt Jones, or an offer of commiſeration to Mrs. Brett?——It was to ſuppreſs the evidence againſt Jones, he offered to give Redgrave and me five guineas apiece not to ſay any thing of the matter.

Mr. Garrow. I beg Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. Brett may go out of Court?—Court. It is too late now.

Will you ſwear this man was in cuſtody at that time?——Yes, it was after he was committed.

Did not he ſay he would rather give five guineas?—There was no ſaying rather five guineas at all about the matter, he poſitively declared he would give five guineas apiece, if we would ſay nothing about him.

Upon your oath was there at that time any intention of proſecuting Jones?—Yes, he was then committed.

Mr. Oldham. I had then taken a warrant out.

Mr. Garrow to Iſaacs. When was it?—The 22d of October, I believe it was three days after.

Mr. Sylveſter. The offer was after he was in cuſtody?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Do not you know that Jones himſelf went to Mr. Blackborough's, and was there diſcharged?—That was on the night of the 21ſt.

He went voluntarily to the Juſtice's?—I do not know that.

You did not take him there?—No.

Nor any body elſe to your knowledge?——No.

Do not you know that he went voluntarily?—I do not know.

What do you believe?——I cannot tell.

When did you apprehend him; on the 22d, 23d, or 24th?—I cannot rightly tell.

Come think a little, we muſt have it; did he come to your houſe, or did he not, Sir?—I believe he came to the office, but he was taken at home at his own houſe.

That is the queſtion that I aſked you juſt now, and you could not recollect it.

Mr. Sylveſter. What was that about handkerchiefs?

Mr. Garrow. Will your Lordſhip hear that.

Court. We have nothing to do with that.

Court to Iſaacs. When Mrs. Brett and Jones the priſoner were before the Juſtice confronted, and Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. Brett charged them with having given them the locks, and that they received them from him, did he diſown it?—He did.

JONATHAN REDGRAVE ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Silveſter.

You are one of the officers of juſtice?—Yes.

What do you know of theſe locks?—Mrs. Dunn very frankly told us ſhe had them of Mrs. Brett; I went to Mrs. Brett, ſhe was at home, and ſhe was taken up.

Mr. Silveſter. When Jones was before the magiſtrate, who did ſhe ſay ſhe had them from?—From Jones; Jones came the ſame night, and denied ſhe had them of him, he came the next morning to Mr. Iſaacs, he ſaid he would make an acknowledgment provided we would ſtifle the matter; he ſaid all theſe things ſhould be delivered up provided the matter was ſettled, and no proſecution had.

Did he make any offer to you?—I cannot ſay that he mentioned any particular ſum of money.

Croſs-examined by Mr. Chetwood.

Jones was not at that time in cuſtody.—I cannot ſay.

Mrs. Brett was in cuſtody.—Yes, Mrs. Dunn was diſcharged.

Jones came to that houſe, I ſuppoſe, as a friend to Mrs. Brett?—I ſhould ſuppoſe ſo.

Then he wiſhed to ſerve the woman who was in cuſtody, he himſelf being at large.—I cannot ſay whether he wiſhed to ſerve her or himſelf; he was at large, he came to the magiſtrate's and denied knowing any thing of the things.

ELIZABETH DUNN ſworn.

I live in Turnmill-ſtreet.

Where does Mr. Brett live?—In Turnmill-ſtreet.

Where had you them braſs locks and keys that were found in your houſe by the officer?—I had them from Mrs. Brett about three hours before they were found.

Do you know from your own knowledge who ſhe had them from?—No.

How came they to be brought to your houſe?—Mrs. Brett told me ſhe was going in the country, and aſked me to let her leave them there.

Mr. Garrow. Pray Mrs. Dunn what may you be?—What am I?

Aye, what are you?—My huſband is a bricklayer, I keep an iron ſhop.

The ſame way of buſineſs as the priſoner?—I keep a bit of an iron ſhop.

Your's is only a bit of one; who is Mrs. Brett?—Who is ſhe, Sir, ſhe is a neighbour.

Does ſhe carry on any buſineſs?—Yes.

A bit of an iron ſhop too, perhaps; well, the officers came to your houſe about ſome other buſineſs. They found nothing but theſe things that belonged to ſhe.

What were they brought to your houſe for?—Till ſhe came out of the country.

Was you to do nothing with them in the mean time?—Nothing Sir, ſhe thought her houſe was not ſafe enough, for the lock ſhe had on her door was not a good one, and any body could get in, and ſhe was afraid of being robbed.

Did ſhe bring all all her property?—That, and a great deal more.

Did thoſe officers take the reſt of her things?—Yes, they took them all.

This was not old iron that wanted ſuch ſafe cuſtody, may be there was a little plate?—No, no plate.

A little linen?—I ſuppoſe that gentleman knows what there was.

We would rather have it from you, what there was that belonged to Mrs. Brett?—I cannot tell you what they were, I did not examine, and they had nothing belonging to me.

Theſe people took you away I believe?—I was obliged to go to ſay how I came by them.

I ſuppoſe you mean juſt what I ſaid, that they took you away?—No, they did not.

Had not they a warrant againſt you?—That I do not know.

What do you believe about it?—I do not believe any thing about it, I cannot believe, becauſe I do not think any thing about it; I went to Juſtice Blackborough's.

You had been there before perhaps?—No, never in my life.

You did not ſuppoſe you was going to pay a viſit of compliments to the Juſtice? No, Sir, I was not qualified for that.

Did you go there as the receiver of theſe goods, knowing them to be ſtolen?—No, Sir, that I did not.

You ſaid you received them from Mrs. Brett, and ſhe went there in the character of the thief?—What character ſhe went in I do not know, I had them from ſhe, and that is all I have to ſay.

She was taken in conſequence of a warrant?—I do not know, when the officers came to me I told them they were very welcome to ſearch.

Mr. Silveſter. Why Mrs. Brett was a neighbour of yours, and lived within a few doors?—Yes, I did not think any harm.

Mr. Garrow. Mrs. Brett was not gone out of town?—She was to go that ſame evening.

But you found her when you wanted her?—Yes.

FRANCES BRETT ſworn.

I live in Turnmill-ſtreet, within a few doors of Mrs. Dunn, I keep an iron ſhop, I have known Jones theſe two or three years, theſe braſs locks which were left at Mrs. Dunns, I received of Mr. Jones, he gave them to me.

How long before?—Five or ſix days before, I never opened them, but one of the papers was broke.

Did any thing particular paſs when he left theſe locks?—No further than he brought them in, and laid them down on the corner of the counter.

Did he ſay any thing to you about them afterwards?—Not that I recollect, I ſaw him at Juſtice Blackborough's, he then ſaid the locks were none of his, and he did not give them to me, he never ſaid any thing to me himſelf, he ſent word for me to ſay I bought them of ſomebody elſe, but I never ſaid any other than that I had them of him.

Upon your oath, had you the locks of him?—I had.

And he deſired you to take care of them?—Yes.

Mr. Chetwood. When was it that theſe people came to ſearch your houſe?—They did not ſearch my houſe, they came to me the ſame day they ſearched Mrs. Dunn's houſe, that was the 21ſt.

How long was it before they were found, that you carried them to Mrs. Dunn's?—Mrs. Dunn had them of me at my houſe a few hours before.

You did not carry them then to Mrs. Dunn's, and tell her you was going into the country?—Mrs. Dunn carried them home herſelf.

Nor you did not carry any bundles of linen to Mrs. Dunn's?—Yes, ſeveral times, but I had carried none that day.

Did you give her nothing elſe that day?—Nothing but a bit of cotton for a gown, that was at my own houſe; I had had the locks five or ſix days before, I am ſure of that; I never had any converſation with Jones afterwards, but before the Juſtice; he laid them down on the corner of our counter, and ſaid, take care of them.

In that five or ſix days you heard nothing more from Jones?—Not that I recollect.

I believe you have, before now, taken care of Jones's ſhop?—The week before I did.

You have managed his ſhop when he has been out of town?—I bought nothing, nor ſold nothing for him, only looked after it.

You ſay upon the 21ſt, when they came to examine your houſe, you had been in poſſeſſion of the locks five or ſix days?—I cannot ſay how many days.

Was you at Mr. Blackborough's when Lennard was examined?—I was.

Was not it aſked by Mr. Blackborough to Lennard, if he could find out the man?——Lennard ſaid he did not know Jones, when the queſtion was put to Lennard.

How far was Jones from him at the time?—Cloſe by him on the other ſide.

Did he look about for him?—He pretended to look about and did not ſee him.

You made no information, nor ſaid any thing of it, till you yourſelf was apprehended and in cuſtody?—No.

Mr. Silveſter. Then you knew Jones very well before this?—I have known him theſe many years.

Where was the linen from, that you have been aſked after?—I had it of Mr. Jones.

You had frequently things of Mr. Jones. ——Yes, I have had linens and muſlins.

Court to Mrs. Brett. What reaſon did you give Mrs. Dunn for leaving theſe things with her?—I left them with her to take care of, I have nothing in my own houſe, and if I had loſt them, may be Mr. Jones would have valued them more than I could have paid for.

Jury. Was any perſon preſent when the priſoner at the bar delivered you the locks which you underſtand to be the things mentioned in the indictment?—There was nobody preſent.

Where did he deliver them? In my ſhop.

You never ſaw the packet opened?——No.

Priſoner. I leave my defence to my Counſel.

The witneſſes for the priſoner examined apart.

AMOS ADAMS ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Garrow.

I am apprentice to the priſoner's father, I am employed in the ſhop of the priſoner, I know Mrs Brett.

Had ſhe and your maſter ſometimes dealings?—I believe ſhe had, but not to my knowledge.

Do you recollect at any time any thing paſſing between Mrs. Brett and the priſoner, with reſpect to any locks?—No, on the 29th of September Mrs. Brett came and aſked if my maſter was come home, he had been in the country; upon being informed that he was not, ſhe addreſſed herſelf to Mr. Woodward, who was in the ſhop, and aſked him if he knew any body that wanted a good lock, and he told her no: My maſter was at Cambridge, Mrs. Brett was left to mind the ſhop; there was no buſineſs, if there had ſhe would have ſeen what had been bought, ſhe was in the ſhop during the time my maſter was in the country; ſhe went away every night, ſhe came there from morning to evening, he was gone eight days before that, he went on the Monday and came home on the Monday.

Who is Woodward?—He lives there, he was to lay down at my maſter's ſhop during the time of my maſter's abſence: Mrs. Brett aſked him if he had any acquaintance that wanted a good lock or two, and ſhe ſhewed him ſome, and I believe ſold him two, but I will not be ſure whether ſhe ſold him any or not; he was to ſell them for her, I did not hear her mention the price, I was obliged to go into the ſhop, I had ſome buſineſs to do there, there was a cuſtomer; the locks ſeemed to be braſs and iron locks for boxes.

Were they high finiſhed locks?—They were very well finiſhed, whether he bought any I cannot ſay, nor the price, I did not ſee any left there, there was none left there.

Did the trade ſtand ſtill entirely while your maſter was out of town?—No, I ſold what I could, and if an opportunity offered bought.

Croſs Examined by Mr. Silveſter.

How long have you been with him?—Five years, I was bound apprentice to the father, he is a tin-plate-worker, and to ſerve under the ſon.

You underſtand the buſineſs pretty well I take it at this time?—The brokery buſineſs.

What day did he go out of town?—It was Monday when he went out, and the 29th of September, which was the Monday after, he returned at ten o'clock; theſe locks were iron and braſs locks.

Common locks?—I do not think they were common, they looked to be very bright, the inſide was ſteel and the outſide braſs.

Mrs. Brett and your maſter had great dealings together?——If there was it was unknown to me.

You only buy old iron?—It is an old iron and broker's ſhop.

Your maſter deals in muſlin?—I believe he does, he buys any thing what he can.

What did he go out of town for?—He went with a neighbour to an acquaintance that was in the country, he was going to Sturbridge Fair with the acquaintance.

Did he leave word where he was to be found, if Mr. Catchpole, or any body in the city called on him?—Yes, he was at home till he was taken up.

Then Mrs. Brett did not manage his ſhop when he was at home?—No.

Nor his friend Mr. Woodward?—No.

GEORGE WOODWARD ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Chetwood.

Do you know Mrs. Brett?—Yes.

How long have you known her?—About five or ſix months.

Where do you live?—In Fleet-lane; I am a neighbour of the priſoner's, I do not live at his houſe.

Did Mrs. Brett ever bring any locks of any particular make to you at any time, and offer them to ſell?——On the 29th of September laſt I was at Mr. Jones's ſhop, Mrs. Brett came and enquired if Mr. Jones was at home, the boy ſaid he was not, I was going by, and ſhe aſked me if I knew any body that wanted a good lock or two, and ſhe gave me two to ſell for her; ſhe was to allow me ſomething for my trouble.

Have you ever returned thoſe locks to her?—No.

Have you got them by you?—Yes.

Shew them to the Court. Was Adams by at the time?—He was.

(Two locks produced.)

Croſs-Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

What are you pray?—A carpenter, undertaker, and broker.

That is your buſineſs?—Yes.

No other?—No.

No old iron ſhop?—Yes, I keep an old iron ſhop at the ſame time.

Where is your iron ſhop?—In Fleet-lane, next door to the Fellowſhip-porter, I have a ſhop of my own which I attend to, but during Mr. Jones's abſence he deſired me to look in now and then; I have no further concerns: I attend it now, but not to tranſact any buſineſs, he deſired me to lay there in caſe any thing ſhould happen, there is nobody elſe in the houſe but the boy; I never go there till night.

Do you know a man of the name of Small?—Yes, exceeding well.

Do you know a man of the name of Iſaac Taylor?—I cannot ſay I do.

Do you know Holmes?—I know him exceeding well, he ſerves me with hats.

Where was the plan laid of producing theſe locks?—There was do plan laid at all.

Where was it firſt thought of?—It was at Mr. Jones's ſhop ſhe firſt came in.

Where have you had the conſultation about it?—I never had any conſultation with any perſon at any time, to the beſt of my knowledge, and I am pretty ſure.

To the beſt of your knowledge?—I have not, I never had any conſultation at all.

Now I will tell you where and when it was; it was the beginning of laſt week, in Newgate.

Was you there the beginning of laſt week, upon your oath?—I have been there numbers of times, I cannot ſpecify that particular time.

Was not there a conſultation with you and all the people in Newgate the beginning of laſt week, when this very plan was agreed to be ſet up?—It was not.

Was you in Newgate laſt week?—With Jones.

Who was in company?—Nobody that I know of particularly, I cannot recollect any perſon particular.

Who did you go with?—I did not go along with any body.

Who did you meet there?—Nobody particular.

Will you ſwear that Small was not there?—I will not take upon myſelf to ſwear that; I go there every day, very ſeldom I miſs.

Will you ſwear that Small and Holmes were not there at the conſultation?—Not to my knowledge.

Will you ſwear they were not?—I cannot pretend to recollect.

It is not ſo long ago?—I do not know there was any made then.

Where was it made then?—Nowhere at all.

Was you there with Small?—Small was there one day laſt week.

Did you ſee Holmes there laſt week?—I did nor.

Did you ſee Taylor?—I do not know ſuch a perſon by the name.

Mrs. Brett is there: will you, upon your oath, ſay you bought theſe locks of Mrs. Brett?—I did not buy them of her, ſhe left them with me, theſe were the two; I never ſaw any thing of the kind before.

Did you not know Jones was taken up in October?—I know he was taken up on ſuſpicion of it.

You do not remember the month, perhaps you may remember the ſeſſions better?—It was before laſt ſeſſions.

Mrs. Brett. I never offered a lock to that man in my life: upon my oath, I never ſaw thoſe two locks till I ſee them now.

JAMES WATKINS ſworn.

I am a paper ſtainer; I have known Jones five or ſix years, and my wife has known him ever ſince he was born; I never knew any thing amiſs of him for my own part.

You believe him to be an honeſt man?—I know nothing to the contrary.

Mr. Sylveſter. Where do you live?—I keep a publick houſe in Fleet-lane.

Did you never hear any harm of him?—With reſpect to his way, of dealing is no buſineſs of mine.

Did you hear of his being in trouble?—I have.

For what?—I do not know; ſome time ago there was ſomething happened; I did not live at this end of the town, I came here by accident.

Do not you know friend he was tried here?

Mr. Garrow. And do not you know too that he was acquitted?

Court. It is a pretty bold thing to come and give a man a good character whom you know to have been tried here.

FOR THE PROSECUTION.

RICHARD SMALL ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Do you know Woodward?—Yes, very well.

Where does he live?—In Fleet-lane, he is an undertaker by trade, and keeps an iron ſhop beſides.

Who was in company with you laſt week along with Jones?—Mr. Woodward and I went in together to ſee Mr. Jones.

What was the converſation?—In regard that he would ſatiſfy me as far as lay in his power, that Woodward himſelf had bought ſome locks, or a lock, he did not ſay where he bought them.

What was he to do with theſe locks that he had bought; do recollect yourſelf; you have told Catchpole?—I never told Catchpole: he was to bring them here to ſhew that he bought ſome locks; he never told me who he bought them of.

Croſs-Examined by Mr. Garrow.

Where was this converſation?—In Woodward's own little room in his houſe, and once in Newgate.

So then this terrible conſpiracy and conſultation turns out to be no more than this, that Woodward was telling Jones what he could ſay with truth upon the trial: he did not ſay a ſyllable about the purpoſe of producing them here?—No.

What are you?—A plane maker, my wife keeps an iron ſhop.

Priſoner. Mrs. Brett has been in Newgate a number of times ſince I have been there, and ſaid, ſhe deſerved to be there inſtead of me.

Mr. Sylveſter. Theſe locks were not loſt till October, and thoſe they produce were bought as they ſay on the 29th of September.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for fourteen years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

103. SARAH THURLIN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of November laſt, one linen ſheet, value 2s. two table cloths, value 5s. one napkin, value 1s. one pillow caſe, value 1s. twelve knives and forks, value 6d. two glaſſes, value 1s. one tea-pot, value 6d. one cream-pot, value 2d. the property of Thomas Belton.

And ELIZABETH COURTNEY was indicted for receiving the ſame goods, knowing them to have been ſtolen.

FRANCES HART ſworn.

I am Mr. Belton's ſiſter; on the evening of the 29th of November, the priſoner Courtney was taken up on another charge, and ſhe deſired me to go to Mrs. Riley's and deſire her to get the box and all the things; Mrs. Courtney did not know what was in the box, but ſhe had left it there; I went there and found the box, the things that were in it belonged to Mr. Belton, and have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince. (Some of the things depoſed to.) The things were carried the ſame evening to the watch-houſe, where the priſoner Thurlin was, and ſhe opened them herſelf: there was no promiſe made her, but on condition of her telling whether ſhe had any thing elſe, which ſhe never did, ſhe ſaid ſhe knew the things were Mr. Belton's property, and that ſhe took them for her own uſe, ſhe did not ſay when ſhe took them.

ELIZABETH RILEY ſworn.

I was preſent when theſe things were found in my houſe, Mrs. Courtney brought them to my houſe the 29th of November, in the morning, ſhe deſired I would be ſo good as to take care of them till ſhe called for them.

WILLIAM PASSLEY ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoners; I found Mrs. Courtney ſhut into a cloſet or a bed place.

THOMAS BELTON ſworn.

I keep the Golden-Croſs, Charing-Croſs; I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment, and before Sir Sampſon Wright the priſoner Thurlin confeſſed to the things, and where the box was; I told her, if ſhe would confeſs I would forgive her; ſhe ſaid, there was not another thing but what ſhe had told me of, and the next day the box came; I imagine ſhe was accuſed of a ſheet at firſt.

Did ſhe tell you of theſe things before they were produced to her?—No.

After that box was found, did you then make her any promiſe of favour?—I did not, I heard her confeſs that all theſe things were my property.

A written confeſſion, ſigned by the Priſoner and by Sir Sampſon Wright, witneſſed by Frances Hardy, Read.

"Sarah Thurlin, her mark."

"The examination of Sarah Thurlin, charged with felony, 1ſt December, 1783."

Court to Hardy. Was there any promiſe made her by the magiſtrate or the proſecutor, previous to making her confeſſion?—No.

"That ſhe this examinant, about a "month ago, feloniouſly ſtole in the houſe

“ of the ſaid Thomas Belton, (the things “ mentioned in the indictment,) and ſealed “ them up in a box, and gave the ſaid box “ with its contents to Elizabeth Courtney, “ a perſon who was then at the houſe of “ the ſaid Thomas Belton, and deſired her “ to take care of it, and afterwards deſired “ her to remove it to ſome other place, “ where it would be more ſecure.” Courtney ſaid ſhe did not know what was in it, but the maid had given her that box, and told her it came from Woolwich, and deſired her to take care of it.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

Court to Hardy. Before Courney was apprehended, did not ſhe know that Thurlin was accuſed of ſtealing theſe things?—I do not know that ſhe did, Courtney directed me to Mrs. Riley's on Saturday evening; after ſhe was taken up, I went to her lodgings the day before concerning ſome things ſhe had pawned.

Court. Then Courtney knew on the the 28th that there was a charge againſt Thurlin?—No ſhe did not, ſhe was not taken up then, it was the laundry maid that was taken up.

SARAH THURLIN, GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and confined to hard labour two years in the houſe of correction.

ELIZABETH COURTNEY, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

---

104. THOMAS GRAINGER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 5th of November laſt, one leg of mutton, value 2s. and two loins of mutton, value 5s. the property of Elizabeth Kynaſton.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

105. WILLIAM COCKBULL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 10th of December, two marble mortars, value 10s. 6d. the property of Thomas Piper.

GUILTY.

To be whipped.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

GUILTY.

To be whipped.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

108. JOHN PETIT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 8th of December laſt, one worſted carpet, value 25s. the property of Elizabeth Gardner, widow.

GUILTY.

To be whipped.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

108. ANTHONY

109. ANTHONY LETOOT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 10th of November laſt, one linen handkerchief, value 1s. the property of a perſon unknown.

GUILTY.

To be whipped.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

110. JOHN ARROWSMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 20th of November laſt, a gallon pewter pot, value 5s. the property of John Holmes.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

111. BENJAMIN BURRELL was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Mary the wife of Robert Oliver, on the King's highway, on the 18th of November laſt, and putting her in fear, and taking from her a cloth great coat, value 10s. the property of the ſaid Robert.

MARY OLIVER ſworn.

My huſband had a coat lent him on Sunday evening by a gentleman, and I was carrying it home between ſix and ſeven on Tueſday night, two men came paſt me, one ſnatched the coat from me, and the other threw himſelf down at my feet, and I fell over him; it was in Watling-ſtreet, I called ſtop thief, and followed him as faſt as I could to the end of Friday-ſtreet, he turned up there, and was ſtopped in the middle of the ſtreet, and one of the witneſſes brought the coat to me, it was the coat that was taken from me, it was the property of Samuel Watſon.

Court to Jury. I doubt whether in this caſe there is any property in the proſecutor, it differs from the caſe, ſhe was the carrier, and I think the property of this is wrong laid in the indictment, and in point of law the priſoner muſt be acquitted; at all events the caſe does not come up to the indictment, which is for a highway robbery, for the coat was not obtained from her by threat or violence, and the man throwing himſelf down for her to fall down, in order that the other might avoid the purſuit, was a ſubſequent tranſaction, and could not alter the circumſtances of the robbery at all.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

112. JOSEPH GEORGE, otherwiſe PORTUGUESE GEORGE was indicted, for that he on the 26th day of November laſt, about the hour of nine in the morning, the dwelling houſe of William Wright feloniouſly did break and enter, one Elizabeth Wright being therein, and twenty guineas, value 21l. and twenty-three half guineas, value 12l. 1s. 6d. in monies numbered, the monies of the ſaid William Wright, in the ſaid dwelling houſe, then and there being feloniouſly did ſteal, take and carry away.

I am a brandy merchant the corner of the Fleet market, on Wedeſday morning the 26th of November, about nine, I had told out two parcels of money, one was twenty guineas, and in the other was twenty-five half guineas; and I put the two parcels on my deſk, about a foot and an half from the window next the ſtreet, I was gone about five minutes, and on my return the window had been thrown up, and the money taken from the top of the deſk, the window was ſhut when I went out and I believe it was ſhut when I returned.

ZEPHANIAH LAMBERT ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner on the 26th of November, about a quarter after nine, ſtanding facing the poulterer's door, facing the gulley hole, I have known the priſoner theſe eight or ten years as a weaver, I never knew any harm of him in my life, I took him to be a pigeon-flier; you may underſtand that.

What made you think he was a pigeon flier, they do not ſtand ſtill?—Yes, they do ſometimes, when their parties are gone into the office to do the numbers that they have been running for, I ſaw him ran very hard about a minute or two before, when he came to the Fleet he croſſed the way, and met ſome people and they joined him.

I attend at the Public Office in Hyde-ſtreet, Bloomſbury, I took the priſoner into cuſtody, and he denied his name was Joſeph George coming along, but at the Juſtices he owned it.

DANIEL GUILFOY ſworn.

The priſoner had part of the money.

Court. I have great doubts whether you have laid a foundation for the evidence of this man who is an accomplice.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Proſecution. His being ſeen on the ſpot at the time.

Court. So were twenty more people.

Court to Jury. There is no evidence whatever that affects the priſoner at preſent, and therefore, the law will not permit us to hear the accomplice.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

113. GODFREY STEELE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th of December, twenty pounds weight of lump ſugar, value 20s. the property of Robert Davis and Charles Higgins.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

114. JOSEPH POLTER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th of November laſt, one pewter quart pot, value 10d. the property of John Surflun.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

115. The ſaid JOSEPH POLTER was again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th of November laſt, one pint pot, value 6d. the property of the ſaid John Surflun.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

116. GEORGE WHIFFIN was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Mary Compton, on the King's highway, on the 7th of December and putting her in fear, and feloniouſly taking from her, one woollen great coat, value 5s. the property of Duncan Robertſon.

Continuation of the Trial of George Whiffin.

MARY COMPTON ſworn.

I live in Baker's Row, Whitechapel, I was going over to Mr. Robertſon's facing my houſe, I was upon my own ſteps about half paſt five o'clock in the evening, and the priſoner came up to me and laid hold of the coat, I was not willing to give it up, and he pulled it ſo hard that I ſlipped down the ſteps; it was a child's great coat, belonging to Mr. Robertſon, the publican, I am ſure the priſoner is the perſon.

Court. Did the priſoner forcibly take it from you?—Yes, he ſaid nothing to me, and after he had got the coat, he took his hat off his head and violently threw it at me; I picked up the hat and carried it into Mr. Robertſon's houſe, and told him I was robbed, he purſued the priſoner, who ran away with the coat.

DUNCAN ROBERTSON ſworn.

In the evening of the 7th of December, which was a Sunday evening, Miſs Compton, who lives at the ſchool where my children go, came over for the great coat, which ſhe had, and in two minutes ſhe came back again and ſaid, ſhe was robbed, I purſued the boy and took him, there were three boys in the party, another of them had the great coat, which is in Court: I diſtinguiſhed him by his being without his hat.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay in my defence. I am not guilty.

On Sunday night the 7th of laſt month, the Sunday before laſt, as the priſoner was going down White-row, I ſaw him take a great coat from this young lady, I was juſt by him, he gave it me, I was in his company, we ran down the next ſtreet, the gentleman took the priſoner, and I threw it on a tree, I do not know what became of it.

Jury. What are you?—I live with my father, I am a weaver.

Jury to Priſoner. What age are you? —Turned of twelve.

What kind of life have you been in?—I worked for one gentleman three years, he is not here, he was here all day yeſterday.

JOHN BLOGG ſworn.

I knew the priſoner before he knew himſelf, his father is a maſter trimming-weaver, the priſoner has been trained up always under his father, his father failed ten or eleven years ago.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Common SERJEANT.

---

117. ANN LAWLER was indicted for feloniouſly making an aſſault on the King's highway, upon George Anderſon, on the 15th of November laſt, and putting him in danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, four guineas, value 4l. 4s. and one half-guinea, value 10s. 6d. and two half-crowns, value 5s. his property.

GEORGE ANDERSON ſworn.

On the evening of November the 15th, about eleven o'clock, I was robbed, I was in the houſe of George Williams in Croſs Lane, and the priſoner was in the houſe, when I paid for my beer I took out my purſe, but recollecting I had ſome money in my other pocket, I put my purſe in my pocket, and went out to make water, the priſoner followed me into the yard and took hold of me round the middle, and on her going away I ſuſpected ſhe had robbed me, and attempted to follow her, but ſhe had faſtened the door, I went in to the landlord and deſcribed her to him, and ſaid, ſhe had robbed me.

Court. Was you ſober?——I was not drunk.

Are you ſure it was in your pocket when you went out of the houſe?—Yes.

What was in it?—Four guineas and a half and two half-crowns pieces, I am ſure that is the woman.

GEORGE WILLIAMS ſworn.

I remember this man coming into my houſe, between eleven and twelve o'clock, and calling for a pint of beer, I took it to him, I ſaw the purſe in his hand, he ſoon after went out and came in again, and ſaid the woman had robbed him, he was not in liquor, there was other people in the houſe.

JACOB FREEMAN ſworn.

I took the priſoner, I found nothing upon her.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was drinking a pint of beer, and the priſoner came and drank out of my beer, he ſaid, he had a pint of beer coming and I ſhould drink with him; I then went home, I never took any thing from him.

GUILTY,

Of ſtealing, but not of putting in fear.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

118. MARY BOTTEN and ELIZABETH CUNNINGHAM were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th of November laſt, thirteen yards of ſilk called ſattin, value 4l. the property of Robert Wynne, privily in his ſhop.

WILLIAM LLOYD ſworn.

On the 12th of November laſt, a man came into our ſhop I had a ſuſpicion of, he aſked for ſome ſilks, ſome grave ſilks, upon aſking what they were, he aſked for a card of the ſhop and went out; this woman (Potten) came in very ſoon after, and aſked for ſome white mode, and Cunningham alſo came in and aſked if that was mode on the counter, I ſaid, it was not, I called the boy, and I went to the glaſs, and I turned, and ſaw Mrs. Potten doubling this under her cloak, I immediately went to look at the parcel, and found a piece was gone, when ſhe ſaw my maſter come into the ſhop ſhe let it fall.

Court. Are you ſure it fell from her?—Yes.

Did you ſee it?—Yes, I heard it fall, and picked it up.

Might it not have fallen off the counter?—No.

Is that your maſter's ſattin?—Yes, I know it by the marks.

PRISONER POTTEN'S DEFENCE.

I never ſaw this woman in my life.

PRISONER CUNNINGHAM'S DEFENCE.

I went in to buy a piece of mode, I never touched any thing.

MARY POTTEN,
ELIZ. CUNNINGHAM, } GUILTY.

Of ſtealing but not privily.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

121. JOSEPH BARRET was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th of December laſt, twelve pounds weight of gunpowder, value 10s. and one wooden caſk, value 6d. the property of Henry Hall.

GUILTY.

To be fined one ſhilling, and impriſoned three months in Newgate.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

122. ALEXANDER DUFF was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th of November, one black ſilk cloak, value 20s. the property of Eleanor Dodd.

REBECCA LEFEVRE ſworn.

I live with Mrs. Dodd, milliner, in Cranbourn Alley, ſhe loſt a black ſilk cloak, on the 13th of November, it was taken away from the door, where they uſually hang, I do not know who took it: Mr. Williams brought it in to me I knew it by the mark, I ſaw it that morning.

(The cloak produced and depoſed to.)

——— WILLIAMS ſworn.

I had this cloak from one Harris a blackſmith at the back of my houſe, it was thrown into this ſhop, I brought it to this young lady.

I am a ſhoe-maker, I live at the corner of Cranbourn Alley, I have frequently ſeen the priſoner hanging about in the afternoons, and on the 13th of November laſt, I ſaw the priſoner hanging about at the corner of Rider's Court, and have often ſeen him him try at the cloaks at the doors, this was about nine in the morning, I ſaw him ſnatch the cloak from Mrs. Dodd's door, and run away with it, he ran up Earls Court, and I knew he had it under his coat all the way, and he fell down at the top of the Court, and I caught him and brought him back, and the boys ſaid he had thrown the cloak in the ſmith's ſhop.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

On the 13th of November, I was going to my work, and that gentleman ſtopt me, and ſaid, I had ſtolen a cloak, I ſaid, he might ſearch me, I was ſurprized he ſhould charge a man going about his buſineſs.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

123. JENNET MITCHELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 28th day of November laſt, two linen table cloths, value 3s. the property of James Belton.

GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labour ſix months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

---

124. SAMUEL HARRISON was indicted for felonionſly ſtealing, on the 9th of December, one wooden till, value 4d. a piece of baſe metal made to the likeneſs of a ſhilling, value 2d. and twenty-eight ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of Thomas Grainger.

THOMAS GRAINGER ſworn.

I am a publican, I was robbed about half paſt ſeven this day week of my till and money, the till was in the bar, my girl called me down and ſaid Mr. Harriſon has got the till, I ſeized him with the till, he was taken before the Juſtice.

ELIZABETH HANWELL ſworn.

I live with Mr. Grainger, I ſaw the priſoner at our houſe ſeven between and eight, he called for a pint of beer, and was ſtanding by the bar door; there is a little window at the head of the cellar ſtairs, and I ſaw the priſoner go into the bar, I was looking through this window to the head of the cellar ſtairs, he went to the till and took it out, I came round and ſaid Mr. Harriſon has got the till, he put the flap of his coat over it, my maſter jumped and catched him in the paſſage, and took the till out of his hand.

Court. Were there many people in the room?—Only two or three.

(The till produced.)

——— CRISPER ſworn.

I am a carman, and I was ſitting down by the fire, I helped to ſeize the priſoner, and ſaw the till taken out of his hand.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went into the bar for a pipe, and I ſaw this till open, and I took it, and gave it to Mr. Grainger, I thought it would have been loſt.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

125. JOHN CARTY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt of November, a black ſilk handkerchief, value 12d. a pair of cotton ſtockings, value 6d. and one yard and half of ribbon, value 6d. the property of Ann Daughin, and one pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles, value 20s. the property of Richard Nugent.

ANN DAUGHIN ſworn.

I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; there was no lock on my box nor on my door.

RICHARD NUGENT ſworn.

I lodged in the houſe with this young woman, the priſoner laid in the ſame room with me, and I loſt my ſilver buckles: I had taken ſomething for a bad cold that I had, which made me fall aſleep, and whilſt I was aſleep theſe buckles were taken out of my breeches pocket.

Priſoner. There was another man ſlept in the ſame room.

Nugent. He ſlept on the outſide of the door.

WILLIAM SPENCE ſworn.

I bought theſe buckles the 21ſt of October of the priſoner, I did not aſk him how he came by them, I gave him two ſhillings and ſixpence for them.

(The buckles depoſed to.)

JOHN TATT ſworn.

I belong to the Rotation Office in Whitechapel, I ſearched the priſoner the 31ſt of October, and I found this ribbon, this handkerchief, and theſe ſtockings in his pocket.

Priſoner. I bought theſe things.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

126. THOMAS WELLS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th of December laſt, one ſilver cream pot, value 18s. the property of Sophia Watts. And BRIDGET SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly receiving on the ſame day, the ſame goods, knowing them to be ſtolen.

SOPHIA WATTS ſworn.

I loſt this ſilver cream pot on Wedneſday laſt, I live in Little Chapel-ſtreet, Soho; I had a chimney ſweeper about one o'clock, and after he was gone, when we went to tea, we miſſed the milk pot.

Is the priſoner one of them that ſwept your chimney that day?—Yes.

LOUISA WOOTTEN ſworn.

I live with Mrs. Watts, her kitchen chimney was ſwept laſt Wedneſday, the priſoner was one of the ſweepers, there were two more, another boy and a man, this boy's maſter; I ſaw the cream pot in the morning: I miſſed it at five, I ſet the tea things and I could not find the milk pot, and I am very ſure that nobody, but Mrs. Watts and myſelf had been in the kitchen, I went to ſeek for the chimney ſweeper, and I found him, and we found Wells, and he was ſearched, nothing was found on him, he would not own it, and his maſter ſaid, he knew a place where he uſed to take things, and he took us to the priſoner Smith's houſe, and ſhe diſowned it at firſt, that ſhe had ever ſeen the boy, ſhe keeps a ſhop: then one of her lodgers ſat by the fire, and ſhe told her to go and fetch it, and the conſtable and the proſecutor went to the pawnbroker's: The pawnbroker has it here.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Priſoner Smith. Who is Mrs. Watts?—A widow.

You know nothing of the boy?—No, only from the report of the maſter.

THOMAS BROWN ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, I took in this milk pot December the 10th, about three or four o'clock, of one Mary Wayland, ſhe ſaid, ſhe brought it for her landlady, but I took it in her own name, that is in the name of Wagan, ſhe ſaid her landlady was one Mrs. Smith, I lent her thirteen ſhillings on it.

MARY WAYLAND ſworn.

I lodge at the priſoner Smith's, ſhe is a very honeſt woman, and keeps a regular houſe, and ſhe called me down ſtairs out of my room, and ſhe ſaid I want a little money, go and leave this where it will be ſafe, and get me a duplicate, ſhe is as honeſt a woman as ever I lived with.

Did ſhe ſay whoſe it was?——No.

You have lodged ſo long in her houſe, did you ever ſee ſuch a thing in her houſe?——Never, but ſhe might have more value than that, ſhe is a decent houſekeeper, Sir.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, I ſubmit to the Court that here is no evidence againſt the principal, and therefore none againſt the receiver.

Priſoner's Counſel to Mr. Wayland. This was given to you publickly?—In her own paſſage.

No deſire to conceal it at all?——No, none at all.

She is a very honeſt woman?—Yes.

PRISONER SMITH's DEFENCE.

That is the woman that this lad gave the milk pot to; aſk the lad.

Wayland. I never ſaw the lad till I ſaw him that night.

JOHN ROBINS ſworn.

I am a bricklayer, I live in Gray's-inn-lane, I know the priſoner Smith, her huſband is a labourer, I have known her about three years, they are tenants to me, and if I had not a good character of them, I would not have let them my houſe.

Has ſhe any children?——She has had children, but I believe ſhe has none now.

Jury to Brown. Is not it cuſtomary with people to pledge goods in different names?—Yes they do, but we do not know of any other name that ſhe had.

Court to Jury. I think Mary Wayland ſtands in ſome degree in a ſuſpicious ſituation; and this evidence is defective, though there is evidence to come home to the receiver, her ſending this woman to pawn this cream-pot which ſhe muſt know was not her's; yet by law ſhe cannot be convicted as the receiver, unleſs we can convict the principal, and againſt him there is no evidence at all, only that he was ſeen in the houſe with another boy and his maſter; it is very ſlight evidence, but I ſhall leave it to you.

THOMAL WELLS, GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labor ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

BRIDGET SMITH, GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron HOTHAM.

129. JOHN MURPHY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 3d of November laſt, one metal watch, value 10l. one ſteel watch chain, value 3s. one braſs watch key, value 2d. and three ſteel hooks, value 1d. the property of Anthony Aſſerettie, privily from his perſon.

On the 3d of November I went to Drury-lane play-houſe, two minutes after I had been in the paſſage, I looked at my watch to ſee what time I had to wait before the door was opened, it wanted about three minutes to a quarter of an hour, and I put my watch into my pocket again; as ſoon as I had put my watch in my pocket, the priſoner who ſtood at ſome diſtance, there being two or three perſons between him and me, I obſerved him move from his place, and come between, I thought he meant to go away, and I made room for him to go paſt, but when he was near me he ſtopped, and therefore I remained where I was, the door opened in a minute, or a minute and an half, or two minutes, or thereabouts, and in the ſcuffle of the people puſhing, I ſaw the priſoner very buſy about me, I felt him abſolutely take my watch from me, I diſentangled my hands as ſoon as I could, and I took hold of him by the collar, he ſtruggled to get away from me, and in truth, by the people that were there with him, and his puſhing, we were drawn towards the door that leads into the ſtreet, when we were at the door, I had the good luck, if I may call it ſo, of taking hold of his coat, in running away, I fell down and hurted my leg very much, part of the coat remained in my hands, I cried out ſtop thief, and a perſon over the way ſtopped him, I went over and took hold of him again, and one Blandy came that moment to my aſſiſtance; we tried to get into ſome houſe or other, nobody would open their doors, ſeveral girls of the town wanted the perſon that aſſiſted me to take him to the Star and Garter, the perſon that aſſiſted me took him into an upholſterer's ſhop, the priſoner had no watch, he ſaid he was a gentleman, I thought if he was, all the ſatisfaction that a gentleman could receive, he ſhould receive from me; the people inſiſted on his being let out, and he run away again and we loſt him. On Wedneſday morning laſt, when I came from Ramſgate, I found Sir Sampſon Wright had ſent for me to go to identify this man, I never found my watch again; I am poſitive the priſoner is the ſame man, I had him in my hands for a quarter of an hour, and in the ſhop of the upholſterer, where there was light ſufficient; if I was not quite ſure, I would not give the leaſt hint in the world, but I am poſitive.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. You are abſolutely ſure that you felt ſomebody take your watch?—Yes.

Now as to your certainty of the priſoner, you have no doubt but he was the man that was a quarter of an hour in your hands, I can eaſily conceive that?—Certainly.

And you have as little doubt that he was the man who was in the upholſterer's ſhop?—Certainly.

Will you have the goodneſs, Sir, to tell the Jury in what ſituation you found the priſoner at the publick office; was the priſoner marked out to you in any particular way?——He was brought to the bar whilſt I was in the room with ſeveral of the Juſtices.

Then the priſoner was brought to the bar?——There were ſeveral people in the room.

Was there any body elſe at the bar?——Nobody, there were ſome people near.

Then the priſoner was brought to the bar and charged as a felon?—Yes.

When you ſlipped down, part of the priſoner's coat remained in your hands?—Yes, all the ſkirt, I believe it was plucked out of my hand by ſome people that were in his company, I know it was a frock coat.

Has any apartment of the priſoner been ſearched at all?—Not that I know of.

Then you do not know that any coat of that deſcription anſwering to that has been ſeen in his lodgings?—No.

There were a great many people, it was a favourite tragedy?—Yes.

You were in the paſſage leading to the two ſhilling gallery?—I was.

I fancy there is no great degree of light in that paſſage?—Yes, it is light enough.

You will believe me, Sir, when I ſay, I do not mean to impute any thing unfair to you, it is my duty to put theſe queſtions to you; how was he dreſſed?—He was dreſſed in black, and his hair was powdered, I believe he had a cocked hat.

Were not every body's hands preſſed by the crowd as well as your's?——He had his hands down.

It did not occur to you to ſeize the hand of the perſon that was taking your watch?—No.

Was it poſſible for you to obſerve the hand that was directed to the pocket?—No.

You ſeized the collar of ſomebody that you ſuſpected to be the perſon that had his hand in your pocket?—So I did, but in the ſituation I was, I could not be any other way than poſitive, I had two gentlemen in my company behind me, on the right hand ſide was the priſoner, and before him there was a lady in a ſtraw hat and red ribbon, I did not take any particular notice of the people on the left hand ſide, the priſoner's face was rather turned towards my face, he was ſtopped immediately, and ſearched immediately, and nothing found upon him.

Can you undertake poſitively, in a caſe like this, to ſay that you did return your watch into your fob after you looked at it?—O certainly ſo, I not only put it in my fob, but I turned the chain within my fob.

Then the ſtruggle to get your watch muſt have been very great?—Yes, and the perſon that took it was very clever.

Mr. Garrow. As well fitted for a lady's hand in a ſtriped hat, as any body's elſe, I ſhould have thought.

RICHARD BLANDY ſworn.

I am one of the conſtables of Drury-lane houſe, I was informed a gentleman had been robbed, I came to the door of the play-houſe, I found a hat, I took it over the way where I heard the priſoner was taken, I came to the gentleman and delivered it to him, and he ſaid the priſoner had robbed him, I ſearched the priſoner.

Mr. Garrow. A great crowd at the theatre this evening I believe, it was one of the nights that Mrs. Siddons performed.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, there was about four people by the proſecutor, and on the opening of the door I was crouded back, inſtantly this gentleman laid hold of me, and he dragged me like a vagabond to the door, his foot ſlipped, and he fell, he immediately caught hold of me, brought me into a broker's ſhop, and ſearched me.

The Priſoner called three Witneſſes to his character.

And MICHAEL BRYANT was indicted for feloniously receiving part of the same goods knowing them to have been stolen.

THOMAS ADAMS sworn.

The prisoner Williams was my servant, and he left my service between seven and eight o'clock in the morning, and a bundle of clothes was missing, I sent after him, and he was brought back between one and two, he denied having taken any bundle away; I then observed this handkerchief about his neck which belonged to me; he then told me he took the other things the night before, and gave them to the other prisoner, Bryant; I positively swear to the handkerchief, and the boy did not deny taking it.

Did not you tell him it would be better for him to confeſs? — I told him it was out of my power to forgive him; there was another boy in company with the priſoner Bryant, when he received the things; we took charge of Williams and then went to Bryant's houſe, and in ſearching him we found a handkerchief which was mine, and the key of his room; we went to his room; the goods belonged to a perſon that is dead, whom I buried, and they were all put together, I am ſure the handkerchief was there, we found ſeveral more things which the conſtable has: Bryant ſaid, the boy gave them to him that he might do what he pleaſed with them; no promiſe was made to him.

SAMUEL ROBERTS ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I apprehended Williams, and I went into Bryant's room, and there was the priſoner Bryant and George Whitford, I took them into cuſtody, I found a handkerchief and a key on Bryant, and went to ſearch his lodgings, and the moment I opened the door, the firſt thing I went to lay hold of was theſe things: Bryant told me the boy gave them to him; and the next day before the magiſtrate, Bryant acknowledged where the other clothes were pawned; the black coat, ſtriped waiſtcoat, and white cloth breeches, I found at a pawnbroker's in Shoreditch, facing the Black-dog, one Mr. Cookley's: Bryant ſaid that Williams gave them to him out of his maſter's houſe the night before.

ELIZABETH POTIER ſworn.

Bryant told me his landlady was going to turn him out, and he had no money to give her; and he brought me this bundle of clothes, a coat, waiſtcoat, and a pair of breeches, and aſked me to pawn them for him; he ſaid, they were his own clothes; I pawned them for ſeven ſhillings.

I am ſervant to the pawnbroker; on the 4th of this month the laſt witneſs pledged this ſuit of clothes with us for 7s.

PRISONER WILLIAMS's DEFENCE.

That hat my father gave me, this lad was a ſhip mate of mine, we came up together from Plymouth on Saturday night, I went on Sunday morning to Deptford, he was out of place, I got into place and he could not, in about a week after he was at me every day, wanting me to rob the houſe, and he came to me two, three, or four times a day, I would not conſent to do any ſuch thing, at laſt I told him, there was a bundle of clothes up ſtairs, and I would take them and come off with them, I gave them to him at the door, and he went and pawned them.

PRISONER BRYANT's DEFENCE.

Whoever told him to tell theſe ſpeeches to you I cannot tell, he gave me the clothes and told me he had them from his father, and I might do what I pleaſed with them, I was in want of ſome money the ſame night, and I pawned them.

The Priſoner Williams called two Witneſſes to his character.

JOHN WILLIAMS, GUILTY.

137. JOSEPH DAVY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 21ſt of November laſt, one linen handkerchief, value 1s. the property of Robert Waſtencroft.

On the 21ſt of November, I was within Guildhall, ſeeing the lottery drawn, I ſaw the priſoner there, I put my hand into my pocket and miſſed my handkerchief, he was near me, and juſt before that I ſaw a paper drop, which I knew was mine, I then ſaw the priſoner go under the bar in a great hurry, I followed him, he went under Blackwell-hall, he went out of the great door, he went as faſt as he could for the croud, he went into Cateaton-ſtreet, there was nobody particular in Baſinghall-ſtreet, and I did not like to go to him myſelf, I wiſhed to know where he went to in Cateaton-ſtreet, and I ſaw a man named Buckero, and I told him, and he purſued him, the priſoner had his hand in his pocket, he would not take it out, this Buckero then put his hand in the priſoner's pocket and pulled out my handkerchief, my name was marked on it.

ISAAC BUCKERO ſworn.

I joined in purſuit of the priſoner, he had his hand in his waiſtcoat pocket, and he would not take it out, I put my hand in and pulled out the handkerchief.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I could not get any work, and I happened to go into Guildhall, and I ſaw this handkerchief lay down, and I took it up, and the man took me.

145. JACOB THOMPSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th day of Auguſt, 1782, in the dwelling-houſe of George Preſcott, George William Preſcott, Andrew Grote, Joſeph Grote, William Culverden, John Hollingſworth the elder, and John Hollingſworth the younger, one promiſſory note, called a Bank poſt bill, value 30l. marked No. A. 3913, dated London, 7th Auguſt, 1782, ſigned and ſubſcribed by William Lander, for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, promiſſing to pay at ſeven days ſight, to Mr. John Wilkinſon or order, 30l. ſterling; indorſed John Wilkinſon and Co. the ſame being the property of the ſaid George Preſcott and Co. and the ſaid ſum of 30l. payable and ſecured by the ſaid note, being then due and unſatiſfied, againſt the form of the ſtatute, and againſt the King's peace.

A ſecond count charging him with ſtealing it in the dwelling houſe of John Hollingſworth the elder.

A third count charging him with ſtealing it in the dwelling houſe of John Hollingſworth the younger.

JOHN HOLLINGSWORTH the younger ſworn.

I reſide in the banking houſe at preſent, and I did ſo in Auguſt, 1782, I know the priſoner, he was our porter at that time; he was diſcharged in September following.

(The Bank poſt bill ſhewn him.)

This was carried to the credit of Mr. Collins, the 19th of Auguſt, 1782; I wrote Mr. Collins's name upon it the 19th of Auguſt, 1782.

Mr. Fielding Council for the Priſoner. You are ſpeaking from memory of what paſſed in the year 1782?—Yes.

That is your writing?—Yes.

What other circumſtance have you to carry your memory back but your own hand writing?—Theſe notes were loſt, the books and the letters will ſhew it, there is the numbers upon the bill.

You only know it from containing your hand writing?—I know that Mr. Collins has had credit for it, and that we never have received the money.

Mr. Sylveſter council for the Proſecution. Have you any doubt of that being the bill that was in your houſe, Sir?——Not the leaſt.

ISAAC PATMAN ſworn.

I am a clerk of the Bank.

(Looks at the note.)

What is that?——A Bank of England poſt bill; I entered it.

Whoſe name is ſubſcribed to it?—William Lander.

(The bill read.)

"Bank poſt bill, No. A. 3913, London, 7th of Auguſt, 1782: at ſeven days ſight I promiſe to pay this, my ſola Bill of Exchange, to Mr. John Wilkinſon and Co. or order 30l. for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England." The ſignature is torn.

HENRY CLAYTON ſworn.

I paſſed that bill in the caſh book the 19th of Auguſt, 1782.

Mr. Fielding. Where did you depoſit the note?—I put it in a box where we always put them after I had paſſed it.

JOHN COOK ſworn.

I am a clerk in this banking houſe (looks at the bill.) here is the number that I entered it by, on the 19th of Auguſt 1782, I likewiſe charged it out in my charge book, to go out the next day by another clerk for acceptance.

Mr. Fielding. After you have entered it then you put it into a book which was a memorandum of the place to which it was to go?—After entering it, it was put into the place where the other bills are uſually put till we come to charge them out.

What is done with the bill after it has gone through that ceremony?—It goes to the perſon that is to take charge of them the next day.

Who was that perſon?——Mr. Foſter, they go into the office, and they are examined to ſee if they are right.

I underſtand from ſeeing a number of gentlemen ſtanding up here, that a many people have acceſs to the place where theſe bills are put?—Yes, they are put into one of the back offices, and then given out at evening to the reſpective clerks.

JOHN FOSTER ſworn.

I am a clerk in this banking houſe, I examined theſe bills on the 19th of Auguſt, 1712, which were charged out for the 20th, they were all right when I had ſorted and examined my bills, and ſorted them regularly according to the walk I was to go, which was the city walk, I then took them round to the place where I uſually put them, which was behind the counter; I put them in my own caſe; not finding the large caſe which was appointed to put theſe bills in, I put them in my own caſe, which I was to go out with the next day, and put them behind the place where I uſually put them; there are partitions behind the counter where we uſed to put them; I did not take any more notice of theſe bills which I put up, ſuppoſing they were ſafe and right; in the morning when I came to look for my caſe ot bills which I put up on the night before they were miſſing, I enquired of all the clerks.

Court. Then there were other bills beſides thoſe that were loſt?——There were thirty or forty; I did not find my caſe.

Court. Whoſe buſineſs was it to put thoſe bills of yours into the tin caſe?—Mr. Hollingſworth's, or one of the clerks; I enquired of all the clerks if they knew any thing of my bills; and when we could not find the caſe of bills any where, we agreed to go and ſtop the payment of the bills which were charged out, the bills for payment, and the bills for acceptance, which were all examined together, on account of going regularly in the walk: we went out to ſtop the payment of the bills for payment and the bills for acceptance; we found no ſuch bills, nor heard nor learnt any thing during the time we were out concerning the bills; we came home, and the gentleman agreed to advertize the bills that were loſt, with the particulars; I was ſo flurried with the loſs of my caſe, and was ſo unhappy for myſelf and my friends who were ſecurity for me, that I could not draw up any advertiſement or do any thing; I went down into the kitchen and ſet by the fire, and was lamenting the loſs of my caſe;

I was unhappy and uneaſy on the account of it, as the gentlemen and the clerks had ſearched for it; the priſoner ſtood at the corner of the kitchen door, and ſaid, he was very willing to go up and ſeek with me, where I ſhould choſe to go; I ſaid it was in vain to ſeek for it; however, thro' the perſuaſion of the ſervants and himſelf, I went with him to ſeek for the caſe; this was between nine and ten o'clock, we began at one part of the office and went on regularly round till we came to where there was a bureau bedſtead, which was moved by him or me, and he held down the candle, and looking behind the bedſtead, he ſaid he ſaw ſomething, I looked behind the bedſtead with great anxiety, and ſaw a hair broom which lay towards the ground, and the corner of the caſe ſeemed to appear under the hair broom; I drew it out, and to my great ſurprize, found there were my bills; I did not examine them that night by the book that I had entered them in; I looked them over and ſuppoſed they were all right, in the morning I found that one bill which was upon John Boldero for 10l. which was wrote upon at the top, Bank poſt bill, very ſmall, I found that that bill was miſplaced, had been taken out of the partition where I had placed it, and put in another partition in the caſe, as I ſuppoſed the perſon or perſons who ever found it, thought that to be a Bank poſt bill as well as the reſt.

Mr. Garrow another Council for the Priſoner. This tranſaction is near a year and a half ago?—Yes.

Do you affect at this diſtance of time, to ſpeak with all that degree of accuracy as to all theſe minute circumſtances, which you ſhould do in a circumſtance of this kind?—Yes.

I fancy your ſituation at this houſe was, at that time, the ſituation of an out door clerk?—Yes.

You have told us, that there were certain bills charged out to you the 19th of Auguſt, to be delivered on the 20th; theſe were charged out by you to ſome other perſon?—Yes.

But it is not your buſineſs to charge them out?—No.

Then theſe bills were not diſpoſed of in the uniform uſual courſe of your office?—No, the caſe was not to be found.

You therefore put them into another caſe and carried them round behind the counter and placed them there?—Yes.

When was this?——In the evening, between ſeven and eight o'clock.

You have a great number of clerks in your houſe?—We have eleven.

This place in which you depoſited the caſe was not locked up?—No.

Then all the partners in this houſe, and all the clerks in this houſe, had acceſs to this place, and all the ſervants, if they pleaſed, had acceſs?—Nobody is ſuffered to go behind the counter but the clerks, without it is when the porter locks up the place and ſhuts up the ſhutters, which is whilſt there are ſome of the clerks in the office.

Some of the clerks ſleep in the office?—Yes.

Is not it uſual for the clerks to have their hair dreſſed in the ſhop?——We uſed to do theſe things, but we have left it off now.

Oh, you uſed to do theſe things then, but you have left them off now; pray why is it left off now?——The gentlemen did not know what to think, theſe things being loſt, the only reaſon I believe for that, Mr. Preſcott, the head partner came one morning as as we were having our hair dreſſed, ten minutes before nine o'clock.

Was there an old clothes man introduced into the ſhop?—I do not know.

When the book was found, you ſay you did not examine it with much minuteneſs?—I did not with any great degree of accuracy.

Did you expreſs to the priſoner your ſatisfaction at having found all the bills right?—I do not recollect particularly, it is poſſible that I did.

I ſuppoſe this tranſaction made a good deal of noiſe in the houſe?—Yes.

When the caſe was recovered, it became neceſſary I imagine, to take off the ſtoppage of thoſe bills that you had recovered.——We ſtopped the payment at the Bank immediately, and I believe it was advertized.

It was perfectly notorious in your houſe and made a great noiſe?—It did not make a great noiſe, we were very much alarmed, we did ſuppoſe that the caſe had been in poſſeſſion of ſome perſon or perſons by theſe two bills being miſſing.

Mr. Sylveſter council for Proſecution. You ſaid it was the porter's buſineſs to ſweep the ſhop and ſhut the ſhutters?—Yes, and rub down the counters and ſuch buſineſs as that, and to make our beds and bring our ſuppers up.

(The charge book produced.)—

Mr. Garrow. That is not your writing?——No.

(Read.)

" 30. P. B. (or poſt bill) and P. 539. he is either to bring home theſe bills, or a memorandum for it.

Jury. Was your own eaſe locked up that night or did it remain unlocked?——That I cannot tell.

Jury. Is it an eaſy thing for a perſon to get behind the counter?——We let nobody come behind the counter.

Is it an eaſy thing; could a porter in the houſe get behind the counter?—Yes, Sir, he goes behind the counter to ſhut up the ſhop.

Did you put your book that night in the place it is uſually put into?—Yes.

When the buſineſs of the day is over, and you gentlemen clerks are diſmiſſed from your buſineſs, is the place where your book was, open to the acceſs of any body in the ſhop, or open to the acceſs of the ſervants of the houſe?——It is open; the ſervants never come into the office: I did not ſleep in the ſhop myſelf, ſome of the clerks did.

Where were the beds in the ſhop?—One was near the office where we ſup, that where the caſe was found, that was near the office where we ſup.

Court. Does the porter ſleep in the houſe?—Yes.

Do you gentlemen clerks, after the buſineſs of the day is over, never go out of the ſhop till you go to bed?—Frequently.

Is there ſomebody always left in the ſhop?——Always one perſon appointed to attend at home.

But I want to know whether you are ſo ſtrict on the ſubject, as that you make it a rule never to leave the ſhop without one clerk in it?——I cannot ſay we are.

Now ſuppoſing it might happen, none of the clerks were in the ſhop, could the porter have acceſs during the momentary abſence of a clerk?——After locking up, the porter might go in any part of the ſhop.

Jury. Suppoſing the clerks were out of the houſe in the evening, the pigeon holes where you put your notes, the porter, if he had ſo been diſpoſed, might have had acceſs to it?——He might.

I am likewiſe a clerk in this houſe, on the 20th I went to ſtop payment of part of the bills, and in the evening of the 20th, the caſe was found; the next morning, Mr. Hollingſworth deſired me to go to preſent the bills for payment, on receiving the caſe for that purpoſe, I immediately told the bills over, and I then found there were two ſhort of the number charged in the book, but as it was late, it might be ten o'clock in the forenoon, I went out with the bills to ſee which two bills they were that were wanting; on my return home, and examining the book, it immediately ſtruck me when I ſaw the two poſt bills charged out, that theſe were the two bills, I then went to the bank and ſtopped the payment, we had not ſufficient particulars, afterwards it was fully ſtopped.

Mr. Fielding. Then I underſtand when this book was miſſing in the morning, then it was that there was an activity in order to ſtop the payment ?—Yes.

In the evening of that day the book was diſcovered ?—Yes.

Then this book was afterwards put in your poſſeſſion to carry out the bills ?—It was locked up that night, and the next day it was delivered to me.

How came Foſter not to be ſent out with his book the next day ?——Becauſe it was ſuppoſed they would pay me ſooner than any other clerk.

You have lived ſome time in this houſe ?—Yes.

You have heard acts of careleſſneſs in theſe clerks ?——There have been miſtakes.

The maids ſweep out the ſhop ?—No, the porter.

The maids may come into the ſhop ?—I do not ſuppoſe any body would prevent them, but I never ſaw them go into the ſhop after the hour of buſineſs in my life.

Court. There were a good many bills in this caſe ?——Yes.

Were any but theſe two, bank poſt bills ?—No more, there was a bill drawn upon Mr. John Boldero, and Co. which had the appearance of a bank poſt bill, poſt bill was wrote on the top, in the manner of a bank poſt bill.

Court to Mr. Foſter. That is the bill you ſay was miſplaced ?—Yes.

PETER LANG ſworn.

I live at Wells in Somerſetſhire, I am a hoſier, I know the priſoner, I ſaw him at Wells on the 11th of Auguſt, 1783.

Did you receive any bank poſt bill from him ?—This is the bill that went through my hands.

Did he ſign it ?——I told him as he was a ſtranger to me, it would be proper for him to indorſe it, he did immediately, and wrote Charles King, and I immediately wrote my name under it, he had of me ſome caſh, and a twenty pound bill drawn on Mr. Pope, the hoſier in Fenchurch-ſtreet, which bill he took from me, I drew the bill payable to Mr. Lloyd in Wells, I was introduced to him, he gave me the bill to change.

JAMES COLE ſworn.

I live at Bridgewater, I am receiver general for the county; in the middle of October I received a letter from an acquaintance informing me——Mr. Garrow. Hold, don't tell us of any information !—I was deſired to find him out, and I met him in the market, I aſked him if his name was Thompſon, he ſaid yes, I took him to my houſe and aſked him if that name was his hand-writing, and he ſaid it was, I aſked him how he came by that draft; this was the draft that Lang gave him, he ſaid that this was his hand-writing, I then aſked him how he came by that draft of twenty pounds, he ſeemed much confuſed and ſaid, Sir I will give you the twenty pounds for it, I told him that would not do, he then ſaid he received it of one King, I aſked him where he received it, he heſitated very much, and he preſſed me to take the twenty pounds, I told him this draft I ſuppoſed to be a bad one, he then ſaid, between Bridgwater and Briſtol, as he was going to Briſtol, this King overtook him, and aſked him if he was going to Briſtol, and if a bill would be more eaſy carriage to him and more agreeable than caſh, and that he then gave him twenty pounds for the bill, I told him I thought this was a very unlikely matter, ſays I, Peter Lang denies his having ever put his name to the draft, and Lloyd ſays he never did, I told him I ſhould take him before a magiſtrate, upon that he then ſaid, why, Sir, if you will keep a ſecret, I will tell you the whole buſineſs.

Mr. Garrow. Did not you ſay you had threatened to carry him before a magiſtrate ?—I told him that I thought this buſineſs a very unlikely one, and unleſs he gave me a more ſatisfactory account, I ſhould.

Mr. Garrow. I ſubmit to your Lordſhip whether you will, after what he has told us, hear what Mr. Cole may ſay, I do not know what he is going to ſay.

Court. Why to be ſure one is always very chaſte in theſe kind of things, I think we had better not hear it, I do not know what Mr. Cole is going to ſay, but if it is any confeſſion made by him, if it is made immediately after a threat, we ſhould not hear it.

Mr. Sylveſter. It is not a threat.

Court. Why it ſcarcely amounts to that, but he is hardly a free agent at that time.

Mr. Fielding. It is much more efficacious than that, it coaxes him.

Mr. Sylveſter. I never knew the objection but where there was a promiſe that you would not proſecute.

Court. Suppoſe Mr. Cole had ſaid I can hang you, you had better confeſs, if you you do not, I ſhall certainly carry you before a magiſtrare; and if the man under the terror of that threat had made a confeſſion, to be ſure that is not evidence; now Mr. Cole is much too prudent to do that, he only ſaid, unleſs I have a more ſatisfactory account, I ſhall take you before a magiſtrate, and then the man ſays, why then Sir, that is, ſince you will carry me before a magiſtrate, if you will keep a ſecret, I will tell you the whole buſineſs, this is the ſafe ſide, and I own I never like confeſſions.

—— COLE ſworn.

In the evening he ſent to me to deſire I would come to the gaol where he was.

Court. That is the ſame thing.

Mr. Garrow. You had been at the priſoner's houſe before you met him in the ſtreet, and when you met him, he went with you without any ſort of heſitation?—Yes.

Court to Mr. Hollingſworth. This note is the property of your houſe?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow to Mr. Hollingſworth. How long after this affair did the priſoner continue in your ſervice?—About three weeks.

I am deſired to aſk you whether after he left your ſervice, he did not upon ſome occaſion or other, give you notice where he might be heard of, and that he was about to leave London?——He did.

The payment of the bills were ſtopped then?——Yes, and they were advertiſed.

Court. Did he tell you where?——In Mead's-court, ſomewhere by Soho.

Court. When did you begin to ſearch after him?—About a month after.

Priſoner. I leave it to my Council.

Mr. Garrow. You underſtand we cannot ſay any thing to the Court or Jury in your defence, we can only examine witneſſes.

Priſoner to Mr. Foſter. You remember Sir, when the pocket-book was found, you was with me.

Court to Priſoner. God forbid that you ſhould be hindered from ſaying any thing in your defence, but if you have only queſtions to aſk, I would adviſe you to leave them to your Council.

A WRITTEN DEFENCE OF THE PRISONER'S READ.

My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury: In anſwering this charge which is now made againſt me, I ſhall be under the neceſſity of troubling the Court with ſome account of myſelf. Before I came into the ſervice of the proſecutor, I carried on the buſineſs of a maltſter to a conſiderable amount, but was reduced by loſſes, and recommended by Mr. Fothergill to the houſe of the proſecutors; my duty was that of porter, and in that ſituation I was neither intruſted with bills or notes nor had the means of ſecreting them; in September, 1782, I was diſmiſſed the plaintiff's ſervice, on account of theſe bills being miſſing; the plaintiff's ſuſpicion did not reſt on me alone, ſince then they diſcharged another of their ſervants, whoſe opportunities ſeem more calculated to warrant their ſuſpicions; I continued ſome time in London after my diſmiſſion from the plaintiff's ſervice, and when I went into the country I gave notice to Mr. Preſcott where I was gone to. If I had been conſcious of having ſtolen theſe bills from him, your Lordſhip will not think I ſhould have been ſo mad as to negotiate them; after I left the plaintiff, I inſured lottery tickets with great ſucceſs, and having got money, I went to purſue my former buſineſs, and I was induced to aſſume another name. In the courſe of my tranſactions with lottery offices, I was frequently paid in bank notes, and this note I received at Mr. Palmer's office, in Fleet-ſtreet, one night in payment of forty guineas: I hope the bare poſſeſſion of the bill, at the diſtance of two years, cannot prove me guilty of the offence of ſtealing it.

——— FOTHERGILL ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Garrow.

I believe you are a very conſiderable corn factor?—I am in that line of buſineſs; I have had very conſiderable concerns with the priſoner, to a very large amount; and ſince I have been ſubpoened in this buſineſs, I have had reference to our ledgers, and I ſee I dealt with him from January 1779 to November 1781.

By what name did he deal with you?—By the name of Thomas Jacobs; I believe from misfortunes and from an extent iſſued by the crown for malt duties; he found it neceſſary to leave that part of the country, I believe that was his motive, becauſe there were warrants againſt him for revenue duties merely.

You gave your opinion of him as an honeſt man?—We did.

He there lived by the name of Jacob Thompſon?—Yes, after he failed in the country he remained with his friends; finding he could not appear there he came to town; he wrote a note to our houſe, requeſting a little money, and ſigned it Jacob Thompſon, in the poſtſcript he ſays, "you know my motive for changing the name of yours, T. J." My dealing with him from Midſummer, 1780, to Midſummer, 1781, was for ſix thouſand and odd pounds.

In all the dealing you have had with him, have you reaſon to look upon him as an honeſt man?—We had particular reaſon on this account; he had frequently occaſion to over-draw us, he requeſted the indulgence to accept before aſſetts came, and we have frequently accepted two or three hundred pounds in advance to him, and when he promiſed to ſend aſſetts he never diſappointed us: after he had quitted the ſervice of Mr. Preſcott and Co. I heard they had ſome ſuſpicion about ſome matter, and in about a week after he called on me; I told him, and deſired he would call and clear it up, which I afterwards underſtood he did; he told me his lodgings were in Meard's-court at that time.

Mr. Sylveſter. You gave a character of him to this gentleman, in a name that you knew did not belong to him?—I confeſs I did, and for the reaſon I have mentioned.

Mr. Garrow. We have many other witneſſes to character, but I believe it is totally immaterial to call them.

147. SAMUEL OLIVER was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Ayliffe, about the hour of twelve in the night, on the 17th of December laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein two cloth livery waiſtcoats, value 30s. two yards and an half of hair ſhag, value 20s. one ratteen Bath great coat, value 40s. one blue cloth coat, value 20s. one cloth waiſtcoat, value 10s. part of a boy's Bath great coat, value 3s. one white dimity waiſtcoat, value 2s. one brown great coat, value 3s. and five linen ſheets, value 30s. the property of the ſaid John.

I live at Twickenham, on the 17th of December my houſe was broke open, I went to bed by eleven o'clock, I was the laſt perſon up in the houſe, I faſtened the door, I firſt perceived the houſe had been robbed a little after ſix in the morning, the men came to work in the morning and found it open, and the things miſſing that are mentioned in the indictment.

Court. Can you form any gueſs in what way the houſe was broke open?—I cannot, they came in the back way over ſome gardens.

How did they get into the houſe?——They broke it open.

What part?—The ſhop, they came in at the window of the waſh-houſe which was broke, and broke open the ſhop door.

Is your ſhop backwards?—Yes.

The window was faſtened at night, was it?—Yes, the priſoner was taken on the Saturday morning after, a perſon told me where the things were, and I went to ſee them, and they were mine.

——— WILSON ſworn.

I have lived in Kingſton-lane thirty years, I produce the beſt part of the things, they were in a ſack which I found on the priſoner, there are ſome things that were found upon him that are not here, the ſhag breeches and one of the waiſtcoats are not here, there were five wet ſheets when I ſtopped him, this great coat, and a great many more things, and this waiſtcoat he had on; there were two of them, I marked the one he had on, and this piſtol I found upon him, (The things depoſed to by the Proſecutor) I went for a pail of water, and the priſoner put down the ſack, ſays I, what have you here brother ſailor? ſays he, I have a bed, a bed ſays I, where did you bring it from? he ſaid he brought it from Portſmouth, ſays I, did you bring it all the way on your back from Portſmouth, yes, ſays he, I did, ſays I, that is a long way to bring it, I clapped my hand upon it and I felt ſome buttons, a young man was coming by and we ſeized him, and opened the ſack and ſaw theſe clothes, ſays I how came you by theſe clothes, ſays he, I found them in the road on this ſide of Wandſworth, I took him to the Rotation-office in the Borough, and he was committed to New-gaol; this was on the Saturday, and that gentleman came down on the next day, and owned the cloathes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay, I have no witneſſes. I picked the ſack up with the things in it about five o'clock in the morning.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

148. GEORGE MUSLIN was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Richard Manning, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 21ſt of December laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein one pair of linen ſheets, value 8s. one patchwork counterpane made of linen and cotton, value 5s. one linen ſhirt, value 2s. 6d. two linen ſhifts, value 5s. two linen aprons, value 3s. two handkerchiefs, value 1s. fourteen linen clouts, value 3s. two linen bedgowns, value 3s. one linen waiſtcoat, value 1s. one ſilk pincuſhion, value 1s. ſix child's caps, value 3s. four linen child's ſhirts, value 2s. two blankets, value 2s. one linen ſafeguard, value 1s. one linen collar, value 6d. one pair of ſtockings, value 1s. four child's linen gowns, value 3s.

one child's dimity ſhirt, value 2s. the property of the ſaid Richard.

My wife was taken in labour laſt night at twelve o'clock.

Who can give the beſt account of this robbery?—She can.

MAGDALEN NEWTON ſworn.

What are you?—I live next door to the proſecutor.

What do you know of the priſoner breaking open the proſecutor's houſe?—I know nothing about the priſoner, only I made part of the child-bed-linen.

MICHAEL SYMONS ſworn.

I produce ſome property, I was ſent for on Monday morning.

MOSES HENRY ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I apprehended the priſoner the 22d of laſt month, I found this bundle upon him.

What did you ſay to the priſoner?——I aſked him what theſe things were, and he ſaid they did not belong to him, he was in a houſe in Bell-lane, Spitalfields, Michael Symons came to me and deſired me to apprehend the priſoner.

Michael Symons. A little boy came to me on the Monday morning before eight o'clock, and ſaid, you muſt come to a houſe in Bell-lane, when I came there the priſoner offered theſe things to me to ſell, and I offered him twenty-five ſhillings for them, and I ſaid, I will go and fetch the money, and I went for a conſtable; there was ſome wet things among them, and he ſaid, I ſhall not be in a hurry to ſell them till I can get them dry, and ſhall ſell them in about a fortnight's time; he ſaid, they came from not far off, he aſked me where I ſold my things; I told him ſometimes in Monmouth-ſtreet, and ſometimes in Ragfair; when the conſtable came he knocked him down.

Priſoner. I never ſaw the man before with my eyes till I ſaw him at the office.

Court to Henry. Did he ſay any thing when you took him into cuſtody?—No, he ſaid we brought the bundle into the houſe ourſelves, but I took them out of his own hands in the bag.

Magdalen Newton. I made part of the child-bed-linen.

(Depoſes to the making two caps and a ſhirt, having made them about two months ago.)

JOSEPH BARNET ſworn.

I was going to Spitalfields-market, and I came round Bell-lane, and ſaw ſome people ſtanding round the door, I went to ſee what was the matter, and the conſtable called me to aſſiſt him, I ſaw the priſoner at the bar ſcuffling with the conſtable; I helped to ſecure him with the green bag.

Court to Manning. Have you any body here to prove the loſs of theſe things?—I can ſwear to ſome of the things myſelf.

When did you ſee them laſt?—About three weeks before they were ſtolen, before I went down to Plymouth.

Court to Proſecutor. If you had mentioned this, this trial might have been put off.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, here is a defect of evidence, here is too much reaſon to believe that the priſoner at the bar is guilty of the offence, but here is no evidence in the world to ſhew that the things were loſt.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

149. THOMAS LEDGER and GEORGE ALLEN were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Doney about the hour of one in the night, on the 15th of December laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one table knife, value 2d.

two hundred and twenty-one copper halfpence, value 13s. 4½d. and fifty-eight copper farthings, value 1s. 2½d. the property of the ſaid John Doney.

JOHN DONEY ſworn.

I live in St. Ann-ſtreet, Weſtminſter, in the pariſh of St. John; my houſe was broke open the 15th of December, I went to bed about ten minutes before eleven o'clock, my wife and me went to bed together, I made a rule every night, and that night, to go round and faſten all the doors and windows, I was in bed, and an alarm was given of thieves in the houſe, about one o'clock; I awoke and came down ſtairs with a candle in one hand and a cutlaſs in the other; when I came down ſtairs, I ſaw the watchman with the priſoner George Allen in cuſtody in my kitchen, and I heard a noiſe in the bar; they informed me there was another in the bar, I heard Thomas Ledger was there, I did not ſee him, he was making uſe of very bad expreſſions indeed, as damn your bloody eyes, and you bloody thieves; I ſaw the halfpence lay ſome in the till and ſome on the floor, and fourteen ſhillings and ſeven pence laying on a table in halfpence and farthings.

Court. Then they had not taken any of the money out of the houſe?——The watchman had taken it out of George Allen's pocket, in ſearching to ſee if he had any weapon that would do him a miſchief, there was thirteen ſhillings and four-pence halfpenny in halfpence, the till was open; it was put into a cupboard, and the bar door was locked up ſecure; when I came down, they had broke through the pantry window and the kitchen door, and cut away beſides a part of the ſaſh of the bar, and taken out the glaſs; then I went and fetched the key of the bar door which was locked; before I came to enter the bar, Thomas Ledger ſays, damn my bloody eyes, I will cut your bloody melt out, I will do for the firſt that comes here; I opened the cellar door and went in with my cutlaſs, and brought him out and gave him to the watchman, they had no arms that I ſaw, he ſaid he had dropped a favourite knife, and begged to have it looked for, but I did not ſee it; he ſtruck at one of the people, and I hit him over the arm with the back of my cutlaſs; he ſtill went on with bad expreſſions, the priſoners know themſelves to be guilty; here is a letter that they ſent to me ſince they have been in priſon; they owned to the fact.

JOHN DOBBINS ſworn.

I am a journeyman baker; about one o'clock I went out of the bake-houſe into the yard, and the proſecutor's bar is next to our yard, and I heard a noiſe in the bar, I thought at firſt it was the people belonging to the houſe, then I thought it was thieves, and I went up ſtairs and called my maſter, and he came down ſtairs, and I fetched two watchmen and when they came, they went the back way through our yard into Mr. Dony's yard, and we ſaw a light in the proſecutor's houſe, then we went to the door, and George Allen ſtood againſt the door, and we went in and he ran into the pantry where he got in; ſo we followed him into the pantry and took him; John Short the watchman took him; then Ledger, who was in the bar, began damning very much, then we called the proſecutor up, he came down and unlocked the cellar door, and let Thomas Ledger out, when he came out, he ſwore he would be revenged of me, and ſtruck at me ſeveral times.

JOHN BROWN ſworn.

I am maſter to the laſt witneſs; I live in St. Ann's-ſtreet; about a quarter before one o'clock, my man came up to my bed room door and called me to get up, once or twice, he ſaid, for God's ſake get up, there are thieves in Mr. Doney's bar, I came down ſtairs and went into the bake-houſe, and I aſked him if he was ſure they were in Mr. Doney's houſe; we then ſent for John Short and William Wadham, two watchmen; whilſt this man was gone for the watch I heard a noiſe in the houſe, in about ten minutes he returned with the two watchmen, I let them through my back way into Mr. Dony's yard, we perceived a light, and on hearing the alarm the light went out directly, the watchman and my man went up to the backſide of Doney's houſe and forced in the door, I was with them, and perſuaded John Short the watchman to lay hold of George Allen and take the fourteen ſhillings and ſeven pence out of his pocket, and likewiſe a broken knife; after he was ſecured, Mr. Thomas Ledger uſed very bad expreſſions, called us all bloody thieves, and ſaid, he would do for the baker.

JOHN SHORT ſworn.

I am a watchman, I was fetched to the proſecutor's houſe, when I came there, going through the baker's paſſage, as ſoon as ever we came into Mr. Dony's yard I ſaw a light, and I immediately ſaid, Sir, there are thieves in the houſe, upon coming to the back door of the houſe the light was immediately put out, two or three of us forced in together, I happened to be foremoſt, and ſaw the priſoner making his eſcape from the bar window through the kitchen, I ran into the pantry and ſhut the door againſt him, I forced the door and ſaid, let you be who you will I will have you if I loſe my life, I fetched him out of the pantry and brought him into the kitchen, and there was a table ſtanding in the middle of the kitchen, and I had a ſuſpicious thought that he might have ſome foul weapon, I put the lanthorn on the table and ſearched his pockets, and took out this fourteen ſhillings and ſeven pence in halfpence, and this broken caſe knife; I then ſaw the priſoner Thomas Ledger looking out of the bar window where he had broke in, he ſaid to me, you bloody thief, I wiſh I was by you, I would have your life, and he ſays to Allen, damn your blood, why do not you knock that old thief down.

Priſoners. We have nothing to ſay, we have no witneſſes.

THOMAS LEDGER,
GEORGE ALLEN, } GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

150. FREDERICK NORBURG was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Skutt, about the hour of three in the night, on the 2d of December laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one repeating watch, with a ſilver caſe, value 10l. three ſilver tea ſpoons value 4s. a mourning ring, value 10s. a tortoiſeſhell ſnuff-box, with a ſilver lid, value 5s. a pair of piſtols, mounted with braſs, value 20s. one cloth coat, value 20s. two ſilk waiſtcoats, value 20s. a pair of jean breeches, value 3s. ten linen ſhirts, value 5l. five pair of cotton ſtockings, value 10s. the property of the ſaid John Skutt; and one cloth coat, value 10s. and one glove, value 2d. one handkerchief, value 10d. the property of John Smith; and two gowns, value 40s. one cloak, value 40s. one ſilk and cotton handkerchief, value 6d. three linen ſhifts, value 10s. and two aprons, value 3s. the property of Elizabeth Gunhouſe.

And THOMAS NEWTON was indicted for feloniouſly receiving on the ſame day, one linen ſhirt, value 10s. part of the ſaid goods, knowing them to be ſtolen, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

ELIZABETH GUNHOUSE ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor; I remember my maſter's houſe being broke open on the 2d of December, I went laſt to bed, between eleven and twelve, I heard nothing in the night, I faſtened the door, I found the back door unbolted in the morning, I bolted it over night, I came down in the morning between ſeven and eight o'clock, I was the firſt that came down, it was then quite light, when I came down all the doors were wide open, the parlour door and all the locks broke open, and all the papers on the floor, I loſt two gowns, one cloak, two aprons, ſix ſhifts, and a ſilk and cotton handkerchief, my maſter loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, my things were down in the kitchen, I had been a waſhing and hung them up to dry; my maſter's property was in the parlour, I ſaw ſome of the ſhirts and ſome of the ſtockings; my maſter was in the country.

JOHN SMITH ſworn.

I am clerk to the proſecutor; on Tueſday night, the ſecond of December laſt, I went to bed about eleven o'clock, and in the morning about the hour of eight, the maid came and informed me that the houſe was broke open, I went down ſtairs and found the houſe in the ſituation ſhe has juſt deſcribed; I heard no noiſe in the night, I went into the office and found Mr. Skutt's drawer and my own drawer broke open, and the papers ranſacked about, the locks were broke off, I loſt a brown coat that was hanging in the paſſage, and in that coat was a linen handkerchief and one glove.

JOHN SKUTT ſworn.

I live in Great Ayliffe-ſtreet, I am an attorney, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, there was a tortoiſeſhell ſnuff box, with a ſilver lid with a bird engraved upon it, and a mourning ring of my mother's, and ſome ſhirts, I cannot tell how many, the drawers were open in which the ſhirts lay, and a pair of old riding jean breeches, I loſt a ſilver watch, double gilt, capped and jewelled, they had broke open the lock of the cloſet, and in that cloſet Mrs. Skutt had put the watch, it was a repeating watch; before the Juſtice I ſaw the ſtockings and this pair of breeches, one or two of my ſhirts and the breeches and ſome of the ſtockings are here.

On the 9th of December I had information that ſome of Mr. Skutt's things was in Bethnall-Green, I went there and found one ſhirt in the priſoner Newton's houſe, the priſoner Newton was not at home, I waited for his coming home, I then took him to the magiſtrates, he ſaid it was brought to him, he ſaid he would go and ſhew where he had them from, and I ſent him with two other officers, and they went and found the other priſoner, when they brought the other priſoner in, I made him take off his ſhirt, which ſhirt is here.

(The ſhirt depoſed to by Elizabeth Gunhouſe, which was found in Newton's houſe.)

Mr. Keys, Council for Priſoner Newton. Is there any mark on it?—No, I ſwear to it, I made it.

To Yardley. When you came to Newton's houſe you ſay you found a ſhirt?—I found this.

He was not at home?—He was not.

He ſaid it was brought to his houſe?—Yes.

For what purpoſe?—He ſaid he had it to waſh.

On the 9th of December I had information, and I went down to a houſe in Saltpetre Bank, and Newton went with me, I went to the houſe, and took this Norburge at the houſe where Newton directed me, I brought him out, and according to the information I had, I ſaid, they wanted him for a robbery; he ſaid, the things were not his, and he came there to aſk about a pair of ſhoes that he had brought to be mended. I brought him to Juſtice Wilmot's, and the ſhirt was taken off his back, he ſaid, it was his own and he had had it months; I ſhewed it to Mr. Skutt's ſervant, and ſhe ſaid it was her maſter's. I aſked him where he lodged, he told me at No. 8, Back-alley, St. Catherine's: I went to his lodgings, and there I found a pair of breeches, two pair of ſtockings, and one glove, they have been in my cuſtody ever ſince.

(Produced, and the breeches and ſtockings depoſed to by the proſecutor; the ſhirt ſhewn to Elizabeth Gunhouſe, and depoſed to by her as ſhe made it; the glove depoſed to by Smith which was left in the coat pocket, he having the fellow to it.)

PRISONER NORBURG's DEFENCE.

I have had them two pair of ſtockings a long while, the woman that waſhed for me is not here, I bought the ſhirt, the breeches, and the handkerchief in Roſemary-lane; in the public fair.

Court to Gunhouſe and Smith. Did you hear any noiſe in the night?—No.

Court to Jury. There is no circumſtance that affects the priſoner Newton, with the knowledge of this being ſtolen; the crime of burglary conſiſts in breaking open a houſe by night, that is, when it is ſo dark that the lineaments of a man's countenance cannot be ſeen, either with intent to ſteal, or actually ſtealing ſome property thereout, where it is laid for actual ſtealing: but it is acceſſary that the houſe ſhould be broke open in the night; now the maid ſervant went to bed in the night, and did not get up till it was clear day-light; and in all caſes you know, if it be a matter indifferent as to the whole of the charge whether the priſoner is guilty or innocent, the preſumption is ever in favour of innocence; if, therefore, you think the houſe was not broke open in the night time, the priſoner muſt be acquitted of the burglary, for people are not to be found guilty upon conjecture.

Proſecutor. I have a watchman here that ſaw a light in my houſe about 3 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt. They cannot call him now.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. I cannot call him now, it is a dangerous practice, I have no doubt in this particular caſe, but the practice itſelf is a dangerous practice, if after a Judge has made obſervations on the defect of evidence, then the proſecutor is to come and ſupply that defect.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, as to the capital part of the charge you have no clear account that the houſe was broke open in the night; as to the other part of the charge which conſiſts of his ſtealing theſe things, of that you have much ſtronger evidence, they were took the 2d, they were found in his poſſeſſion the 9th, and when called to give an account of them, he gives ſuch an account as is not conſiſtent with truth; that is a ſtrong circumſtance that he was the perſon that ſtole them; if you think there is no evidence to convict him of the breaking by night, you will acquit him of the burglary, and find him guilty of the larceny only; or, if you think he is not guilty generally, you will acquit him of the whole of the charge.

FREDERICK NORBURG GUILTY

Of ſtealing goods to the value of thirty-nine ſhillings, but not guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

THOMAS NEWTON NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

151. HENRY SUTHERLAND was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Richard Dillon, on the King's highway, on the 18th of December laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly ſtealing from his perſon and againſt his will one watch, with a metal caſe, value 30s. one ſteel watch chain, value 6d. one ſteel ſeal, value 1s. three claſp knives, value 10d. two braſs inkſtands, value 1s. five pair of metal ſhoe buckles, value 2s. 6d. twelve glaſs ſeals, value 1s. 6d. four penknives, value 1s. eighteen pair of metal ſleeve buttons, value 1s. one ſteel corkſcrew, value 4d. three japanned nutmeg graters, value 4d. three pair of plated ſhoe buckles, value 3s. two metal hat buckles, value 3d. two ſteel razors, value 7d. one butcher's ſteel, value 10d. one wainſcot box, value 5s. and four ſhillings in monies numbered, his property.

I know the priſoner, I was robbed the 18th of December, between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock at night, by the priſoner, he was one of the party, I do not know that I ever ſaw him before that night.

Was it dark?—Yes.

How can you take upon you then to ſwear to him when it was dark?—My lord, after I was robbed this man turned back, and came to me and put his hand to my breaſt, and ſaid, you bugger, if you ſpeak a word, I will have your life; ſo I had a full view of his face when he came cloſe to me.

Court. There was no moon or ſtars?—It was ſtar-light, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment.

What was in your box?—Buckles and buttons and ſuch things as that.

Had you any knives?—Yes.

How many?—I cannot ſay.

Rather under than over?—It is mentioned in the bill; there was a good many buckles that I recollected at that time.

How many buckles?—I cannot be particular to what number of buckles I had.

Speak to the loweſt number you can be ſure of.—I dare ſay I had a dozen pair.

Had you any ſleeve buttons?—Yes.

How many pair?—Sixteen or eighteen, one or two cork-ſcrews, three nutmeg graters, ſome plated buckles, ſome hat buckles, two razors in a caſe, and four ſhillings in money; a woman came to me one day ſince this happened and told me——

Mr. Litchfield, Councel for the Priſoner. Do not mention what the woman told you: it was dark and no moon?—Yes.

Nor no houſe near?—No.

Do you know John Selfage?—Yes.

Had you been in his company that day?—Yes.

Do you remember on the next day going to the houſe of Mr. Grainger?—Yes, I went to enquire for him.

Do you remember your converſation?—Yes.

Do you remember aſking him if he knew where you had left the box?—I aſked him ſo becauſe I ſuſpected him to be one of the party that robbed me.

Did you aſk him if he knew where you had left your box?—I wanted to ſound him.

Did not you tell him that you thought you had loſt it?——Yes.

And you did not know where?—Yes.

Did you ſay any thing to him about your having fallen into a ditch?—I ſaid I was thrown into a ditch, I cannot recollect ſaying I had fallen into a ditch.

Upon your oath did not you ſay ſo to him?—Upon my oath I did not.

Did you ſay any thing to him about your being drunk the day before?——No; I had been drinking the day before, but not to get ſtupid and drunk.

What converſation paſſed?—I do not remember that.

Do you remember Selfage going with you to ſeveral houſes in order to ſearch for this box that you ſaid you had loſt?—Yes.

Among other places I believe you went to this very ditch, that you ſaid you had fallen into, to look for this box?—Yes, becauſe I ſuſpected him to be one of the party.

Court. Did you tell him that you had been thrown into the ditch, or that you had fallen into it?—Yes, I told him ſo to put me in the way.

I think you ſaid juſt now that you did not tell him that you had fallen into a ditch, did you tell him any thing about being drunk?—I did not.

Now you ſay you did tell him you had fallen into a ditch, recollect yourſelf a little more, was not there ſome converſation about your being drunk the night before?—Not a word.

Court. You did not tell us upon your firſt examination that you was thrown into a ditch?—I had been thrown into a ditch.

By whom?—By the priſoner.

Mr. Litchfield. After you had ſearched this ditch and did not find the box there, I believe you went to ſomebody's houſe in Well Cloſe Square?—We went to ſeveral houſes, we went to another houſe, a man that makes pies, I do not know his name.

Did you go to any houſe in Roſemary Lane?—I went to Mr. Grainger's where he lodged.

I believe on the Saturday following this tranſaction, you had ſome converſation with Selfage?—I have never ſeen him ſince.

Did not you tell Selfage on the Saturday following that you had been robbed?—I did not.

And you never deſired him not to appear before the Juſtice?—Never.

On the 18th of December, I believe you went to ſeveral public houſes, and had not money enough to pay your reckoning, and Selfage paid your reckoning for you?—I was ſhort in a penny, but I had four ſhillings that I would not let him know I had, becauſe he ſpunged upon me.

That Selfage was an old acquintance of yours?—I have known him four or five years.

JOHN WILLIAMSON ſworn.

I am a watchman in Aldgate Pariſh, I had been the half-hour after eleven o'clock the 18th of December talking to the patrole, and I heard a jumbling noiſe, like a parcel of horſes; I went to ſee what it was, and the priſoner walked very faſt, I hung my lanthorn to my back, and by the ſhade of a lamp at Whitechapel, I ſaw him ſlip the box off his left-arm and away he ran.

What box was that?——It was a Jew pedlars box, I jumped over the way and purſued the priſoner, and called out to Adrew Hopkins to ſtop thief; accordingly he ſecured Blackhouſe yard, and he turned down the turning where there was a fire ſome time ago in Petticoat Lane, and he fell down, I never loſt ſight of him all the time, when he fell he ſeemed to me to throw a buckle out of his hand, he fell down again, we found a buckle afterwards and could find nothing elſe, and he got up and run again, I would have ſtruck him but I thought of the melancholy accident that happened in Petticoat Lane ſome time paſt, therefore I did not ſtrike him; I purſued him, and he run into a large neceſſary, I up with my ſtaff and took him there, and brought him out into the lane, there we took the buckle up, and took him to Whitechapel watch-houſe, the Jew's box was left in the lane, I called to John Hopkins to let him know that he had dropped a box, I jumped over it to run after the priſoner, John Hopkins picked it up.

JOHN HOPKINS ſworn.

Did you take up that box when the laſt witneſs was in purſuit of the priſoner?—Yes.

Was that box produced before the Juſtice?—Yes, it was locked up in the Juſtice's cloſet, it was ſealed up and delivered by him to me this morning.

ANDREW HOPKINS ſworn.

On the 18th of December, I went out to watch, and on Friday morning I heard Williamſon call to me, Hopkins! Hopkins! Stop him! Stop him! Stop thief! inſtantly I went from my ſtand and almoſt came up with the priſoner and with Williamſon, with that the priſoner run off into the opening where a houſe formerly ſtood that was burnt down, I then went and ſecured Blackhouſe-yard, expecting the priſoner to come that way, he went up a paſſage where there is a dye-houſe, and was taken there.

Priſoner's Council. I believe he made no reſiſtance?—No.

Was you preſent at the time of his examination before the Juſtice?—Yes.

There was no watch found upon him?—No.

JAMES MATHEWS ſworn.

I am one of the beadles of Whitechapel, the man was given in charge at the watch-houſe to me, about eleven o'clock on the 18th of December, they ſaid, they had a man for a robbery, and they ſaid, they had got a box, I ſaid where is it, Williamſon and Hopkins ſaid, they had left it behind them, and they went and fetched it; in the mean time, I ſearched the priſoner and found theſe three knives upon him in his pocket, and this key, I aſked him how he came by them, he ſaid, he had them to take to ſea with him, I ſaid, you take plenty of knives with you? he ſaid, yes, we ſeafaring men always do; he told me his ſhip's name, but I forgot it, in the interval they brought the box, and a remarkable buckle along with it, which Andrew Hopkins ſaid, he ſaw him throw away, the priſoner ſaid, he knew nothing of it.

(The buckle and knives produced, and the buckle and one of the knives depoſed to by the Proſecutor.)

Court. Is there any mark on that knife? —I had a mark put on before Mr. Juſtice Staples, and there is a little crack, a dent on it.

Priſoner's Council. Whereabout is the crack?—Near the handle where it ſhuts.

Do you remember the name on it?—No.

Nor whether there was one on it or not? —No.

I ſuppoſe any other knife that you had, might be chipped in the ſame way as this is?—I do not know.

Was not the reſt of your knives chipped in the ſame way?—I cannot ſay.

Court. Carry it to the Jury yourſelf, and ſhew the Jury were the mark is, that you believe it to be your's by.

Mathews. I went round into Petticoat Lane, where they told me they apprehended the priſoner in a privy, and there I found this ink ſtand, and this handkercheif together.

Jury to Proſecutor. Was the box locked at the time you loſt it?——The box was locked, but the drawers were open.

Court to Dillon. Look at that ink ſtand? —I had but two in my box and theſe was but one in the time it was opened.

Mathews. There was but only one, it ſeemed to be the fellow.

(The two ink ſtands handed to the Court, the one that Mr. Mathews found, and the other that was in the box.)

Where did they ſay the box was left?—At a perſon's houſe at ſome place, I cannot be poſitive.

Did you go alone to the neceſſary when you found this ink ſtand?—I went with the officer.

Court. Were there any more knives of the ſame kind than that?—Yes.

(Some of the knives handed up.)

Court. This knife looks as if it had been uſed.

ELEANOR SWINNEY ſworn.

I lodge in the houſe with the proſecutor, and I was at home when he came home, and his wife cried out, what is become of your things? and he ſaid, hold your tongue, I am robbed of them by two men in ſailors dreſs.

What time did he come home?—I cannot rightly tell, it was paſt eleven.

Was he drunk or ſober?—He was not drunk, he was pretty happy.

Priſoner's Council. You could ſee he had been drinking?—Yes.

For the PRISONER.

I know the proſecutor, I lodge at one Mr. Grainger's, the Crooked Billet, I was with him on the 18th of December at different places, we had three ſhillings worth, and about three gallons of beer, and he was drunk before we had that, he was going to fight with a ſailor, he was very drunk and very quarrelſome, I parted with him about ten, he would have three pots of beer at Mr. Martin's, he bid me good night, he and one Long that is a witneſs, and I thought he was going home, I went away, and I came back again, and he was drinking again, where the people's name is Charlton, there he had been toſſing up for half a gallon of beer, this was between ſix and ſeven, we then agreed among us to toſs up for ſix pennyworth, and we did ſo, and he beat three of us, and three of us beat him again, he had not quite money enough to make out the laſt ſix pennyworth in his pocket, I held the ſhilling, and an acquaintance of ours, one Long that will be a witneſs, lent him the remainder, I think he lent him three farthings, he ſaid he only wanted a halfpenny, then Long called for a gallon of beer out of his own pocket to treat us with, as I ſometimes deal with him; after that we had another pot, Mr. Dillon had no money, and he borrowed a penny of Long, to pay for this pot, he wanted to borrow ſome money of me, but I knew him to be a very bad principled man, he borrowed ſixpence of me ſome time before, and I knew he would not pay me; we then got over to Mrs. M'Clough's, to have a parting pot, he then offered to wreſtle with this Long for a crown, he pulled his handkerchief off and opened his boſom, he came to me again, and ſaid, lend me a ſhilling, I ſaid no, I will buy an article at prime coſt, but I will not lend you any thing, he then ſaid he thought he could lick me, and another that was there, I ſaid I did not think he could; words aroſe and we had ſome blows, he then ſaid he had enough, he got up and took his box, and ſtaggered out; I ſaw him no more that night, I waited and had ſomething to drink with my friends, and was talking how likely it was he ſhould loſe his box; we ſaid to one another, if he does loſe it, he cannot blame us, for we perſuaded him to leave it at Mr. Charlton's and Mrs. M'Clough's.

Priſoner's Council. When he ſtaggered out he was very drunk and very quarrelſome?—He was, I was pretty ſure he never would be able to carry his box home, the next morning he came to enquire for me, he ſtood up againſt the table, he looked very muddy and dirty, I aſked him how he did, he ſaid very middling, ſays he, do you know any thing about my box or watch, he did not mention any money, I told him I knew nothing of it, that he had it ſafe when he left me, I directly aſked him if he was robbed of it, no ſays he; I aſked him two or three times, and he poſitively declared he was not robbed; if you was not robbed of it ſays I, Mr. Dillon, I will take the trouble of going to the houſes that we uſe in Wapping and enquire for it, he ſaid he had left it ſomewhere, or loſt it in the ſtreet by tumbling about, but he was ſo drunk he could not tell where, I am poſitive ſure of what I ſay upon my oath; we went out of my landlord's houſe with intention to look for this box, we firſt went to the chandler's ſhop in St. Catherine's-lane, ſhe ſaid he had not left his box there for three or four months, we then went to St. Catherine's-ſtairs, ſometimes he went with me into the houſes, and ſometimes not, I dare ſay we went into one hundred and fifty different houſes to enquire for his box, in ſeveral of theſe houſes the people aſked him how he loſt it, he always declared he was not robbed of it, but he was ſo drunk he could not recollect what was become of it, but he always poſitively ſaid he was not robbed; I went with him to King James's ſtairs into this houſe where we had quarrelled the night before, I treated him there to a pint of beer, the woman aſked us whether we had come to wrangle again; I told her no, but Mr. Dillon had loſt his box, ſays I, I ſhould have thought he was robbed of it, but he ſays not, he put his hands up and declared he was not robbed of it, we went to two or three houſes further, and he declared the ſame thing; we went to Mr. Long's, there he ſaid the ſame, then we were going home and had given it up, I ſaid to him, now I do not know what to ſay in this matter, I will tell you what I would have you do, get a parcel of bills printed, about a thouſand, and offer a ſmall reward of about five ſhillings, and if any honeſt perſon has it, they will return it to you; as we were going home, ſays he, is there no ditch here, I believe I muſt have fallen into a ditch.

Did he talk of being thrown into a ditch?—I am confident he ſaid juſt as I ſay, that he did not know but he had fell into the ditch by being ſo muddy; I took him to the New Cut that leads from Wapping Church to Ratcliffe-highway, one walked on one ſide, and one on the other, by and by I went to a place where I thought the ice was diſturbed, ſays I, perhaps your box is here, now lend me your ſtick and I will pok all about, and feel, but I could not find his box in the ditch; after that he was going homewards, and the next day I went to the Juſtices, and there he ſaid he had been robbed, I aſked him why he did not tell me ſo the day before, he ſaid he did not recollect himſelf, and could not tell me ſo, becauſe he did not recollect himſelf; he told me if I did appear to ſay he had a licence, but he had not taken any out this year, for he had not ſold any goods this year; and then he ſaid do not appear at all, but if you do, you may ſay you heard me ſay that I was way-laid by three ſea-faring men; I told him I did not know I ſhould appear at all in the matter, though my intention was to attend.

DENNIS LONG ſworn.

I know Dillon the proſecutor, I was in company with him on the 18th of December, at ſeveral public houſes, and drank a great quantity of liquor, he behaved very quarrelſome, and wanted to borrow five ſhillings of another man in order to wreſtle with me; I was with him at Mrs. M'Clough's and perſuaded him to leave his box there I parted with him about ten o'clock, he was very much in liquor, the next day I ſaw him, and aſked him if he was robbed of his box, or where he left it; he ſaid he did not know, he was very drunk.

MARTHA M'CLOUGH ſworn.

I remember Selfage, and Dillon, and Long coming to my houſe, and they had a little bit of a ſcuffle.

In what ſituation was Dillon?—Very much in liquor, he could ſcarce walk, he wanted me to take charge of his box, and I would not; the next day they came to my houſe, he put his hands together and ſaid, he did not know whether he was robbed, or whether he had loſt it, and he ſhewed me how dirty he was.

The priſoner called three more witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

152. ROBERT SHERIDAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 1ſt of January, one glaſs quart decanter, value 1s. 6d. one glaſs pint decanter, value 1s. 3d. one blue and white bowl, value 2s. one milk pot, value 6d. and two mugs, value 2s. the property of John Seller and John Bacon.

JOHN SELLER ſworn.

I am a glaſs manufacturer, my partner's name is John Bacon; on the 1ſt of January, the priſoner came in company with a woman that was going to purchaſe ſome goods, he pretended to be a porter to the ſame woman, and while the woman was buſy in looking out the goods with my ſervant, the priſoner took the opportunity of walking about the warehouſe by himſelf and took ſome things, my ſervant informed me of it, I went after him and brought him back, he denied it firſt; but I heard the goods rattle in his pocket, and I ſent for a conſtable and ordered him to be ſearched by one of my ſervants, the conſtable's name was John Guiſe, we found one quart decanter, one pint decanter, a blue and white bowl, a milk pot, and two ſmall muggs, his pockets were full, they were in his pockets, he immediately acknowledged it when he ſaw part of the goods taken out of his pocket, and deſired we would not take him to priſon.

JOHN GUISE ſworn.

Confirmed the above account, and took charge of the priſoner on the firſt of January.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court. Were theſe things any part of what the woman had bought?—No part of them, the things ſhe bought were packed up.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

This woman employed me as a porter, ſhe went into the warehouſe along with the clerk, and the things were laid down on the floor, I thought they belonged to the woman, and I put them in my pocket for ſafety.

Court to Proſecutor. Were theſe things ſet by the things that the woman bought? —No, they were ſtanding in their ſeparate places.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

153. JOHN BRYANT and JONATHAN DARLINGTON were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th of January, one woollen cloth coat, value 10s. and one man's hat, value 3s. the property Richard Price.

RICHARD PRICE ſworn.

I loſt a coat and hat on Saturday laſt, it was in my maſter's houſe in Baſinghall-ſtreet, it was found on the priſoner by the conſtable.

EDWARD RIGLY ſworn.

On Saturday between two and three in the afternoon, I ſaw the two priſoners at the bar in Baſinghall-ſtreet, oppoſite the White Bear, I thought they were not doing the thing they ought to do, looking in at the window, and I watched them about 20 minutes, and I went and rung at a gentleman's door, and deſired them to let me into the houſe for a few minutes, for I thought there were two thieves in the ſtreet; and the clerk let me in, the priſoners walked up and down the ſtreet ſeveral times, and I ſaw one point to the other to go into the houſe, he ſtaid there about four minutes, and the other waited at the door, I deſired the clerk all the time to keep the door open, that I might have a run; I expected a run, and juſt as I came to the door the two priſoners came up with this coat, and hat under one of their arms, and the other offered to take it from him, but I ſaid, I will take care of it and you too; I did ſo, and the clerk took the other priſoner, I took him to Guildhall, and I ſent for a Mr. Hippy, I think the gentleman's name is, and he ſaid, it was his ſervant's property.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court to Price. Were theſe things in your maſter's houſe that day?—Yes.

CHARLES WILKES ſworn.

On Saturday laſt, between two and three o'clock, Mr. Rigly rung at our bell, and aſked to come into our little office to watch the two priſoners, I looked through the window and we watched them ſome ſhort time, and after being ſometimes backwards and forwards, the one in brown opened the hatch and went into the paſſage of Mr. Hippey's dwelling houſe in Baſinghall-ſtreet, and after being in a ſhort time he returned out with the ſervant's coat, and hat; the other waited at the door, and they walked together, and as he came out, him in blue would have taken the things from the other, but he did not chuſe to let them go, then they came on together till they came to our door, then we came out upon them, and the conſtable took him, that had the coat and hat, and I took the other.

JOHN BRYANT,
JONATHAN DARLINGTON, } GUILTY.

Each to be tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

154. WILLIAM WARING was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 11th of December laſt, one copper tea kettle, value 5s. the property of Thomas Hill.

The Proſecutor not appearing the Priſoner was ACQUITTED.

155. FRANCIS LYDIA was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 27th of December laſt, three plumes of Oſtrich feathers, value 10s. the property of John White.

WILLIAM HUNT ſworn.

I know the proſecutor, he loſt ſome Oſtrich feathers from a hearſe which had been at a funeral.

Court. What was the worth of them? —I cannot tell.

How do you know the priſoner took them?—It was ſlippery weather and I got down to walk, and I ſaw the door move, I had tied the two pins in faſt with a cord, I called to the man to ſtop, and juſt then I ſaw a perſon at the hearſe door, appearing to me to come out of the hearſe; I ſaw his legs juſt before they came to the ground; he was pulling at the feathers, and theſe three he pulled out.

Court. Do you know who that perſon was?—I believe it was the priſoner, after he had got them into his hands I called ſtop thief! he ſaw me a coming and he ran, he took them a little diſtance from the hearſe, and he dropped them, I ran after him, and he was rather to quick for me but I ſaw him fall, he ran into James-ſtreet, on the dark ſide of the ſtreet, there was no lamps; then the next witneſs caught the priſoner, and ſaid, here he is; I had ran paſt him, I believe a yard or two yards, I did not ſee him, it being in the dark: I look upon the priſoner to all appearance as to his ſize and apparel, to be the ſame man that took the feathers.

Court. Did you keep him in your ſight till he was taken?—No, till the time he fell.

On the 27th of December, I was coming down the Haymarket, and there was a hearſe coming up, and a perſon cried from the hearſe, Stop him! Stop thief! I looked about and ſaw the priſoner run from the hearſe, he fell down, he got up again and ran into James-ſtreet, and I after him; he found I was purſuing him ſo cloſe and was going to catch hold of him, and about twenty yards off he ſtopped againſt the wall and began to run back again, I ſtopped myſelf immediately, and went and took hold of him.

Court. Had you him in your ſight from the time of his falling down to the time of your laying hold of him?—I had my Lord, I called out here he is, he aſked me if that was the man that fell down, I anſwered, yes, he is the man.

Priſoner. Whereabouts was you when you heard the cry of ſtop thief?—In the ſtreet, about forty or fifty yards.

Did you ever loſe ſight of me?—No, I did not.

Then I ſuppoſe you take upon yourſelf to ſwear that I am the identical perſon?—No, I do not, I ſwear you was the perſon that fell down.

THOMAS GREGORY ſworn.

(He having a great impediment in his ſpeech offered a paper to be read.)

Court. I cannot take it in writing.

—— DICKINS ſworn.

I had the care of the feathers, I was upon the hearſe and heard the cry of ſtop thief; the others being younger men than me got down firſt, I was the laſt that got down, I ſaw the others run after the priſoner, I did not ſee the priſoner fall.

Court. What is the worth of thoſe feathers?—About twenty ſhillings.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Be ſo kind as to examine the gentleman that has an impediment in his ſpeech.

Court. He cannot ſpeak.

Priſoner. He ſwore before the Juſtice that he purſued me with the feathers in my hand, from the corner of James-ſtreet to the corner of Panton-ſtreet, and that gentleman ſays he picked up the feathers near to the hearſe: my Lord I was going from a friend's houſe in Windmill-ſtreet, and going down James-ſtreet, I was walking very quietly, and this gentleman caught hold of me; I had not got into the Hay-market, and they were going to put me into the hearſe, and I was committed; the next morning Mr. Downes came to me and told me he had loſt a pall and hearſe cloths, and ſome other things, and ſaid if I would be the means of his getting his property again, he would give me five guineas and do any thing for me; I told him I was innocent, I adviſed him to advertiſe them, he ſaid he would; when I went up on Wedneſday for further examination; Mr. Downes ſaid he had not loſt any pall he only loſt ſix velvets; on the Sunday he ſent one Mr. Green who ſaid he had got this gentleman's property back again: now I leave you to think whether I took the things. I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

155. MARTHA RAY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 15th day of October laſt, one woman's black ſilk cloak trimmed with black lace, value 5s. the property of Thomas M‘Cue.

CATHERINE M‘CUE ſworn.

I am wife of Thomas M‘Cue, I lodge in Rider's Court, St. James's, I left my cloak in the care of Mrs. King when I went out the day before it was loſt, the 14th of October.

ELIZABETH KING ſworn.

I lodge with Catharine M‘Cue, I went out in the morning to a day's work, and I left this Patty Ray in my room, I truſted her with the key; and ſhe came backwards and forwards to my room, ſhe was a ſervant out of place; I had this cloak in my poſſeſſion, the proſecutrix deſired me to keep it for her; I left my room between five and ſix o'clock in the morning of the 15th of October, and left the priſoner in my bed, I returned again, to the beſt of my knowledge, between nine and ten o'clock at night, and the cloak was on the top of my box when I went out, but on my return I miſſed the cloak.

When did you ſee the priſoner afterwards?—I did not ſee her for two months, I heard where ſhe lodged, which was Windmill-ſtreet.

Did you find any thing upon her?—No, the cloak was found at the pawnbroker's, where ſhe pawned it, he is here; I never ſaw her after the day ſhe went away, till the day ſhe came before the Juſtice.

I am a pawn-broker, I live in Piccadilly, the priſoner came to me and pledged this cloak with me for 10s. 6d. in the name of Martha Ray.

(The cloak depoſed to by a place that was ripped.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have known the proſecutor about eighteen years, ſhe borrowed half a guinea of me, I aſked her for it, and ſhe told me ſhe could not pay me, and ſhe gave me the cloak with her own hands, and I went and pawned it for my own half guinea.

Proſecutrix. I never borrowed half a guinea of that woman in my life.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and impriſoned ſix months.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

156. MARGARET WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 29th of December laſt, one pewter pint pot, value 10d. the property of James Whale.

JAMES WHALE ſworn.

I keep a public houſe; on the 29th of December laſt, between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, the priſoner came to my houſe and called for one pennyworth of twopenny, there was a pint pot ſtood behind where the woman was; my boy came to me and aſked me if I had moved the pot, I ſaid I had not, he ſaid he was certain the woman had got the pint pot, for it was there when he went down; I watched her, and in about ten minutes after ſhe went out of doors, I followed her, I ſearched her, and pulled the pot out which ſhe had concealed under her cloak.

Confirmed the above account.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

157. STEPHEN WEST was indicted for feloniouſly receiving on the 11th of November laſt, twelve buſhels of coals, value 10s. the property of George Nicholls, well knowing the ſame to be ſtolen.

The record of the conviction of George Holliday read.

I am a watchman in New Brentford; about ſix o'clock in the morning of the 11th of November I went to the priſoner's houſe, he was walking backwards and forwards juſt before his door, I went there after ſome coals; I went down to the ſtairs, and at the bottom of the ſtairs I ſaw the priſoner's houſe open, and a candle burning therein, I did not go in, I went towards the water ſide, and there was a boat, and facing his own door there lay five ſacks of coals.

Court. In what place?—I take it on the premiſes, he told me himſelf that ſome part of it was, and ſome was not, they lay on the ground.

Were they in a ſack, or were they looſe?—All in ſacks.

Have you the ſacks here?—No, we had them here the laſt ſeſſions; the priſoner came through his houſe, and came out to us, he ſaid he knew nothing about the ſacks, he preſently went into his houſe and came out again, and owned the whole.

Did you tell him it ſhould be better for him if he owned it, or that it ſhould be worſe for him, that he ſhould be proſecuted?—No.

What did he own?—He owned that ſome laid on the premiſes, and ſome not, and he owned that he helped out with one of the ſacks out of the boat, he told me that Geo. Holliday had brought the boat up.

Did he tell you that any body elſe had brought the boat up?—No, he did not.

Did he tell you what time the boat was brought up?—No, he did not.

Mr. Silveſter, Councel for the Priſoner. What is Weſt?—A fiſherman.

He lives cloſe to the Wharf?—Yes.

This wharf is open to the water, I or any body elſe may land there?—I do not know.

Do not you, why what ſhould prevent me landing, is it a private wharf; upon your oath is not it the common paſſage?—Nobody can land upon that piece of ground, they tell me it is his private property.

Does not any body elſe make uſe of it?—I did not ſee any body.

You do not live there perhaps?—No.

Then how ſhould you know; where were theſe things, were they not at the water edge?—Yes.

Then it was not even upon the wharf?—The boat could not come up at low water.

Was it below high-water mark?—No, it was not, to be ſure they could not be landed there, they were brought by tide.

Was it above or below high-water mark?—It muſt be above.

Why ſo?—Becauſe I am ſure it muſt.

Was it above the edge of the river?—Yes.

How far, as far as you are from me?—No.

Not ſo far from the water as that?—No.

STEPHEN COLLINS ſworn.

I only know what Mr. Weſt told me, that he had helped out with the ſack, this was the 11th of November.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is no evidence at all, to be ſure it is not neceſſary in the trial of a receiver to give poſitive proof that he knew theſe things to be ſtolen; but circumſtantial evidence would be ſufficient, as for inſtance, if he had bought them at a lower price, or had bought them at an unſeaſonable time of night, but there is no evidence at all in this caſe, only, that the ſacks are taken out, and that he helped out with one of them, and there they lay on the beach.

NOT GUILTY.

158. SAMUEL SMITH and JOHN DAVIS were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting George Hunter, on the King's highway, on the 9th day of January, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſilver watch, value 3l. and one piece of foreign ſilver coin, value 4s. 6d. his property.

About nine o'clock on Friday laſt the 9th of January, I was robbed in Great Hermitage-ſtreet, I was going home, and was within a few yards of my own door, and a man came up and demanded my money, I told him I had no money; he collared me and I collared him, then came up a ſecond man and caught hold of me, and then the watch was ſnatched out of my pocket.

Court. Which of them ſnatched the watch out of your pocket?—I believe it was the ſecond man; then a third came up and put his hand in my left-hand breeches pocket, and took out a piece of coin, then came up a fourth and got hold of me, they lugged me about the ſtreet till I fell down, and when I fell down I cried out murder, and one Mrs. Belſon, a lady that lives cloſe by me, lifted up the ſaſh, and cried out murder, murder, they are killing George Hunter; then they ran away.

Court. They did not appear to have any fire-arms, did they?——I did not ſee any arms, I kept one by the collar, and I tore a piece off his coat as he was running away, which I have in my pocket; they got clear off.

Court. Do you know who any of theſe men were?—I believe the coat to be the property of the accomplice.

But do you yourſelf know either of the priſoners?——I do not.

When were the priſoners taken up, and on what account?—They were taken up on Saturday morning, that is, he who is turned evidence was, and the priſoners were taken on his information. The officer has the watch.

On laſt Saturday morning I heard a gentleman had been robbed in Hermitage-ſtreet, and I ſaw the piece of the coat which the gentleman had tore off, and knowing Hall wore ſuch a coat, I concluded it muſt be him, and I went and took him out of a houſe of ill-fame in Nightingale-lane, I ſearched for the remaining part of the coat but could not find it; after he had been in cuſtody about an hour, he ſaid he would acknowledge the whole matter.

Court. Stop a little, do not tell us what he acknowledged; where did you ſell the watch?—In Duke's-place.

Is the perſon to whom it was ſold here?—No, he is upon bail, he is not here, he is not indicted yet.

Court. You know nothing of the priſoner but from the information of Hall?—No.

Did you ever find the coat of which the proſecutor had a part?—No.

Is there any further evidence?—No.

Court to Proſecutor. Do you know any thing of the perſons of either of theſe priſoners?—No, my Lord, nothing at all, it was very dark, I could not diſcern who they were, nor any thing of the kind.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the rule of law, which is founded on very wiſe reaſons is, that no man ſhall be convicted on the ſingle evidence of an accomplice, unſupported by other circumſtances, for nothing would be ſo eaſy, if the law were otherwiſe, as for any man taken up under circumſtances againſt himſelf, to get himſelf admitted a witneſs, and ſo ſave himſelf by a falſe accuſation againſt others; ſo that, though the law will admit the evidence of an accomplice to explain and connect evidence, yet, without that, the law will never ſuffer any man to be convicted on the evidence of an accomplice only.

SAMUEL SMITH, } NOT GUILTY.
JOHN DAVIS, }

159. The ſaid SAMUEL SMITH and JOHN DAVIS were again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Daniel Vellum on the King's highway, on the 8th of January, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſilver watch, value 4l. 4s. the property of the ſaid Daniel.

This depending on the ſame evidence the priſoners were both

ACQUITTED.

160. JOHN PARKER was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Joſeph Jones on the King's highway on the 21ſt of December laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one man's hat, value 8s. the property of the ſaid Joſeph.

JOSEPH JONES ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Grady, I was robbed on the 21ſt of December laſt, I was going in the evening through Groſvenor-ſquare, about twenty minutes after ſeven, and oppoſite to the late Marquis of Rockingham's houſe, there is a ſcaffolding erected, I was going under the ſcaffolding, and I ſaw two men concealed under the ſcaffolding, with their faces towards the wall, and as ſoon as I came under, they turned about and ſtopped me, and deſired me to deliver my watch and money, or my life immediately; they ſpoke in a very low tone, I did not immediately underſtand what they ſaid, I ſays to one of them, I beg your pardon Sir, I do not know what you ſay, they ſaid, do not heſitate Sir, but your watch and your money, or your life immediately; and one of them, I do not know which it was, caught at my chain, I puſhed him away with my left hand and halloo'd out for aſſiſtance for ſome time, then one or two came behind me.

Court. How many were there in all?—There were three or four, I am ſure it was three, the one that came to me, whether he intended to ſtrike me or catch me by the collar I cannot tell, but as he attempted to ſtrike me, I ſtooped and he caught my hat from my head; I then ſtooped between the two that came up firſt to me, and endeavoured to paſs them by, ſtooping under their ams to make my way under the ſcaffolding, and as I attempted to paſs them the priſoner at the bar ſaid, Damn him, ſhoot him, ſhoot him, if he will not deliver his money.

Court. Where did the priſoner ſtand?—He ſtood at the right hand of me.

How do you know it was the priſoner at the bar?—Very well my Lord, he had his hair hanging on his ſhoulders.

How near was you to the lamp?—About four yards.

You could not obſerve the features of his face?—I ſaw he was a little pitted with the ſmall pox.

You could not ſee him ſo as to ſwear to him?—Not from his being pitted with the ſmall pox, but from the colour of his coat and his face I could ſwear to him a month after; then they all ran away.

Did you obſerve any arms?—I did not, I ran after the priſoner immediately; he ran down Lower Groſvenor-ſtreet, I followed him, and at the corner of David-ſtreet he was ſtopped by Mr. Robert Fenton.

Was he out of your ſight from the time he committed the robbery till he was ſtopped?—No, he was ſcarcely out of my ſight.

Was he at all out of your ſight?—He was not twenty yards from me, if ſo far; when he was apprehended, I came up and took him to the watch-houſe in Mount-ſtreet, I found he was the perſon, and he was committed.

ROBERT FENTON ſworn.

I am a publican; I had been at a ſtable, and I was going down along David-ſtreet, and I heard the cry of Stop thief! and the priſoner at the bar coming running very hard on the coachway; I was on the footway, and as he was croſſing I caught him, and the proſecutor and ſome others came up directly, before I had time to ſpeak, and charged him.

What did he charge him with?——He charged him with ſtopping him and taking his hat.

What did the priſoner ſay to that charge?

He ſaid, you may do what you pleaſe with me.

He made no reſiſtance?—No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

If you pleaſe to order the evidences out of Court I will ſpeak.

Court. It is too late now, they cannot do you more harm than they have done.

Priſoner. The gentleman ſaid I was not out of his ſight, and when we were at the Rotation-office, he ſaid he loſt ſight of me for a minute or two.

Court. That is not material, he ſays now, you was ſcarcely out of his ſight.

Priſoner. Here is my maſter that I work with.

ANTHONY YOUNG ſworn.

I am an ivory turner; I have known the priſoner between eight and nine years, he was my apprentice.

What has been his general character during that time?—His general character has been very good, he ſerved me very faithfully.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

161. GEORGE MELTON and THOMAS JONES (two boys) were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Charles Lettilier the younger (a boy) on the king's highway, on the 13th of December laſt, and putting him in fear, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one guinea, value 21s. the property of Charles Lettilier the elder.

CHARLES LETTILIER the younger.

Court. How old are you?——Twelve next month.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—Yes.

What do you think would happen to you if you was to tell an untruth upon your oath?—I ſhould be in danger of hell fire.

Court. Then take care you ſay nothing but what is truth.

C. LETTILIER the younger ſworn.

Court. Was you robbed at any time?—Yes, at ſeven o'clock on Saturday night.

How long ago was it?—I cannot tell.

As near as you can gueſs, I do not mean exactly?—About a fortnight.

Where was it?——In Little Catherine-ſtreet.

Do you live there?——I live in a court next to it.

What did they take from you?—A guinea.

Who took it from you?—The leaſt of the two priſoners.

What is his name?—Thomas Jones.

What did the other do?—He held his hand before my mouth and noſe, that I ſhould not cry out.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of George Milton and Thomas Jones.

How came you to have all this money with you?—I went to change it at the public houſe.

For whom?—My father.

What is his Chriſtian name?—Charles.

How far was you from your own houſe when they attacked you?—I was in Little Catherine-ſtreet, I was juſt come out of the publick-houſe.

Did you know the two boys by ſight?—I never ſaw them before in my life.

Was it dark or light?—Dark.

How can you be ſure of them, it being dark, and not having ſeen them before?—I was under a lamp at the ſame time ſo I could ſee them.

Are you poſitively ſure now that theſe are the two boys that robbed you?—Yes, Sir, I am poſitive of it.

Jury. Had you changed your guinea?—I had been into the public houſe for change, but he could not give me change.

Did you ſee them in the public houſe when you went to get the guinea changed?—Yes.

Did they ſee you?—Yes.

Were there only theſe two boys in the public houſe?—There were more beſides them.

Priſoner Milton. When we were before the Juſtice this little boy ſaid there were five or ſix of us that went into the public houſe, and that we were taken out of theſe five or ſix.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you ſay ſo?—I ſaid four or five.

Then there were more beſides theſe two?—Yes; there were.

C. LITTULIER the elder ſworn.

On Saturday the 13th of December, at ſeven in the evening, I ſent my ſon to get change for a guinea, and in about 5 minutes I heard a great noiſe, and a mob came and brought a boy up to my houſe, which was Jones; and my ſon was crying, and ſaid, he had been robbed of his guinea, accordingly the boy was brought into my houſe, and we ſearched him to ſee if he had the guinea about him: We found no guinea about the boy, as we went along, ſome of the mob ſaid, there was another of them, pointing to the biggeſt of the two lads, and accordingly my ſon looked at him, and ſaid, that was the boy that ſtopped his breath, then we went to the Rotation Office and the priſoners were committed.

ARCHIBALD COBURN ſworn.

I keep this public houſe in Little Catharine-ſtreet, and the two priſoners with three more came into my houſe, and wanted a pot of purl, the ſame evening, which was the 13th of November; it was about ſeven o'clock, I would not ſerve the boys, I knew them to be of indifferent characters, then the child came in for change and I could not give it him, the little boy had a guinea in a paper, while he ſtood at the bar, and he went out before them, then the boys went out altogether, and in two minutes after, there was the cry of ſtop thief!

Are you ſure theſe two boys are two of the boys that were in your houſe?—Yes, I know theſe boys, but whether they robbed him I do not know.

PRISONER JONES's DEFENCE.

I went to ſee my Aunt, and coming up Catharine-ſtreet I heard the cry of ſtop thief, and I went to ſee what was the matter, and they laid hold of me, ſays they, here is one of them, ſays they, give me the guinea and I will let you go, I ſaid, upon my word I have no guinea; then they ſaw that boy, ſays they again, here is another; then they dragged us away to the Juſtice's, we have no witneſſes.

GEORGE MILTON,
THOMAS JONES, } GUILTY Death.

162. THOMAS EBBORNE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 2d day of January, one piece of white Mancheſter quilting, containing fourteen yards, value 49s. the property of John Nickſon, privately in his ſhop.

Another count for feloniouſly ſtealing the ſame goods in the dwelling houſe of John Nickſon.

The Proſecutor and Witneſſes called on their recognizances, and not appearing the Priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

The recognizances were ordered to be eſtreated, but afterwards, on application to the Court, they were diſcharged.

163. JAMES POWELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th of December laſt, two hundred and four cut glaſs drops and roſes, value 5l. four hundred and eighty cut glaſs drops, value 3l. ten cut glaſs ſtars, value 17s. five nozels, value 6s. one ſpying glaſs value 10s. ten ſmelling bottles, value 10s. ſeven inkſtands, value 4s. two covers for ſugar baſons, value 3s. one glaſs decanter, value 9d. ſix priſms, value 9s. three braſs nozels, ſilvered, value 3s. the property of James Need, James Maidnent, and Thomas Bailey.

THOMAS BAILEY ſworn.

I am partner with Mr. Need and Maidment in the glaſs buſineſs, the priſoner is a mounter of girandoles, he has worked for us ten years, on the 24th of Dececember, in the morning, the priſoner was ſent home with a pair of girandoles that were finiſhed, to a Mr. Hogg a merchant in the city, in the afternoon the ſervant of the gentleman the girandoles belonged to, came and informed me that there were two drops miſſing, and the priſoner was directly charged by one of my men with having taken the drops, he almoſt confeſſed it, and ſaid he would never do the like again, and he was kept in the workſhop whilſt a ſearch warrant could be obtained from Mr. Alderman Hart, and I went with the conſtable to ſearch his lodgings, and theſe things were found.

Court. Did you afterwards know that this place where you found the things, were his lodgings?—Yes, we knew that from his accounts and from his wife; and I ſaw ſome china images there that he bought of us ſometime ago, at the firſt ſearch we found a quantity of drops and various things that are uſed in our way, he was then committed; as he was going to the Compter, he aſked the conſtable whether we took thoſe things or not, from the box under the bed, and we went to his lodgings again, and found in two baſkets ſome more things, and under the bed we found a box that contained drops of various ſorts, that had been manufactured at different times for ſeven, eight, or nine years; the box was about nine inches wide and two feet long. On a ſecond examination he confeſſed every thing.

Was any promiſe of favour made him if he confeſſed?—No; the Lord Mayor ſaid, he did not know his ſituation; he ſaid he had done wrong and was very ſorry for it, he gave no account as to his taking the things.

Did he acknowledge that he had taken them?—He acknowledged every thing that was laid to his charge was true; we always looked upon him as an honeſt, induſtrious man, till we heard otherwiſe the beginning of December.

Court. Has he any family?——Yes, a wife and two children.

Have you compared the things?—I have.

EDWARD STAPP ſworn.

On the 24th of December I went to ſearch the priſoner's lodgings, his wife was at home, and we found a baſket with many things in it, and we took them to Mr. Bailey's houſe, and he was committed, and going along he ſaid, what did you take out of the box under the bed? I ſaid, nothing; and we went again to his lodgings and found the box under the bed.

Priſoner. I took the drops for Mr. Bailey's uſe.

EDWARD RAWLINS ſworn.

I opened the door by the order of the conſtable, and ſaw the things found.

AMBROSE MAZE ſworn.

Some of this is my cutting, and they were Mr. Need's property.

JOSEPH JONES ſworn.

I work for the ſame gentlemen, and I went to examine the work by Mr. Bailey's deſire, and I found ſome of them my work, I examined it carefully.

Court. Theſe things were uſed in girandoles?—Yes.

This man was mounter of theſe things?—Yes.

How long did he work for them?—Six years.

Did the work at home or at Mr. Need's houſe?—Sometimes he was at the ſhop.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My friends are here, I have an impediment in my ſpeech.

Court. Take time and do not hurry yourſelf, and if you have any thing to ſay for yourſelf ſpeak.

Priſoner. I am not capable of telling you.

Court. You ſaid you took them for the uſe of your maſter?—Yes.

Court. What was you to do with them?—To mount them by degrees, I never ſold any of them in my life.

Court to Mr. Bailey. In what manner did you ſupply this man with theſe articles neceſſary for mounting the girandoles?—The drops were generally told out when he took a pair of girandoles, but ſince we knew him he has gone to the drawers and helped himſelf.

Court. But was he ever intruſted with any very large quantities for the purpoſe of mounting?——There were drops that would mount twelve or fourteen pair, and every thing that is uſed for mounting, in this aſſortment, the morning this happened I aſked him if he had any thing of ours at home, he ſaid he had nothing but that pair; none of the drops that I found there did I give him out for any purpoſe to mount whatever, there are drops there that the moulds have not been uſed theſe ſeven years; there was a ſpy glaſs, I never had but two of them cut.

(Ten ſmelling bottles depoſed to, and ſome ſalts.)

JOHN JONES ſworn.

(Depoſed to the ſpying glaſs.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Some of the things were mine.

The priſoner called ſeven witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

164. WILLIAM CLARKE was indicted, for burglariously and feloniously breaking and entering the houſe of Abraham Brown, on the 23d of December laſt, about the hour of three in the night, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one wooden caſk, value 6d. and five gallons of a certain liquor called raſberry brandy, value [illegible] his property.

ABRAHAM BROWN ſworn.

I am a publican, I keep the King of Pruſſia, Salt-petre Bank; on the 23d of December I let the priſoner out of my houſe, he was the laſt man I let out, it was between twelve and one o'clock; about three o'clock I was called up, the watchman ſaid my cellar window was broke open, I came down and opened the ſtreet door, and went down to the cellar to ſearch, the watchman ſaid he would ſtay, but [illegible] I took him in doors with me, and ſhut my ſtreet door; I went down into the cellar, and before I had got down the ſteps, I found the gin cellar was wrenched, going along I picked up a mallet, I proceeded on, the cellars being very large, the houſe is all in one, there are four cellars, turning round I ſaw the priſoner at the bottom lay on the ground in the further cellar, there I took him, and the watchman who came to my aſſiſtance, and I took him up ſtairs to take him to the watch-houſe, he fought with me, and we both had a tumble in the cellar together; I took him to the Watch-houſe, he ſaid he had fallen down the cellar, and ſo he ſaid before the Juſtice.

Court. What ſort of cellar was it?—It was a dead cellar window, nailed with planks over it.

How were thoſe planks laid on?—It was planked up and the nails drawn.

Court. What was become of the caſk?—In the gin cellar, the lock was wrenched off, and the ſtaple was drawn, and the raſberry gin was taken out, and carried to the hole where they broke firſt in, ready to take it away, the cellar was eight yards diſtance from the window, and where I found him was ten yards diſtance.

DANIEL DONNEVAN ſworn.

I am the watchman, as I was going three o'clock, I paſſed Mr. Brown's door, and I found the cellar window open, I never ſaw it open before, I thought there was ſomething amiſs, and I called Mr. Brown, and we went down and found the priſoner on his ſide in one of the cellars, there are two or three cellars in one, it was in the further cellar facing the door a good way off.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was drinking in the houſe till one o'clock, and was very much in liquor, and I went to the Black Boy the next door and had two pints of beer, and I [illegible] down coming along, I [illegible] myſelf with [illegible] down, and I laid down and went to ſleep.

Court to Proſecutor. Did he appear in liquor when you found him in the cellar?—I believe he was, for he had certainly been drinking of the liquors that were in the gin cellar.

Was he very much in liquor when you found him?—Not ſo much becauſe when I got him to the door, he would have fought me.

Court. Was he drunk when you let him out?—I look upon him at eleven to be fuddled, but he ſtaid till between twelve and one o'clock, and had nothing more to drink to my knowledge.

Court to the watchman. Was the priſoner drunk when you found him in the cellar?—No, I cannot ſay he was, he ſaid, he fell down, I ſaid, you ſhall not fall out, we will help you out.

GUILTY. Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

165. JOHN HITCH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the [illegible] of January, two milch cows, value [illegible] the property of William Dellow.

WILLIAM DELLOW ſworn.

I am a farmer, I live at Ware in Hertfordſhire, I loſt two milch cows out of my yard the 1ſt of this month, I loſt them between five o'clock in the evening and eight and nine in the morning, we did not miſs them when we firſt got up having more; I looked all about for them and could not find them, I went on the Friday evening to Cheſhunt turnpike, and enquired after them, and traced them to Ponder's End, and I was informed a perſon was at a public houſe, and that he had been enquiring for a man to help him to drive two cows to town, and at the Goat I ſaw him, I ſaid to him, I heard you drove a couple of cows up, and I loſt two cows, I ſuſpect you have taken my cows, he ſaid, he bought them, and he dare ſay they were not mine; but if I would pay him for a day's work, he would go up to London with me and ſhew them me, if they were not killed, and I agreed to do ſo; I went with him to Smithfield, and when we came there, he ſaid, he did not know where they were, he ſaid, they might be twenty miles off for ought he knew. I was a ſtranger in town and could not find them, and I went back again, and the priſoner with me; I did not take him into cuſtody, he went with me as far as Enfield highway to the White Lion, and I left him and went to Cheſhunt, and I was perſuaded to take him into cuſtody that night, and I found him at the ſame houſe, he gave no account of himſelf, we took him before Mr. Juſtice Brooksbank, who diſcharged him, becauſe I could not make affidavit of them, and he agreed to go to town with me again, and as we came along he went into a ſlaughter houſe, belonging James Bradbury, and ſome carcaſes were hanging up, there was a lad in the ſlaughter houſe, and I aſked him whether this man brought two cows there, and he ſaid yes, and there were the two hides hanging up, and I knew them to be mine.

What was there ſo particular that you could know the hides?—By the colour and the mark.

Was there any mark that you could know them by?—Nothing no more than another cow has.

I cannot underſtand how you could know the hide unleſs there was ſomething particular obſerved on it?—I know them very well; [illegible] both the tips of them off.

Is not that a common thing?—I believe not; it is not: the priſoner ſaid these were the two cows that he had ſold.

What coloured cows were they?—The one was black and white, and the other a brindle, he ſaid he bought them, but of whom he did not ſay, he ſaid he bought them at Ware, and gave ſix pounds for them, but he did not know the man he bought them of.

Did you know the priſoner before at all?—Yes.

What is he?—A butchering lad at Ware.

Does he carry on buſineſs for himſelf?—Now and then he kills a beaſt.

JAMES BRADBURY ſworn.

I am a butcher; the other week at my ſlaughter-houſe the priſoner brought them down to me the ſecond of this month with intent to have them killed, and as the day after they were killed, they were to go to Leadenhall, he ſaid they were his own property, I never knew any thing about them.

Is it cuſtomary for the country butchers to bring up cattle to be killed?—[illegible] he came round as if he had been dealing in Smithfield market, and could not ſell them, and he had brought them to me to be killed, on Sunday morning following he came again with Dellow the proſecutor.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

—I bought theſe two cows of a man at Ware for ſix pounds, I drove them to Smithfield that night, and they were not ſold, and I drove them to Bradbury's to be killed.

Court. Why did not you take the proſecutor to Bradbury's the firſt time you came to town?—Becauſe I thought it would be very hard for me to loſe my money, nobody at London knows me; the hides were both all over blood, and there were more hides like that.

Court to Bradbury. What reaſons did the proſecutor give you for knowing the hides? —— When I came in Dullow field, that is my old cow's hide, and then he went to the others; there were ſome more hides lay with them, but none like the black and white hide.

Did you obſerve any mark on the horns? — No.

Jury. What were the cows worth? — About ten pounds.

To Priſoner. Had you any receipt? — No Sir, we never take any receipts; I was bred and born in Ware, I live along with my mother, I have no witneſſes, I thought I was to be tried at Hertford.

Jury to Proſecutor. Can you be ſure they are your cows? —— I can indeed, they have been in my yard a dozen or thirteen years.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

WILLIAM LIGHTMAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 27th of November laſt, one black gelding, price 4l. the property of John Earle.

JOHN EARLE ſworn.

I live at South Mimms; on the 27th of November I loſt a black gelding out of the field, I did not miſs him till the 28th in the morning; I ſaw him the afternoon before about one or two o'clock; I cannot tell who took him; three men came to our town, and they ſaid they ſaw him in a duſt cart, and I went and ſaw him come out of one of the witneſſes ſtables.

JOHN M'CLARA ſworn.

I bought a black gelding of the priſoner at the bar, the 2d of December, he told me he bought it at Harley-down fair.

When is Harley-down fair? — The 28th of November.

What did you give him for it? — A guinea and a half, and ſpent one ſhilling, and I ſold it for 3l. 1s. to one Tibbitt, he was very lame when I bought him, and had a ſhoe off, I kept him a week.

Court. Is Tibbitt here? — No, he lives at Horſham.

Court. Then who is to prove that this is the ſame horſe he ſold to Tibbitt.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I am a conſtable of Shore-ditch, on the 6th of January I was ſent for to the King's Head, near Haggerſtone, a farmer being there who had loſt a horſe from South Mimms, and had found it in a ſtable there, I went and enquired for the farmer, he was then at the ſtable door, that is the proſecutor, I aſked him his buſineſs with me, and he told me he had been robbed of a horſe about ſix weeks ago, and that he had ſeen it come out to water, and that it was then in a ſtable, and he knew it to be his horſe; I aſked him by what marks he knew it, he ſaid his name was branded on the hoofs. I diſpatched a man for Mr. Tibbit, and he came and told me he bought it of Mr. M'Clara; Tibbit very readily went with me to the Juſtice, the farmer made oath of his property, and the juſtice granted a warrant againſt M'Clara; on the Friday he came to the Public Office, and ſurrendered himſelf up, in the mean time he alſo apprehended the priſoner that he had bought the horſe of, and he was examined before the ſitting alderman; the ſitting alderman took the priſoner's own word for his appearance on the Saturday, when he was examined again; then a letter was ſent by Mr. Wilmot to the ſitting alderman, and an examination was taken again, then M'Clara gave ſuch a ſatisfactory account, that the juſtice thought there was no occaſion to bind him over.

Court. Was the horſe produced? — Yes.

Court to Proſecutor. You ſaw the horſe before the juſtice? — Yes.

Was M'Clara there at the time? — Yes.

And the priſoner owned to the ſelling of the horſe? — Yes.

Mr. Scott, council for the Priſoner. You ſay that upon the firſt examination before the alderman, the alderman diſcharged him on his bare word to appear again? — Yes.

Court. This [illegible] man's character, or elſe I ſhould not upon this evidence ſum up to the jury.

FOR THE PRISONER.

——— TAVERNER ſworn.

I live at Harlow.

Do you know the priſoner Lightman?—Yes.

Do you know Mr. White?—Yes.

Did Lightman and White come down at any time to your houſe?—Yes, they came to my houſe about half an hour after three o'clock, the 27th of November enquiring for lodgings, that was the day before the fair.

Do you recollect ſeeing Lightman purchaſe a horſe on the 28th?—Yes.

Do you recollect what the colour of the horſe was?—Yes, it was black, a long raw boned horſe with a long tail, I believe his off eye was out, and one hoof behind was off to the beſt of my knowledge; he wanted change for a guinea, I gave him 5s. in part of change, and he gave me a guinea, he then went to pay him; it is the cuſtom in thoſe times to ſell a little beer, and he called for a pot of beer, and he took his horſe, ſays he I do not know what to do with him; ſays I, put him into my yard.

Court to Proſecutor. Was your horſe a long tailed black horſe?—Yes.

Had he an eye out?—Yes.

Court to Jury. Upon the evidence for the proſecution, you find the priſoner directly owned where he had the horſe, and this was five or ſix weeks after he was ſtolen.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

167. JOHN RIGG, otherwiſe BIGG, and MICHAEL LYON were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 2d of January laſt, one tortoiſeſhell tooth pick caſe, value 5s. the property of William Dermer.

WILLIAM DERMER ſworn.

I loſt a tooth pick caſe on Friday the 2d of this month, at my ſhop in the Strand, I was at dinner about half paſt two o'clock and I was called to the door, and I obſerved a number of my neighbours with the two priſoners in cuſtody, upon their being brought into the ſhop I ſaid to Rigg, that I would ſearch him, but upon conſideration I thought it moſt proper that a conſtable ſhould do it, I ſent for a conſtable, and I turned round and obſerved Rigg with his hand to his waiſtcoat, as if unbuttoning it, which apparently drew my attention, immediately ſomething fell from him; I did not take it up but it was taken up by the next witneſs, Langſton, in my ſight, and given to me, there was my mark in it, and it was my property, it is in Langſton's poſſeſſion, and has been ever ſince.

——— LANGSTON ſworn.

I live within two doors of the proſecutor, on Friday the 2d of January, I obſerved the priſoner Lyon go backwards and forwards by the proſecutor's ſhop, he went a few doors below the proſecutor's and from thence brought the other priſoner, as ſoon as I ſaw the priſoners come to the proſecutor's window, I ran to the next door neighbour but one on the other hand, and told him I ſuſpected there were two men going to cut the proſecutor's window, and I ſaw them turn away from the window, and I went up running to ſee if the window was broke, I found the window broke, and we took the two priſoners, and he went and fetched another neighbour.

Court. Was you preſent in the ſhop when the tooth-pick caſe dropped?—I was, I was as cloſe to the priſoner as I am to this gentleman, I heard it drop, it dropped from Rigg.

(The tooth-pick caſe produced, and poſitively depoſed to.)

What is the value of it?—I valued it at five ſhillings.

PRISONER RIGG'S DEFENCE.

I have no witneſſes, I thought my trial would not come on ſo ſoon.

Priſoner Lyon. I have nothing to ſay.

JOHN RIGG otherwiſe BIGG, } GUILTY.
MICHAEL LYON, }

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

168. EDWARD FLINN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th of December laſt, four pair of velveret breeches, value 20s. two pair of blue cloth breeches, value 4s. three pair of callimanco breeches, value 6s. one pair of worſted breeches, value 4s. and one pair of everlaſting breeches, value 5s. the property of James Brown.

I live at Cockhill, I am a ſlopſeller, I was in the room adjoining, and my nephew called me, I immediately went to the door, and ſaw the priſoner, I purſued him, and came up with him ſo cloſe to ſee he had ſomething in his arms; in running after him he dropped eleven pair of breeches, I ſtill purſued him he run up a lane and Graves tripped him up; I was cloſe behind and I apprehended him.

Court. When you firſt ſaw at what diſtance was he?—As nigh as I can gueſs about twenty yards, this man picked up great part of the things, and the priſoner's hat under them; on bringing him down he aſked ſeveral times after his hat, I told him, I knew nothing of it, the priſoner turned round to me, and ſaid, I hope you will not hang me for it, I ſaid, if the law will hang you, I will hang you; then one Hurford came running after us, and ſaid, here is his hat.

On the 24th of December, I was drinking a pint of beer at the Cock alehouſe, Cockhill; I heard the alarm of ſtop thief, I ran to the door; and the firſt thing I ſaw on the pavement was this bundle, I picked it up, and under it was a hat; I gave the things to an acquaintance of Mr. Brown's, and I went to help to take the priſoner.

Court. Did the priſoner claim that hat?—Yes, he ſaid it was his.

In whoſe cuſtody has the bundle been ever ſince?—In the proſecutor's.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming by, and I heard this man cry ſtop thief, and I ran as well as the reſt.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

169. CHARLES FOX was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th of November laſt, one hand hand ſaw, value 2s. a tenant ſaw, value 3s. a dove tail ſaw, value 3s. one Turkey whetſtone, value 3s. and one carpenter's plow, value 4s. the property of Thomas Marſhall.

THOMAS MARSHALL ſworn.

I am a carpenter, I live Brook's Market, the priſoner worked for me, I went into the country, and left the priſoner in the care of one Mr. Fox, he worked for him during the time, I was in the country, I hid the tools mentioned in the indictment under the bench where I did buſineſs before I went away, and when I came back thoſe tools were gone, I enquired about them, and I found Mr. Fox the priſoner had pawned them.

ELIZABETH RAMSEY ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, on the 10th of December, the priſoner brought thoſe goods, which I now have here, he pledged them for four ſhillings and ſixpence, I did not aſk him whoſe they were, I am poſitive it was the priſoner, I never ſaw him before, it was in the middle of the day.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I carried the things three or four different times, and pawned them; the gentleman that I worked with had taken my wages, and carried into Yorkſhire, and I had almoſt broke my thighs, and the men told me, if he had ſerved them ſo, they ſhould have been glad to make a ſhilling.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court to Proſecutor. Where did you go to?—I went to Weſtmorland.

Did you owe him ſomething at that time?—I owed him eight ſhillings, but I agreed with Mr. Fox, with whom he was to work, for fourteen ſhillings a week, and Fox was to receive ſixteen ſhillings inſtead of fourteen, and we were to ſettle it when I came back, inſtead of that I was ſix weeks gone.

Priſoner. In the room of giving me fourteen ſhillings, he gave me five ſhillings and promiſed to give me the remainder and did not: I told the pawnbroker, that as ſoon as ever the man I worked for returned I would fetch the things, and as to the plow, it was in the ſhop when he returned, and I only took the things for money to keep me, and the foreman and the men ſaid, if he had gone away with their money in that manner, they ſaid they would have taken three or four of his things.

Court to Marſhall. How came you to know that theſe things were at the pawnbroker's?—He told me of it.

Court. He was in diſtreſs and he pawned them, and you owed owed him money; this ſeems to be a very hard proſecution, and he acknowledges he pawned them through neceſſity.

Proſecutor. When I aſked him about them he abuſed me very much.

Court. Did any accident happen to him that you know?—None at all that I know of.

JOSEPH WEBB ſworn.

The priſoner worked for me up and down for theſe ten years; I have known him theſe fourteen years; he worked for me before he came to Mr. Marſhall; he always bore a very good character; I never knew any thing amiſs of him.

Court to Jury. I will leave it to you, whether this was a felonious taking or no, it ſeems to be a very hard proſecution; you ſee the man went away in debt to his journeyman, a man of very good character.

Jury to Webb. Did you ever hear that he uſed to pawn his own tools, or other peoples tools?——He never pawned any tools of mine, he might pawn his own.

Jury to the Pawnbroker. Did he tell you that on his maſter's return he would fetch them out?—Yes.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

170. WILLIAM BEARD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th of December laſt, one ſeaman's bed, value 5s. one woolen blanket, value 4s. two canvas jackets, value 2s. one pair of canvas trowſers, value 6d. two linen ſhirts, value 8s. the property of William Denniſon.

WILLIAM DENNISON ſworn.

I know the priſoner, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; I loſt them either the eighth or ninth, the firſt time I met the priſoner ſince we were paid off from the ſhip was in Ratcliffe Highway, he ſailed with me as a ſhipmate, we were paid off the the 8th of Auguſt, I aſked him how he did, he ſaid he was very poorly, he had not put a bit of bread in his mouth for two days; I ſaid that was very hard; I kept a ſhop my ſelf, and I had the misfortune to break, but however, I told him I would give him a bit of victuals as much as I could afford, and I took the priſoner home to my own houſe about three o'clock in the afternoon, I gave him ſome dinner, he ſeemed to eat very hearty, and was very thankful for it, he went home where he lodged, he ſaid, he paid one ſhilling a week for laying on the boards, and he ſaid it was very cold; I lent him the things mentioned in the indictment, and he ſtaid for about a week with me, and had victuals every day, and when he went out to look for work I gave him ſome proviſion out with him; he ſaid he had got work at a paviour's; on Sunday night my wife gave him the laſt halfpenny ſhe had in the world to buy him bread, and told him, when he came home the next day to dinner, if ſhe had any thing left he ſhould have it. On Monday morning a little after ſix o'clock, I heard the ſtreet door open, it was double locked; the door ſtood open for ſome conſiderable time, for a few minutes; and I ſaid, damn the fellow, he has left the ſtreet door open; and as I got up the door ſhut too; I went down and called to my wife, and aſked her if the bed and bedding was in the one pair of ſtairs, ſhe ſaid yes; I ſaid they were gone; and I heard no tidings of them till my wife brought the priſoner to Guildhall.

ELIZABETH DENNISON ſworn.

I took the priſoner in out of charity, I let him have that bed and blankets, he ſaid he paid one ſhilling a week, and had only the floor to ſleep on; I thought it very hard as I had that bed to ſpare; I bought him a halfpenny worth of bread when I had not another halfpenny in the world, becauſe he brought home turnips and potatoes and had no bread; I told him, if he would come home at twelve o'clock the next day, I would endeavour to get ſomething for him for dinner after his being at work, for he ſaid he had a place at a paviour's; he never came home again, and I never ſaw him again till I met him on London Bridge on the Saturday after; with that I aſked him how he could be ſo cruel, after my being ſuch a friend to him, to take theſe things away as I was but poor myſelf; he ſaid, he knew it was very wrong, but he expected to receive ſome prize money, and he would make me any acknowledgment whatever I deſired; but he ſaid, he had not made away with the things, he had them all, he told me, he would take me where the things were; I ſaid, I did not chuſe to go where they were; I ſaid, if he would go home with me to my huſband he might acknowledge the things to him, with that he walked out of Tooley-ſtreet to go with me, and he came down Thames-ſtreet, then he turned up a turning where I did not know my way home, I told him it was not the way home, I had hold of him by the right arm and he ſhifted to the left and gave me a terrible lick on the ſide with his elbow, and threw out my arm; he turned down a turning where a man ſtood at a cart, and I bid him lay hold of that man and he did; I took him to the Lord Mayor; when he was at my Lord Mayor's, I ſaid, I believed he had the trowſers on, and they were taken off, when my huſband came, he ſaid he knew the trowſers were his; I never found the things again.

Did you mention to him what things you had miſſed?—Yes.

What things did you tell him you had miſſed?—I aſked him what he had done with the bed, he ſaid he had got it; I mentioned the ſhirts, he ſaid he had not made away with any of them, nor would on any account; I never found any thing but the trowſers.

What were theſe things worth together?—About nineteen ſhillings and ſix pence.

(The trowſers depoſed to.)

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

I took charge of the priſoner, and took the trowſers off him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am in a ſtrange place two hundred miles from home, I am a poor man and have no friends.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

171. HENRY SYMONDS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 24th of December laſt, one linen oil-cloth umbrella, value 7s. the property of Richard Dakin.

JOSEPH WILSON ſworn.

I am a ſervant to Mr. Dakin, a braſs-founder and umbrella maker, No. 4, Long-acre; on the 2d of December, between three and four a lad came to the door and alarmed us that an umbrella was taken; upon this I went to ſeek for the perſon but did not find him, the lad deſcribed him rather taller than himſelf, in a light coat, round hat, and his hair tied behind; on my return home I miſſed three umbrellas, I ſaw nothing more that day; on Wedneſday the 24th of December, between three and four, as I was going into the parlour, James Carpenter came into the door, and I ſaw two men ſtand looking directly down the ſhop; on ſeeing theſe two men anſwer to the deſcription I received on Monday, I ſays to Carpenter, theſe certainly are the men who took the umbrellas on Monday; upon that he went up ſtairs, I followed him, I then went up ſtairs and looked through the banniſters, one ſtood looking in at one end of the window, and the other at the other, ſeeing nobody in the ſhop, nor no perſon looking at them, the priſoner lifted one off the hooks, I ſaw him and immediately ran out after him, and turning round the corner he was rather too quick for me, I cried ſtop thief, he perceived the alarm, and threw it off his ſhoulder, and he run off, and one Thomas Clapham laid hold of the priſoner, and I took hold of him and brought him back to the ſhop, and Carpenter picked up the umbrella; the value of it is ſeven ſhillings.

JAMES CARPENTER ſworn.

I was preſent on the 24th, and I ſaw the priſoner through the banniſters put his hand up and take this umbrella off the hook, I am ſure it was him, I ſaw him throw it down; I aſſiſted in taking him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I picked up the umbrella, I do not diſpute but they ſaw me, they ſaid, ſtop that fellow, he has ſtole an umbrella, I dropped it immediately; I have ſome characters out of doors.

The priſoner called two witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

172. JOSEPH HARRISON was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Gondoux, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 12th of December laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one watch with a gold caſe, value 5l. one ſilk watch chain, value 1d. one watch key, value 1d. the property of the ſaid John.

JOHN GONDOUX ſworn.

I was robbed of a gold watch, ſilk ſtring and key, I keep a little watchmaker's ſhop No. 50, Lemon-ſtreet, Goodman's-fields, and the watch was hanging at the window, between eight and nine in the evening I was at the window in my ſhop, I perceived a man at my window, I was taking my watches down in order to ſecure them in my drawer; I ſuſpected ſomething was going forward, the priſoner looked at me and ſhewed his fiſt at my window; I then ſaid aye, aye, and then he fetched a blow in this manner, and bent through the pain of glaſs, he put his face through the hole in the pain of glaſs immediately, which he had made, and I cried out thief, thief; then he put his hand at the ſame time, in a very quick hurry, and got hold of the gold watch which is here; having it in his hand, which ſtood on a braſs hook, he broke the braſs hook and pulled it off, and he made off with it, he was ſtopped immediately, and brought back to my window, with his hand cut, and the blood bleeding freſh.

Court. Are you ſure of his face?—Very clear in it; I ſent for the headborough, and he was committed, and the headborough ſaid, you fool why do not you bring out a candle to look for the watch in the ſtreet, many candles were brought from my neighbours, and the watch was found in the ſtreet, and brought to me again, and then he was taken to the Rotation-office.

THOMAS GARDNER ſworn.

On the 12th of December laſt, between eight and nine o'clock I was paſſing through Lemon-ſtreet, and I heard the breaking of the window, and inſtantly the cry of ſtop thief; I ſaw the priſoner come running very fa[illegible]rom the window, I ſtruck him on the ſhoulder, and he came head formoſt into the middle of the ſtreet, I ſeized him by the collar, and then took him up to the window that was broke.

BRIDGET HENNISDAY ſworn.

I was coming down at half an hour after eight o'clock, and I ſaw a great crowd of people and evey body looking for a gold watch, and I went to look for it, and a young man was paſſing by with a candle; I cried out and he came to look for the watch, and we went about five yards in the middle of the ſtreet, and we picked up the gold watch; I hallooed out here is the watch, here is the watch; every body told me it was the proſecutor's, and I gave it to him.

(The watch produced by the proſecutor, and depoſed to by him, being his property intruſted to him for ſale, and which was in the window when the priſoner thruſt in his hand.)

THOMAS HORRED ſworn.

I was coming by with a candle, and the woman cried out for a light, and I went with her, and looked and found the watch; I ſaw the woman give it to the proſecutor.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

As I was coming up Red Lyon-ſtreet it was very dark, and I ſtaggered againſt the window and broke the window, and the watch caught hold of my button, and I croſſed the way, and that gentleman knocked me down; when I am in liquor I am not right in my head, I have had a fracture in my ſkull in an action.

The priſoner called ſix witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURT.

173. HENRIETTA HARRISON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 22d of October laſt, a pair of linen ſheets, value 6s. a pillow beer, value 6d. a cotton handkerchief, value 12d. two tea ſpoons, value 2s. the property of George Martin, the ſame being in a certain lodging room, let by the ſaid George, to the ſaid Henrietta, to be uſed by her for a lodging room, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

REBECCA MARTIN ſworn.

The priſoner lodged in my houſe about eleven weeks, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, and other things; ſhe left her lodgings juſt before Chriſtmas, I did not miſs the things till ſhe was gone, ſhe was gone a week before I opened the door, ſhe took the key and gave me no warning, the perſon who took the room for her deſired me to open the door; we found her at a houſe in Clerkenwell, where ſhe lodged, we took her, and ſhe ſaid the things were at Mr. Nicholls's the pawn-broker's.

Was any promiſe made by you to her of favor if ſhe confeſſed?—Not any.

ALBERT NICHOLLS, ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker; I received two ſheets and two ſpoons; I took them of the priſoner; I knew her before; they were pawned at different times, all ſeparate; the laſt the 27th; they were pawned in their own name; they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; they are the ſame things that the priſoner pawned.

(Two ſheets and two ſpoons depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I pledged the things, I meant to replace them again, I did not give up my lodging, I offered part of the things back again.

Nicholls. Two days before Mrs. Martin told me the things were ſtolen out of her houſe, the priſoner ſent money by a perſon from Clerkenwell, as I underſtood afterwards, to redeem them, and I would not give them out, becauſe I underſtood that the perſon herſelf was near where I lived, and therefore I would not deliver them.

Court. Why did not you tell us ſo upon your firſt examination?—I did not know whether it would be of any ſervice to the priſoner or not.

Court. You are to tell the whole truth, never conſider the effect of evidence, whether it makes for or againſt the priſoner, that the Court and Jury will judge of.

Court to Proſecutrix. How did this woman behave during the time that ſhe lived with you?—Some part of the time ſhe behaved very well, and another part of the time ſhe got acquainted with a Captain of a ſhip's lady, and ſhe borrowed ſome plate of them, and pawned the plate for thirty ſhillings, and after a while ſhe was taken up for that plate; I went and paid the money, and ſhe gave me a note of hand for payment in two days, and ſhe never paid it: ſhe was brought to me in the character of a Captain's widow, and I did not know whether ſhe had any huſband or no, but he was a foot ſoldier; ſhe was very well off, her brother had juſt done for her, and put her good clothes on.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any children?—One; ſome of my friends have been here to day.

GUILTY.

To be whipped, and impriſoned ſix months.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

174. MARY DEVINE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th of December laſt, three guineas, value 3l. 3s. one half-guinea, value 10s 6d. and four ſhillings in monies numbered, the monies of John Thomas.

JOHN THOMAS ſworn.

I was in a public houſe drinking two or three pots of beer, I came out of doors and met the priſoner, this was 7th of December, a little after four o'clock in the morning, the public houſe was in Broad-ſtreet, St. Giles's; ſhe aſked me to go home with her, I told her no; ſhe put her hands round my waiſt, I found her hand in my waiſtcoat pocket, and I inſtantly miſſed my money, it was in a purſe.

Court. Do you keep gold in your waiſtcoat pocket?—Not common, but I had pulled out my purſe in the public houſe to pay my reckoning, and I put it into my waiſtcoat pocket.

How long had you pulled it out before you met the priſoner?——About a minute.

How much money had you then?——Three guineas and a half in gold, and half a guinea and four ſhillings in ſilver.

Were you ſober?—Yes.

What at that time in the morning?——That is the common time in the morning that we are at work.

What buſineſs are you?—A brewer's ſervant.

What time had you come out that morning?—We had been out all night, it was Sunday morning.

Had you been at work?—No.

Then what did you mean by telling me, that was the common time of your being at work?—We had been having a ſupper that night.

Why did not you ſay ſo? What time had you ſupped?—About ten, and we were drinking after.

Were you ſober?—Yes.

Will you take upon yourſelf to ſwear that?—Yes, my Lord.

How came you to put your money in your waiſtcoat pocket?—I put in my money there accidentally.

Are you ſure you did put it in your waiſtcoat pocket?—Yes.

Had you felt it there after you had come out of the public houſe?—Yes.

Are you ſure of that?—I am ſure of that.

What occaſion had you to feel for it after you came out of the public houſe?—I put my hands in my waiſtcoat pockets, I moſt generally carry them there.

You ſay you immediately miſſed your money?—Yes.

What did you do upon that?—I went to ſeek after her, but could not find her.

How long was it after ſhe had been with you before you miſſed your money?—About a minute, ſhe went home, and I went back to the public houſe, I miſſed my money before I got half way there.

Where did you miſs it?—I was not a yard from the ſpot before I miſſed it.

How many yards was ſhe gone from the ſpot?—I cannot tell, ſhe did not go the ſame way.

But if you had gone but one yard one way, I ſuppoſe ſhe would have gone but one yard the other?—I went into the public houſe to tell ſome of my fellow-ſervants of it.

The firſt thing would have been to take the woman?—She might run up any alley.

But did ſhe?—I had my back to her.

While you was walking one yard ſhe could not be far gone.—She turned up Dyot-ſtreet.

Did you ſee her?—Yes.

How far was that from the ſtreet where ſhe laid hold on you?—About twenty or thirty yards.

And do you mean to ſay, that while you was going that one yard ſhe had gone twenty or thirty yards?—Yes.

When ſhe laid her arm round your waiſt ſhe run away directly—Yes, as ſoon as ſhe got looſe.

What do you mean by that, had you hold of her?—No.

Then what had ſhe to looſe from?——Only to take her arms off my waiſt.

Why did not you run after her?—I did not miſs the money then.

Did you ſtand ſtill?—I ſtood ſtill to make water before I went away from the place, after I miſſed the money I went to the public houſe, and told one of my fellow-ſervants, and we went and got a conſtable, we could not find her that day, we found her about a fortnight afterwards;

Did you know her before?—I never ſaw her before; ſhe was in the public houſe while we was there.

How long?—I cannot tell.

Was ſhe in your company?—She was in ſome of my fellow-ſervants company. We were all drinking together.

What did ſhe ſay when ſhe was taken up?—I cannot ſay, I was not there.

Did ſhe ever ſay any thing about it?—No.

GEORGE SMART ſworn.

I was one of the proſecutor's fellow-ſervants, I went with him to St. Giles's; I was going in the public houſe, and there were four or five of theſe bad women coming behind us, and the priſoner was one, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would do ſome of us before ſhe left us; I went in and drank part of two pots of beer, and left them.

Did you and the proſecutor ſup together?—Yes.

Then you ſat a good while after it?—We frequently do my Lord of a Saturday night, we have nothing elſe to do, I was in bed juſt after the clock ſtruck one.

You had drank pretty well before that?—No.

Why of a Saturday night you make merry?—We make merry, but no diſturbance, I do not know that I left any liquor in the pot when I left them, we had only two pots for five or ſix, I paid only one pint.

SAMUEL MANNING ſworn.

I have known the priſoner ſome time, I keep the Blackeney's Head, St. Giles's, and ſhe came in about five, and put a guinea and three half-crown pieces into my hands, and deſired me to keep it for her, and a man called her, and I kept the money till ſhe was taken; I know no other but that ſhe is a very honeſt girl; at the time ſhe reſorted to my houſe I never ſaw any miſbehaviour of her; I believe it was a watchman that called her; this man came into my houſe that morning; they had been drinking at Sir John Falſtaff's in Broad-ſtreet, St. Giles's; the man came in, in the morning between eight and nine, to ſeek for her.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never ſaw the man till he came to ſwear to me; I had witneſſes but I ſent them away, they ſaid, I ſhould not be tried to-day, becauſe I was not well with my headach.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recoreer.

175. WILLIAM COX, otherwiſe VANDERPLANK was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Probart (with John Rich and Henry Palmer) on the 19th of October laſt, about the hour of three in the afternoon, no perſon being therein, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, two ſilk gowns, value 3l. one ſattin gown, value 40s. ſeven cotton gowns, value 6l. one ſtuff gown unmade, value 10s. one ſilk and cotton gown, value 30s. one bed-gown, value 5s. ſeven petticoats, value 30s. one dimity petticoat, value 6s. and one white linen petticoat, value 6s. the property of Rebecca Spruce, ſpinſter.

ELIZABETH TONKS ſworn.

I left the houſe the 19th of October and went to church, but I cannot tell whether any body was in the houſe or not; when I returned, I found Mrs. Bruce's door open, and the things all about, and I called a neighbour.

REBECCA BRUCE ſworn.

On Sunday the 19th of October, about 12 o'clock I left my lodgings, and left my clothes, being the things mentioned in the indictment, I locked up my room and went out, there was a cheſt of drawers and two deal boxes broke open; I returned between nine and ten o'clock at night, it was not quite ten o'clock at night, and all theſe things were miſſing, I know nothing of the priſoner's taking them, only as I was informed; I never had any of my things again.

JOHN PROBART ſworn.

I know no more of the matter than that I left home about one o'clock, and I left Thomas Tonks in the houſe, his mother was not come from church.

MARY GRIERSON ſworn.

I work at the whip-making buſineſs, I was looking out of my window the afternoon the robbery was committed, I live two doors from Broad-yard.

How far do you live from Probart's?—He lives in a court, and I live two doors from that court, I was looking out of the window, and I ſaw two men paſs by with large bundles about a quarter before four o'clock, they came from Broad-yard and croſſed over, I could not poſitively ſwear to either of the men, one had a white coat on, and the other had a brown coat on, but I could not poſitively ſwear to the priſoner at the juſtice's, he is like him.

ANN GRIERSON ſworn.

I am ſiſter to the laſt witneſs, and we were looking out of the window, and I ſaw the two men paſs down the ſtreet, and about ten minutes after they returned back again; the priſoner at the bar was one of the men, they had two very large bundles, one in a red handkerchief, and the other in a yellow one; the priſoner had a yellow handkerchief under his arm, they walked very quick along, and as they came back again the priſoner at the bar ſtopped at the publick houſe door and tied his garter up; they had not the bundles with them then, I ſaw no more of them, I have ſeen the priſoner ſeveral times, I know him by ſight, I took the more particular notice of him becauſe it was Sunday, it was about a quarter before four o'clock to the beſt of my knowledge, and it being in ſermon time, my ſiſter ſaid to me, look at them two men what bundles they have got; the next morning I mentioned this; the priſoner was apprehended about a fortnight after, I ſaw him at the Rotation Office, and I knew him then, I charged him with it there.

Priſoner. When I was before the juſtice ſhe ſwore I was the man to the beſt of her knowledge.

Court. How did you ſwear at the Rotation Office, did you ſwear poſitively to him there?—Yes, I ſwore to him the ſame as I do now.

Have you any doubt whether it was the ſame perſon?—No, none at all, I knew his face before.

JOHN BESWICK ſworn.

I am a ſhoe-maker, I live at No. 29, Turnmill-ſtreet, about a hundred yards from this houſe; I was ſtanding up at the one pair of ſtairs window, between three and four o'clock on the Sunday, and I ſaw two men go by with large bundles, I knew one of them, the hat of the other man was flapped over his face.

Court to Ann Grierſon. Was the priſoner's hat flapped?—Yes.

How could you ſee his face then?——Becauſe when he ſtooped to tie up his garter he pulled off his hat and put it on again, I knew his face very well before.

——— ISAACS ſworn.

On the 19th I had information of this houſe being broke open, I was there about twenty minutes after the robbery was found out, and in ſearching the place I found this chiſſel and chopper that they broke open the door with left on the premiſes.

Whoſe property are theſe?—Tonks the evidence will give you an account whoſe theſe are.

THOMAS TONKS ſworn.

Being one of the robbers, I can tell you any thing you want to know of it.

Who beſides you were concerned in the robbery?—William Vanderplank the priſoner, John Rich and Henry Palmer; it was agreed upon on the Sunday to go to this houſe, which they did, and took out them clothes, out of John Probart's houſe, out of the two pair of ſtairs room, I was not with them, I was at the priſoner's lodgings, and was to receive the things there.

Whoſe property were the things?—The property of Rebecca Bruce.

What became of them?—I do not know, they were ſold to a perſon but I do not know who.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The day after peace was proclaimed, that man was drinking and he grumbled to pay his reckoning, and he then ſaid he would do for me. I have no witneſſes.

Guilty

Of ſtealing only, but not of the burglary.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. Juſtice Heath.

176. WILLIAM COUSINS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d of December, one woollen horſe cloth, value 18d. the property of John Smallwood.

JOHN SMALLWOOD ſworn.

I know the priſoner; I loſt a horſe cloth on the 23d of December laſt at night, it was in a two ſtall ſtable at the Star and Garter, Kew Bridge; I found it the 24th, upon him, he was upon a muſhroom bed in the ſhed, covered with hay, we found a knife in his pocket, and a piſtol lay between him and the wall, he was wrapped in the horſe cloth.

I took the priſoner; we miſſed this piſtol over night, the 23d of December, and it was found in the ſtable; it had hung up in the room; we let it remain where we found it, and between two and three o'clock the door was open and the piſtol gone, and about eight o'clock I ſaw the priſoner on the muſhroom bed, covered with this cloth; I went there to ſearch for the piſtol; the priſoner was hid under hay; I trod upon him before I ſaw him, and ſtirring aſide the hay I ſaw the piſtol; he ſaid he got the horſe cloth out of the ſtable, he ſaid he knew nothing of the piſtol; he was ſober.

Court. Did not you rather wonder that a man that had ſtole a thing in the houſe ſhould go and lay down in the ſhed.

The Priſoner called one Witneſs who gave him a good character.

Jury. What knife was it?—A pallet knife.

What had he a week?—Eighteen ſhillings.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice Ashurst.

177. The ſaid WILLIAM COUSINS was again indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d of December laſt, one horſe piſtol, value 15s. the property of our ſovereign lord the King.

The evidence being the ſame, the Priſoner was

ACQUITTED.

178. JAMES DALY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d of January, one ſilver ſhoe buckle, value 1s. and one paſte ſhirt buckle, ſet in ſilver, value 12d. the property of Thomas Jackſon.

THOMAS JACKSON ſworn.

I am a watchmaker and ſilverſmith; on the 2d of January the priſoner came to my ſhop and deſired to look at ſome ſilver buckles, I ſhewed him ſome, and he pitched upon a pair, and I weighed them and told him the price, he then aſked me to ſhew him ſome breaſt buckles, and he pitched on one, he then told me he had no money to pay for them; I told him he was a pretty ſort of a fellow to look at buckles and have no money; he ſaid, if any body would go to his lodgings he would pay for them, and I ſent my boy with him.

HENRY BAKER ſworn.

I went with the priſoner to his lodgings with theſe buckles, to the White-Swan, facing Saltpetre-Bank, and he went in and called for a pint of purl and I drank with him, and he told me, if I would go with him to his lodging a little further he would pay me for the buckles, I went with him to his lodgings in a room in Black-horſe-yard, I went up ſtairs, and there was a woman ſat by the fire, and he ſaid to her, I have been to buy myſelf a pair of buckles, and a breaſt buckle, he ſat down and bid me ſet down, and he ſays to me, let that woman look at one of the buckles, I unwrapped the buckles, and held one to him, and he took and ſhewed it to the woman, then he aſked to let him look at the breaſt buckle, and I took it out of the paper, and he ſhewed it to the woman, and ſhe ſaid ſhe liked it very well; he then ſaid to the woman, go and pawn this buckle, and ſhe would not go, and he ſwore at her, but ſhe would not go; then the priſoner ſaid to the woman, go and fetch Jem the fidler; the woman ſaid ſhe did not know who he was; ſays ſhe, Poll is below, call her, and ſhe will go and fetch him; they called her, and ſhe would not go; at laſt he ſaid you know what Jem I mean very well, ſhe went down, and then in about three minutes ſhe brought in this Jem the fidler, ſo ſhe ſays to the priſoner, is this the man? he looks at the man and ſays, no damn it, but he will do all the ſame; ſo the man came in and ſhook hands with the priſoner, and he told him to ſet down; ſo I got up and I ſtood next the door, and I ſaid to him, my friend give me the buckle, for I ſee you have got no money, but he put it into his ſhoe and ſaid, blaſt you come along with me and I will pay you; I went down ſtairs firſt, and theſe two men followed me, and I ſtood at the bottom of the ſtairs till they came down, and I followed the priſoner cloſe at his heels, and he went and knocked at a little door where there was no light, it was not above three feet high; this was in Black-horſe-yard, he ran in doors, and Jem the fidler was behind him with a ſtick, and I was afraid to follow him, and I went home, and told my maſter; we returned to the alley, and the woman was there, ſhe ſaid ſhe did not know where he was, and we took her with us, and we went to ſeveral publick-houſes, at laſt we found him at the Brown Bear drinking with Jem the fidler, and the conſtable took him before the Juſtice, and he was ſearched and ſome money found on him.

JOHN ——— ſworn.

I am a watchmaker and Silverſmith; on the ſecond of January the priſoner came to my ſhop, and another man with him, he aſked if it was a ſilverſmith's, I aſked him what he would pleaſe to want, he ſaid he had a buckle to diſpoſe of, and he ſold it me for nine ſhillings and three pence; I aſked him if he had but one, he ſaid he was juſt come from Deptford, that he had ſprained his foot, wrenched it, and loſt one of his buckles, he had a breaſt buckle in a bit of paper.

(The buckle depoſed to.)

Proſecutor. The breaſt-buckle he ſaid he loſt.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I told the young man to come along with me to that houſe, and that I would get the money for him, he ſaid he would, and this man, Jem Davis, he is a fidler, he is a ſhipmate of mine; ſo ſays he, but I cannot be ſtaying; ſays Davis to me, damn him, ſays he, I ſuppoſe he is ſome Jew or another, let him go to the Devil; ſo ſays he, come along with me, and we will receive ſome money to eat and to drink on; ſo like a fool as I was, I went with him to ſell the buckle.

Court. Have you any witneſſes to call? —Priſoner. No, I can ſend for a character; my Captains are at Charing Croſs.

GUILTY.

To be whipped at Saltpetre Bank.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

179. JAMES HOWARD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 12th of January, one iron Bath ſtove, value 10s. the property of Owen Stratton.

OWEN STRATTON ſworn.

I live the corner of Catherine-ſtreet; on Monday evening laſt I loſt a Bath ſtove, it was the outſide of the door faſtened with a chain and padlock; a man opened the ſhop door and ſaid a man had taken the grate away from the door, immediately my ſervant ran out after him, and caught him and brought him to the ſhop, the man went down on his knees; I ſaw the ſtove half an hour before it was ſtolen, I was behind the counter, and a man came and told me a ſtove was ſtolen.

—— DAWSON ſworn.

I followed the man immediately and overtook him with that very grate on his ſhoulder.

How far was it from your maſter's ſhop?——Between Exeter-change and the Savoy ſteps; I brought him back to my maſter's ſhop.

(The grate depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

As I was coming along the Strand a man had this grate under his arm, and he aſked me to aſſiſt him, and I took it, and he bid me croſs the way, and he ſaid he would ſatisfy me.

The Priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

What is the value of the grate?—One guinea and an half.

Jury. Had he the chain in his cuſtody?——It was dropped in the ſtreet, and brought in by another perſon, the chain is broke; this falſe key he had ſtruck in with intent to open it, but it would not.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

180. ROBERT MOTT was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Twyford about the hour of eight in the night, on the 2d of January, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, two pieces of figured velvet, value 24s. and two pieces of ſwan down, value 14s. the property of the ſaid John.

JOHN TWYFORD ſworn.

I live in the Strand, my ſhop window was broke open about eight o'clock in the evening, on the 2d of January; I was not in the ſhop at the time, my ſervant was.

—— JONES ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Twyford, the window of my maſter's ſhop was broke open on the 2d of January, between the hours of ſeven and eight; I was in the ſhop, and the priſoner came to the window, he ſtood upon his toes and looked over the things in the window, to ſee, as I imagine, who was in the ſhop; there was a light in the window, I did not ſee him at that time attempt to do any thing at the window; about ten minutes after, I ſaw the priſoner at the window again, and I ſaw his hands at work; I did not obſerve any inſtrument in his hand any more than hearing a window crack, I immediately went out, but he was gone, the window was not broke, only cracked at that time; I came into the ſhop and was in the ſhop about ten minutes or thereabouts, and I heard ſomebody ruſtle, and I thought it was ſome of his accomplices got into the ſhop, I looked behind the counter, but there was nobody at all there, and preſently afterwards I could ſee the priſoner at the window again; I ſaw his hands at work, but not to ſee him take any of the things away, and I heard a piece of the glaſs of the window drop; I went out immediately, and found that the window was cut and the goods gone; I called my maſter out and went after the priſoner; I had not gone but a few yards, and he was coming back again.

How do you know him to be the ſame perſon?—I ſaw him three times, the light was in the window, and I am very poſitive he is the ſame perſon; upon his perceiving me he croſſed over the way and turned to a window where there was a light in it, on the other ſide of the ſtreet, and he took out his watch and pretended to ſee what o'clock it was, I looked him in the face and found he was the ſame perſon; I took him by the collar and told him he muſt go with me; he made no heſitation but came with me immediately; when I told he was the perſon that cut the window, he told me I was miſtaken, for there was a perſon with ſuch another coat, waiſtcoat, and the ſame kind of hat juſt gone by; I told him I did not know him by his coat or waiſtcoat, but I ſaw him three times at the window and I was poſitive to his face; Mr. Twyford went for a conſtable, and by that time the priſoner was returned to the ſhop; a man that kept a publick houſe next door but one, came in, and two or three more men with him.

Was any thing found upon him?—Nothing at all.

Was any thing miſſing out of your ſhop?—Yes, the things mentioned in the indictment.

Priſoner. My Lord, when I was committed, he ſwore he miſſed nothing.

Were they in the window of the ſhop?—Yes.

Were they in that place where it was broke open?—Yes.

When had you ſeen them there before?—I had not ſeen them, Mr. Twyford had.

Mr. Twyford, I ſaw them in the evening when candles were lighted, they were cloſe under the part of the window that had been broke, the window was broke ſufficiently for the things to be taken out; they were of no great bulk, they might have come through the hole made in the window.

Mr. Chetwood Priſoner's council. You mean by the candle light, three or four o'clock?—Yes.

This was near eight?—Yes.

To Jones. He did not offer to run away?—No.

There was nothing found on the priſoner?—No.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing but not guilty of the burglary.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

181. JOHN PETRIE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 16th of December laſt, eight cloth coats, value 6l. twelve waiſtcoats. value 5l. eight pair of breeches, value 3l. ſix handkerchiefs, value 6s. ſix ſtocks, value 6s. one pair of ſilk breeches, value 15s. ſix linen ſheets, value 20s. three linen table cloths, value 10s. ſix linen towels, value 3s. two morning gowns, value 50s. two fuzees, value 3l. a pair of pocket piſtols, value 30s. one ſilver mounted ſword, value 4l. four pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 10s. three pair of thread ſtockings, value 3s. and fifty linen ſhirts, value 20l. the property of Archibald Campbell, Eſq. and one ſteel mounted ſword, value 20s. the property of Duncan Campbell, Eſq. in the dwelling houſe of John Hayman.

To my misfortune the priſoner was my ſervant, he had been ſo about ſix months, on his ſucceeding my former ſervant, the things mentioned in the indictment, with a number of others, were delivered to him. At the end of September or beginning of October I came to London, and lodged in the houſe of John Hayman, No. 23, Queen-ſtreet, Bloomſbury; the priſoner lodged in the houſe, he kept the keys of my trunks; moſt of the things in the indictment I ſaw ſince I came to town, I had no ſuſpicions of his honeſty till about Chriſtmas, upon the 26th of December I miſſed two fuzees and two ſwords that ought to have been viſible in my room; on Friday morning I aſked the priſoner for them, he made a pretence that he had ſent them to be cleaned, upon which I deſired him to bring my keys and ſhew me my trunks, he pretended to go up to his own room for the keys, but ſlipped out at the fore door and diſappeared; upon this I employed people to look after him, and the next Saturday they found him with one Green, that goes commonly by the name of Captain Green, inliſted for the Eaſt India ſervice, he was at Mr. Green's houſe, which I believe is in St. Martin's-lane; I ſent my compliments to Mr. Green, and begged him to take care of him till Monday morning, and produce him at Juſtice Hyde's; on Monday he was brought there, he acknowledged there the making away with the things, and ſaid it was owing to bad advice.

Did he ſay what he had done with the things?—Upon the juſtice preſſing him to make all the reparation in his power by telling what he had done with the things, he ſaid, he had ſold and pledged ſome at many different places, and the reſt he had diſpoſed of to jews, and people that he did not know; the juſtice ſent men along with him to different places that he named, and the few things that were found at theſe places are here to be produced.

Court. Can you mention Colonel Campbell, from your own recollection and knowledge, all the things that were loſt?—My Lord, I have not mentioned half, I loſt every thing I had in the world but what I had on, beſides three ſhirts and a pair of ſilk breeches, and a pair of nankeen breeches was all I had left.

Can you ſpeak with certainty to the things mentioned in the indictment having been among thoſe that were loſt?—Yes, I had given him an inventory of them at the time, there were eight cloth coats, and a great number of waiſtcoats, regimental and others, more than twelve.

Was there any particular promiſe made to the priſoner before he confeſſed.—No.

FRANCIS FLEMING ſworn.

I am a pawn-broker, here is a ſteel hilted ſword, and a pair of black ſilk ſtockings.

Proſecutor. That was Captain Duncan Campbell's ſword.

Court. Who were theſe things pledged by?—By the priſoner; on the 15th of December there was a ſhirt alſo.

Did you know the priſoner before?—— I never ſaw him in my life before.

How do you know he is the man?—— I queſtioned him, he told me his maſter was a colonel, and his pay was not due, and he was very much in want of money, and he had ſent theſe things by him, and as gentlemen ſend things to our ſhop I did not doubt him.

(The ſword and ſhirt and ſtockings depoſed to.)

Colonel Campbell. I know the ſtockings, they were too long in the feet, and my waſher-woman cut off the tops of the feet, the ſhirt is marked A. C. No. 7. I have not the leaſt reaſon to doubt that it is mine, but I would not wiſh to ſwear poſitively to the ſhirt, as a man may be miſtaken; the ſtockings I have given a particular reaſon for knowing.

Court. What may the value of the ſword be?—I really cannot ſay.

Fleming. It is worth twenty ſhillings.

WILLIAM SHIPLEY ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, I produce a pair of piſtols which the priſoner brought to my ſhop ſome time towards the latter end of November, and ſaid he wanted to diſpoſe of them and change them for a watch or any thing of that ſort, and he fixed upon a metal watch in the window, and two metal ſeals, and a metal chain.

Court. What may be the worth of them?——The watch and ſeals I gave him was worth about a guinea and a half, here is alſo a coat and a ſhirt, and two pair of breeches and a pair of ſtockings, the breeches was pledged by him in December.

What may theſe things be worth?—I lent twelve ſhillings on them.

What are they worth?—I ſuppoſe twenty-four ſhillings.

Proſecutor. The piſtols and great coat are mine, as to the breeches I cannot ſay, I had many ſuch, I cannot ſpeak to them with certainty.

WILLIAM DICKINSON ſworn.

I have two pair of breeches and a ſhirt.

What is the value of theſe things?—— About ſix ſhillings.

JOHN WATERFIELD ſworn.

I keep a ſale ſhop in the clothes way, I bought theſe things of the priſoner on Chriſtmas-day morning, a pair of breeches and a waiſtcoat, there was a ruffled ſhirt which I diſpoſed of before I knew any thing of the matter.

Proſecutor. I cannot ſpeak particularly to them.

Shipley. On the 10th of December, when he pledged the coat and waiſtcoat, I gave him a ſilver watch for two fuzees, I had them cleaned, and they were ſold previous to this being found out.

ELIZABETH LANDER ſworn.

I bought theſe things of the priſoner at the bar, two pair of breeches and a waiſtcoat, about three weeks or a month ago.

(The waiſtcoat depoſed to by the make of it, and the breeches with regimental buttons.)

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, I have no witneſſes.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, I will ſtate to you what I take to be clearly the law upon this caſe; that the value of the things muſt not only be in the whole ſuch a value as the law requires to conſtitute a capital offence, but the things muſt be ſtolen at ſome one particular time, and no particular acts of ſtealing muſt amount to that value; for the law will not permit the value of things ſtolen at different times, which are in fact different acts of ſtealing, to be added together; becauſe as no number of petty larcenys will amount to a grand larceny, ſo no number of grand larcenys added together will amount to a capital charge; it ſeems to me that there is no direct evidence before you of things taken at any one time, of the value of forty ſhillings; and though there ſeems to be no ground for leſſening the value of the things which has been put on them by witneſſes, yet I do not think a jury is warranted againſt a priſoner to extend the value; the ſword is valued by the witneſs at twenty ſhillings only, and by that value I think in ſuch a caſe you ought to be bound; whatever your opinion upon the view of it may be, you ſhould not, againſt the priſoner, depart from that; and no value you put on the black ſilk ſtockings and ſhirt, will bring it to 40s. the piſtols he ſays were under 40s. there are two others who both ſpeak to other things pledged on the ſame day, now it would not be a ſtrained inference to ſay that they were taken at the ſame time, but they both added together do not amount to the value.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s.

Court to Proſecutor. Where did you get the priſoner from?——He was a ſoldier in the regiment.

Mr. Recorder then paſſed ſentence upon the Priſoner as follows:

Priſoner at the bar, you have been convicted of an offence on very clear and ſatiſfactory evidence, which, as charged in the indictment, would have affected your life: the tenderneſs of the witneſſes with reſpect to the value of ſome of the articles, has reduced the offence, ſo that the verdict of the Jury does not affect your life; but the Court think themſelves bound to take notice of the circumſtances of aggravation with which your offence was attended, being a theft againſt that maſter whoſe property it was your duty to protect, and being a very aggravated breach of truſt; for it appears, you have paſſed a great part of the time you have been here, in plundering this gentleman from time to time, until at laſt you had almoſt ſtripped him; therefore the Court thinks no puniſhment ſhort of death can be too ſevere for your offence, and the ſentence of the Court upon you is, that you be tranſported to Africa for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

182. MARY JONES was indicted for felonioully ſtealing, on the 26th of November laſt, ſix yards and a half of Florentine ſattin, value 30s. the property of Thomas Lingham.

——— MARY LINGHAM ſworn.

I am wife of Thomas Lingham, a breeches maker and glover, in the Strand; the priſoner lived a ſervant with us, and we loſt a piece of black Florentine ſilk, we ſaw it the laſt time on the 15th or 16th, and it was taken between that and the 26th of November; when ſhe left me we had ſome ſuſpicion of her, and having ſearched her and found ſeveral things on her, but not this Florentine ſilk, we ſaw that at the pawnbroker's.

——— MULCASTER ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, this ſilk was brought to my ſhop on the 8th of January by the priſoner, ſhe wanted eighteen ſhillings on it, I ſtopped it, it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; ſhe told me where ſhe lodged, and by that we found out Mrs. Lingham; ſhe ſaid, ſhe had bought it of a ſoldier's wife who was gone abroad, and ſhe intended it for a gown.

(The ſilk depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming from the Borough, and there was a woman met me as I came into St. George's fields, and walked with me, and a man, ſeemingly a Jew, and when we came to Weſtminſter Bridge, I ſat down on one of the ſeats, and the man and ſhe ſpoke a good deal, and they parted, he went towards St. George's Fields, and then ſhe told me ſhe had a bargain, and I told her, I had very little money, and ſhe ſaid was a piece of ſattin ſhe had for a cloak, that ſhe was going to America to her huſband, or ſhe would not part with it, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would have two guineas for it, then three half-guineas; I offered her twenty-four ſhillings, and ſhe would not take it, and then twenty-five ſhillings, ſhe folded it up, and then ſhe called me back, and I gave her twenty-five ſhillings for it.

Guilty.

Impriſoned twelve months.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice Heath.

183. STEPHEN LE GROVE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th of December laſt, one hundred and eighteen deal boards, value 10l. the property of John Rigg, and John Rigg the younger.

THOMAS RANDALL ſworn.

Mr. Garrow, Council for the Proſecution. I believe you are lighterman to the houſe of Meſſrs. Riggs?—Yes, I received directions from them for carrying ſome deals to Mr. Shepherd and other perſons, in conſequence of which I unloaded into my lighters the deals that were contained in the ſhip, I ſaw it loaded on the 26th, and on the 29th I perceived ſeveral were loſt, about one hundred and twenty, they were two inches and a half yellow caſt deals, they are the ſecond ſort of deals, I never ſaw any of them ſince I delivered the remainder of the cargo.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. The ſhip was loaded with deals?—Yes.

—You took them to different timber-yards? —Yes, where we were ordered.

Where did your lighter lay?—At King Edward's Stairs.

When had you ſeen them?—Not from the 26th to the 29th.

They are loaded on board of ſhip, are not they?—Yes.

Your ſervants do not load them?—No.

You have many lighters and ſervants? —Yes.

Is not that buſineſs in general left to your ſervants?—Yes.

Had your ſervant the care of the craft all the time that you did not ſee them?—Yes.

——— THOMPSON ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. You are ſervant to Mr. Randall?—Yes.

Do you remember unloading any deals? —We only carry the craft up and down, we have no buſineſs at all with the unloading the veſſel, ſhe was full when I left her at King Edward's Stairs, I ſaw her again on the Saturday morning about ten o'clock, ſhe was then cut away from the place, with about one hundred and twenty deals taken from her.

Mr. Sylveſter. Had you reckoned them into the lighter?—No.

You was not employed in unloading this veſſel?—No.

JOSEPH GATES ſworn.

I received information by two waterman, and I went into Houndſditch, they ſaid the laſt cart was juſt going, I went into Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and enquired after the cart, and when I came near Norton Falgate, I met a cart, and I aſked the carman where he had been with them deals, he told me into Hog Lane; I went and ſaw the deals in the yard of one Webb, Mr. Corfield who was foreman to one Mr. Croft had bought them, and I came to Mr. Goff's, and I ſaid, I ſuſpected they were ſtolen, he ſaid, he was to pay the man the next day at four for them, I went there, and after ſome time the priſoner came in, he ſaid, that was the man, and I took him into cuſtody, and carried him to the Poultry Compter.

Mr. Garrow. Did the priſoner in your hearing give any account of theſe deals?—He ſaid, he had them from ſome of the mates.

Mr. Sylveſter. Did he ſay what he was to give for the deals?—I do not remember.

Did you ſee the deals?—I ſaw a great quantity.

Was it an open timber yard?—Yes.

Where was it?—It is under Mr. Naſh, a coachmaker's yard in Hog Lane, the laſt cart-load lay by themſelves, there were a great many more.

THOMAS CORFIELD ſworn.

I am foreman to No. 69, Houndſditch, the priſoner came to me in October with two more men, he ſaid, he wanted a bedſtead, one of the other men ſaid, he wanted a cheſt of drawers and ſix mahogany chairs; I told him I could ſerve him, and he aſked me then, if I would buy any deals, I told him on condition, he would have ſome goods out of the warehouſe I would, for the uſe of Mr. Goff, accordingly there were ſome deals brought up to me, which he ſaid were down at Billinſgate, I went to Billinſgate, and ſaw ſome deals there, and we agreed for ſeven pound ten ſhillings a load; that is 15l. a hundred, they delivered the firſt parcel to me, that was ſixty-ſeven, they were carried to the yard where all our deals go to be cut up for uſe, and ſome time after they delivered ſeventy-one: on the 21ſt, the priſoner came again to me and ſaid he had got ſome deals, and I might go and ſee them again down at Billinſgate, and on the 29th of November, the priſoner and two more came and brought theſe deals up, five ſcore and eighteen, that wants two of a a long hundred, they were two inches and a half twelve feet Chriſtiana ſecond deals, they were carried to Mr. Webb's then on the 28th or 29th, the priſoner came and took money on all the deals on account, they were at the price of 15l. per hundred; on the 5th of December, Gates came to me, and aſked me for the bill and receipt of ſome deals which were delivered that day, I told him, I had no receipt, becauſe I paid money on account; I told him if he would come on the morrow at four o'clock, he might ſee the perſon that brought the deals to me, which he did, and ſaw the priſoner there.

Mr. Sylveſter. You are foreman to a paper-ſtainer?—Yes.

You are beſides a carpenter and joiner?—Yes.

You have ſeen a great many Norway deals?—Yes.

Two inches and an half is the common ſize they run?—Yes.

Other deals are not above ten pounds a hundred?—That is nothing to me.

Did you know any thing of the three men that came to you?—I have ſeen the men once before.

Where did they live?—I do not know, I was once along with the priſoner, he called me to go down and look at another matter he had to diſpoſe of, I aſked the men where they came from, and they told me they were the perquiſite of the mate of a ſhip, I had no time to enquire, becauſe my buſineſs called me; I ſhould have looked them over before I gave that price, I was to give fifteen pounds a hundred.

You was taken into cuſtody?—No.

How long had you dealt with him?—From October to December.

Did you ſee them at Billingſgate openly?—Yes, publickly.

Was there any thing particular in theſe deals from any other deals?—Nothing particular; there is a mark in the yellow deals in particular, but not on them deals that came out of Billingſgate.

JOHN BARNES ſworn.

I am carman to Mr. Schooner, I carried ſome deals to Mr. Webb's yard, three load, I carried the firſt ſome time before Mr. Gates applied to me, I loaded at Billingſgate dock, I carried them by the direction of a young man on board the lighter, not the priſoner; I did not ſee them at all at the firſt.

PETER

PETER DIXON ſworn.

I conduct the buſineſs of the proſecutors, I went to Mr. Webb's yard with Gates, I looked at the deals and took the marks on a piece of paper, I counted them, and there were one hundred and eighteen, two ſhort of a long hundred; on the following morning I went to Mr. Shepherd's timber-yard, and compared thoſe marks with the deals on the pile that were taken off that craft, I found the marks correſponded, and was ſatisfied they were the proſecutor's property, Meſſ. Riggs are the general conſignees of all the deals of the houſe of Madame Cudrio, at Norway.

Court. Have all the ſhip loads the ſame mark?—I cannot ſay, they are of various ſizes, I only ſpeak to thoſe I took the marks of, and compared with a particular pile of deals, the mark is on the end with red chalk, each deal cannot contain the ſame mark.

Court. Are all the deals that come over in the ſame ſhip marked in the ſame way?—That I do not know, I only ſpeak to theſe.

Court. Does the ſame houſe always mark in the ſame way?—Yes.

Mr. Sylveſter. The deals that came laſt year, and the deals that will come next year have the ſame mark?—Yes.

Theſe deals go to different houſes, and are diſperſed all over London?—Yes.

There are other merchants that trade from Norway;—Yes, ſeveral.

Court. Were thoſe deals that went to Shepherd's the only deals of that deſcription?—No, a thouſand of another deſcription went to another merchant.

And he ſells them out again?—Yes.

What is the value of one hundred?——This year we have ſold them at eleven pounds.

Mr. Garrow. Were any of the deals of this cargo delivered at the time theſe were loſt?—No.

The priſoner called five witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

Jury to Dixon. Were theſe green deals?—Yes.

When a lighter is loaded they generally make a mark acroſs the whole craft; did you perceive any ſuch?—No.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

---

184. JOHN HALL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 17th of December laſt, one wooden caſk, value 4d. and ſixty pounds weight of butter, value 30s. the property of William Butler.

ROBERT ALDER ſworn.

I am apprentice to a turner, I ſaw the priſoner at a chandler's ſhop the corner of Bluecoat-fields, and I ſaw him go paſt Butler's door backwards and forwards, then he went in tip-toed, and he took the barrel of butter in his arms, ran the other ſide of the way, and pitched it on the ground, and ſtood before it; I went and told the man of the ſhop of it, and he came out, and the priſoner was taken while he was ſtanding before it.

JOSEPH BUTLER ſworn.

The laſt witneſs came to the ſhop and told me, I called my brother, the proſecutor, I ſaw the priſoner and the butter, I ſaw the butter about five the ſame evening; it is my maſter's butter, marked W. B.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was drinking with ſome of my ſhipmates, and going to the door to make water ſome men came by me and ſat the butter down, I ſtood making water, and they came up and ſaid I had ſtole it.

Court to Joſeph Butler. What did he ſay when you took him into cuſtody?—I cannot ſay, he muttered ſomething.

Did he ſay that ſomebody elſe had put down the butter?—No.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

185. JAMES GRACE (a boy eleven years old) was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Samuel Burton, at the hour of ſix in the night, on the 22d of December laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing a pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 7s. and ten yards of ſilk ribbon, value 2s. the property of the ſaid Samuel.

GEORGE WINDSOR ſworn.

I was fifteen laſt Chriſtmas, I am ſervant to Mr. Stuart in Oxford-ſtreet, I was in the ſtreet between ſix and ſeven the 22d of December at night, and as I was paſſing by, I ſaw the priſoner put his hand through a pane of glaſs, and take out a pair of ſilk ſtockings, as he paſſed by me I laid hold of him, and I had him for five minutes before any body came, and he threw down a pair of ſtockings, and he was alſo taking out ſome ribbon, and he could not get it all out; then Mr. Burton came out and took hold of him; he ſaid ſomebody elſe took them.

SAMUEL BURTON ſworn.

Court. In what ſtate was the glaſs of your window before this happened?—Whole.

Can you ſwear that poſitively?—Yes, I had looked at them about half an hour before this happened and they were all whole.

Might not the whole glaſs be taken out and you not ſee it?—I generally walk about my ſhop and I ſaw the glaſs was whole, I came out on the alarm, and took the priſoner into my ſhop, the other young man had hold of him, I found nothing upon him.

Court to Priſoner. What age are you?—Eleven.

JOHN BLINKOW ſworn.

I am a baker, I was going up the road, and the other witneſs deſired me to pick up that pair of ſtockings, which I did, it was two doors off, they were white ſilk ſtockings, I gave them the proſecutor.

(The ſtockings depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Between the hours of ſix and ſeven, as I was coming down Oxford-road I ſaw this pane of glaſs broke, and I looked into the window, and this pair of ſtockings lay under the window, and I picked them up, and was going to carry them in to the gentleman, and that gentleman and that boy caught hold of me.

Jury to Windſor. Did you obſerve this window broke before?—No, I had not paſſed by.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not of breaking and entering.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

186. JAMES BLADES and HENRY TAYLOR were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 20th day of December laſt, twelve iron bars, value 12s. and four yards of iron railing, value 3s. belonging to Daniel Burning, and affixed to a certain building of the ſaid Daniel, againſt the form of the ſtatute, and againſt the King's peace.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

DANIEL BURNING ſworn.

I live in Shepherd Market, May-fair, on the 20th of December laſt, I loſt ſome iron bars and railing from my houſe.

ROBERT HILSON ſworn.

I am a watch-man, on the 17th of December ſome iron rails were miſſing from this window, on the 19th in the evening, about ſeven o'clock, and in the morning of the 20th, which occaſioned us to watch this houſe more ſtrictly; and juſt after four o'clock on the 20th, the iron bars and the kirb ſtone they were fixed on, which we have here, were taken from the houſe by the priſoners, they carried them about 150 or 200 yards from the building, they were looſe by the firſt being pulled off, they knocked the ſtones from the iron, and loaded themſelves with the iron, and walked off a conſiderable way, and we ſtopped them and took them to a juſtice, I kept them in my ſight all the time.

Court. What is the value of this iron railing?—

Burning. Three pounds five ſhillings I paid for them.

JOHN ODDEY ſworn.

Another watchman depoſed to the ſame effect.

PRISONER BLADE's DEFENCE.

It was a very dark night, they could not ſee us; my comrade ſtopped to eaſe himſelf, and they came and took us to a gate-way about ten yards, and they ſaid there is the iron ſtands there.

JAMES BLADES, }
HENRY TAYLOR, } GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

187. THOMAS WELCH was indicted (with JAMES BIRNE, not in cuſtody) for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 28th of November laſt, one metal watch, value 40s. two gold watch caſes, value 7l. the property of Thomas More, privily in his ſhop; and WILLIAM HARDING was indicted for feloniouſly receiving two gold watch-caſes, part of the ſaid goods, knowing them to be ſtolen.

THOMAS MORE ſworn.

I am a watch-maker in Moorfields, the priſoner Welch, and another man came to my ſhop to buy a watch, it was about ſix weeks ago, I cannot particularly recollect the day, I took no memorandum of it, I think it was the 28th of November, I ſhewed them ſeveral watches, they went away and bought none; one of the watches which I ſhewed him, which was a metal watch, I miſſed about four minutes after they were gone, and two gold watch caſes. Juſtice Wright ſent for me, and the metal watch was produced.

Did you know the priſoner Welch before?—No, I had my eyes conſtantly upon him while he was in my ſhop, I ſuppoſe he was in my ſhop ten minutes, the other man I could not poſitively ſwear to, but I am ſure this priſoner was one; when I went to Bow-ſtreet the priſoner was there, I ſaid he was the man that was in my ſhop at the time, I knew him directly.

Was your watch there at Bow-ſtreet.—Yes, not the caſes, only the metal watch, I knew the watch.

Was Harding the other priſoner there?——I do not know any thing of Harding.

Was Welch examined in your preſence before the juſtice?—I do not remember that he was.

You did not hear him ſay any thing?——I ſaid he was the man that was in my ſhop, and I ſaid he had a mark on his hand, it was an anchor done with blue, which I took particular notice of when he was in my ſhop, it was a ſtain, I told the juſtice ſo, the juſtice deſired me to look at his hand, I looked, and ſaw that anchor upon his hand.

THOMAS CAREY ſworn.

Welch, me and Birne went into a ſhop in Moorfields, I do not know whoſe ſhop it was, it was a watch-maker's ſhop, we went in under pretence to buy a ſecond hand watch, and while I was looking at the watch, Welch ſays to me, come along, never mind the watch, it is too dear; ſo he went out before me, I offered two guineas for the watch and he would not take it, ſo I came away, and went down a lane, and met him in another ſtreet, and he ſhewed me a metal watch and two gold caſes, ſo we took a coach and went to Harding's to ſell it, and we ſold two caſes to him for four guineas.

Mr. Silveſter, Councel for Priſoner Harding. That is not evidence againſt Harding.

Court. What became of the other man?——We loſt him when we came out of the ſhop.

Did you know their intention when you went into the ſhop?—Yes, we all went out with that intention.

To ſteal?—Yes.

Did the other man go into the ſhop?—No, he ſtood without; then we brought the metal watch home, and he ſent Mary Boyne out with it, and ſhe pawned it for a guinea.

How came you and he to be taken up?——It was Daly and me were taken up.

Who is Daly?—Morris Daly, he had nothing to do concerning this, it is concerning another affair.

Then how came this buſineſs out againſt Welch?—Why Daly was going to begin firſt.

Begin what?—To ſpeak about it, he was taken once before with Welch.

How came Welch to be taken up upon this buſineſs?—Becauſe he was concerned in ſomething before.

How did this come out againſt him at all; you underſtand the queſtion well enough if you chuſe to anſwer it?—Becauſe he owed me ſome money, and he would not pay it me, it was concerning a robbery that he had done at Hounſlow-heath.

Did you inform againſt him for this?—No, not for this only.

I am not aſking you that, and you know it; did you give information againſt him for this fact?——Yes.

Who did you give the information to?——To a juſtice in the Borough.

How came he to Bow-ſtreet?—We were taken from the Borough, to be carried up to Bow-ſtreet the next day; the juſtice deſired me to ſpeak all I knew. I did not like that way of living, I wanted to drop it if once I got out of it.

It does not ſeem to be much, becauſe you did not like the way of living, but becauſe this man would not pay you the money; on your information he was taken up?—Yes.

Do you know any thing more of this indictment?—No, not this indictment.

Priſoner Welch. It is of no uſe to ſpeak to him, he bears a very bad character, he was caſt for death down at Plymouth, he was in gaol at Briſtol; and I never was tried before a judge or jury before.

Mr. Silveſter to Carey. Was you tried in the weſt country?—No.

You turned evidence inſtead of Daley?—Yes.

How many robberies have you been concerned in, do you recollect the number?—No.

Why to be ſure a man muſt have a good memory for that?——The Juſtice wrote them down.

How many, above a ſcore?—I cannot tell.

MARY BOYNE ſworn.

Thomas Welch gave me that watch to pawn, which I pawned immediately at Mr. Matthews's in Old Gravel Lane, I cannot recollect the day of the month.

JONATHAN MATTHEWS ſworn.

On the 29th of November, I received this watch of Mary Boyne.

(The watch depoſed to.)

Proſecutor. When I went to Sir Sampſon Wright's, this watch was ſhewn, I enquired after my gold caſes, and Carey told me they were at Harding's.

Court. Did you get any warrant to ſearch Harding's houſe?—No.

Why did not you?—I did not underſtand it.

Carpmeal. My Lord, his houſe was ſearched and nothing found.

Priſoner Welch's Defence.

I know nothing about what that man talks about, he wanted me to ſwear to a good many people I never knew before, he wanted me to ſwear that I knew Harding, and I never ſaw the man before.

Court to Priſoner Welch. Have you any witneſſes?—No, not that I know of, I thought there was no occaſion for it.

Court to Proſecutor. What was the value of the watch?—I valued it at forty ſhillings.

Thomas Welch, Guilty, Death.

William Harding, Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

188. The ſaid THOMAS WELCH was again indicted for feloniouſly and burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Budworth, on the 19th day of December laſt, at the hour of one in the night, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, two linen gowns, value 10s. a cotton bed-gown, value 2s. two linen aprons, value 4s. one linen ſhift, value 1s. two damaſk napkins, value 4s. and one leather pocket-book, value 3d. his property.

WILLIAM BUDWORTH ſworn.

I live in the Pariſh of South Mimms, my houſe was broke open between the night of the 17th and the morning of the 18th, the door where it was broke in is not uſually opened.

Mr. Garrow, Council for Proſecution. Had you lately before the robbery ſeen that door was ſhut?—It was a pannel broke out of the door, it is a ſide door that goes into a paſſage, a door we do not uſe.

Was you alarmed at all in the courſe of that night?—Yes, about one a ſervant man called from the room adjoining where I lay, and told me there were people breaking into the houſe, I got up directly, we went into the maid-ſervant's door, and as ſoon as I entered in at that door, they had juſt forced another door of the ſame room, and were coming in.

Did you go into the room?—Yes.

What did you obſerve when you went into the room?—The people that were in the houſe heard me.

Did you ſee any of the people?—No, there was no light, I heard ſomebody ſay we will blow your brains out, immediately two piſtols were diſcharged, either in the room, or in the door-way, we found a ſlug in the room, it went juſt over the door that I came in at.

With a direction to have hit you then?—Yes.

Did you afterwards ſee any of the perſons go out?—I ſaw one go out as ſoon as they fired off the piſtols, we immediately made back into another room and hallooed out of the window, and then I ſaw a man go away in front of the houſe, not at the door they came in at; I could not ſee him come out of the houſe, but I ſaw him walk from the front door.

Did you loſe any thing?——Yes, Sir, there were ſome things taken out of the houſe, but they left a great deal behind them.

From what part of the houſe were the things taken?—From the parlours, I am not ſure of any of the things, I have ſeen ſome of the things, my wife knows them.

Do you know any thing of a pocket book?——Yes, I ſaw it at Bow-ſtreet, it was my mother's, ſhe had ſuch a one, I cannot ſwear to it, there was a buckle found in the room, and it was produced at the Juſtice's in Bow-ſtreet, I left it on the table, I ſhould know it again, I think the priſoner was preſent then, he ſaid he knew nothing about the matter, the evidence owned the buckle.

Priſoner. Do you know my face?—No, only I ſaw you at Bow-ſtreet.

JONATHAN MATTHEWS ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, I have three articles that were pledged by Mary Boyne on the 18th of December, ſhe had duplicates of them, I have known her ſome time, ſhe always pledged her things in the name of Mary Boyne; here are two gowns and a cotton bedgown, a napkin and ſhifts, and two aprons.

DOROTHY BUDWORTH ſworn.

(Depoſes to the things.)

WILLIAM SMITH ſworn.

I am an officer in the Borough; I apprehended the priſoner, he was in bed alone, and a woman in the room that was Mary Boyne; it was between nine and ten at night, the 30th of laſt month; I found theſe piſtols in the ſecond drawer of the cheſt of drawers; I found nothing elſe; but a man that was with us, I ſaw him take a fan out, I did not tell the priſoner what he was wanted for, I told him for divers robberies.

What did he ſay to you when you took him?——He did not ſay any thing at all about it.

Did he ſay any thing about thoſe piſtols?—Nothing.

WILLIAM LEE ſworn.

I live in the Borough; I attend the Rotation Office; I was with Smith when he apprehended the priſoner, I found nothing, I ſaw Smith find the piſtols, I told the priſoner he was taken up for divers highway robberies.

JOHN PARKER ſworn.

I am an officer, I was not with the other witneſſes when they took the priſoner, I took Carey the evidence.

MARY BOYNE ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. How long have you been acquainted with the priſoner Welch?——About two years and an half.

Did you pawn any gowns with Mr. Mathews?——Yes, I carried them when they were delivered to me, to Mr. Mathews.

Who delivered them to you?—Thomas Carey, he aſked me to pawn them, the priſoner and Carey were together; I pawned them for twelve ſhillings and ſix-pence, and brought home the money.

Did the priſoner then, or at any other time, ſay any thing to you on the ſubject of theſe gowns?—No.

Who did you give the money to?—I am ſure I gave all the money to Welch.

He and Carey were pretty much together?—Yes.

The priſoner and you lived in the ſame apartment?—He had a room in a houſe of mine.

Was he out all night on the 17th or 18th of December?—I cannot tell.

Upon your oath, do you, or do you not know any thing about his going into the country with Carey about the middle of December; do you remember his being out one or two nights?—About ten days before Chriſtmas he was out all one night.

Did not Carey come home with him and bring theſe things?—Carey brought home theſe bundles and gave the things to me to carry to Matthews's to pawn; Welch was preſent then.

Do you know any thing of any piſtols belonging to Welch?—I have ſeen a ſilver mounted piſtol with Welch, but did not ſee him carry loaded piſtols.

THOMAS CAREY ſworn.

The night that this was done Welch told me to come to his room, where Mary Boyne lives, it was about ſeven o'clock the evening before the robbery; he aſked me if I would go out.

Go out, upon what buſineſs?—Why to get ſome money.

In what way?—Why by robbing; he ſaid he did not know the roads, and while the beef ſtakes were dreſſing he would go over to Richard Smith who is at large, and he went and brought him over with him, and we loaded our piſtols, each a piſtol at Welch's room; we left town about ſeven o'clock, and we went out beyond Barnet.

What did you load your piſtols with?—Powder and ſome ſlugs.

Where did you find them?—We cut a ſpoon to pieces in the room, we bought the powder that evening, Mary Boyne was preſent, we left town a little before ſeven o'clock, we loaded before ſupper, we eat our ſuppers and came off, becauſe he ſaid it would be late; we went over Finchley Common and went through Barnet; we turned to the right hand over a ſmall common, then we turned to the left hand and got into a bye lane, it was between twelve and one o'clock, we could ſee no one; we came to a large houſe with an iron gate, we burſted open the gate and went in, we came out again, and went a little farther to the proſecutor's houſe, there we went in and broke the back door open, the bottom part of it, we ſet our feet againſt it and forced the bottom of the door, we got in and unbarred the fore door; then we all came in and opened the door; we took the glaſs and put it out in the garden, then Welch went up ſtairs and he called Smith or me, then we burſted open a door where the people were aſleep, and I fell down and loſt my buckle; I went into the room and there was a man making a noiſe.

What ſort of noiſe?—Why crying out murder and robbery; there was a piſtol let off at him, that was, from Smith, and the priſoner fired at him as ſoon as he went into the room; then we went down ſtairs, and they run away, one at the fore door and the other at the back part of the hedge, I went out at the fore door, and the other two went over the hedge; they took away a ſmall bundle tied up in a handkerchief; Welch took thoſe things away, we loſt Smith, then Welch and me croſſed over the fields, and came home directly to Welſh's lodgings, I laid down the bundle, and Mrs. Boyne took the beſt of the things and brought fourteen ſhillings, and ſhe brought ſome beef ſtakes; Smith came in, and they did not give me my ſhare till I was going away, my piſtol was ſtill loaded, I was apprehended about three weeks after, I informed againſt the priſoner, he was taken and committed.

Court. Which of the piſtols was Welch's?——The ſilver mounted one.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing about this matter.

Court. Let Harding be detained till the fate of this priſoner is known.

GUILTY, Death.

189. ANN MOORE, SARAH PARTRIDGE, otherwiſe ROBERTS, and MARY STOKES were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 10th of December laſt, ſixty-four ells of ſilk mode, value 9l. the property of Joſeph Whitbridge and George Pritt, privily in their ſhop.

GEORGE PRITT ſworn.

I am partner with Joſeph Whitbridge, the priſoner at the bar came to our ſhop, I was at dinner, I went down ſtairs, the boy was ſerving the priſoner Moore, and the priſoner Partridge was warming herſelf by the fire, ſhe was ſtooping, our fire place is behind a deſk, I aſked her if ſhe had loſt any thing, ſhe told me ſhe had juſt loſt her ſiſter's garnet ring, and could not find it, I looked, and could not ſee it, I called the maid to bring a candle, I ſaw it under one of the drawers, and gave it to her, it appeared to be a plain gold ring; ſhe then went to Moore, and Moore aſked her if ſhe was warm, ſhe ſaid ſhe was, the boy had ſerved Moore, ſhe paid for what ſhe had, and they both went out of the ſhop together; I ſaid to the boy, what ſort of cattle have you here, they have a very ſuſpicious appearance; ſays he, I really believe that one by the fire has taken ſomething; ſays I, you had better call them back, and one of our other young men ſaid, I would not call them back, they are very genteel ladies, they do not look like thieves; but I bid the boy follow them, and while he was gone we found we had loſt a whole piece of mode that came in the day before that was uncut; the firſt was Stokes which came in to pave the way, ſhe was juſt gone when the things were taken, but ſhe joined company with them, I told the boy to make all the haſte he could and follow them; I went to the Brown Bear in Bow-ſtreet, I got Atkins and Moſes Morant, we went up to the boy, and he pointed to the door, and Atkins went and gently opened the front door, and forced the parlour door open, there was the mode laying on the table by the window, and there was Mary Gardner, Mary Stokes, and Moore, and Partridge, I believe they were drinking brandy, but Atkins ſpoke to Stokes and ſaid, Moll Stokes, keep your hands out of your pocket; Mrs. Gardner inſiſted on the officers ſhewing their authority, and made ſome reſiſtance, and we thought we ſhould want help, we got the boy out of the door to get more hands, and ſhe ſaid no more ſhould either go in or out, there came other young people, it is a houſe of ill fame, and they barricaded the door, and I was obliged to let two men in at the window, they inſiſted on ſearching the houſe, which they refuſed, they broke open one of the drawers, and then ſhe turned out the things that were in the drawers, and let them ſearch the houſe, they ſearched it, but there was none of my property except the mode which was laying upon the table.

Court. What is the value of this mode? ——Nine pounds.

The mode produced by Moſes Morant.

How do you know it to be your property?—By the length and number, the paper was upon it that it came from the manufacturers in, I have the invoice of it.

Is there any ſhop mark on it?—No, we had not marked it, it was juſt come from the maker's, No. 6562, ſixty-four ells and a quarter, at three ſhillings and a penny an ell.

Court. Is the maker here?—He is not here, but here is the invoice.

Do you take upon you ſwear that it was your property, and that it was in your ſhop? —I ſaw it about an hour before.

Mr. Silveſter, Councel for Priſoner Moore. Stokes had been there?—Yes.

Was ſhe with Child?—Yes.

This Partridge was at the fire?—Yes.

Was Stokes there then?—She was gone then.

Had you ever ſeen the parcel after Stokes was gone?—No, I was up at my dinner when ſhe came in; Partridge acknowledged taking of it, Atkins and Morant were preſent.

Priſoner Partridge. I never ſaid ſuch a thing.

Mr. Silveſter, What did you ſay to her to induce her to ſay ſo?—Nothing at all, I did not aſk her to confeſs, it was at Mary Gardner's houſe.

You had never ſeen her before?—No.

Was any body preſent?—Morant, Atkins, and my young man.

Did not your boy tell her he had ſeen ſomething taken?—He ſaid he believed ſhe had taken ſomething.

Did not he poſitively ſay he ſaw her take ſomething?—No, he ſaid he was fearful ſhe had taken ſomething.

——— EVANS ſworn.

I am ſhopman to Whitridge and Pritt, I was preſent when two of the priſoners came into the ſhop, I was ſerving a perſon which I believe to be Stokes, I was called down from my dinner to ſerve her, ſhe had a ſervant girl with her; I ſerved her with half a yard of Perſian, and when I had ſerved her, before ſhe was gone out of the ſhop, Moore and Partridge knocked at the door; I let them in, they aſked for ſome white Perſian; I ſold them half a yard.

Did you keep your eye upon Stokes all the while ſhe was in the ſhop?—I did.

Could ſhe have taken any thing more than what you ſold her without your ſeeing her?—No, ſhe could not; as I was ſerving Moore with the Perſian, Partridge complained of being cold, and ſaid ſhe would go to the fire and warm herſelf: I then ſhewed Moore ſome mode, and as I was ſhewing it her our young lad came in; he ſaid he would ſerve her, and deſired I would go up and finiſh my dinner; I left Partridge by the fire, and our young lad ſhewing ſome mode to Moore.

Do you know in what part of the ſhop that mode lay?—No.

Mr. Sylveſter. Then Partridge continued by the fire all the time?—Yes; ſhe purchaſed nothing.

When did Stokes go out?—Juſt as ſoon as they came in.

Did you ſee this mode, after Stokes was gone?—No, I did not.

Then ſhe did not ſtay at one ſide of the ſhop while you was ſerving the other?—No, ſhe went as they came in.

SAMUEL SANSON ſworn.

I am ſervant to Meſſrs. Whitridge and Pritt: on Friday the 19th of December I had been in the city, and coming home I found Mr. Whitridge and Pritt were at dinner, and the priſoners Moore and Partridge in the back ſhop, and the laſt witneſs was ſerving them, and I told him, he might go up to dinner and I would ſerve them, and juſt before that Partridge ſaid ſhe was very cold indeed and ſhe would ſtand by the fire, and near there the goods are kept that come from the weavers.

Were they kept in ſuch a place that any perſon that came to the fire place might come at them ?—Yes, they were.

Court to Evans. Was Stokes ever near the fire while ſhe was in the ſhop ?—Not to my knowledge, ſhe came by the fire as the ſervant girl told me.

Sanſon. Juſt as I had ſerved Moore with half a yard of mode, I ſaw Partridge move towards the goods and move back again; I did not ſee her take any thing, but I ſuſpected her; in about half a minute ſhe pretended ſhe had loſt a gold ring.

Court. At the time ſhe went to the place where thoſe modes lay, was ſhe long enough to have taken any thing ?—About half a minute; juſt as ſhe had dropped her gold ring Mr. Pritt came down and called for a candle to look for the ring; he gave her the ring, and I put the mode into paper, and Moore paid me for it; I ſaid to our apprentice, ſays I, I verily think that lady has ſtole ſomething; and he ſaid, no, they are very creditable ladies; ſays I, then I will tell Mr. Pritt; I did ſo, and he deſired me to go and call them back; as ſoon as I got out of the ſhop he called me back again, and told me that the apprentice ſaid it would offend them; but I ſaid, I may as well watch them Mr. Pritt, and by that time you will ſee if you have loſt any thing; I followed them and they had got as far as the ruins, when a woman joined them: ſhe was dreſſed like Mrs. Stokes, but I did not ſee her face; they went to the top of Bow-ſtreet, into Hart-ſtreet; when I ſaw where they went in, I directly ran back to Mr. Pritt, and we both went there and got other aſſiſtance and got into the room; and there were all four, and the mode laying on a round table, and when we got in, Gardner ſaid we ſhould not ſearch the houſe, I got out and got two more men, and Mr. Pritt was forced to let them in at the window.

Mr. Sylveſter. Then ſhe was but a little while towards the place where the goods were ?—No, but a little while.

She did not attempt to go out after ?—No, ſhe was looking for her ring.

JOHN ATKINS ſworn.

I was called upon by Mr. Pritt to go and take the priſoners; I called upon Moſes Morant at the office, and we went together, and when we got up to the top of Bow-ſtreet, I ſaw the laſt witneſs ſtanding, he told me it was next door to the publick houſe, that is Mrs. Gardiner's houſe; I opened the ſtreet door, and I went into the parlour, Partridge was firſt, Stokes was rather further off, Gardiner next to her, and Moore next to her, the mode lay much in the ſtate it does now; upon ſeeing her in the condition ſhe was in, ſo big; I told her to keep her hands from her pockets; that I ſhould not hurt her; I took her towards the fire place, and I found ſome lace in her pocket and this Perſian; then I ſearched Mrs. Moore, and in her pocket I found this mode and this Perſian, and other things that were not owned.

Did any converſation paſs about that mode ?—No, not when I went in, they were alarmed.

Was any thing ſaid by any of them ?—Not in my hearing, becauſe when I got into the room, I moved Stokes towards the fire ſeeing the condition that ſhe was in.

Mr. Sylveſter. What kind of a room was it, large or ſmall ?—Not over and above large, a middling ſized parlour, the houſe is next door to the Bear in Hart-ſtreet.

I ſhould have thought you would have heard any thing that was there ſaid ?—I heard nothing ſaid.

MOSES MORANT ſworn.

Did you hear any converſation paſs about that piece of mode, by any one of theſe priſoners ?—No, I heard Mrs. Gardiner ſay ſhe could tell who brought the mode there: they were juſt going to drink ſome brandy.

Mr. Sylveſter. You heard no converſation at all ?—None at all.

And you was there the whole time ?—Yes, I was one of the laſt that came out of the houſe.

Priſoner Moore. My friends are not in Court.

The priſoner Partridge called four Witneſſes who gave her a good character.

PRISONER PARTRIDGE'S DEFENCE.

I hope I may have leave to ſpeak: we went into the ſhop, and when we came out we met with this woman, Mrs. Stokes, and ſeeing her very bad, and ſo big, Moore aſked her what was the matter, ſhe ſaid ſhe believed ſhe was in labour, and ſhe was going to Long-acre; ſhe walked with us till we came to Mrs. Gardner's door, ſhe was bidding two ladies good day, and Mrs. Stokes put her hand againſt the rail of the Bear publick houſe door, and Mrs. Gardiner aſked her to ſtep in, and then they ſent for ſome brandy; I never ſaw the mode till this gentleman clapped his hand upon it, and ſaid it was his; we was not near the mode, it was on the table, and we were nearer the fire.

Court to Jury. It ſeems to me, on this indictment you cannot find all the three priſoners guilty, for Stokes was gone out of the ſhop as ſoon as the two others came in; and the ſhopman ſays he had his eye upon her the whole time, and he does not think it was poſſible for her to take any thing without his ſeeing her; you will therefore direct your attention to the evidence, as it relates to Moore and Partridge.

ANN MOORE,
SARAH PARTRIDGE, } GUILTY Death.

MARY STOKES, NOT GUILTY.

190. RUTH MERCER and CHARLOTTE SMITH were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 22d of December laſt, ſixteen yards of black ſilk lace, value 30s. the property of Ralph Steele, privily in his ſhop.

SAMUEL ROGERS ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Steele in Caſtle-ſtreet, I ſaw the priſoners come into my maſter's ſhop on Monday the 22d of December laſt, they both came in together when the candles were lighted, Mercer aſked me to ſhew her ſome black laces; accordingly I did, I ſhewed her two boxes, there was nothing that pleaſed them; Smith did not interfere much, ſhe juſt took a card; Mercer juſt took the cloak ſhe has on, a long arm hole cloak; and ſays ſhe, before you put the box by what would you charge me for this lace, I told her, ſomewhere about half-a-crown a yard, and her right-arm was concealed under her cloak, and by the motion of her arm I ſuſpected ſhe had a card of lace; I put the laces by, and then ſhe looked at ſome long arm hole cloaks, none pleaſed her, I ſhewed her almoſt all the cloaks in the ſhop, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would have one made longer than that ſhe had on, then ſhe ſaid, I will pitch on the lace, and you ſhall make me one, I aſked her if ſhe liked any of the laces that ſhe had ſeen, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would chuſe to look at them again; and then ſhe ſhould be a better judge; accordingly I ſhewed her another box, and very eaſily and careleſly, ſhe pitched on one, according it was all ſettled, and they went away; I told Mr. Steele what I ſuſpected, and he bid me ſtep after her immediately, ſhe was gone a door or two down, I followed her back, I told her, we wanted to ſpeak ſomething to her about the cloak, and ſhe returned to the ſhop, and the priſoner Smith followed her, and I took my candle in my hand and ſet it before her, and I charged her with taking a card or two of lace; ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not know what I meant, as ſhe had been a cuſtomer ſo long, ſhe thought it was very ill uſage; I told her, ſhe certainly had one; on that ſhe emptied her right pocket on a chair, there was nothing of our property, I then ſent for a conſtable immediately to ſearch her, and the whole time they ſtood in the ſhop, Mr. Steel, and Mr. Tinkler, (who is here) were very particular in taking the candle and looking round almoſt every minute; when the conſtable came in the two priſoners cloſed together, Mr.

Steele ſeparated them again, and we ſaw the card of lace on the ground.

Are you ſure the card of lace was not upon the ground when they went out? —Yes.

Did you look upon the ground after they were gone?——Yes, I am poſitive there was no card of lace there then, I charged Ruth Mercer, ſhe ſaid, ſhe had not taken it; as to the other, ſhe did not appear to me to have it any where about her.

Mr. Peate, Council for Priſoner Smith. Smith came back directly?——Yes.

You did not ſay any thing to her to induce her to come back?——No.

RICHARD TINKLER ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Steele; when the priſoner returned I was preſent, and before they returned, I went into the back ſhop, and looked if any thing was laying about, I looked particularly on the ground and there was nothing.

Could not it lay on the ground and you miſs it?——No, it could not, the back ſhop is very ſmall, where we took them into: after they came back Mr. Rogers charged Mercer, ſhe denied it; we ſent for a conſtable to ſearch them, they had cloſed once or twice before, and we parted them, there was nothing lay between them, I looked particularly, I ſtood before them all the time and watched; I ſuſpected they would drop it; juſt as the conſtable came in Smith went up to Mercer, and we parted them almoſt immediately, and there the card of lace lay juſt by under Mercer, juſt between them.

Mr. Peate. Might not Smith have gone away if ſhe choſe it?——No.

PRISONER MERCER's DEFENCE.

I wanted a cloak and I always uſed the man's ſhop, I laid out a great many pounds there; I met Mrs. Smith and took her with me, I beſpoke a cloak and choſe a lace, I was to have given three guineas for the cloak, I went out of the ſhop, and he came and brought me back, and locked the door, and aſked me for the card of lace I ſtole; I ſaid it was very ill treatment, he deſired to ſearch me, I pulled out my pockets and told him I had nothing there; then he picked the lace off the ground, and put it on the Compter.

The Priſoner Mercer called one Witneſs to her character.

Priſoner Smith. I leave my defence to my Council.

Court to Jury. In conſideration of law, it certainly is not a private ſtealing, if it be done in ſuch a way as to be ſeen, at leaſt by the proſecutor his ſervants or agents.

RUTH MERCER, GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not privily.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

CHARLOTTE SMITH, GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not privily.

Impriſoned twelve months.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

191. LUKE HOYLE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th of January, ſix ſilk handkerchiefs, value 20s. the property of Charles Troutbeck, privily in his ſhop.

CHARLES TROUTBECK ſworn.

I am a haberdaſher in Holborn, I loſt ſix ſilk handkerchiefs laſt Thurſday evening about ſix o'clock, my young man came into the parlour, and told me, he had detected a ſhoplifter, the priſoner was then ſtanding by the ſide of the compter careleſsly; as we advanced towards him, my man ſaid that is him, there were two or three people in the ſhop, the priſoner upon hearing this took the handkerchiefs, which he had under his great coat and threw them on the compter, they were in my ſhop, they are my goods.

(The handkerchiefs produced and depoſed to.)

Jury. Did you see them under his great coat?—I cannot pretend to ſwear this is the piece that he drew from under his great coat; I could not diſtinguiſh the colour; I ſaw him draw a piece of handkerchiefs from under his great coat; he begged very hard for mercy when we took him, and offered to pay for the handkerchiefs before he came out of the ſhop.

SAMUEL LANDER ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor, I know the priſoner, I remember his coming to my maſter's ſhop laſt Thurſday evening, he came in for two yards of tape, I ſerved him with that, and he went out of the ſhop; the ſilk handkerchiefs were laying on the compter when he went out of the ſhop; he came in the ſecond time for two yards of binding to tie up his boots, then he came and ſtood cloſe by the handkerchiefs, and while I was turning round to look for ſomething to ſerve another cuſtomer, I miſſed the handkerchiefs; I did not charge him with them then, but I went and told my maſter I had got a ſhoplifter, and as my maſter and I came out of the parlour, I pointed to him, and ſaid, that is the man, and I ſaw him directly take the ſilk handkerchiefs from under his coat, and throw them down on the compter.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have not any Council, I have no money to employ them, I know nothing of the goods; my father lives in Yorkſhire, I did not wiſh to diſtreſs him ſo as to let him know my ſituation, knowing myſelf innocent I thought it unneceſſary.

Jury. What employ are you in?—I was with Mr. Cooper two years ago in London, I wrote for him as clerk, then I went down, and ſtaid half a year in the country, and I have not been two months in London.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 10d.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

192. WILLIAM BELL was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting John Drain on the King's highway, on the 21ſt of December laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, two linen handkerchiefs, value 6d. two linen ſhirts, value 4s. two pair of thread ſtockings, value 12d. two linen ſtocks, value 12d. one pillow bier, value 6d. and one ſtriped linen waiſtcoat, value 6d. the property of James Haywood.

JOHN DRAIN.

What age are you?—Going for thirteen.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—Yes.

What will be the conſequence if you ſwear falſly?—If I am found out in a lie I know I ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed for it hereafter.

And here too?—Yes.

JOHN DRAIN ſworn.

I was robbed about half paſt ſix o'clock on St. Thomas's day, I was going up Conſtitution-hill to Brentford, I was carrying ſome foul linen for James Haywood, my father in law, and the priſoner and another man were coming down the hill, and they met me, and ſtopped me and ſaid, halloo, what have you got here; I ſaid, I have nothing but a bundle, and they took the bundle from me and aſked me if I had any money.

Did you deliver the bundle voluntarily?—No, they made a ſnatch at it.

Did you give them your money?—I had no money, they felt my pockets and gave me a puſh, and bid me go about my buſineſs or elſe they would cut my head off: they went down towards Buckingham Houſe.

Where did you go?—I was going up to Piccadilly, and I met a gentleman look after, and I told him what had happened, and he bid me come along with him, and juſt as the word was out of his mouth we heard a woman cry ſtop thief, and then we cried ſtop thief, and kept running back towards Buckingham Houſe, and directly a mob gathered up together, and immediately I went up and ſaw my bundle lying in a ditch, near the rails of St. James's Park, oppoſite Buckingham Houſe; then they carried the priſoner to St. Martin's watch-houſe, and in the morning to Bow-ſtreet.

When did you charge the priſoner?—He was carried to the watch-houſe on my account and the young woman's.

How do you know the priſoner is the man?—I ſaw him, the moon was up, but it did not ſhine very bright, it was cloudy; I know the priſoner by his perſon, and ſeeing him again directly; he was not from me I ſuppoſe five minutes.

How was he dreſſed at that time?—He had not that red waiſtcoat on, his coat was buttoned, he had the ſame coat on, and a red handkerchief about his neck.

Do you know what was in the bundle?—I have an inventory of the things.

Who took it?—My mother.

Is ſhe here to give an account of it?—No.

Did you ſee any of the things yourſelf before the bundle was delivered to you?—Yes, but I did not take any notice of them.

Cannot you tell what there were?—No, only by this inventory; there were a couple of ſhirts.

BENJAMIN TAYLOR ſworn.

I am a wharfinger, on Sunday evening, the 21ſt of December laſt, as Mr. Cleveſley and I were going to town together, juſt facing the Queen's-walk, we heard the cry of ſtop thief, I immediately looked towards the cry and ſaw the priſoner come running, I ſet out to meet him but he ſlipped on one ſide of me and ſaid, you have not done me yet; I immediately purſued him, and in the courſe of thirty or forty yards his ſhoe came off his left foot, and I came up with him again, he ſtooped to pick up his ſhoe, and then he threw a bundle out of his left hand into the ditch that goes round the paling by Buckingham Houſe, and I ſtopped him.

Did you aſk him about the bundle?—He ſaid we were miſtaken in the perſon, he ſaid he had no bundle in his hand; the bundle in throwing down parted in three or four different parts, and while we were taking him, the boy and a girl came up, and the boy owned the bundle and picked it up.

Did the boy charge the priſoner at that time?—Yes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was diſcharged out of the militia, ſince this act I had been down in the country about ſix months, and had left a box behind me in Red Lyon-ſtreet, Holborn, and it never came; ſo I came up again to ſee after it, and coming down Conſtitution-hill this Sunday evening about half paſt ſix o'clock, I heard a great noiſe, and I ran to ſee what was the matter, and I ſaw a man running, and I caught hold of him, and he cut me with a knife, he threw the bundle right into the ditch before me.

Jury. Had you that coat on?——No, not this coat, waiſtcoat and breeches.

Taylor. He had a cut in his right hand, but there was no other man but him at the time he threw away the bundle.

Jury to Taylor. Was the cut then freſh?——Yes, bleeding.

CLEVERLY ſworn.

Going to town on the 21ſt of December, a little after ſix o'clock, we heard a cry of ſtop thief, looking about we ſaw a man come running with a bundle in his left hand, and he paſſed and was running, he rapped out an oath and ſaid, you have not done me yet, and he threw the bundle down rather between us.

Jury. Had he a cut?—Yes, he had a cut on his left hand, and his clothes were bloody.

GUILTY Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

193. JOSEPH CLARKE and JAMES RANDALL were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Godliff Hartman in a certain field and open place, near the King's highway on the 14th of December laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one man's hat, value 5s. and two handkerchiefs, value 2s. his property.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

GODLIFFE HARTMAN ſworn.

I was robbed the 14th of December in Hackney-fields about ſix o'clock, it was on a Sunday night.

Was it light or dark?—It was foggy.

Who were the perſons that robbed you?——The little one took my handkerchief, and the tall one took my hat.

Are you abſolutely ſure of their perſons from what you ſaw of them then?—No, I am not abſolutely ſure, but I really believe they are the men.

When were they taken?——On the nineteenth.

How came they to be taken then?—One of the Rotation officers came and bid me appear at the Rotation Office; I had given an account of my robbery before.

When you came there, did you immediately pitch on the men?—Yes.

Were there other people in the room?——Yes.

Did you pitch on the men of your own accord, or as being ſhewn thoſe men?—The men had been ſhewn me at the bar.

So you had been firſt of all deſired to look at them?—Yes.

Now ſuppoſing you had met them in the ſtreet, do you think you ſhould have fixed on them then?—Yes, particularly the tall one, but the little one that ſtopped me firſt I did not take ſuch particular notice of.

Was any thing found on them?—Yes, my hat and my pocket handkerchief.

The Continuation of the Trial of Joſeph Clarke and James Randall.

That is as you was informed ?—I found my pocket handkerchief on Clarke, he had tied his irons with it, I ſaid I verily believed it was my handkerchief, ſo they took off the handkerchief, and I found it was mine.

Who had got the hat ?—Clarke had them both.

THOMAS CARPMEAL ſworn.

Produces the handkerchief. I took this from Clarke, at the office in Bow-ſtreet, he had tied his irons up with it, and the hat he had upon his head.

How came you to ſend word to the proſecutor when you had taken theſe men up? They had given information at the office of the robbery.

Court. When the proſecutor came into the office were there many people in the room ?—I do not think there were; the priſoners were at the bar.

Did he ſay he knew them ?—No, but the wife of another proſecutor who was with them ſwore to Clarke, I know nothing about Randall.

The hat and handkerchief depoſed to by the proſecutor; one ſide of the handkerchief was quite hemmed, and the other only half; the hatter is here that made the hat.

A cutlaſs produced that was taken from Clarke.

Priſoner Clarke. There is no doubt but the officers belonging to Bow-ſtreet have told the gentlemen already what they ſhall ſay before they come here.

Carpmeal. Clarke is one of the returned tranſports, as ſoon as we went into the room he ſnapped a piſtol at us, which luckily did not go off; the proſecutor deſired the handkerchief might be taken off, he ſaid, if it was his handkerchief there was a little bit that was not hemmed, he looked at it, and it was ſo.

THOMAS STEVENS ſworn.

On the 14th of December laſt, me and my wife, and Godliffe Hartman went down to Lee Bridge, we came from there about half paſt four o'clock, we came through Hackney and croſſed the fields by the ſhoulder of Mutton and Cat, coming through the laſt field, before we came to the turnpike road, which is the laſt field in Shoreditch pariſh, we met a man, and I wiſhed him a good night, and he wiſhed me a good night, and in about a minute my wife turned again and ſaid they are coming; there was nobody with him, but another was running by the rails; there were then two of them; I ſtopped and cried halloo! he ſaid, halloo, damn your eyes, ſtop! one of them came up to me and put the point of his cutlaſs to my breaſt.

Court. Forbear to mention any thing of your own robbery, becauſe we are now on the robbery of that man only?—I ſaw Clarke take the hat off Hartman's head.

You are poſitively ſure he is the man?—I am ſure he is; and Randall took his two handkerchiefs from his neck.

Are you equally poſitive to his perſon?—I have recollected him ſince he was examined at the Juſtice's, and to all the ideas I can form in my remembrance, he certainly is the perſon.

SUSANNA STEVENS ſworn.

Court. Can you ſwear to either of the priſoners?—Yes, I can ſwear to Clarke.

Was you preſent with the proſecutor when he was robbed?—Yes, I ſaw the little one take the handkerchief off Hartman's neck, I will not poſitively ſwear, I believe it was him; and the talleſt, Clarke, took the hat off his head.

ROBERT MARTIN ſworn.

I am hatter to Mr. Hartman, I ſerved him with hats; I have ſeen that hat, and I know it; the hat-makers have a particular mark; I can poſitively ſwear to it.

Priſoner Clarke. Can you ſwear you ſold that man that hat; was not it as likely you ſhould ſell to another man?—I had a man worked for me a ſmall time, and his name is in the hat; he made me a few hats at that time.

Priſoner Clarke. He particularly marked that hat then, more than all the reſt.

I went with Jealous on the 28th of December, and Carpmeal and ſome more of our people to a court in Golden-lane, where we were told this Clarke was; the information was, that Clarke was in the garret; as ſoon as we got into the one pair of ſtairs a woman puſhed too the door; as ſoon as Jealous went in, the priſoner Clarke preſented this piſtol to him, cloſe to his face, and it ſnapped in his face; I clapped my hand to his breaſt and ſhoved him up againſt the wall, and he dropped the piſtol.

Was the piſtol charged?—Yes, here is what it was charged with, pieces of lead and a glaſs of a pair of buttons, ſomething of that ſort; we ſecured him.

What had he upon him at that time?—I took nothing from him but the piſtol, I know nothing of Randall.

JAMES MACMANUS ſworn.

I am one of the patrols; on the 23d of December we were going up the city road, from the Shepherd and Shepherdeſs; I ſtopped behind, and Mr. Allen and another man went forward; we intended going up to Iſlington; I ſtopped behind a little, they went forward; I heard a foot ſtep coming to meet me, and I ſaw two men running towards me, and Mr. Allen and Jones after them, and Allen told me to ſtop them; I went right before them, and thinking to ſtop them I ran towards Randall to ſtop him, and he cut at me with a cutlaſs; he cut my hat; he got paſt me and ran down the road paſt the Shepherd and Shepherdeſs; I cried, Stop thief! and he jumped over the rails, and got into a field; I followed him into the field and I took him about the middle of the field, I had a cutlaſs, and I took this cutlaſs from him.

Did you take any thing from him, that was the property of Hartman?—No.

JAMES ALLEN ſworn.

Do you know the two priſoners at the bar?—Yes, I know them again, I know nothing of the robbery; all I know is about the apprehending Randall on the 23d.

JOSEPH CLARKE, GUILTY, Death.

JAMES RANDALL, NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

104. The ſaid JOSEPH CLARK and JAMES RANDALL were again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Suſannah, wife of Thomas Stephens, in a certain field and open place near the king's highway, on the 21ſt of December laſt, and putting her in fear and danger of her life, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon and againſt her will, one cloak, value 10s. and one gold ring, value 5s. the property of the ſaid Thomas.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, it will be in vain to give you the trouble of trying them on this indictment; one of them is already capitally convicted, and as to the evidence it muſt be preciſely the ſame.

James Randall, Not Guilty.

195. The ſaid JAMES RANDALL was again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Thomas Stephens in a certain field and open place near the King's highway, on the 21ſt of December laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, 9s. 6d. in monies numbered, his monies.

Not Guilty.

---

196. The ſaid JOSEPH CLARK was again indicted for feloniouſly returning from tranſportation, and being found at large before the expiration of his term, againſt the ſtatute.

Priſoner. I am the perſon, I plead Guilty.

Guilty, Death.

---

197. RICHARD MILLS and WILLIAM TOMKINS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 1ſt of January laſt, one wooden trunk covered with leather, value 2s. two cloth coats, value 45s. two cloth waiſtcoats, value 23s. three pair of cloth breeches, value 22s. two pair of ſilk breeches, value 42s. two linen gowns, value 20s. one cotton waiſtcoat, value 6s. one ſilk petticoat, value 20s. one ſilk cardinal, value 20s. one dozen of ſilver tea ſpoons, value 40s. one pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles, value 8s. one pair of linen ſheets, value 10s. five pair of ear-rings, value 20s. ſix pair of ſilk ſhoes, value 10s. one pocket book, value 2d. one braſs piſtol, value 1s. one ſhirt, value 1s. and one muſlin apron, value 2s. the property of Alexander Maitland.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoners.

ANN MAITLAND ſworn.

I am wife of Alexander Maitland, we were going to our lodgings, and I called a coach, I called the coachman to take out one of the children, it was at No. 19, Wapping Wall, the coach ſtood at the door.

Was your huſband in company with you?——Yes, the priſoners were apprehended the next morning; the next morning we ſaw ſome of the articles at the Juſtice's, the trunk was broke.

JOHN ORANGE ſworn.

I am headborough of St. Paul's Shadwell, on the 2d of this month, I had a warrant againſt Tomkins and his wife, he came up to the Lebeck's Head oppoſite the office at Shadwell.

Was he ſent for?——No.

Did you know him?——Yes.

What was he?——He did keep a public houſe; I apprehended him for an aſſault, and he had a hearing upon it before the Magiſtrate, after that, finding he muſt give bail, he aſked us if we knew any thing of a coach being robbed, I told him no, he ſaid, it was the night before, and he would tell the Magiſtrate, and then he told me he had the things in his poſſeſſion, and had the key of the room himſelf, I aſked him how he came by them, and he went over to the Juſtice's and gave an account, that he had ſome of the property in his houſe, and alſo, that he had the key of an empty room where ſome of the things were.

Court. Was not that taken in writing?——I do not know; after that I went with him in a coach to apprehend Mills and two more.

Did Tomkins tell you any thing of himſelf?——No. We went to the apartment of Mills, and he bid his wife bring down the things, and ſhe brought down a piſtol and a parcel of trinkets, which have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, and a book of accounts;

account; he ſaid Mills brought the portmanteau to his houſe; he ſaid that was all he had in the houſe; and the remainder was taken away that morning out of his houſe in a large bag. We had a ſearch-warrant to ſearch Tomkins's houſe, and then we found another laced apron.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

I went to execute a warrant on the priſoner Tomkins for an aſſault on Mr. Clarke, I brought him over to the office, and he ſaid to me, have not you heard of a coach being robbed, and I ſaid no; ſays he, I dare ſay it will be advertiſed, and I know the people that have done it, he was bailed for the aſſault, he then went with us to Clerkenwell Green, and ſhewed us Mr. Mills, and two more that had done this robbery; we took Mills and another, I ſearched Mills and found this ſhirt upon him. (The ſhirt depoſed to.) I ſearched him further and found this key.

What did they ſay?—When I told him what I took him for, he ſaid, why, ſays he, Damn your eyes! this is the key that I took out of the Peter, meaning the trunk: here is a waiſtcoat I took off of Mills's back, that the woman ſwore to before to Juſtice; I found theſe things on him the 2d of January.

(The key, the ſhirt, and the waiſtcoat depoſed to.)

Prisoner Mills's Defence.

I bought thoſe things in Rag Fair, and paid for them, they diſcharged the people that ſtole the things, the key does not belong to the trunk.

Richard Mills, Guilty.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Williams Tomkins, Not Guilty.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice Heath.

---

192. JOHN ASH, of the City of London, labourer, was indicted, for that Thomas Eaton of Saliſbury Court, in the City of London, ſilverſmith, on the 6th of November, in the twenty-fourth year of his Majeſty's reign, was poſſeſſed of a certain transferrable ſhare, to wit, 750l. transferrable ſhare of and in a certain capital ſtock of annuities, eſtabliſhed by certain acts of parliament, the proprietors of which ſaid annuities, ſo eſtabliſhed as aforeſaid then, to wit, on the ſaid 6th of November, had in reſpect of the ſaid annuities transferrable ſhares, in proportion to their ſeveral annuities to wit, at London aforeſaid, and that he, the ſaid Thomas Eaton, on the ſaid 6th day of November, was the true and real proprietor of the ſaid ſhare of the ſaid annuities, and in reſpect thereof, then and there, had the ſaid ſhare; and that the ſaid John Aſh well knowing the premiſes, but wickedly deviſing and intending, to defraud the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, falſely, deceitfully, and feloniouſly, did perſonate the ſaid Thomas Eaton, the real and true proprietor, and did then and there, falſely, deceitfully, and feloniouſly, transfer the ſaid ſtock and ſhare of the ſaid Thomas Eaton, to one Andrew Woolford, as if he was the true and real proprietor thereof, againſt the form of the ſtatute, and againſt the King's peace.

A Second Count, for that the ſaid Thomas Eaton, on the ſaid 6th of November, was poſſeſſed of, and entitled unto certain ſhares, to wit 750l. and that he the ſaid John Aſh, afterwards, falſely, deceitfully, and feloniouſly, did perſonate the ſaid Thomas Eaton, the true and real proprietor, and thereby did there feloniouſly transfer the ſaid ſhare to one Andrew Woolford, as if he was the true and lawful owner of the ſaid ſhare, againſt the ſtatute.

A Third Count, for falſely, deceitfully, and feloniouſly perſonating the ſaid Thomas Eaton, the true and real proprietor of and in certain other annuities, and transferring the ſaid other annuities, to the ſaid Andrew Woolford.

A Fourth Count, that the ſaid Thomas Eaton, on the ſaid 4th of November, was poſſeſſed as aforeſaid, and the ſaid John Aſh well knowing the premiſes, afterwards, to wit, on the ſame day and at the ſame place, did perſonate the ſaid Thomas Eaton, and then and there feloniouſly transfer the ſaid 750l. ſhare of him, the ſaid Thomas Eaton, as if he had been the true and lawful owner hereof.

Mr. Fielding opened the indictment on the part of the Proſecution: And Mr. Sylveſter opened the caſe as follows.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip and you gentlemen of the Jury. I am likewiſe of Council in this proſecution for the Bank of England, who have thought it their duty to bring the priſoner before you, for you to judge whether he is or is not guilty of this charge: This offence is made felony by act of parliament, which enacts "that if "any perſon or perſons ſhall falſely, and "deceitfully, perſonate any true and law- "ful proprietors of ſhares of ſtocks, or "annuities or any part thereof, and there- "by transferring, or endeavouring to "transfer the ſaid ſhares of ſtocks or "annuities; or receiving, or endeavouring "to receive the ſaid money, as if they "were the true and lawful owner or owners, "all and every ſuch perſon and perſons, "being thereof lawfully convicted in due "form of law, ſhall be adjudged juſtly of "death." The crime is to perſonate a real proprietor of ſtock, by way of transferring, or endeavourin to transfer it.

It is neceſſary that the Bank ſhould take up proſecutions of this kind, who are the guardians of our property, and if the facts are proved to your ſatisfaction, you will then pronounce the priſoner guilty: Thoſe facts I ſhall ſhortly mention to you not by way of directing your judgment, but of guiding it towards them.

Mr. Eaton is a ſilverſmith in Saliſbury Court, Fleet-ſtreet, he was poſſeſſed of 750l. conſolidated ſtock in November laſt; on the 20th of October, he went to receive his dividend, and while he was in the act of receiving it, he perceived the priſoner cloſe to his elbow, the priſoner was a journeyman Baker, and was at that time paying his adreſſes to a niece of Mr. Eaton's, ſeeing the priſoner at his elbow he thought it odd, but he only ſaid, you want to ſee what I am worth. On the 6th of December following, Mr. Eaton having occaſion to ſell out part of this ſeven hundred and fifty pounds, he applied in the uſual way to ſell out the ſum of one hundred pounds, and was ſurprized to find that he had not a ſingle farthing in that ſtock in his name; upon which, application was made to the broker who ſigned the transfer, and he was deſired to recollect who it was that applied to him in the name of Thomas Eaton to transfer the ſtock; upon which he ſaid, that on the 6th of November, a perſon came into the Rotunda of the Bank, and employed him to ſell out ſuch ſtock, which he did, for five hundred and ſeventy-two pounds ſixteen ſhillings and three pence, to one Mr. Woolmer; upon being aſked whether he ſhould know the man again, he ſaid, yes, perfectly well, and he gave a very accurate deſcription of the perſon; the money was paid in one note of five hundred pounds, and three other notes; but the material point is the five hundred pounds note: when the deſcription which the broker gave was told to Mr. Eaton, Good God! ſays he, I know the man perfectly well, why, it is John Aſh; I remember at the time I was receiving my dividend and ſigning the receipt, he ſtood over me, obſerved me particularly, and my ſigning my name: the priſoner was immediately taken into cuſtody, his lodging was ſearched, and there were one note of three hundred pounds, and four of fifty pounds, making exactly the note of five hundred pounds. When the broker ſaw the priſoner, he immediately recognized his perſon; and upon application to the landlady where he lodged, ſhe ſaid, that about the 6th of November he came home to her, and deſired her to take care of a five hundred pounds bank note, and two ten pounds bank notes, and that ſhe gave to him an accountable receipt for the ſame; when ſhe mentioned this to her friends, they ſaid it was very imprudent in her, for in caſe of fire, or in caſe of thieves, ſhe muſt make it good: upon which, on the 14th of November, ſhe returned him back the notes, and received back her accountable receipt: on that day that five hundred pounds note was changed at the Bank, and the name in which it was changed was wrote at the back of it, John Salker of Saliſbury-court, and the notes given in exchange for that note in the name of John Salker, were found in the priſoner's poſſeſſion; that is a very ſtrong circumſtance, becauſe it proves that he was in poſſeſſion of that note to which he ſigned a feigned name; but, gentlemen, I am ſorry to ſay, that this caſe does not want thoſe circumſtances, becauſe the fact will be proved to you by the broker, and if he is believed, it wants no other aſſiſtance whatever, becauſe to the broker he applies in the name of Eaton, he ſigns the name of Eaton, and thereby takes upon himſelf the name and deſcription of the perſon who is the real proprietor; he receives it in that name and gets poſſeſſion of it: therefore there cannot be a doubt in the mind of any man that hears me; but this man comes within the deſcription of the act of parliament, in perſonating a real proprietor; at the ſame time I do not mean to influence your minds by any thing that I can ſay, but I only wiſh you to try this caſe as every other caſe ought to be tried, upon facts produced in evidence; if thoſe facts are true, it becomes your duty, though a melancholly one it is indeed, to pronounce that verdict: if the facts are not proved, you will then acquit him.

THOMAS EATON ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Fielding.

You are a ſilverſmith in Saliſbury-court?—Yes.

You were poſſeſſed of a certain quantity of ſtock?—Yes.

How much?—Seven hundred and fifty pounds, four per cents.

Court. Do you know the name of the ſtock?—I cannot ſay I do; it is four per cent. annuities.

Do you know the young man at the bar?—Yes, I know him very well.

Was you at the bank any time in October?—Yes, I cannot tell the day, it was after they began to pay when I went to receive my intereſt of money, as I was going into the Bank, I ſaw Mr. Aſh and another talking together; they ſmiled and I ſmiled; when I went to get my receipt they followed me, when I was waiting for my receipt; though before that the man aſked me what is your ſtock, and I ſaid ſeven hundred and fifty pounds; he heard me I dare ſay.

Court. Did you anſwer ſo loud as that the priſoner might hear you?—I imagine I may, as I generally ſpeak pretty loud.

Do you believe he did hear you?—I believe he did, and I believe he ſaw my papers too which I received from the clerk, but I cannot be very poſitive that he heard me; but more than that, I ſaid to him, ſays I, you want to ſee what I am worth.

Did any thing more paſs between him and you?—After I had got my papers, I then left that young man and him together; when I went away I left that other young man in the Bank, I believe Mr. Aſh was gone before me.

Who was that other young man?—I do not know, he was Mr. Aſh's acquaintance, he followed me and aſked me for any thing I had to do, for a young man an acquaintance of his; I received my money and came away.

BENJAMIN HATWELL ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

What are you?—I am a regular broker of the city of London.

Look at that young man, do you know him?—I know the priſoner.

Where did you ſee him?—I ſaw him for the firſt time on the 6th day of November.

(Looking at a paper.)

Court. What have you got there?—This is my memorandum book.

Made at that day?—In the evening of that day I made an entry of the tranſaction.

Mr. Sylveſter. What paſſed?—I was applied to by the priſoner to ſell ſeven hundred and fifty pounds, four per cent. annuities, in the name of Thomas Eaton, of Saliſbury-court, Fleet-ſtreet; the priſoner being an utter ſtranger to me, induced me to make an enquiry into what ſhape he came recommended; after having with ſome kind of delicacy entered into that buſineſs, I was induced, believing myſelf to be inveſted with diſcretionary powers, to ſell the ſtock.

Court. What did he tell you?—He told me there were two gentlemen, whoſe names he mentioned, that had an apartment at a ſadler's in Gray's Inn Lane, near King's Road; I was not perſonally acquainted with them, but I knew I had heard one of their names; he likewiſe mentioned another name which I have forgot; he likewiſe told me that he had received the dividends on the ſeven hundred and fifty pounds, four per cent. annuities, and that he ſhould, in the courſe of two or three months, employ me again to buy in to a larger amount; I believe he mentioned the ſum, but I am not clear in it, therefore I would not wiſh to venture an aſſertion upon that head; in conſequence of which, Mr. Andrew Woolford, a jobber in the four per cent. annuity market, purchaſed the ſtock in the aforeſaid name as ſoon as the transfer was made out, I went as uſual with the priſoner at the bar to the bank books.

Who witneſſed it?—I witneſſed it as a broker.

Look at that.

(The transfer ſhewn him.)

That is my ſignature.

Did you ſee the name there "Thomas Eaton" wrote?—I did; I told him the particular part where to ſign his name.

Did you ſee him ſign it?——I ſaw him ſign it, I was cloſe to the priſoner. (The transfer read, ſigned Thomas Eaton; ſigned alſo, Benjamin Hatwell.) Having transferred the ſtock, I went into the market and was paid for the ſtock in bank notes; it ſo happened that there was a ſurplus which was returnable to the jobber who purchaſed the ſtock, his clerk could not give me the difference out of the bank note, and I adjourned with the priſoner into the hall.

What money did you pay him?—I cannot charge my memory without referring to my memorandum book. (Looks at his book.) The nett money was five hundred and ſeventy two pounds ſixteen ſhillings and three-pence.

Did the priſoner give a receipt for that money?—Yes, he did.

(Looks at the receipt.)

Is that your name ſigned to that?—It is; that was the receipt for the money paid him for the ſtock.

What was he paid in?—In bank notes.

What were the bank notes?—I made no particular minute of the bank notes, it was paid entirely in bank notes, I paid him juſt the ſame notes that Mr. Thomas Fielder paid into my hands.

How many were they?—I cannot charge my memory.

What was the value of them?—I believe there were two or three to the beſt of my recollection.

Was there any for a large ſum?—I believe there was, I am not ſure.

The ſame you received from Fielder you delivered to him?—The very ſame.

Look at that man, are you ſure that is the ſame man?—I am ſure it is the identical man.

Court. Have you any doubt of him?—Not the leaſt.

Court. You conſider his life is at ſtake in what you ſwear now, therefore be very cautious, look at him again?—I am quite ſure as to the priſoner.

THOMAS FIELDER ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Fielding.

You are clerk to Mr. Wilford?—Yes.

Do you remember this tranſaction between you and Hatwell?——I remember ſomething of it.

How many bank notes did you pay him?—I cannot tell.

Court. Do you know the priſoner?—No.

Mr. Fielding. Do you know that note? I have had it in my poſſeſſion; I know no more of it.

Can you ſay whether that was the note you gave to Hatwell or not ?——I cannot ſay.

What do you believe, do you believe that was one of the notes that you gave to Hatwell ?—It very probably may, I cannot ſay.

Court to Priſoner. Would you chuſe to aſk the broker any queſtions ?—Yes, my Lord.

Court. Put the queſtions to me, and I will aſk them.

Priſoner to Hatwell. Did you ever ſee me before ?—No.

Or ſince?—Not till you was taken into cuſtody.

Priſoner. My Lord, I ſhould chuſe to hear the perſon that transferred the ſtock, and then I will aſk a few more queſtions.

MARY ROBERTS ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Where do you live Madam ?—In Saliſbury-court.

Do you know that young man ?—Yes.

Where did he lodge ?—At my houſe.

Did he at any time depoſit any property in your hands ?—Yes, he gave me a five hundred pounds bank note.

Any thing elſe ?—No, Sir, I cannot ſay he did; that was the 6th of November, and about twelve or fourteen days after that he had it of me, and returned it in a two hundred I believe, and ſome fifties.

What became of thoſe notes that were returned ?—On the 26th of November, he aſked me for one of the ten pounds notes, and I gave him the whole value of them, I returned them back to him, ſaying I did not chuſe to take the care of them.

Do you know the notes ?——I cannot ſwear to them.

Court to Priſoner. Would you aſk any queſtions of the laſt witneſs ?——No, my Lord.

ISAAC FIELD ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

You are an entering clerk of the Bank? —I am.

Look at that note, when was it changed into other notes ?——On the 14th of November.

In what name ?—In the name of John Salter, of Saliſbury-ſquare.

Look at thoſe notes; what are they ?—One of three hundred pounds, and four fifty pounds.

Were they given in exchange for that note of five hundred pounds ?—They were.

When a perſon comes to cancel notes you always make them put their names ?—We generally do.

I do not know whether in the hurry of your buſineſs you knew the priſoner ?—No.

Court. Would you aſk any queſtions of this witneſs ?—No, my Lord.

JOHN ACTON, Eſq; ſworn.

I am ſolicitor to the bank; after the priſoner was apprehended, I found in his coat pocket, in his trunk, at his lodgings, a bank note for three hundred pounds, and four bank notes for fifty pounds each, all dated the 14th of November, made out in the name of John Salter; theſe are the ſame that Mr. Fielder produced, and there was another note of ten pounds.

Court to Priſoner. Would you aſk this witneſs any queſtions ?—No, my Lord.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Eaton. Has this ſtock been replaced to your account ?—It has.

And you have accepted of it ?—I have.

JOHN COBB ſworn.

You witneſſed that ?—Yes.

Priſoner. I wiſh to aſk the broker a few queſtions; you ſay, you never ſaw me before or ſince, till I was apprehended ?—No.

I wiſh to know if the perſon that transferred the ſtock remembers the perſon he transferred it to ?

Court. He has not been examined.

JOHN OSWELL TROTTER ſworn.

Did you witneſs the transfer ?—I did.

Look at the priſoner at the priſoner at the bar ?——I do not recollect him as the perſon that made the transfer, I depended entirely on Mr. Hatwell.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay in my defence ; I wiſh to aſk Mr. Hatwell another queſtion : Did you ſay you would do ſuch a thing again any time, as to ſell the ſtock and not know the perſon you ſold it to ?

Court. I do not know that is any way material at all.

Hatwell. That I ſhould preſume, my Lord, is rather irrelative to the matter in queſtion, but as to that, I made no declaration of that kind.

Court to Priſoner. You ſee the charge againſt you, is for perſonating Mr. Eaton, and ſelling this ſtock, and receiving the money, now whether he ſaid he would do it for any other perſon or not, has nothing to do with the caſe.

Priſoner. It is very ſtrange that the perſon who transferred the ſtock cannot remember me as well as the broker.

Court to Priſoner. Can you give any account how you came by this money that was found in your poſſeſſion, that will be very material for you.

Priſoner. I had the money of my friends, and a particular perſon in the town that was left to conduct my cauſe, has not got my witneſſes as he ought ; I have witneſſes to my character.

JANE DREW ſworn.

I am a nurſe in Chelſea college.

Court. What is the priſoner at the bar by trade ?—A baker.

Is he a journeyman baker or a maſter baker ?—He ſerved his apprenticeſhip to a baker ; I have not of late known him, but I knew him in the country where he was brought up.

THOMAS POTTER ſworn.

I keep a publick houſe in White-fryars.

Court. What is the priſoner at the bar ?—He is a baker by trade, he was an apprentice when he ſerved me with bread.

Did you ever know him a maſter baker ?—No, I have known him theſe three years.

Has he worked as a journeyman after he was out of his apprenticeſhip ?—No, I do not know that he did, I heard he had ſome money left him in the country by ſome friends.

What has been his general character during that time ?——He bore an exceeding honeſt character, he uſed to tranſact buſineſs for his maſter with me, his books were always punctual.

WILLIAM ONEY ſworn.

I am a cheeſemonger ; I have known the priſoner about two years, he was an apprentice to Mr. Furnis, within ten yards of my houſe ; he was a very ſober honeſt man.

Priſoner. Pleaſe to aſk Mr. Eaton as to my character.

Court to Mr. Eaton. What has been the priſoner's general character ?——He was a very good young man, he was very much in my favour, he was very induſtrious, he attempted to marry a relation of mine, and I ſaid to her, you cannot do better than have him, as you want to have a baker, for he ſeems a very induſtrious young man, and not above carrying the baſket.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, in the firſt place there can be little doubt but that the crime has been committed, and that this ſum has been transferred by ſome perſon perſonating Mr. Eaton ; then it will remain for your conſideration only, whether or no there is ſufficient evidence to affect the priſoner, and to ſatisfy you in your minds that he is the perſon guilty. Mr. Hatwell the broker, ſwears expreſsly to him ; and it was neceſſary that he ſhould take particular notice of his perſon, becauſe he was to witneſs the transfer himſelf after it was made, and becauſe in caſe of a forgery, he was the perſon to whom the Bank or the party injured were to reſort ; and you find gentlemen, Mr. Hatwell did not immediately go and make a transfer, but he had a converſation with the priſoner firſt ; he aſked him who recommended him, and did not undertake to make the transfer, till he mentioned the names of one or two perſons that he knew: now Hatwell has been cautioned over and over again, and he ſwears expreſsly and poſitively that the priſoner at the bar was the man; but added to this you find that a five hundred pounds note a few days afterwards, had been changed at the Bank for a three hundred pounds and four fifty pounds, and that Mary Roberts the perſon with whom the priſoner lodged, was the depoſitory of thoſe notes for the priſoner, by his deſire; that ſhe afterwards returned thoſe notes to the priſoner, and after he was apprehended, this three hundred pounds note, and theſe four fifty pounds notes were found in his coat pocket, in his trunk in his lodgings, by Mr. Acton, the ſolicitor to the Bank; they were in his poſſeſſion, and they perfectly correſpond with thoſe notes changed by Field for that five hundred pounds note; now it would be very material for a perſon in his way of life, who was an apprentice to a baker, and who never appeared to be a maſter, to ſhew how he came by the money; but the priſoner has not ſhewn us that; the priſoner ſays, by way of obſervation and defence; that Trotter, the clerk, who atteſted the transfer did not recollect him again, and he thinks it very ſtrange that Trotter ſhould not recollect him as well as the broker; but you obſerve theſe two men were in very different ſituations indeed; Hatwell was the perſon to be reſponſible, it behoved him therefore to know the perſon again; whereas it was no buſineſs of Trotter's at all, he depended, as he tells you, on Hatwell; and it is not wonderful that a man that does not take notice of another ſhould not recollect him again: upon the whole, therefore, gentlemen, if the caſe be clearly and ſatisfactorily made out to your judgment, I am afraid good character cannot avail, becauſe it too frequently happens in this place, that men who commit very bad crimes indeed have had a good character; but if you think the caſe any way doubtful, if the poſitive teſtimony of Hatwell, corroborated by the circumſtances of theſe notes being found in the cuſtody and poſſeſſion of the priſoner, do not carry ſufficient conviction to your minds that the priſoner is guilty of this charge, you will in that caſe acquit him.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

199. AMBROSE COOK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th of December laſt, one tin nutmeg grater, value 1d. one other nutmeg grater, value 1d. and one guinea, value 1l. 1s. and 9s. 6d. in monies numbered, the property of Thomas Adams, privily from the perſon of Elizabeth, the wife of the ſaid Thomas Adams.

ELIZABETH ADAMS ſworn.

The back part of our houſe fell down, that we had not a bed in the houſe, and my huſband and I was out looking for a houſe, being over and above fatigued we came home, he fell aſleep, and I fell aſleep by the ſide of him, and while I was aſleep I had my pocket picked of theſe nutmeg graters and money, I was ſitting by the fire in the ſhop, it was on the Monday night, December the 15th, I awoke with feeling ſomething at my pocket, I awoke and fell aſleep again, I ſaw nobody there but the priſoner, and I thought I had no diſtruſt of him, I was not truly awake.

When did you awake again?—I awoke the laſt time a quarter after nine, when I awoke I miſſed my property, I put my hand in my pocket ſoon after and miſſed nine ſhillings and ſix-pence in ſilver, that was looſe in my pocket, and two nutmeg graters, one was full of receipts and duplicates, and the other had a guinea wrapped up in a piece of paper; it was all gone, I did nothing that night, the priſoner dropped two notes that were in the nutmeg grater.

Mr. Garrow Council for the Priſoner. You was not by?—He was taken up the next day; I know the priſoner very well, and took him and maintained him, he is a gardener, I made a bed for him in my own houſe, he had lived in my houſe before.

Did you ſee him that night?—No, I did not.

You have known the priſoner many years?—Yes.

You knew him before he went to ſea?—Yes.

You knew him when he lived at Briſtol?—Yes.

You lived there too I believe?—Yes.

Pray what buſineſs may you carry on at preſent, Mrs. Adams?——I keep an old clothes ſhop.

An open ſhop?—Yes, the door is always open.

At this time a part of your houſe was broke down?—Nobody could come in.

Nobody could come in to the houſe, the door of which was always open, and the back part broke down; is that what you mean to tell the Jury?——Nobody could come in at the back door.

But could not ſomebody come in at the front door?—Not without my ſeeing them.

Can you ſee in your ſleep, it ſhould ſeem you have all your faculties in your ſleep; you feel in your ſleep; you felt a hand in your pocket.—I ſaw nobody but my huſband.

Then it might be your huſband picking your pocket?—He never picks my pocket nor I have no occaſion to pick his.

We ſhall talk a little about that by and by?—I know he did not pick my pocket.

Did you ſee who did pick your pocket?—There was nobody but the priſoner and my huſband.

Was not you aſleep all the time, and knew nothing at all about the matter?—I am ſure it was picked at that hour.

How are you ſure of that?—I am ſenſible I had the money when I ſat down, I ſaw my nutmeg grater at eight o'clock at night, I paid money for the carriage of that chap's clothes.

You had been out all day ſeeking for lodgings?—I had.

You was a good deal tired and had been drinking a little I believe?——Very like I might.

Upon your oath, when you came home did not you lay down upon the floor drunk?——No, pleaſe your worſhip, I was not drunk.

Was you upon the floor aſleep?—I was not, I was ſitting on a baſket.

Upon your oath, you was not laying upon the floor aſleep?—I was not.

One would think you muſt have felt a good deal, when he picked your pocket?—A great many rogues will pick pockets quite eaſy.

Perhaps you know more on that ſubject than I do, have you no lodgers in your houſe?—No.

None of the ſame deſcription you had at Briſtol; have you no ladies lodge in your houſe?—What do you call ladies?

Why women, come?—There was nobody in the houſe at that time.

Your huſband was there at the time?—By the ſide of me.

You did not tell him a word about looſing your money?—No.

Nor any body elſe?—No.

Now upon your oath, did you or not ſee the priſoner after this, that evening?—No, I did not.

Upon your oath, did not you aſk him to eat bread and cheeſe that evening?—No, I did not.

Nor aſk him what he would have for his ſupper?——I did not, if he had bread and cheeſe in my houſe it was whilſt I was aſleep.

Did not he come there and ſup?—If he did it is more than I know.

Did he go to bed as uſual that night?—He went to bed between twelve and one o'clock, as I was told.

In his uſual lodging?—Yes.

He went to Hoxton the next day, to his uncle?—Yes.

What were theſe notes and papers that were in the nutmeg grater?—Some of them were duplicates, and others were receipts, that I paid money for.

Nothing elſe?——No.

No inſurance papers?——There were ſome few inſurance papers.

I believe the priſoner was ſo much in your confidence that he was your agent in inſuring?—Never, I have ſent him to know if ſuch numbers were up, I never intruſted him with my papers to inſure, I never gave him my papers, I have put the marks on his hat.

Do you recollect his bringing you a guinea as the produce of ſome of your inſurances?——He never brought me a guinea in his life.

Did your huſband know any thing about your inſuring?—He always knew.

Did your huſband know about your pawning the coat to pay for the inſurance?—I do not know that I pawned any thing that he did not know of, if I did it was my own.

Upon your oath, do not you know that you pawned a coat of your huſband's to pay for inſurance?——Never in my life but what he knew, I did nothing but what he knew.

Do you recollect telling the priſoner at the bar, that the guinea he brought you would bring you pretty well round again, for you expected to have a duſt with your huſband, or a buſtle?——No.

Do you talk in your ſleep?——No.

I believe you loſt a good deal of caſh by inſuring, did not you?——What I loſt was my own, I do not think I was three ſhillings out of pocket.

And upon your oath, there never was that converſation paſſed between you and the priſoner?—I will take my oath on it.

Tell the Court now whether it was ſo or not?——There was not.

MARY WHITE ſworn.

Court. What are you?—I am a coachman's wife.

Where do you live?——In St. Giles's; the priſoner came into my houſe that ſame night.

What night?—I am not poſitive to the night, the next day he was taken up; he uſed to come down to ſee us, and he inſiſted upon ſending for two pots of beer, ſays I, Harry, it is going late, we do not chuſe to have any beer; when I ſent the girl to order two pots of beer, he put his hand in his pocket and pulled out a handful of ſilver, to the amount of a guinea as I think; I would not tell a lie for the world; ſays I, in the name of God where had you this money, have you got it honeſtly; ſays he, I have, my father is come to town, and has given me a guinea, and ſays he, tomorrow I ſhall have twenty guineas; I ſaid, I am very glad you are relieved out of your trouble, and ſays I, for God's ſake go and pay ſome part of that money to your diſtreſſed landlady; in ſhewing this money he dropped ſome papers, and I picked them up, and Mrs. Adams ſwore to them papers.

Court. What papers were they?—The Juſtice deſired me to take care of them, they are papers belonging to the inſuring office where they inſure. (The papers produced.) The priſoner ſaid they were his papers when I ſhewed them before the Juſtice.

Court. What day of the month was this?—I cannot tell.

How came you to be ſurprized at his taking out a little ſilver?——Becauſe he never worked, and was always living on this poor diſtreſſed woman.

Mr. Garrow. You deal a little in inſurance now and then?——No, I never did inſure.

You know what inſurance papers are?——No, I do not.

You know theſe are not pawnbroker's duplicates?——Oh! I am ſure of that.

He took out a guinea's worth of ſilver?——About a guinea's worth.

Was there eight ſhillings in his hand?—I will ſwear there were three half crowns, and the reſt all in ſilver; it was a guinea's worth of ſilver.

What ſort of buſineſs are you in?——In the woman's clothes way.

Upon your oath, were there fifteen ſhillings worth of ſilver in his hand?—Upon my oath there was above.

Did he tell you how much there was?—A guinea's worth, there he is himſelf.

Did he tell you it was a guinea's worth?——I ſwear to twenty ſhillings; I would ſooner ſay leſs than more.

Only tell the truth, that is all that is required of you here.—I do tell the truth if poſſible, I get nothing by it; I would ſooner ſhew him mercy than not.

I aſk no mercy of you Mrs. White, only ſtand up and be a little decent if you can; ſeeing this man with twenty ſhillings in his hand, you adviſed him to pay ſomething to Mrs. Adams?——I ſaid, take that trifle of money to give the poor diſtreſſed woman ſomething, becauſe I thought it right for him ſo to do; ſhe had been a friend to him, and I thought it was right.

Never mind what you thought, let us have leſs of your comments and more of your evidence; did you ſay that which I have repeated to you?——Repeat what!

Did you ſay you were told he was going to have twenty pounds, and you begged to him to give his poor diſtreſſed landlady ſomething?——I deſired him to give her ſome of that twenty ſhillings.

When did you tell Mrs. Adams he had dropped theſe papers?——She never knew it till I came before the Juſtice, I went to give them to him.

So you went accidentally?——I went to ſee him; I did not know any thing about the robbery before; I never told Mrs. Adams, only what I ſpoke before his worſhip; I told her at the Juſtice's; I had not told her before I ſpoke to the Juſtice; I ſhewed them to the woman before the magiſtrate; Mrs. Adams did not know that I had them, till I went to the Juſtice's with her.

Court. What was the priſoner taken up for?——I do not know what.

Had not you told Mrs. Adams before this man was taken up, that he had dropped theſe papers?——I will take my oath, I never did tell her ſo, the man was in confinement before I knew he was.

How long is it ago, ſince you ſaid you would do him?——Lord! I do him!

How long ago is it ſince you ſaid before the Juſtice, it was I that did him?——I do not recollect it.

Upon your oath, you never ſaid ſo?——I do not recollect that I did.

Do you know Mrs. Fordham?——She is nothing to me.

Will you ſay, upon your oath, that you never ſaid it was you that done him, before the magiſtrate?——Upon my oath, I never ſaid that I would do him over.

I do not aſk you whether you ſaid you would do him over, I aſk you whether you ſaid you did him?——I did not ſay it was me that did him, I am ſure I never did, I never did ſay ſo.

How came you to tell me juſt now that you did not know whether you had ſaid ſo or not?——I never did ſay ſo.

You are ſure of that?——I think I am.

Now you loſe ſight of it, your recollection fails you now; did you at any time ſay it was you that did him?——I never ſaid do him over.

I do not ſay do him over, I ſay, did you ever ſay it was you that did him?——I never ſaid ſo that I know of.

Court. Will you ſwear whether you did or did not?——I never did ſay I did him over in my life.

Did you ever ſay that you did him?——I never ſaid ſuch a word in my life, nor any thing like it to any body; God forbid I ſhould.

Who was it that you told, that you, through the window, ſaw this man picking the witneſs's pocket?——I never ſaid ſo, the woman that ſaid ſo is out of doors, this woman the witneſs lodged there as far as I know.

How many more lodgers has ſhe?——I do not know.

Court to Mrs. Adams. How came you firſt to ſuſpect the priſoner?——I had nobody elſe lived in the houſe but him and my own huſband, he was in the houſe when my huſband and I ſat down together.

Why did not you ſay ſo before?——I ſaid he was there.

Did not you ſay that the reaſon you ſuſpected him was becauſe he dropped ſome of the papers that were in your pocket?——Yes, that made me quite ſure.

Was that the reaſon that you had him taken up?——Becauſe I knew nobody elſe did it but him.

How did you know nobody elſe did it but him; how came you to tell me that you ſuſpected him, becauſe ſome of the papers that were in your pocket was dropped by him?——Jane Cavalley told me of it before the man was taken in cuſtody.

Court. Now I will aſk you a third time, when did the witneſs that is going to be called, tell you what ſhe knew of the matter?—The next day.

What time the next day?——I cannot ſay whether it was while we were going to Hoxton, it was after he was taken up.

Which do you ſtick by, was it before or after?——It was after but it was the ſame day, it was after he was taken up.

Was it the ſame day or the next?——Really I cannot poſitively ſay, it was after he was taken up.

Why was not ſhe carried by you as a witneſs before the Grand Jury to find the bill?——I did not know that ſhe ſaw any thing of it.

What not when you went before the Grand Jury?——I did not know of taking another witneſs with me then, any more than was on the back of the bill, they ſaid one witneſs was enough to go to find the bill, and if there was any more wanted I might call them in here, they told me it was no odds to take any other woman with me.

Who told you ſo, name the perſon that told you ſo?——I was told ſo by many.

By whom, name one of them?——My huſband for one.

Who elſe, can you name any one perſon that told you ſo?—My huſband told me ſo.

Can you name any body elſe?——I cannot ſay I can mention their names.

Is your huſband here?——Yes.

When did Mary White firſt tell you what ſhe knew?——She told me on the next day.

What the next day after you loſt the money?——She did not tell me of it the next day, but ſhe told the maid the next day, a woman that uſed to waſh for me, and my maid told me, I can ſtick to that.

What is this maid's name?——Jane Cavelley.

Then that witneſs that is there is your maid?——She waſhes for me.

Did ſhe tell you any thing about theſe inſurance papers?——I never knew ſhe had them till ſhe came before the Juſtice, I took Mary White with me for company.

JANE CAVALLEY ſworn.

What are you?——A ſervant.

Whoſe ſervant?——I am out of place.

Whoſe ſervant was you laſt month?——I lived in Hogg Lane at Mrs. Adams's.

In what ſtation did you live at Mrs. Adams's?—She gave me my victuals and drink for what I did for her.

What do you know of this buſineſs?——Between eight and nine at night, I was putting up the ſhutters, and I ſaw the priſoner put his hand to her pocket, and as I came in he took his hand away, but I did think he had picked her pocket, I did not know he had.

Where was ſhe ſitting?——Behind the counter aſleep.

Was there any fire in the room?——Yes, her huſband was ſitting cloſe to the fire, and ſhe was ſitting behind him.

What was ſhe ſitting upon?——I cannot tell, I believe it was upon the corner of a baſket.

Was ſhe ſober or in liquor?——Sober as far as I know.

Where was Ambroſe Cook?——He was next to the counter, cloſe with his hand over Mrs. Adams, in this manner, Mrs. Adams had her head in the chimney corner, there was a vacancy, a little part that any body might come by.

Had not he room enough to go up to her?——He was ſat upon the ſide of a chair and put his hand over her, when I came in I aſked him what he was doing, and he took his hand away.

How long did he keep his hand at her pocket?——He took it away when I came in.

How long might that be?——Not many minutes, he took his hand from where her pocket was, but I did not think her pocket was picked, I aſked him what he was waking Mrs. Adams for, he made ſome kind of an anſwer, I do not know what, he ſaid, he wanted her to go out ſomewhere or other, I do not know where.

Recollect as well as you can what anſwer he made?——He ſaid, he wanted her to go out with him, and that he would not go himſelf.

Did he wake her?—Yes, ſhe awaked at the time, but I believe ſhe fell aſleep again, ſhe ſpoke to him.

Do you recollect what ſhe ſaid to him? No, I cannot indeed.

You are ſure ſhe ſpoke to him?—Yes.

How long was it before ſhe went to ſleep again?——Not above a few minutes.

What became of him after ſhe went to ſleep again?——He went out.

When did you hear that your miſtreſs had loſt any thing?——She ſent me up to know whether he was come in to go to bed, and he was not come in, ſhe waked about nine I believe, about half after nine, it was about half an hour or three quarters after.

What was ſhe doing till eleven o'clock?—We got our ſuppers and went up ſtairs.

Where did he ſleep?——In Denmark-ſtreet.

When did ſhe ſay, ſhe had loſt any thing?—In the morning ſhe told me to go to pay the water tax, and ſhe told me, ſhe had loſt ſome money the night before, that ſhe had borowed for that.

Did ſhe give you the money?——She had got none, I heard her ſay, ſhe borrowed money for the taxes, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe muſt go and look after Ambroſe.

What did ſhe firſt ſay about the loſs of the money?——She ſaid, ſhe had loſt a guinea out of her pocket, and nine ſhillings and ſixpence.

What was ſhe to look after Ambroſe for?——To ſee if he knew any thing of the money.

What did you ſay to her?——I did not make her much anſwer.

Did you tell her that you had ſeen Ambroſe's hand at her pocket?——Yes, I told her that before ſhe went to Hoxton.

Before ſhe went to Hoxton, you told her what you had ſeen?—Yes.

You are ſure of that?——Yes.

What did ſhe ſay to that?——She ſaid ſhe was very ſorry as I ſaw ſuch a thing.

Such a thing as what?——As he picking her pocket, becauſe ſhe had been ſuch a friend to him.

Then ſhe had no ſuſpicion of Ambroſe before you told her what you had ſeen?—She did not expreſs it to me before I told her.

How came you did not go before the Juſtice with her to keep her company as well as Mrs. White?——I did go, but I was not called on, he was fully committed without.

Did Mrs. Adams deſire you to tell the Juſtice what you knew?——He was fully committed before I was called.

Who were you called by?——Nobody called me.

Then how could it be before you were called?——I was never called.

What did your miſtreſs take you there for, if you were not to be called?——I went to ſpeak what I ſaw.

Your miſtreſs knew all this before ſhe went to the Juſtice?——Yes.

Mr. Garrow. She knew it too before the man was apprehended; you know you told her in the morning before ſhe went out of the houſe?——I told her what I ſaw.

Conſequently ſhe knew it before ſhe went to Hoxton?——Yes.

Did you go with her to Hoxton?—No, not when ſhe went to take him.

When did you go?——The ſecond day.

Did Mrs. White ever tell you any thing about papers?——Yes, that day ſhe went to the Juſtice's, the laſt day ſhe produced them there.

When did ſhe tell you of them firſt?—That was the firſt I heard about them.

Never knew of them before?——Never.

You ſaid juſt now, Mrs. Adams ſaid ſhe was ſorry that he had ſerved her ſo?——Yes.

Did ſhe ſay any thing about being ſorry that you ſhould ſee ſuch a thing, or ſuch an indecent thing?——She ſaid ſhe was very ſorry that he had done ſuch a thing to her, for any body to ſee ſuch a thing.

Now about this loſs of money; her huſband had given her money to pay the water tax, and ſhe had loſt it?——Not by the inſurance, ſhe never inſured money that I know of.

Did you pawn the coat to pay for the inſurance?——No.

How many lodging rooms have you?——The houſe is down, we did not ſleep in the houſe; there was nothing but a few things in the ſhop.

You aſked him what he was doing, and he ſaid he was waking her, and ſhe refuſed to go out?——I would not let him wake her enough.

But he did wake her?——She waked but ſhe fell in ſleep again.

He aſked her to go out, and ſhe ſaid ſhe would not, and he ſaid then he would not go out?——Yes.

In two or three minutes after this ſhe fell aſleep?——Yes.

Thoſe are outſide ſhutters I ſuppoſe?——Yes, I fetched them from the paſſage; I ſaw him with his hand at her pocket, thro' the window as I was putting up the ſhutters.

Did ſhe ſend you after to invite him to ſupper?——No.

Did he lodge at the ſame houſe with her?——Yes.

What time did you go to your beds?——We were going to bed then.

THOMAS ADAMS ſworn.

Court. Where have you been waiting now?——Juſt by here.

Who was with you?——No perſon.

Was not your wife and you together?——No.

When did your wife firſt tell you of the loſs ſhe had met with?——I was obliged to go to my watch; I went that night a quarter before ten o'clock; and before that I had been taking a bit of a doze in my ſhop.

Where was your wife?——By my ſide, when I went to ſleep ſhe was ſitting by me.

Who elſe was there?——There was Jenny the maid.

And who elſe?——There was no perſon elſe.

Nobody elſe?——I think not.

Who was there when you awoke?——When I awoke there was my wife and this woman.

Nobody elſe?——Nobody elſe that I remember.

How long after you waked was it that you went on the watch?——Directly, my wife was in a great hurry, but ſhe did not tell me any thing; in the morning, about ſeven, when I came home ſhe deſired of me to go and look for Ambroſe; ſhe did not tell me the ſenſe of it.

Did not ſhe tell you what for?——No, ſhe did not.

How long was it before ſhe told you what you was to look for him for?——I got up about ten o'clock, ſhe then deſired me to look for Ambroſe.

Did ſhe tell you why?——No.

When did ſhe firſt tell you ſhe had loſt any thing?——Not till I got to Hoxton; then when we ſaw Ambroſe, ſhe deſired him to give her what he had taken from her; I heard nothing of it before; ſhe had the money to pay the taxes; I gave it her the day it was loſt.

Did not ſhe uſe to inſure a good deal in the lottery?——Only what I knew about a couple that night, I knew of that.

Did ſhe loſe money by it?——Not as I know; ſhe ſent me ſeveral times to ſee if the tickets were come up; I went one night with Ambroſe.

Who did you ſend that night that you fell aſleep?——She deſired Ambroſe to go, and gave him directions on his hat; that was before I fell aſleep.

Did you ſee Ambroſe come back again?——No; ſhe inſured that night, but I do not know what ſhe paid that night; ſhe was expecting the tax man.

What did Ambroſe ſay to her when ſhe deſired him to give her what he took from her?——He took out ſome halfpence in his hand, and ſaid, that was all he had; he began to ſwear, and ſhe deſired me to get a conſtable; then ſhe told me what he had taken from her; and he ſaid, he had nothing but halfpence.

Mr. Garrow. The lottery was pretty near an end?——I believe at that time they were ſixteen pence or eighteen pence.

Do you know of her pawning your coat?——She told me ſince, ſhe pawned one of my coats.

You have found that out lately, ha! Now pray who let you into that ſecret, did Ambroſe?——No.

Who told you?—I found it out myſelf.

How did you find it out Maſter Adams; come, do not be aſhamed, it is no diſgrace, a better man than you has had his coat pawned?—My wife told me by my orders.

How did you find it out?——I knew it without her telling me.

How much was it pawned for?——Not half a guinea.

Court. Was it before or after ſhe had loſt this money?——I knew of it before four or five days; I conſented; I told her ſhe might put out ſomething or other, becauſe ſhe was deſirous to keep it up a little; ſhe went a guinea that night.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, if you have any doubt in this caſe, I will call the witneſs, and aſk her as to theſe papers; but if you are ſatisfied, if you ſee the evidence in the light I do, I think it will be unneceſſary.

Jury. My Lord, we are very well ſatisfied.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

201. EDWARD BRITT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th of January, two yards of Florentine ſilk, value 16s. one yard and a quarter of figured ſattin, value 13s. eight yards of Nankeen, valve 10s. two foreparts of tambour ſattin for a waiſtcoat, value 20s. a pair of Mancheſter velvet breeches, value 8s. one Gingham waiſtcoat, value 2s. two pair of thread ſtockings, value 3s. one pair of cotton ſtockings, value 12d. ſix ſmall pieces of blue cloth, value 12d. one ſmall piece of black cloth, value 3s. four handkerchiefs, value 4s. and one man's hat, value 6d. the property of William Pearſon, in his dwelling houſe.

WILLIAM PEARSON ſworn.

I live in Crown Court, St. James's-ſtreet, on Thurſday evening between ſeven and eight o'clock, I left the priſoner the care of my houſe, me and my wife went out, he was my apprentice, I left a child twelve years old in the houſe, I returned between eleven and twelve I met my child in the ſtreet, my wife was with me, her cry was daddy, Neddy is gone out and left the door open, we went up ſtairs and ſearched for the priſoner, he was not there nor at the public houſe; I returned home and faſtened the ſtreet-door, next morning a perſon came and knocked at the door, and aſked for the priſoner, and he enquired of me if I had loſt any property, and I heard the priſoner was at St. Giles's watch-houſe; the man is not here; I went up ſtairs and found my drawer open where thoſe things had been, the things were gone, theſe were articles I had to make up for different perſons, I went to the watch-houſe, but the priſoner was at Mr. Walker's.

Court. What did he ſay for himſelf?——He did not deny any thing at all.

GEORGE DURHAM ſworn.——I am a conſtable, and it was ſearch night, that night, coming down High-ſtreet, St. Giles's, about half paſt twelve o'clock, I ſaw this boy in the middle of the ſtreet, he ſaid, he was going home, with ſome gentleman's clothes, I ſaid, this is an odd time in the morning to carry home clothes, where do you come from, he ſaid, he lived with one Warburton, and was going to carry them to the Bird in Hand, Oxford-ſtreet; we ſecured him, I ſaid, I do not think you came honeſtly by theſe things; we will go with you, he ſaid, he would be much obliged to us if we would; going along I ſaw a bit of red ſilk out of the handkerchief; I then took them from him thinking he had ſtole them; he ſaid the gentleman was going out of town in a great hurry, and could not wait for the things being finiſhed, we went to the Bird in Hand, they were gone to bed, and the maid looked out of the window, ſhe knew nothing of him, we took him and the clothes to St. Giles's watch-houſe, I gave the things to one of the conſtables, I cannot recollect which, and I ſaw them afterwards given to the conſtable of the night; we opened the handkerchiefs, and found all theſe things except three handkerchiefs and the ſtockings.

—— HILLIARD ſworn.

I received the things, when the priſoner's maſter came to the watch-houſe, he ſaid, whoſe hat have you on, and the priſoner ſaid, yours; this is the hat.

(The thread ſtockings, the figured ſilk, and the hat, depoſed to.)

Court. If I underſtand you right, the thread ſtockings, the figured ſilk, and the hat, you can poſitively ſwear to?—Yes.

What age is he?—He tells me he is fifteen, he was bound apprentice to me, he ſerved ſome part of his time in Ireland as he told me.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay, but that I was adviſed by other perſons, and one was with me, and another adviſed me to go his lodgings with things; I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing to the value of 10d.

To be twice publicly whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

202. JOSEPH GRAINGER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th of January, one linen handkerchief, value 1s. the property of John Hemming.

On Monday the 5th of this month, near ſix o'clock in the evening, going down Ludgate-hill, I was called to by two gentlemen, who told me the priſoner had picked my pocket; I immediately turned back, they had then hold of the priſoner, and I ſaw them take from him my pocket handkerchief, the conſtable has the handkerchief.

(The handkerchief produced.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going to Ludgate-hill, and I ſaw this handkerchief lay on the ground, I picked it up, and was running towards the gentleman.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

203. JOHN LEE was indicted for falſly and feloniouſly making, forging and counterfeiting, and cauſing and procuring to be falſly and feloniouſly made, forged, and counterfeited, on the 20th of November laſt, a certain bill of exchange, commonly called an inland bill of exchange, purporting to be made by the Right Hon. George Lord Viſc. Townſend, maſter general of the Ordnance, and directed to the Pay Office in the Ordnance Office, Whitehall, requiring the proper perſon, in ſuch Pay Office, at the Ordnance Office, Whitehall, to pay Mr. John Lee or order, on demand, the ſum of 15l. ſterling, which ſaid bill of exchange ſo falſly made, forged, and counterfeited, is as follows, that is to ſay, "London, November 24, 1783. "Pay to Mr. John Lee, or order, on demand, the ſum of 15l. ſterling, which "place to his account of office. Townſend, "M. G. Pay Office, Ordnance "Office, Whitehall" with intention to defraud James Creſdale.

A ſecond Count, For uttering the ſame, knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

A third Count. Charging the like forgery, only calling the forged instrument a warrant for payment of money.

A fourth Count. For uttering the same, knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

A fifth Count. For forging the same, only calling it an order for payment of money.

A sixth Count. For uttering the same, knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

A seventh Count. Charging that on the 26th day of November last, the Right Hon. George Lord Viscount Townshend was master general of the ordnance of our Lord the King, and that on the same day the said John Lee, did feloniously forge and counterfeit, and cause and procure to be falsely made, forged and counterfeited, a certain warrant for payment of money, purporting to have been signed by the said Lord Viscount Townshend, as such master general of the office of ordnance, and to be directed to the Pay Office in the Ordnance Office at Whitehall, requiring the proper person in the said office, to pay Mr. John Lee, or order, on demand, the sum of 15 l. with intention to defraud our Lord the King.

An eighth Count. For uttering the same, knowing it to be forged, with the like intention.

(The prisoner having challenged William [illegible], one of the Jury, Philip Howell served in his place.)

JAMES CRESDALE sworn.

I keep the Rose Tavern, in Bridges-street, Covent-garden, the prisoner came to my house on the 26th of November, and ordered a dinner, and he had three bottles of wine, a gentleman came and drank part of two with him, and he sent for a [illegible], and sent for me, desiring the waiter to tell me to come up; when I came up, I drank a glass of wine with him, and he presented this bill, and he pressed me to lend him five guineas upon it; I told him I could not lend him so much, if one guinea would be of any service to him for that night I would lend it him, but I lent him a guinea and a half.

Court. What did he say?——He shewed me the bill, and said it was drawn on the Ordnance Office, and he would call the next evening and take it up, but he did not come any more, and I never saw him till I saw him before my Lord Mayor at Guildhall.

How long after was that?——Not till the Monday week following, and I presented it at Mr. Cox's Office, in Craig's Court; I presented it on the 8th of December.

Mr. [illegible], Prisoner's Counsel. Your house is adjoining Drury-lane Theatre, is not it?——Yes.

The Rose Tavern?——Yes.——

Did you know Mr. Lee before?——No, he made use of a gentleman's name that used the house, and I thought I had a faint remembrance of his face, he said his name was Lee, and that he knew several gentlemen that used the house.

Did he say what he was?——No, I looked upon him to be an officer, he had a cockade, he said he was just come from Scotland.

What day of the month was this?——The twenty-fifth or twenty-sixth of December, I am not sure which.

The bill produced.

Court. What did you do with the note?——I presented it the 8th of December, at Mr. Cox's Office, I left it there, and it has been in the possession of the clerk ever since; I left it with Mr. Pinder, that was the same note I received of the prisoner.

GEORGE PINDER sworn.

Court. Did you receive a note from the last witness?——I did.

What did you do with it?——I have kept it in my possession ever since, except when Mr. Cox has taken it to Guildhall, to attend the prisoner's examination.

Mr. Macnally, another of the Prisoner's Councel. Did you put any mark upon it?——No.

RICHARD BETHELL COX ſworn.

I was at that time pay-maſter to the artillery.

Mr. Macnally. When you was before Alderman Croſby, at Guildhall, and was aſked where that note was, what was your anſwer?—I was at Guildhall once or twice with the note, and once or twice without it.

Do you recollect that you ſaid that note was either in the poſſeſſion of the Alderman or the Alderman's clerk?—I cannot ſay, but it never was left at Guildhall.

Then do you remember ſaying, if it is not, perhaps it may be in the poſſeſſion of my caſhier?—Having been before the Lord Mayor on the ſame buſineſs, I did not recollect whether I had left the note at Guildhall or with Mr. Pinder, but certain I was, if not at the office at Guildhall, it was with Mr. Pinder.

Court. Look at that note.—This is the note.

Mr. Silveſter. Is it drawn in the uſual form that the maſter of the ordnance draws bills on the pay office?—No, it is not.

How are bills generally drawn by the maſter of the ordnance?—The maſter of the ordnance ſeldom draws a bill, but I apprehend if he had occaſion to draw a bill, he would addreſs it to the Right Hon. the principal officers of his Majeſty's Ordnance.

Court. Do you know my Lord Townſend's hand writing?—Perfectly well.

Mr. Silveſter. How is Lord Townſend appointed to this office?—He was maſter general of the ordnance at that time.

Is not it a patent office?—Yes.

How was he appointed by patent?—I do not know.

Mr. Silveſter. My Lord, I beg to obſerve before this witneſs goes on with his evidence, that the indictment has ſtated throughout, in every count, that My Lord Townſend is Maſter General of the Ordnance, therefore it is neceſſary for them to prove that fact, and alſo that there was ſuch an office as the Pay-Office in the Ordnance-office, Whitehall.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. Suppoſe there was no ſuch office.

Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt. It ſays, purporting to be drawn by Lord Townſend.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. It all comes after purporting, it is no averment that it is ſo.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Cox. Is there any ſuch office as the Pay-office in the Ordnance-office, Whitehall?—I believe not.

Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt. If it was intended to make him believe there was ſuch an office.

Mr. Sylveſter. My objection is that there is no ſuch perſon.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. Will you pretend to ſay, becauſe a man forges a note on an officer, and he either wilfully or accidentally miſtakes the name of the office, that that is not a forgery; how ſhould it be drawn? here is no averment that he is the Maſter of the Ordnance; or ſuppoſe this note bore date the day after Lord Townſend had been diſmiſſed from his office, and he had given it to an ignorant perſon, and ſaid, this is a note drawn on the Ordnance Office.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, the note itſelf does not import that Lord Townſend is Maſter General of the ordnance at all.

Court. The jury muſt take upon themſelves to determine what M. G. means.

Mr. Sylveſter. If they take upon themſelves to prove that.

Court. They are to prove that it was intended to mean that.

Mr. Sylveſter. They ſay directed to the Pay-office in the Ordnance-office at Whitehall, that is averring that there is ſuch an office: why ſhould they add the word in, in the office; the note ſays, Pay-office Ordnance-office Whitehall, the indictment ſays, the Pay-office in the Ordnance-office Whitehall.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. Whatever comes after purporting is no averment that in fact exiſts, but pretends to exiſt. If the jury are of opinion that that does not purport to be paid at the Pay-office Whitehall, that is another thing.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, a man was indicted and tried before Lord Mansfield for forging a note, purporting to be a bank note, he uttered it as ſuch, and he told the man to whom it was offered, that it was a very good note, he told the man it was a bank note; the man knew no difference: inſtead of the words the Bank of England, it was my Bank of England, and Lord Manſfield ſaid the words purporting to be a bank note meant, that the note appeared upon the face of it to be a bank note, and the want of ſuch appearance cannot be ſupplied; now here is a place called in the indictment the Pay-office in the ordnance-office Whitehall, and after this it appears that there is no ſuch place.

Court. That is a matter of evidence to be left to the jury; you ſee on preſenting the bill the priſoner ſaid it was drawn on the Ordnance-office.

Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt. This is not governed by the caſe you have juſt quoted of purporting to be a bank note, becauſe that is governed by a preciſe form.

Mr. Sylveſter. I underſtand Mr. Cox to ſay that there is a preciſe form to theſe bills.

Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt. That is only in his opinion.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Cox. Would you have paid this as an ordnance draft?—It is not drawn upon me.

Is there ſuch an office as the Pay-office in the Ordnance-office Whitehall?—There uſed to be I believe, before the new building at Whitehall was erected, formerly.

Not in your memory and mine I am ſure?—I cannot exactly ſay, but there is ſuch an office in the Tower.

Mr. Sylveſter. There is no ſuch place as the Ordnance-office at Whitehall, nor ever was.

Court to Cox. Are you ſure there uſed to be one?—No, I will not ſay that.

Do you know that Lord Townſend was then Maſter of the Ordnance?—Yes.

Are you acquainted with this hand-writing?—Yes.

Have you ſeen him write?—Several times.

Is that Lord Townſend's hand-writing?—Certainly not.

Are you clear and certain of that?—Perfectly certain.

Mr. Sylveſter. Have you frequently ſeen him write?—Several times.

Court. You ſay at preſent there is no office at Whitehall, that you know of, for the payment of ordnance bills?—No.

But they are paid in the Tower?—Yes.

Mr. Sylveſter. What, is Lord Townſhend an officer?—Yes, he is Colonel of the Queen's regiment of dragoon guards.

You are ſure he is not Maſter General? —No, Sir.

Is there any ſuch perſon as Mr. Lee in the Ordnance-office?——Not that I know of.

Does my Lord Townſend draw upon the Pay-office, would he give me a draft or order, or warrant, to pay to my account? No, you would have an impreſt.

Then I ſhould not have a draft to pay me any money on my own account? a draft therefore, even from Lord Townſhend, would not be paid, to be placed to my account?—It is a thing that never happens; the bill ſays, and place it to his account of office, now John Lee has no buſineſs in the office of ordnance at all.

Mr. Sylveſter. How do you know that?

Mr. Macnally. Are there not many contractors belonging to the Ordnance-office?—There may.

Can you take upon you to ſay that there is no John Lee a contractor?—No.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. Suppoſing there was, how would that vary the caſe, where Lord Townſend's name is forged.

Court to George Pinder. Are you acquainted with Lord Townſend's hand-writing?—I am.

Have you ſeen him write?—I have.

Look at that?—I do not think it Lord Townſend's hand-writing.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, it is my duty ſtanding here as a council for a priſoner to take every objection that lays in my power, for a man ſtanding in his unfortunate ſituation, therefore I ſhall make no apology for troubling your lordſhip with a further objection. By an act of parliament paſſed in the twenty-third year of his preſent Majeſty's reign; it is enacted, that every piece of paper or parchment, called a note of hand, or ſheet or piece of paper, called a bill of exchange, which ſhall be ingroſſed, written, or printed for any ſum under the ſum of fifty pounds ſhall have a ſtamp duty of ſixpence thereon; then the act goes on and ſays, that if any ſuch note of hand, or bill of exchange ſhall not be marked or ſtamped with ſuch ſtamp duty of ſixpence thereon, the ſame ſhall not be pleaded or given in evidence in any Court. In a caſe, the King againſt Hawkins, which was reſerved by Mr. Juſtice Buller, a perſon was indicted for forging a bill of exchange, which was not ſtamped according to the late act. The objection was taken by Mr. Baldwin at Worceſter.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. It ſays, it ſhall not be given in evidence between the parties, it does not mean in a criminal proſecution; the meaning of the act of Parliament is, that the man who neglects to pay the duties ſhall derive no benefit from it, but it does not extend to criminal ſuits.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Cox. Would you pay a draft unſtamped that was drawn on ſight?—Certainly I would if it was drawn on me.

Do you know that all notes except thoſe on Bankers are to pay certain duty?—No, Sir, I do not underſtand ſo, becauſe we pay twenty every day that are drawn at ſight, without ſtamps; what I underſtand by a Banker, is a perſon acting as a Banker, and if a man keeps caſh with me, I act as his Banker.

If that bill had been preſented to you would you have paid it?——No, I certainly would not, becauſe it was not my Lord Townſend's hand writing, and in the next place it was not adreſſed to me.

Do you know any body upon the face of God's earth that would have paid it?——Here is a perſon that advanced money upon it.

Now, is that an anſwer Mr. Cox?

(The Bill Read.)

"London, November 24th, 1783; pay
"to Mr. John Lee, or order, on demand
"the ſum of 15l. ſterling, which place to
"his account of office,

TOWNSEND, M. G."

Mr. Sylveſter. Is it Townſend or Jownſend?

Mr. Reynolds. It is more like an J than a T.

Mr. Sylveſter. If my Lord Townſend's name had not been mentioned, I believe nobody would have thought of it.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. Then let it be ſhewn to the Jury, that they may judge of it.

Court to Priſoner. Would you ſay any thing Sir, for yourſelf, or do you leave your defence to your Council?

Priſoner. My Lord, I leave it to my Council, who are ſufficiently able to defend my cauſe.

Court to Mr Sylveſter. Have you any witneſſes to call?—No, my Lord.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen: In this caſe upon one of theſe objections taken by council it muſt be left to you, whether, upon the face of this bill it does not purport to be directed to the Pay-office, and to be ſigned by Lord Townſend, as Maſter General of the Ordnance, if you think one or the other it not purported, then it would be a ground for an acquittal: If you think it does ſo purport, then the evidence goes to that part of the indictment. The uttering of this bill is proved by Creſdale, who relates the circumſtance of the priſoner's coming to him, and it appears to be a forged bill; it is very difficult indeed to prove the very act of forgery; theſe matters are your conſideration, firſt, whether you ſufficiently give credit to the witneſſes, and in the next place, whether you think it purports to be drawn by Lord Townſend, Maſter General of the Ordnance, and to be paid at the Pay-office, in the Ordnance-office: If you do not believe the evidence, or do not think it ſo purports, then there will be a ground for acquittal; If you believe the witneſſes, and think it does ſo purport, in that caſe you will find the priſoner guilty.

GUILTY, of uttering the bill knowing it to be forged. Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

204. PAUL WILKES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 12th of January laſt, eighty pounds weight of ſugar, value 40s. the property of William Pycroft and Samuel Page.

WILLIAM PYCROFT ſworn.

I know nothing of the robbery, I know the ſugar.

——— DUSK ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner with a bag upon his back going out of the ſugar-houſe, on Monday evening, I ſtopped him; he aſked for another man's name, but there was no ſuch man there, I took him with me to the room, as ſoon as he ſaw me, he put the ſugar down, and I left the ſugar where he put it.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was in liquor when I did it, or elſe I ſhould not have done it.

HENRY INNIS ſworn.

The laſt witneſs came and told me, he had got a thief, ſays I, what had he got? He ſaid, he had a bag on his back, he brought the priſoner into the room, the priſoner did not ſay any thing, he ſaid, the ſugar was in the place where the priſoner had dropped it, and when we came there, there were four lumps of ſugar in it, we left the lumps in the bag, and we brought the bag before the Juſtice.

What became of it afterwards?—It was locked up at Juſtice Staple's, that was the ſame bag and ſugar, that Duſk ſhewed me in the warehouſe.

Court to Duſk. Was the bag you ſhewed to the witneſs Innis the ſame that the priſoner was carrying out?—Yes.

BENJAMIN NASH ſworn.

On Monday night a man came to the Rotation Office, White-Chapel, and I went, and when I came, there was the man in the room, and the ſugar by the ſide of him, I took up the man, and the witneſs the ſugar, it was opened before Mr. Staples, they ſaid it was theirs, then it was put up and ſealed, and the ſeal was broke here, it was locked up, and has been ſo ever ſince.

The ſugar depoſed to, being marked No. 65.

GUILTY.

To be publickly whipped, and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

205. ELIZABETH JONES, and ELIZABETH WHEELER were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the firſt of January laſt, 4s. 6d. in monies numbered, the monies of William Howlett.

I was coming home on new year's night; between twelve and one o'clock; I met the priſoners oppoſite St. Margaret's church-yard, Weſtminſter; I went there to a houſe to aſk for a perſon that would have ſeen me home, and theſe women followed me out, and rather decoyed me home with them; and ſcarce had I got up ſtairs but they uſed me very unhandſomely; they threw me down and ſtripped me of my clothes, and took four ſhillings and ſix pence out of my breeches pocket, which was all the money I had in the world.

How do you know you had the money in your pocket?——I am ſenſible I had it in my pocket, for I wrapped it up in a piece of paper, I felt it in my pocket, and held my hand upon it during the time they forced it from me; I was not drunk; I do not uſe myſelf much to drink; I am but a poor working man, and my abilities will not admit of it, I was not in liquor, I was ſober.

How long had you been drinking?——About an hour and an half.

No more than that?——No, I do not think I had.

Where had you been till eleven o'clock?——I had been to the ſign of the Star and Garter, in Palace-yard, to ſee a perſon.

Had not you been drinking there?—Yes, part of two or three pints of beer.

Then you had been drinking more than an hour and an half?—I was ſober then.

You ſeem to lay a ſtreſs on the word then; had you been in liquor before that evening?—No, I had not been in liquor.

JOHN BALDEY ſworn.

I am a watchman; as I was crying the hour of one, I heard a man call out watch! watch! watch! I am robbed and ſtripped naked! ſee what a condition I am in! he was ſtanding at the door of No. 45, in Pye-ſtreet, Weſtminſter; he had nothing on but his breeches and ſhirt, and a pair of ſoldiers ſhoes; I went up ſtairs and they ſaid, blaſt him, they knew nothing at all of him nor his clothes; I pulled off the blankets and things; they were both in bed; one was dreſſed and the other undreſſed; ſays I, the man ſhall have his things; at laſt I locked them all three in, and went and fetched a patrol, and we hunted about, and at laſt we found his coat and ſtockings, one woman pulled one ſtocking off her leg and threw it at him.

Where did you find the coat?—On the chair, and the buckles were put down at the head of the bedſtead, they ſaid, the man had no money about him, and he ſaid, he loſt four ſhillings and ſix-pence, the man ſpoke more regularly to me than he does here.

Court to Proſecutor. You told me they threw you down and took the money out of your pocket, how came you to undreſs?—They pulled the things off me in a forcible manner.

Did not you undreſs yourſelf?—No, I did not.

PRISONER JONES'S DEFENCE.

About half after eleven o'clock, this young woman and me went into the church-yard to have a pint of beer, and that man got up from company; there were two girls in the houſe, and he was very much in liquor, and he aſked us to have ſomething to drink, and he gave us two or three glaſſes one after another; he followed us out and aſked us to take him home; he came home along with us as well as he could walk; we got a piece of candle of a watchman, and we came up ſtairs and he ſat down; we aſked him for ſomething to drink; he ſaid, no, there was nobody up; we aſked him what he would make us a preſent of; he ſaid, he would not give us any thing; when we went into bed, we aſked him what he would give us; he ſaid, he would give it us in the morning; with that I up with my foot and I puſhed him off the bed; and he directly ſaid he was robbed; and we had not a halfpenny in the world, only ſixpence this young woman had in her pocket; with that he called watch! my clothes were half off and half on, her clothes were all off; he pulled off his things, and flung his coat in one place and his waiſtcoat in another.

Court to Watchman. Did you ſearch theſe women to ſee what money they had about them?——No.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

206. JAMES ELLICK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of January, four quarts of wine, called red port, value 5s. the property of William Timſon, and Robert Jones.

WILLIAM TIMSON ſworn.

I am partner with Robert Jones; on Tueſday afternoon we landed about ſixty pipes of wine on Smart's key; thoſe wines remained on the key all night; on Wedneſday morning the conſtable informed me that one of the pipes had been pegged; I ſaw from the appearance there had been a quantity of wine ſpilt on the key, and I found there had been about four quarts taken from it, from the quantity I had reaſon to ſuppoſe it contained.

ABEDNEGO LAMBERT ſworn.

I am a ward watchman; I was calling my hour of two yeſterday morning, and going along by the Gun Tavern, I ſaw the priſoner with his head at a pipe of wine, ſays I, villain, what are you about here my Lord; there was a bladder in his hand, and as I was bringing him to the watch-houſe, he canted the bladder away; it fell into Billinſgate Dock, he gave a jerk and ran away, and I purſued him, and he was taken to the watch-houſe.

WILLIAM THOMLINSON ſworn.

After this I took the watchman down to ſhew him the pipe from whence the wine had been ſuppoſed to be taken; and I ſaw a quantity of wine that had run out of that caſk; I obſerved it had been pegged or ſpoiled; I ſaw ſomething in the Dock like a hat or a bladder; we took it up; it is here.

Priſoner. They were crying ſtop thief, and I ſtopped, and they took me.

GUILTY

To be whipped on Smart's Key.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

207. THOMAS AYRES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th of December laſt, twenty pounds weight of ſugar, value 5s. the property of a perſon unknown.

——— LEWIS ſworn.

I was at work on the keys the 20th of December, ſome time in the forenoon, weighing ſugar for the King; when I was weighing the ſugar, I turned my eyes to a lighter that lay alongſide the key, and I ſaw a man's head appear now and then from the lighter which was loaded with ſugar, and I ſuſpected ſomething that was wrong was going forward; and I told the cooper, and he called, come out you Sir, and he walked away; I jumped down and took him; he ſaid, a watchman told him to take it.

Priſoner. The watchman gave me leave to take ſome damaged ſugar at the bottom of the lighter.

JAMES KENDALL ſworn.

I took charge of the priſoner; and took about ſix pounds of ſugar out of his pockets.

Court to Lewis. Was the ſugar damaged? —It was very brown.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

---

208. JAMES TENHELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th of January, twenty-five pounds weight of black pepper, value 40s. ſeven pounds weight of pimento, value 7s. and one loaf of ſugar, value 3l. the property of John Sutton and Co.

WILLIAM ELLIS ſworn.

I live with Sutton and Co. in Trinity-lane; I do not know the priſoner; two parcels were found on him; twenty-five pounds of black pepper, and ſeven pounds of pimento, the property of the wharfingers; this pepper was taken out of a hogſhead; I know my own hand writing; I marked it the 2d of January.

MATHEW NEWTON ſworn.

I was watchman in Love-lane, facing Darkhouſe-lane, and about twenty minutes before eleven o'clock, on the 8th of January, I ſaw the priſoner and another coming along; the boy that was with him had a load of ſugar, and he had a handkerchief with pepper and other things; I took them to the watch-houſe; I heard after that the wharf was broke open, and deſired they might be kept, but they let the boy go to look for the captain.

JOHN MAYERS ſworn.

Theſe goods were delivered into my charge to pack in this hogſhead; I belong to Sutton, Baſire, and Haddon; this hogſhead had been broke open at Somer's key, and the wharfinger's clerk came up to our houſe and begged we would ſend down a man; ſo I took an inventory of the goods I had packed, out of my maſter's book; I went down to the wharf and found theſe goods miſſing, which have been found on the priſoner; I headed up the hogſhead, and all the goods were ſecure.

THOMAS HEAVEN ſworn.

I belong to Somers-key adjoining to Billingſgate, on the 3d of January we received in good condition a hogſhead marked E. W. of Diſſ. and laſt Friday morning when I came down, I found the warehouſe door broke open, the lock and the ſtaple were broke off, and ſome part of the hogſhead's head was broke off.

JOSEPH WEEDON ſworn.

I produce ſome things in baſkets (produced) I ſaw the priſoner with theſe things in his poſſeſſion, (The pimento ſworn to.) the pepper is broke at preſent.

Priſoner. A young man aſked me to carry them.

Guilty.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice Ashurst.

209. MARY HARDY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 2d of July laſt, four gold mourning rings, value 20s. one other gold ring, value 5s. one brilliant diamond ring ſet in gold, value 10l. a ſilver egg, value 3s. a mourning ring with a ſtone and two brilliants ſet therein, value 10s. and one garnet ring ſet in gold, value 6s. the property of John Chambers.

SARAH PEARSON was indicted for feloniouſly receiving one gold mourning ring with a ſtone and two brilliant diamonds ſet therein, and one gold ring with a ſtone, and two roſe diamonds ſet therein, knowing them to be ſtolen.

I can only ſay that the things were loſt, and when they were miſſed we ſuſpected the perſon that ſtole them, and took her up, ſhe uſed to chare at our houſe to aſſiſt the maid.

When did you miſs the things?—The 5th of July, I think, there was ſome money in a tea-cheſt, a guinea, two crown pieces, and five half crowns miſſed, then the maid began to imagine it muſt be this priſoner, then we went to ſee if every thing was ſafe; the things in the indictment were kept up ſtairs, we went up and miſſed them, on the Sunday we ſecured Mary Hardy and the evidence Rachel Cloak, and we took them before Mr. Alderman Hart, he diſmiſſed them till we could find Sarah Pearſon; I know none of the parties but the perſon that committed the robbery; upon her examination ſhe confeſſed taking the things, that confeſſion was made freely of her own accord.

No promiſe?—None in the world, and Rachael Cloak the evidence, confeſſed taking them to Sarah Pearſon, who ſaid if ſhe could get any thing and bring to her, ſhe would maintain her if her father and mother turned her out.

Were any of the things found afterwards? —Yes, there are two rings, one of them I can ſwear to.

Where were they found?—At Mr. Daviſon's, pawnbroker, in Shoreditch, the hoop diamond ring was offered there, but they would not take it, we found a ſilver egg that ſhe pawned at Mr. Townſend's in Hair-alley.

How came it to be ſo long after the robbery before they were tried?—Mr. Alderman Hart ſaid we ſhould let it alone till we could find Sarah Pearſon; then they were all taken up again on the Sunday.

RACHAEL CLOAK ſworn.

How old are you?—Eighteen, I lodge at Mr. Armſtrong's in Kingſland-road, and Sarah Pearſon lodged there, and ſhe aſked me to go and meet Mary Hardy coming from work, ſhe ſaid ſhe would be there in the morning, and I might go with her, I went there, I was to meet her to take what ſhe gave me to carry to Sarah Pearſon; I believe this is almoſt ſeven months ago, I knew nothing more of it at that time, I went and met her at her maſter's door, and ſhe gave me a plain gold ring, and ſeveral things at different times; ſhe gave me nine rings in all, and a ſilver egg-box, a mother of pearl box ſet with ſilver, and one diamond hoop ring; when I met Mary Hardy, I told her nobody ſhould know what I came for, ſhe had been to Sarah Pearſon, and I told her I was to take what ſhe gave me for Sarah Pearſon, ſhe bid me take the things to Sarah Pearſon's, ſhe uſed to go to Sarah Pearſon's of a morning, the priſoner Hardy went to her father when ſhe had given me the things.

What were the things put up in?—Six rings were in a box, and the reſt of them in a bit of paper, ſhe had them in her pocket in the ſtreet, and bid me take them to Sarah Pearſon, I met her once by her maſter's door, and another time in Moorfields; Pearſon ſaid when I brought them to her ſhe would make me a preſent.

What did ſhe give you?——A linen gown, and when ſhe run away ſhe took the gown with her again.

She did not tell you before that what theſe things were that you were to bring to her?—No.

Did you ever hear any converſation before that paſs between her and Hardy about taking any thing?—Never.

How long have you known Hardy?—I lived at a publick-houſe almoſt by her.

Was Sarah Pearſon a lodger in that houſe?—Yes.

What is ſhe?—She is a woman that goes out upon the town.

Priſoner Hardy. She was the perſon that firſt perſuaded me to do it.

JOHN WHITLING ſworn.

I am apprentice to Mr. Daviſon, pawnbroker, in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, I produce two rings, I had them on the 2d of July 1783, they were brought by the priſoner Pearſon, pledged in her own name, ſhe ſaid they were her own property; I am ſure to her perſon, I have the rings.

(Mr. Chambers depoſes to one ring, and believes the other to be his.)

Court to Mr. Chambers. How did you find out the evidence Cloak?—By the priſoner Hardy's information, ſhe ſaid that this girl was ſent to her by Sarah Pearſon for whatever ſhe had that ſhe could get to ſend her.

JAMES HOME ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, on the 3d of July laſt, I received this ſilver nutmeg caſe from Sarah Pearſon, it is called a ſilver egg.

Mr. Chambers. I belive it to be mine, but there is no particular mark, I loſt a ſilver egg of that kind.

PRISONER HARDY's DEFENCE.

Cloak was the perſon that perſuaded me to do it; ſhe begged and prayed, that if ſo be I would rob my maſter, ſhe would take a room, and ſhe would take care I ſhould never be taken up; and ſhe took a room.

SARAH PEARSON's DEFENCE.

I lodged at Mr. Armſtrong's one night, this Mary Hardy and Rachel Cloak went to Bow Fair, Cloak bought a great many things, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was ſhort of money one day, ſhe then aſked me to pawn that ſilver egg, ſeveral days afterwards ſhe aſked me to pawn or ſell them rings for her, I ſaid, I never ſold any thing in my life; I took them to pawn, the gentleman ſaid it was a ring of value, I put it in a bit of red cloth and put it in my pocket, I pulled my handkerchief out of my pocket and never ſaw it ſince; my friends were here yeſterday, but they are not here to day.

MARY HARDY, GUILTY.

She was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutor.

To be privately whipped, and confined to hard labour twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

SARAH PEARSON, GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

210. MARY WILSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d of December laſt, one cotton gown, value 5s. and one linen check apron, value 1s. the property of Sarrh Reynolds.

SARAH REYNOLDS ſworn.

I loſt a cotton gown and a check apron, the 23d of December, I lodge in the houſe of Jane Saunders, I went out on an errand between twelve and one at noon, and I left my gown and apron on a line in a paſſage that leads to an area; I came back about half paſt twelve at noon, and when I came to the top of the ſtairs, I ſaw the priſoner at the bottom of the ſtairs, and I paſſed her; ſhe was a ſtranger to me and I thought of my clothes, and I followed her to the top of the ſtairs, and I found this gown and apron under her cloak, ſhe denied it, I never ſaw her before.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I ſtood up for decency's ſake, to tie up my garter at the door, and two or three people came out, and this woman ran after them, and ſhe laid hold of me; a ſtrange man came up and ſhoved me into the entry, and he opened the door that went into the chandler's ſhop; they ſearched me; I never ſaw a thing till I was up at the Juſtice's, the man ſtruck me ſeveral times, and ſaid I ſhould weigh forty; I had no cloak on, I never was in the place upon the word of a ſinner.

MARY BROWN ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner and the proſecutrix ſtanding together, and ſhe was trying to get the gown from her, and when ſhe found ſhe could not, ſhe let go, and the priſoner ſlapped the proſecutrix twice on the face.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

211. WILLIAM SAUNDERS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 19th of December laſt, one brown mare, price 10l. the property of William Rickards.

WILLIAM RICKARDS ſworn.

I loſt a brown mare; I ſent her to graſs at Enfield-highway ſome time in November; ſhe is my property.

RICHARD FLETCHER ſworn.

I had a brown mare ſent to my farm by Mr. Rickards about ſeven weeks ago, ſhe continued a month, and my people miſſed her the 19th of December; I ſaw her then; on the Saturday night I heard of her being miſſing and I rode up to London to tell Mr. Rickards; I heard of a mare, and I ſtopped at Shoreditch to ſee if it was the ſame, and ſhe was the ſame, a cropped brown mare; then I went to Mr. Rickards and informed him of it, and he came with me to Baſinghouſe, Kingſland-road, where the mare was, and he immediately knew her to be his.

Mr. Garrow, Councel for Priſoner. I believe you have known the priſoner many years?—From his infancy.

What is your opinion of his honeſty?—I never heard any thing amiſs of the boy.

Did you always believe him to be a man of ſound underſtanding?—I always took him to be an ignorant fellow.

Was he a man that knew his conduct as he ſhould do?—If he had he would not have ſtole this horſe.

You are very right, becauſe I believe in order to ſteal the horſe from the ſituation in which you had left it, he muſt neceſſarily paſs before your own door.—Certainly he did, and ſaw me through the window, and it is a thouſand to one but I had ſeen him.

It appeared to you like an act of inſanity, and I believe your opinion of him very well warranted it?—I ſaid ſo at the juſtice's, he was always an ignorant fellow.

What was the ſtate of the fences where this mare was put?—Very good next the road.

FRANCIS HALL ſworn.

A month ago laſt Friday, I was going from London home, through Kingſland turnpike, and I ſaw the priſoner getting off a mare in the road? I aſked him where he was going with her, I never ſaw the mare before, he ſaid to Smithfield; I aſked him if ſhe would draw, and he ſaid yes; I aſked him the price of the mare, and he ſaid ſeven pounds; I ſaid ſhe is in a very bad condition to ſell, I think you will not get that money for her, and his anſwer was, I believe my maſter muſt abate ſomething of it: Says I, is your maſter coming, he ſaid no; then ſays I, how can he abate any thing, he ſaid I muſt abate it myſelf; I ſaid where do you bring the mare from, he ſaid, he brought her from one Mr. Gorring's; ſays I, ſhe is in a very bad condition to ſell, I ſaid ſhe was in a ſweat; ſays he, I will lead her to Smithfield, and ſhe will get cooler by then.

Mr. Garrow. Mr. Hall, what are you?—A labouring man.

Never ſaw the priſoner before?—Never; I ſaw him again the other day.

Do you deal in Smithfield-market?—No, I have no contract in Smithfield-market.

What ſort of buſineſs is yours, a labouring man is a very general deſcription; are you ſure you never deal in old horſes?—No.

No concern in the boiling houſe at all?—No.

What made you enquire about this mare?—It is a natural caſe, when any body is going to Smithfield, and one ſees a horſe in ſweat and dirt.

A natural caſe! what do you make it your buſineſs?—I was going home.

And do you aſk every man you ſee with a horſe in a ſweat and dirty, in Kingſland-road, where he is going with him?—I have aſked ſeveral.

And I ſuppoſe ſeveral have aſked you what you meant by aſking the queſtion, what had you to do with him?—Nothing at all.

And yet you ſay it is a natural caſe; who are you Mr. Hall?—I live at Winchmore-hill, I ſplit wood and bring it to town.

Court. Did you want a horſe at that time?——Yes.

THOMAS FARROW ſworn.

I keep an errand cart from Enfield, I was in London the 19th of December with a load of goods, and I ſtopped at the Baſing-houſe, in Kingſland-road, and I ſaw the priſoner talking with Mr. Hall, with a horſe or mare in his hand, I did not obſerve which; after they parted, Hall comes to me and ſaid, he had a good ſtout ſtrong mare; I ſaw the man and the mare go into the Crooked Billet yard, and I went down there; there were two men with the priſoner and the mare, one of them had his hand up, and ſpoke ſoftly and ſaid, I will give you four pounds for her; the priſoner made anſwer, no, I muſt have four guineas. The man that was about buying her, ſays to the priſoner, hold out your hand and ſtrike me, and I will have her; with that he bid the priſoner get off the mare and go into the houſe and take his money, and he ſaid, gentlemen I have bought her; with that I advanced down upon the man and the mare, and ſaid, if you have bought her I think you have bought the property of a man which he had no right to ſell; with that I accuſed the priſoner where he had her from, his reply was from Mr. Goring White Webb's; that is in Enfield pariſh; I told the man that bought her, ſays I, I ſhall keep this man in cuſtody on ſuſpicion, for I think Mr. Goring would not give him toleration to ſell her for that price, and I would have taken the mare into cuſtody but the man that bought her denied me; I ſaid I was going down to Enfield where he ſaid he brought the mare from, and I would take the man down to Enfield with me to know the rights of it; with that one of the men aſked me if I was an officer, I replied, yes; I took the priſoner to the Baſing-houſe in Kingſland-road, then an officer came to aſſiſt me, and the maſter of the Baſing-houſe ſaid, you may as well come in; and then the priſoner replied, if you will come in I will tell you the truth.

Mr. Garrow. Did the priſoner tell you any thing?——Yes.

Then ſtay a minute before you mention what he told you; had you threatened him to carry him to jail, or did you tell him it would be better for him to confeſs?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Then my Lord will tell you that you are not now to tell us what he ſaid.

Court. No.

Farrow. Then the priſoner was committed.

Mr. Garrow. You live at Enfield?—Yes.

Perhaps you know this man?——No.

I take it for granted you know Silly Bill Sanders?—I knew his father, but I did not know him.

You was jogging out of town with your team?——I was at the door drinking a pint of beer.

You was not near enough to know whether it was a horſe or a mare?—No.

Do you know Hall?——Yes.

What is he?——A labouring man.

Deals in horſes?—Not that I know of.

You was quite ſure that the man that came back again, was the ſame man?—Yes.

So that at the diſtance where you could not diſtinguiſh a horſe from a mare, conſequently not the features of a man at that diſtance, you could tell a man to be the ſame, which you never ſaw before?—Yes.

Why which is the eaſieſt to diſtinguiſh a mare from a horſe, or the features of a man?——A man, by day-light.

That is a ſingular ſort of judgment I believe, and you take upon you to ſay that you knew this to be the ſame man, although you firſt ſaw him at ſuch a diſtance, that you could not diſtinguiſh a horſe from a man?—Yes.

That is your evidence, is it?—Yes.

Then I will not aſk you another queſtion.

MATHEW STUCK ſworn.

On the 10th of laſt month I ſaw this priſoner leading the mare along with a halter over her head, I aſked him where he was going with it, he told me to Smithfield, field, I aſked him whether it was to be ſold before he got to Smithfield, he told me it was, I aſked him who was the maſter of the horſe, he ſaid he brought it from White Webbs, it belonged to one Mr. Goreham, or Roreham, at White Webbs, I cannot tell which; I aſked him the reaſon of his maſter's ſelling it, he ſaid his maſter had got more than he knew what to do with at that time; I aſked him how old it was, he told me he could not juſtly tell the age, I aſked him if it would carry ſafe, and I lifted my leg upon it, he ſaid his maſter did not tell him whether it was ſound or not, I aſked him how much money, he told me ſix pounds, I told him I thought it was too much, if it was not ſound it was not worth near the money, but he ſaid if he could not get that, his maſter told him to ſell it for leſs; I told him I thought four guineas was the full value of it, but ſaid I, what value does your maſter ſet upon it? he ſaid his maſter told him if he could not get ſix pounds, to ſell it for ſomething leſs; the agreement was four guineas, but there was no money paſſed, and one Hall that is here in Court, ſaid, he imagined it was ſtole.

Mr. Garrow. Never mind what he imagined?—I ſaid, if it was ſtole, and he know the man to be the thief, why did not he ſtop him.

Mr. Garrow. This was on the market-day Mr. Stuck?—Yes.

And ſo of a market-day you chuſe to take your walk into the road to buy horſes, inſtead of buying at Smithfield market?—This is the firſt time I ever did ſo.

I fancy not, however the firſt queſtion you aſked the priſoner, ſeeing him with this horſe was, whether it was to be ſold?—No it was not.

I have it down ſo my friend, was that the truth or not?—I am as able to tell truth as you are.

Did you, or did you not ſay this moment, that you aſked him whether the horſe was to be ſold at the market, or whether it might be ſold before?——No.

Court. You did ſay ſo friend.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, he ſaid ſo expreſsly, which he has now twice as expreſsly denied; now be ſo good Mr. Stuck as to tell us, whether you ſaid what my Lord has told you?——Yes.

Did you ſay ſo? did not you ſay juſt now "I aſked the priſoner whether it was to be ſold, and he told me yes?"

Court. I have told you what you ſaid on your firſt examination, if you made a miſtake you may ſay ſo, but you certainly did ſay that when you ſaw the priſoner, you aſked him whether the horſe was to be ſold before he got to Smithfield, and he ſaid it was.

Mr. Garrow. Did you aſk him whether the horſe might be ſold before he got to Smithfield, or did you not?——I never mentioned that.

Upon your oath?——You would not have me ſwear again.

Yes, I would have you ſwear again, and in the moſt unequivocal manner?—I might forget what I ſaid.

Upon your oath did you aſk that queſtion or not?——Aſk what queſtion?

Did not you aſk him whether the horſe might not be ſold before it went to Smithfield market?—Yes, that I will agree to.

You had forgot that now a minute ago?——I ſhould be very ſorry to forget the truth.

Did you ever buy a horſe at Smithfield market?——Many a one.

But you like them better before; who is your partner in the boiling buſineſs?—I have no partner.

Did you never keep a boiling-houſe?—No.

What have you kept?—Why a ſlaughter-houſe.

For horſes?——For hogs.

Did you never kill a horſe in this town to boil for meat?——Never in my days.

What was you to have bought this horſe for?——To have ſold again.

You are a dealer in horſes?——I deal ſome little matter.

O you deal ſome little matter, but you like an unſound one better than a ſound one?——I am quite a different man, I ſlaughter nothing for myſelf, unleſs it be now and then a hog.

Is your's a ſlaughter-houſe where any thing of beaſts are killed, either horſes or hogs?—Quite different, it is a ſlaughter-houſe which is open day and night.

Where do you live?——In Allen-ſtreet, Clerkenwell, No. 32.

How many boilers of horſe fleſh live within a few yards of you?——None for ſix or ſeven yards.

What did you want to buy this horſe for?——For my own uſe, and for no other but for my own uſe, to ſell again.

Do you keep a cart?—Yes, and it goes to Leaden-hall-market every morning in the week except Sunday.

How many horſes did you buy in the courſe of the laſt twelve months?—I cannot tell.

But you muſt?——I cannot gueſs.

Aye but you will?——Did you buy ſo few as ſeventy?—I never bought ſo many.

Fifty?——I cannot ſay.

Upon your oath, did you buy ſo many as fifty?——Not ſo many.

Forty?—I cannot tell, it is impoſſible.

Did not you buy ſo many as forty?——I do not know that I did or did not; I will ſwear I did not.

Thirty, or any given number that you chooſe to fix upon?—I cannot recollect.

Fix upon any given number?——I do not know, I do not keep ſuch things in my head.

What do you buy them in ſo inconſiderable a way; why what muſt the Jury think of you, friend?——The Jury have a right to think as they pleaſe.

It is very fortunate they have, it is a very fortunate thing in the conſtitution of this country; and you would have them believe you, when you ſay you keep no account?——No, I do not.

You do not recollect them with any preciſion?——I do not imagine they might be ſo many.

Upon your oath, did they not amount to forty?—I cannot ſwear any thing about it.

Jury. You muſt be a very capital dealer?——I cannot tell.

Cannot you tell within ten or a dozen?——I do not keep any account.

Do you ſell them again?——I do ſell them again.

Mr. Garrow. I muſt have an anſwer to my queſtion; I muſt aſk you upon your oath to ſay what number you bought in the courſe of the laſt year; will you venture to tell the Jury upon your oath, that you did not buy forty?——I will tell the Jury, or any gentleman upon the matter of truth, that I do not know that I bought thirty.

Only one more queſtion and that you are not intereſted to tell me a lie about; you know that White Webb's was at Enfield?——I do not know that.

JOHN STACEY ſworn.

I was called to take a man in cuſtody for ſtealing a mare, and we had ſome private diſcourſe.

Mr. Garrow. This was under a threat.

Court. You muſt not tell us any thin about a confeſſion, becauſe the man ſaid before he promiſed him it would be better for him.

Mr. Garraw. My Lord does not want to hear it.

Court to Richards. Did you ſee this mare?——Yes, it was my mare.

Mr. Garrow to Richards. I believe you know Stuck?—No, Sir, I never ſaw him before that day; he came as a witneſs.

I dare ſay you have no acquaintance with him, I am ſure you would be aſhamed of that?——I know I gave nineteen guineas for this mare, and he was buying her for four.

If you know any thing of his character it is your duty to the poor man at the bar to tell what you do know.——Upon my word I know nothing at all of him.

FOR THE PRISONER.

WILLIAM EAST ſworn.

I believe you, ſome years ago, lived in the ſame family with the priſoner?—Yes.

That was the family of the late Alderman Bird, Alderman of this city ?—Yes, he was coachman there.

What character did he bear for honeſty there ?——He did not come till the Alderman died, my miſtreſs always had a good opinion of him ; I never heard any thing amiſs of him before ; I have known him for ten years to this preſent time ; he has left the ſervice of Mrs. Bird about twelve months ; ſhe at preſent reſides at Coventry.

I believe you have lived before with a gentleman that was out of his mind ?—Yes, three years.

Do you recollect any thing particular happening to the priſoner ?——About ſix years ago, either in January or February ; he was taken all of a ſudden, and was, as we thought, quite out of his mind ; there was a doctor ſent for, and he bled him and bliſtered him, and he was kept quite cloſe up in a chamber, and the windows of the room were faſtened down ; he was ſo outrageous at that time, that if he could have got at any of the maids he would have done them a miſchief ; he ſaid they were waſhing their hands in his heart's blood ; he was kept cloſe for three weeks ; I did every thing for him, carried him up his victuals and drink ; nobody elſe could maſter him ; my miſtreſs knew I had lived with a gentleman that was out of his mind.

And in your judgement during that three weeks he was a mad man ?——I think that during that three weeks he was as much out of his mind as any perſon that was in Bedlam, and we always looked upon him, that very often, at different times, he was not the perſon he ſhould be ; he did many things that we thought he was not right in his head.

Did he drink ?——He was kept as much from it as poſſible, but if he got a little drop it ſet him quite bad again, that he hardley knew what he did.

Was he conſidered, after this illneſs in the family, as a man of ſound underſtanding ?——No, never ; I was with him in the family between three and four years.

Court. Did Mrs. Bird permit him to drive her ?——Yes ; and after I left her, ſhe tried him as long as ſhe could, and the reaſon ſhe gave for his going away was, that he was ſo bad at ſometimes, that ſhe was afraid to truſt herſelf with him any longer.

Jury. When was the laſt return of the frenzy that you remember ?——He had frequent returns ; the laſt I remember is three years ago ; ſhe ſaid they could not rule him afterwards.

Court to Jury. No man can be guilty of a criminal offence unleſs he is a free agent ; if a man is under any habitual inſanity, it would be very hard for him to be condemned for committing a crime when he is under the viſitation of God ; therefore the firſt queſtion is, whether he was in ſuch a ſtate of mind as that he did not know what he did ? for if ſo, you would not find him guilty if he did ſteal the mare.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

212. MARY CAVE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th of December laſt, one cotton gown, value 15s. a cotton petticoat, value 6s. two black ſtuff petticoats, value 8s. two black ſilk cloaks, value 10s. a cloth cloak, value 10s. a ſtuff gown, value 8s. a cotton handkerchief, value 2s. four pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles, value 40s. a ſilver watch, value 30s. another ſilver watch, value 30s. another ſilver watch, value 30s. the goods of John Burridge in his dwelling houſe.

JOHN BURRIDGE ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker in Holywell-ſtreet, Shoreditch ; I was alarmed on the 27th of December by fire when I was in bed ; one Mr. Orange and Ann Kainſley gave the alarm, Mr. Orange bade me go up to the top of the houſe, for the lower part of my houſe was in flames ; when I came out of my room I found the ſmoke coming out very faſt, and I took my wife with me in her ſhift, and went over the leads and got through a neighbour's houſe and came down, and Mrs. Kainſley and Mr. George Orange brought two bundles to me.

Court. Who is the priſoner?——My apprentice.

How long has ſhe lived with you?——Two years.

What age is ſhe?——Only thirteen.

Court. Have you any idea from any circumſtance within your own knowledge, from any appearance of the ſtate of the houſe afterwards, could you trace where it began?——In the paſſage leading to the ſhop, by the ſide of the boxes; it ſeemed to me as if ſhe had done it deſignedly.

Court. That we muſt judge from circumſtances; we cannot indulge ſuſpicions any farther than they are founded on circumſtances?—The ſhop was all on fire.

How was it extinguiſhed?——By flinging water upon it and knocking the Chineſe work down.

How far had it ſpread?——Only the ſide of the boxes and the flooring of the ſhop that leads to the paſſage, it was in the ſhop.

Have you any place below ſtairs?——None at all, the fire muſt have begun in the ſhop.

Is there any fireplace in the ſhop?——None at all.

How is your ſhop lighted at night, by lamps or candles?——Candles.

What time had you gone to bed?——About half after ten; the alarm was paſt one.

Who was the laſt up in the family?——I went to bed and left her up.

Whoſe buſineſs is it to put out the lights in the ſhop?—The boy and girl put them out.

What boy had you in the houſe?——A little boy.

Were you out that evening?——I had not been out that day.

Had you been in the ſhop after the lights were put out?——No.

Are any of the candles fixed up againſt theſe boxes that were burnt?——No, my Lord, none at all.

Do you lock your ſhop door at night?—Yes.

Who keeps the key?—I leave it in the door for fear it ſhould be picked.

GEORGE BAKER.——

How old are you?——Juſt turned of twelve.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—No.

You take an oath to ſpeak the truth; do you know what will be the conſequence if you do not?——Go to hell.

Do you know you are liable to be puniſhed by the laws of your country if you ſpeak untrue?——Yes.

GEORGE BAKER ſworn.

Mr. Scott Council for the Proſecution. In the firſt place you muſt not be frightened; you are come here to ſpeak the truth, therefore be very careful to ſpeak nothing but the truth.——Yes.

Do you recollect, on the night that the fire happened at your maſter's houſe, being up after your maſter was gone to bed?—No.

What time did you go to bed?—When he went up ſtairs.

Do you recollect deſiring Cave to go to bed?—Yes.

What anſwer did ſhe make you?—She ſaid ſhe would not.

Did ſhe uſually ſit up after you went to bed?—I do not know.

What was ſhe about?—She was going down ſtairs into the kitchen.

Did you ſee her after ſhe went down ſtairs?—No.

When did you ſee her again?—When ſhe awaked me with notice of fire.

When ſhe came to you was ſhe completely dreſſed?—Yes.

Do you lay in the ſhop?—Yes.

Was ſhe frightened at the fire?—No.

Was ſhe perfectly tranquil and as ſhe uſually is?—Yes.

Did ſhe come to you to call you up?—Yes.

What did ſhe tell you?——Says ſhe, George, here is a fire, quite ſoftly.

What did ſhe whiſper it to you?—No.

Did you ſee her go out of the houſe?—Yes.

What had ſhe when ſhe went out of the houſe?——A white apron and a long cloak and a bonnet, and the ticket was on the bonnet, and two bundles.

Had ſhe time to pack theſe things up after ſhe gave you notice of the fire?——She had not time.

How long was it after ſhe called you up and told you there was a fire, before ſhe went out?——When the fire was almoſt extinguiſhed.

Court. Then it was ſome time after?——Yes.

Then why do you think ſhe had not time to pack up thoſe things that were in the bundle?——Yes, ſhe had time to bundle them up while I was in ſleep.

Attend to the queſtion and underſtand it, ſhe awaked you and told you there was a fire, then you got up, how long was it after ſhe awaked you that ſhe went out of the houſe?—Directly after.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

Who opened the door?—I opened the door.

Did you ſtop to dreſs yourſelf?—No, I ran out naked, and ſhe went out with me.

You did not ſee which way ſhe went, did you?—No.

Had you time to give notice to your maſter and miſtreſs that the houſe was on fire?—I helped to call them up with the other people.

That was after you went out?—Yes.

ANN KAINSLEY ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Scott.

You live, I believe, in the neighbourhood of Mr. Burridge?—Yes.

You know that houſe very well?—Yes.

Do you recollect coming home on the 27th pretty early in the morning, in company with one George Orange?—Yes.

Relate what you ſaw?—As I came by, I thought I ſmelt a ſmell of linen burning, I ſaid, ſure there is a fire, we paſt on, and came to Mr. Burridge's door, and there is a large window over his door, and I thought it was a very great light to be over his door at that time, it was half paſt one o'clock, I went as far as the corner of Holywell Lane, I thought if it was a fire the people would be burnt, I returned and ſaw the door open, and the little boy come out in a white ſhirt, and the priſoner at the bar followed him with a white cloak, and a bonnet, and two bundles; I ſaw a girl go to Mr. Burridge's window, and put the two bundles down, ſays I, you huſſy, what do you do with theſe two bundles, ſhe ſaid, ſhe brought them out becauſe they ſhould not be burnt; by this time the people were pretty well alarmed, I took up the bundles, and they were as heavy as I could lift, and I deſired this young man to leave them ſomewhere, I took the little boy up upon my hip and carried him in my fright and ſet him down in the middle of the road; we left the bundles in a houſe, the girl went in, I had not turned myſelf round, before ſhe had got her cloak over them, and her hands upon the two bundles, I ſaid, what do you want with them, ſays ſhe, to carry them to my maſter; the gentlemen lent the child a long coat and a pair of ſhoes, he ſat down on the bundles, he got up, ſhe was going to take them away again, ſhe ſaid, miſtreſs, they are none of your property, I wiſh you would let me alone, I know what I am about; the gentleman ſaid, let her take them out a little obſtinate huſſy, if ſhe will, no, Sir, ſays I, I leave them in your cuſtody, ſhe took them and went to the corner of an alley, I went up to the girl, and the watchman came by and bid her put them down; we went and had a pint of purl, and then I went to Mr. Burridge's, and Orange with me, he was coming out with a candle, I told him my buſineſs, he ſent his ſon over with me, and we brought the bundles, and he ſaid they were his property, the bundles that were carried over to Burridge's were the ſame I took from the priſoner, one was tied up in a coloured apron, and the other in a coarſe apron.

We had been out a holiday making, and this young woman dropped in, and it was late before we broke up, and as we were coming home, we ſaw a light and ſmelt a ſmell of burning, I thought it might be ſomebody making tinder; I ſaid to the young woman, what a ſmell of linen it is, as we went along, we looked over the door from one ſide of the way to the other; juſt as we got to Mrs. Burridge's houſe, we ſaw the light over the door; we went almoſt facing Holywell Lane, the young woman would turn back, and I went with her, we ſaw the door open, and a little boy coming out in his ſhirt, the light was ſo ſtrong to be ſeen on the houſes over the way, and I ſaw the priſoner coming out after the little boy with two bundles, ſhe was compleatly dreſſed, ſhe had a white cloak, and a bonnet with a pawnbroker's ticket upon it, after alarming the houſes on each ſide, Ann Kainſley handed me the bundles, and I was going over the way to lodge them, and the girl was following me all the time, and ſaid, they were her property, ſhe knew what ſhe was about, I ſaid, ſhe ſhould not have them till the fire was put out, I went over to aſſiſt at the fire, and when I returned, I found the girl had got one of the bundles out of the houſe, ſhe had one of them in her cloak coming out, I aſked what ſhe was going to do with the bundle, ſhe ſaid, it was her property, then the watchman came up and ſaid, he would take her to the Compter, if ſhe did not put down the bundle, then ſhe put it down.

Court. What did you do with the bundles?—After the fire was extinguiſhed we went to get a pint of purl, after running about in the wet, and it being a very ſevere night; and we went over to Mr. Burridge's, and he ſent his ſervant over for the bundles; they were the ſame bundles.

Where did the fire appear to have begun? —In the box where they go into the back door, round the ſide of the ſhop where the linen was; the floor was burnt; I did not go down into the kitchen.

WILLIAM BAKER ſworn.

I live in the George and Catherine-wheel Yard, in Biſhopſgate Street.

Do you remember the priſoner at the bar coming to your houſe at any time in the night?—Yes, the 27th, about a quarter after three.

You was in bed I ſuppoſe?—I went to bed about nine, ſhe knocked at the door as hard as ever ſhe could, I went and aſked who was there, ſays ſhe, for God's ſake let me in, I am almoſt froze to death, my maſter's houſe is all burnt down; ſays I, where does your maſter live; I knew the girl, but had not ſeen her for two years and better; ſhe followed me up ſtairs and took hold of my coat; I ſtruck a light, and ſaw a little handkerchief in her hand; I ſaid, what have you got there; ſays ſhe it is ſome of my maſter's property, and you will take care of it; I ſaid what is there in the handkerchief, I ſaw one watch at the corner of a buckle; I left the handkerchief on the table, and ordered my wife to take care of it, and not let the girl go out of the houſe; I ſaid I will ſee, whether the houſe is burnt down, and I went out to ſee whether there was a fire; I knocked at the door ſeveral times, and ſomebody made anſwer within, the fire is all out, let nobody in but friends and neighbours; I locked my door and took the key with me; when I went down, I heard this young woman ſay, you can ſee whether ſhe has been in bed or no, and ſomebody went down ſtairs; I went back again and taxed the girl about it, and ſhe cried and would not ſpeak; I told her I believed ſhe was a very bad girl, and my wife made her ſtrip herſelf ſtark naked; ſhe had a white cloak and a white apron, and a bonnet with a ticket on it, and under that white apron there was a black apron that ſhe worked in; ſo they ſtripped her, and put a ſheet round her, and ſhe lay for two hours; I afterwards brought her down to her maſter's; bringing her down about two hundred yards, pray, ſays ſhe, Mr. Baker, for God's ſake do not take theſe things home to my miſtreſs, for ſhe will kill me, but either keep them or make away with them.

Court. What was in the handkerchief? —I did not know at that time; ſhe then cried out, oh, Mrs. Spriggs has ruined me; what, ſays I, ſhe has been perſuading you to do this I ſuppoſe; aye, ſays ſhe, ſhe has theſe ſix months paſt; going along, I aſked her concerning this Mrs. Spriggs; ſhe told me the firſt thing ſhe had given Mrs. Spriggs before this time was ſome childrens caps, and after that ſhe ſaid ſhe could never get ſhut of her, for if ſhe did not give her ſomething elſe ſhe would tell her miſtreſs; ſhe ſaid ſhe gave her oranges, and what they call lollipops I believe, ſomething which the Jews ſell. This Mrs. Spriggs is known by the name of Hannah Young; I believe ſhe lives with Spriggs. I delivered the handkerchief to Mr. Burridge.

The handkerchief depoſed to.

Court. Is that the handkerchief you received from William Baker?—Yes.

Burridge. This handkerchief contains buckles which were in my own bed room, and three ſilver watches which were in my glaſs-caſe, they are mine, I am quite ſure of them.

Court. What may be the value of them?—They all together are worth ſix or eight pounds.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Them watches were in my maſter's window, and I took them out becauſe they ſhould not be burnt; my miſtreſs often flogged me; and if it had not been for my maſter my miſtreſs would have been tranſported. My miſtreſs made me ſteal ſix ducks, and ſhe burnt the ducks in the fire afterwards, and fowls and a young pig ſhe made me ſteal. My miſtreſs has made me ſteal money from my maſter.

Court to Proſecutor. Where did you get this girl from?—From Shoreditch; theſe watches are all from my own room.

Jury. Did you miſs theſe watches before the fire or after the fire?—Not till I went up ſtairs.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, there is a proviſion in the act, that nothing in that act ſhall extend to apprentices under fifteen years that ſhould rob their maſters, ſo that the charge is reduced to grand larceny only.

Jury to Kainſley. Had ſhe been in bed that night?—The bed did not appear as if ſhe had been in it.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s.

When the Priſoner was brought up to receive ſentence, Mr. Recorder addreſſed her as follows:

Mary Cave, The circumſtances of your caſe are ſuch, that the Court cannot pronounce ſentence upon you, without taking ſome notice of them. Young as you are, you appear to have arrived to a degree of wickedneſs, that renders you an unworthy member of ſociety, and likely to become very dangerous to it; and notwithſtanding your tender years, if you had been capitally convicted, it is hardly probable, that your Sovereign would have thought fit to have extended his mercy to you; you were not only guilty of robbing your maſter and miſtreſs from time to time, aggravated as that crime always is by breach of truſt, but of the much more heinous crime of ſetting fire to their houſe, and endeavouring not only by that to deſtroy their property, but their lives. There appears therefore to be no hopes of your ever making a ſafe or uſeful member of ſociety, at leaſt in this country, the laws of which you have atrociouſly violated; but not having been convicted of a capital offence, the Court can only ſentence you to be tranſported to America for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

213. WILLIAM BUTLER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 3d of January laſt, one cloth coat, value 10s. a ſhag waiſtcoat, value 10s. a pair of ſtocking breeches, value 5s. three Nankeen waiſtcoats, value 5s. a ſtock buckle, value 1s. 9d. a night-cap, value 1d. the goods of John Baggalley.

DUDLEY FROST ſworn.

I am a ſmith, I live in Eagle-ſtreet, No. 46, the proſecutor left a box with me before he went into the hoſpital, and the priſoner came to lodge with me the 25th of October, about a month after, and the box containing the proſecutor's clothes was depoſited in the room were the priſoner lay, he committed the robbery on the 3d of January, the box contained the things mentioned in the indictment, it was locked, and the proſecutor had the key, the box was broke open, I apprehended the young man, and went to the pawnbroker's, where ſome of the things were placed, the pawnbroker is here.

Proſecutor. I ſaw the things in my box about the 24th of December, I left the box locked up in this lodging.

WILLIAM ALDRIDGE ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker in Denmark-ſtreet, I know the priſoner, he pawned two waiſtcoats and a ſhirt, for four ſhillings.

(The ſhirts depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

A young man came to lay with me one night, and he brought them to me the next morning at the Pilgrim, in Holborn, and he ſaid they were his, and deſired me to pledge them for him.

The Priſoner called two Witneſſes who gave him a good character.

GUILTY.

Upon the recommendation of the Jury, ordered to be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

214. CATHERINE WIGMORE was indicted for felonioully ſtealing, on the 19th of December laſt, one cotton gown, value 5s. the property of Thomas Muntford.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice ASHURST.

215. JOSEPH DUMSAGE was indicted for feloniouſly returning from tranſportation, and being found at large, before the expiration of his ſentence.

Priſoner. I confeſs myſelf to be the perſon, I do not wiſh to give the Court any trouble, I humbly beg for mercy.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

---

216. JAMES SCOTT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th day of January laſt, 44 pounds weight of ſpermaceti, value 5l. the property of Francis Goſſip, in his dwelling houſe.

FRANCIS GOSSIP ſworn.

On the 7th of this month, I refined a boil of ſpermaceti, and on the evening about eleven I took it out of the pan into ſmaller pans, I filled thoſe ſmall pans to No. 12, on emptying one of them I carried one into my front ſhop and the remainder next day; I piled them in my ſhop, nine on the table and three in the window; on Tueſday morning following, I miſſed a ſpermaceti cake, I enquired of my ſervants, and found one was ſtolen; I went as ſoon as I miſſed it to different people of the trade, and in a day or two following, I received information of it at Mr. Soames's, in Catwater-ſtreet.

Court. How do you now it was the identical ſpermaceti?—For ſeveral reaſons, there are only three refiners of ſpermaceti in London; Mr. Enderby, Mr. Pugh, and myſelf: I pack in ſmall pans.

Court. Are the other refiners here?—No; the pans are all of a ſize and colour, and it is impoſſible to refine two boilings of ſpermaceti of one and the ſame colour, and I never ſold a pan of ſpermaceti ſince I have been in buſineſs.

Court. Do you know how the others boil?—They make uſe of ſquare pans, and I make uſe of round ones.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and
Gaol Delivery for the City of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of James Scott.

Did you try this cake at all whether it would ſuit your pan?——No, but it has other marks that I can identify it by; it was very ſevere cold at the time this was taken out, and by cooling very ſuddenly they cracked a little at the top, and this amongſt the reſt has a kind of a croſs or crack.

Court. Why if any of the other refiners had refined while that ſevere cold was it muſt have had the ſame effect.——It is my property, I ſwear to it now.

Did you know the priſoner before this?—No.

Had you ever ſeen him near your houſe or ſhop?——No.

How far do you live off?——Compton-ſtreet, Soho.

Are there any other reaſons that you can give for knowing it to be your property?——The cake is here; it is the ſame boil, the ſame ſpermaceti; I have compared a ſample.

Mr. Garrow Council for the Priſoner. I believe it is impoſſible to judge about ſpermaceti by candle light; but pray how long have you been a refiner of ſpermaceti?——About four months.

If you had not ſome reaſon from its ſhape or from ſome inſignificant crack at the top you do not otherwiſe know when it was manufactured; can you, or a more experienced dealer in ſpermaceti, tell whether it was manufactured this year?—No man can tell that.

Do you ever keep ſpermaceti by you?—Yes, large quantities.

During four months you uſed round pans?—I have been almoſt twenty years in the tallow chandlery.

Court. And has all your ſkill and experience in ſpermaceti been collected within theſe four months?—I have made ſpermaceti candles ſince 1759.

Does that intitle you to ſwear with accuracy as to the refining of ſpermaceti?—I was a very good judge of ſpermaceti before.

Now the ſpermaceti comes to you in its refined ſtate?——It uſed to do.

I aſk you this, anſwer it like an honeſt man, whether the ſpermaceti that you uſed to make candles of did not come to you juſt in the ſhape you produce it?—It did not come in this ſhape.

Is it by a crack which is produced by an indiſcreet mode of cooling it, is that the way you identify it?—I cannot ſay more than I have.

Do you mean to tell the Court that you will not anſwer the queſtion; is there any thing that ſhould prevent a man, who was a tallow chandler, and had a pan of that ſize, from pouring it into that pan; is there any law againſt it?—If ſpermaceti comes to be refined it becomes blacker.

My queſtion is this, whether if a man had poured his ſpermaceti into a pan of that ſize it would not have taken preciſely that form?—It would have taken this form if it had been poured into this pan.

Is there any thing ſingular, any name, any initial of a name; with reſpect to round pans and ſquare pans, what are they made of?—Earthen ware.

Are they made of one peculiar manufactory?—They are made at Lambeth.

I might buy pots of that ſize, they are not made for ſpermaceti alone, you being young in the trade make ſhift with pots?—Yes.

Now ſuppoſe any other little refiner ſhould ſet up and go to Lambeth to buy pots, could he have them?——There is no other refiner than what I have mentioned.

How do you know that?—Becauſe there is none that have preſſes but what I mentioned.

What is a preſs?—A very large piece of workmanſhip. It is a large undertaking.

Can you boldly tell the Jury, that there are no men who uſe theſe round pans for putting their ſpermaceti in?—Yes.

How can you venture to ſay that?——I have not ſeen any, and if there was, you cannot bring ſpermaceti to match this, except at my houſe.

That is a pretty bold aſſertion, that no perſon uſes round pans but you.

Jury. Will not the air alter it?—It may grow whiter by continuing in open air, but ſtill all the parcel will be the ſame.

Mr. Garrow. What is there that is peculiar in this ſpermaceti?—It is of a particular boil.

Is it whiter, browner, or more yellow?—This we call exceeding good ſtuff; and there is no quantity of that ſort but this in London, nor no where elſe.

Court. Then perhaps it does not agree exactly with your pans?——Exactly in colour and weight.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, it is my duty, and it will always be much my diſpoſition to ſubmit my queſtions to the Court: In this caſe, your Lordſhip ſees I am combating this peremptory aſſertion, the grounds of which, he is not able to explain to the Jury, becauſe I ſubmit on the part of the priſoner, that this is a property that cannot be identified.

Court. Go on.

Is there any thing extrinſic in the form of that ſpermaceti by which you can affect to diſtinguiſh it?—It is the form of all my pans, and all the reſt are alike.

Then extrinſic of the form and ſhape there is nothing?

Jury. If you was to ſee a piece of ſpermaceti broke off that cake, ſhould you know it was your own?—I could when compared.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, if Gentlemen of the Jury, without ſeeing the drift of my queſtion, are to prevent an anſwer by aſking others, and ſo to decide for themſelves, I deſpair of doing any thing for the priſoner.

Court. They may aſk queſtions.

Mr. Garrow. Certainly, my Lord, and as to the truth of this witneſs's evidence, that muſt be conſidered by the Jury alone; but I ſubmit it is perfectly novel for any body except the Court to break into my examination till I have done with the witneſs.

Court. Then go on.

Mr. Garrow. You ſay that by the ſize, the ſhape, and the form of that, you believe it to be your's; that is one deſcription: is there any thing elſe beſides the ſhape and the form of it by which you can diſtinguiſh it from any other property?—The quality.

Now what is it in the quality by which you can diſtinguiſh it?—I wiſh you was a judge of it; I have a ſample of the ſame kind of another pan, and if it was daylight, you would ſee as well as I that it was the ſame colour and the ſame quality; and if you ſaw this cake and all the reſt, you would have no doubt of it.

Have you compared it with the other eleven?——I have compared this and the other eleven.

What ſince you loſt the one?——No.

Then you have not made the compariſon you are calling on us to make?——The compariſon is in my eye.

You ſaid that if I was to compare it with the other pans I ſhould have no doubt, why you have not done it yourſelf.——No.

If any other ſpermaceti was in that round ſhape it would be like your's; ſuppoſe any other refiner was to borrow your pans?——Fairly all the world for refining a boil of ſpermaceti to bring it to this colour.

Would not it exactly correſpond if it was three years old?——You can eaſily tell if it is old.

You ſay you never ſaw any other refiner put them into round pans?——No, I never did.

But that they do not do it you cannot tell us?——They may do it if they chuſe.

Can you ſay that no other man in the trade uſes round pans?——I do not know that they do.

You do not know that they do not.——Take it ſo; Mr. Pugh and Mr. Enderby make uſe of ſquare pans.

You do not know that they do not uſe round pans?——I do not know that they do, they generally uſe ſquare pans.

How frequently do you ſee any of Mr. Pugh's pans?——I am at his houſe every week.

Suppoſe one of his lead things was out of repair, might he not put it into a round thing for once in a way?——He might.

ABRAHAM WEAVER ſworn.

Court. What are you?——A tallow-chandler; the priſoner came to my houſe on Monday morning laſt; I knew him before.

What is the priſoner?——He is a houſekeeper in the city.

Mr. Garrow. He keeps a tallow-chandler's ſhop.——No, I believe not; the priſoner came to me on Monday morning laſt, the 12th of this month, about ten o'clock, and aſked me if I knew the value of ſpermaceti; I told him I did not; he ſaid he had a piece at home, and if I dealt in it he would let me have it; I told him I did not, but that I was going in the city about four in the afternoon, and I would call at his houſe and take a ſample of it; I called on him.

Whereabouts does he live?——In Widegate-ſtreet, Biſhopſgate; I went in, and I ſaw this piece of ſpermaceti lay on a baſket, open as it is now; the priſoner's wife was behind the counter; I cut off about an ounce, and came into Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and juſt by the corner of Houndſditch I met Mr. Soames, who was my maſter; I ſhewed it to him; I went to a wax-chandler who deals in ſpermaceti, whoſe name is Thorley.

Court. His name is not on the back of the indictment, therefore do not mention it.

——I returned back, and ſaw his wife, and I told her.

Mr. Garrow. Never mind what you told her.——On Monday this tranſaction happened about this piece of ſpermaceti; on Wedneſday morning the priſoner brings it to my houſe, and he ſaid this is the ſpermaceti; he weighed it, and it weighed forty-four pounds; at the price I dealt for it, it came exactly to four pound and eight-pence, and that I ſhould have paid him, but he required no money; I told him, very well, I ſhould ſend it immediately to the merchants; I do not make uſe of it myſelf. I aſked him how he came by it; he ſaid he had it of a gentleman; he did not ſay how, only that a gentleman brought it into his ſhop; I ſhould have bought it for myſelf if I had uſed it as much as butter or bacon; he left me in the morning, and Mr. Soames's man called at my houſe, and this ſpermaceti was ſent by him to Mr. Soames's houſe; there it was apprehended.

What was you told by Mr. Soames?——He told me the real price was two ſhillings and ſixpence; the priſoner has bought candles of me before; he owed me nothing, but the price of this was to go in account in future candles.

Mr. Garrow. The priſoner did not preſs you to make an end of the treaty?——Yes, he brought it to my houſe on the Wedneſday, I ſhould not have ſent for it.

He brought it from his ſhop publickly to your ſhop publickly, without any concealment?—Undoubtedly he did.

And deſcribed to you that he bought it of a Gentleman?—Yes; I believe this is the piece I ſent to Soames; there is a croſs upon it which often happens on caſks of tallow when they ſtand to cool.

Is not that the way that every thing cracks that cracks from the centre?—Upon my oath that is the ſame piece.

Did you ever deal in it before?——No.

Is it uſual for tallow-chandlers to buy pieces of ſpermaceti?——Yes, it is, pieces of wax and ſpermaceti; that is, I mean pieces of candles.

HENRY SOAMES ſworn.

Court. What are you?——I ſell ſpermaceti candles.

How many refiners are there in town?—I cannot ſay of my own knowledge.

Mr. Garrow. Then do not tell us at all.

Court. There was ſome ſpermaceti ſhewn you this laſt week by Weaver?——I met Weaver in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet on Monday or Tueſday laſt, and he ſhewed me ſome ſpermaceti in a ſample, and ſaid he had got a cake of ſpermaceti to ſell, and my man called at his houſe.

Mr. Garrow. That you do not know.—He brought me home this cake of ſpermaceti.

Court. Do you underſtand ſpermaceti?—Yes.

Does the ſpermaceti of one boiling reſemble that of another?—I am not a competent judge of that; this is the ſame ſpermaceti that was brought to my houſe.

Mr. Garrow. Have you had it ever ſince?—Until I delivered it to the Juſtice.

Can you diſtinguiſh the ſpermaceti candles of one boiling from thoſe of another?—In general they are pretty much alike.

There are a good many refiners of ſpermaceti I believe?——But very few.

Court. But ſuppoſing a number of candles were delivered to you, taken from different lumps of different boilings, would they be of one colour or of different colours?——I ſhould imagine they would be of different colours.

JOHN HEATH ſworn.

I brought the ſpermaceti from Weaver to my maſter.

THOMAS PIPER ſworn.—

I am a tallow-chandler; I work for the proſecutor; laſt Wedneſday was a week we refined ſome ſpermaceti; in the evening we took it out of the copper and put it into pans to cool; on the Thurſday morning we took one of the cakes out, and carried it forwards into the ſhop, he thought it was not cold enough; he let it ſtand till the Friday morning, then he carried the reſt there; on the Friday they were all in the ſhop; on the Tueſday morning my maſter called me, and aſked me how many pans we had filled; I told him twelve; I counted them and there were but eleven.

Court. Do you know who took it?—No.

How long have you been practiſed in refining ſpermaceti?—About three months.

Is there any difference between the ſeveral pots of ſpermaceti that are refined in the ſame boiling?——No.

In what reſpect do they reſemble each other?——In colour.

In what elſe?——In ſhape generally, but the colour is the object.

How can you ſafely ſwear whether this is the ſame?——To the beſt of my judgment it is.

Mr. Garrow. You cannot poſitively ſwear that that is one of your maſter's?—I ſwear to the beſt of my knowledge.

In what does it differ?——They that underſtand it could tell.

Do you underſtand it?——I underſtand it ſo far as that.

Then tell me?——Becauſe it is not brought off ſometimes properly, and it will not be ſo fair.

Is that well brought off?——Yes, I look upon it to be a very good piece of ſperm.

Would not another good piece of ſperm be like it?——I cannot tell, this ſeemingly reſembles that boil; but there are ſo few of the trade that there are none I believe that uſe pans.

Aye, I thought you had learned that.—If they came to be clapped together you might ſee ſome difference.

Have you compared that with the ſpermaceti?——No.

Not with the other eleven pots?—Yes, by a pattern taken off of the piece.

Did you compare it?——No.

You judge of it then by its being a round thing?——If you was to take the cake there, you would think it was the ſame boil.

You know as little about it as I do?—Oh, I think I know a little more too.

In what can you ſay either that it reſembles your maſter's, or differs from the manufacture of another man?——I ſwear to the beſt of my knowledge; but as to the differing from any other it is impoſſible to tell, unleſs you was to clap them together.

And you have not clapped them together, therefore you cannot tell; now if any body elſe had made one in a round pan, the ſhape of that would have been like it?——It might.

Do you think that that piece would go into any other of the pans than that which it was taken out of?—Very likely it might.

But very likely it might not; do you think it would?—I really believe it might.

Your maſter did not know how many he had poured out it ſeems!——I dare ſay he did.

You know he aſked you?——That was to hear what I had to ſay.

You are lately turned refiner too?——That is no odds to any body.

Did not your maſter take up this trade becauſe he was indicted for a nuiſance?—

Court. That is nothing to the purpoſe.

Priſoner. I leave my defence to my council.

FOR THE PRISONER.

BENJAMIN NORDEN ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know the priſoner?——Yes.

What is he?——He ſells candles, ſoap, and butter, a ſort of chandler; and he has ſerved me for eighteen or nineteen months. I keep a ſhop; I ſettle my accounts with him every week; I was there laſt Monday about nine in the morning; he was weighing out ſome candles for me; in the mean time, a man came in, and brought in a baſket, ſomething I did not know what it was; I thought it was wax; I cannot ſwear it was this, but it was juſt the ſame as this.

Do you believe it was that?——I believe it was that. A man came in, and put a baſket down, and aſked Mr. Scott whether he wanted to buy it; I did not underſtand whether it was ſpermaceti or wax; he aſked him a price however: he called the girl out to attend me, and the girl came out and weighed up ſome candles for me; I heard him aſking a price; I believe he ſaid two ſhillings or two ſhillings and two-pence, but I cannot tell rightly; and he told Mr. Scott that he would take it out half in candles; and the priſoner told him he would give him two ſhillings a pound if he had a mind to take it all out in candles: at laſt they agreed, and he looked out and told him the ſizes, and I ſaw ſome money paſs from Mr. Scott to the man, ſome ſhillings, four, five, or ſix.

Did the man leave what he brought in his baſket?—Yes, I believe it to be this; he put it upon a baſket behind the counter upon a ſhelf.

Was this a ſecret or open tranſaction in the ſhop?—It was upon the counter, open; ſeveral people came in beſides; the ſervant was there.

Court. What are you?—I keep a ſhop.

Whereabouts?—In Petticoat Lane.

How long have you kept it?—About eighteen or nineteen months.

Have you been in your ſhop all that time?——Yes, I have been out of my houſe in the country for a few days.

Have you lived no where elſe in town? ——No, Sir.

Are you clear in that? Have you laid no where elſe? ——No, Sir, not when I was in town.

You are ſure of that now?—Yes.

How long have you been acquainted with the priſoner?——Only as long as I kept ſhop; I was recommended to him, and he ſells candles reaſonable.

Was there any other perſon beſides you that overheard this converſation, and ſaw this man bring in this?——No they did not ſtop; I was obliged to ſtop becauſe I had an account to ſettle.

What was he to give a pound?—I cannot recollect whether it was two ſhillings or two ſhillings and two-pence.

When you came into the ſhop who were in the ſhop?——There was nobody there; Scott was there ſerving me with ſome candles.

Was any of the priſoner's family there? —His wife was in doors.

Was his ſervant there?—She was in the room till he called her out.

When the priſoner firſt called her, was this ſtrange man in the ſhop or no?—Yes.

Do you recollect how that ſtranger was dreſſed?——Yes, he had a dark brown or black coat and waiſtcoat, I cannot tell which; I believe he had his own hair.

Was you dreſſed as you are now, or how otherwiſe?——I had a brown great coat, a white coat, and a wax leather round hat.

What hat had the ſtrange man?——I do not know.

When the ſervant came in, where was her maſter ſtanding?—Behind the counter.

Was he ſtanding to the right or left?—He was near to the ſtreet, near the ſcales.

Where was you ſtanding?——Juſt by the counter, a little higher up towards the room.

How far in this converſation about the bargain had they gone when the maid ſervant came in?—So ſoon as the man came in and put the baſket down he called the maid directly.

Did you ſee the cake weighed?——I ſaw it put in the ſcale after, I believe, they had made the bargain.

How long did the ſtranger ſtay in the ſhop?——Very near half an hour to the beſt of my knowledge.

Did the maid ſtay all the time?——Yes, ſhe ſtaid to weigh out the candles into pounds, all ſorts of candles.

Do you recollect how ſhe was dreſſed then?—I really cannot tell rightly.

Had ſhe a hat or no?——No, ſhe had not to the beſt of my knowledge.

How long did you ſtay in the ſhop?—— I was there at eight, and ſtaid near half an hour.

Which went out firſt, you or the ſtranger?——The ſtranger went out firſt.

Court to Abraham Weaver. How much a pound was you to give for this?——Two and twenty pence.

Is the price of ſpermaceti reduced lately? ——I did not know the price, and therefore I went to two or three people.

Court to Proſecutor. What is ſpermaceti a pound now?——About two ſhillings and five-pence a pound; I would not take two ſhillings and five-pence for what I have at home.

Mr. Garrow. Is not the price conſiderable reduced in conſequence of the peace? ——Yes.

ANN SIMCOCK ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Garrow.

Was you ſervant to the priſoner?—Yes.

Do you know a Mr. Norden?—Yes.

Had he dealings with your maſter at all for ſome time?—I have lived with the priſoner eight or nine months.

Have you frequently ſeen Norden there? ——I ſaw him laſt Monday morning about nine; he came in and aſked for ſome candles, and ſome other buſineſs he ſaid he was about beſides; my maſter was ſerving the candles, and this man came in with the ſpermaceti, and he left off ſerving the candles himſelf, and called me to ſerve them; I ſaw what was in the baſket, it was a cake of ſpermaceti; it was as nigh as I can recollect ſuch a one as this. The man aſked my maſter, the price of the candles, he sold him ſeven ſhillings a dozen; there came other cuſtomers in, and I kept ſerving them, ſo that what the price of the ſpermaceti was to be I did not hear.

Did you hear them treating for the ſale of it?——I did not underſtand what the words were, they were talking together, but I did not underſtand what they ſaid, nor hear what price he was to have; he took away ſome candles, my maſter ſerved him, I did not aſſiſt in ſerving him; I did not continue in the ſhop all the time the man was there, I was in the kitchen two or three times.

Did you ſee Mr. Norden there after the ſtranger was gone?——Yes.

How long did he ſtay afterwards?——About half an hour.

How long was the ſtranger in the ſhop?——I count he might be half an hour, or longer, I was not there all the time he was.

What became of the ſpermaceti that he left?——When he was gone, the ſpermaceti lay on a large baſket in the ſhop; it lay there from Monday till Wedneſday, I had no directions about concealing it, it lay openly in the ſhop as the reſt of his goods; a great many people came in and out.

Court. How was this ſtranger dreſſed?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was black.

Did you ſee Norden come into the ſhop?——No, I did not ſee him come in.

How was Norden dreſſed?——I cannot properly ſay.

Had he a great coat or no great coat?——To the beſt of my knowledge he had no great coat, but I did not take notice.

What coloured cloaths had he on?——I cannot properly ſay, I did not take notice.

When you was called into the ſhop where was he?——He was ſtanding by the counter.

Which part?—About the middle, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Where was your maſter ſtanding?—He was behind it.

Was he near the ſtreet, or near the parlour door, or what other door?——He was almoſt in the middle of the ſhop.

Then it was fronting the ſtreet, was not it?——Yes, it was.

Do you remember that there were two pair of ſcales hanging up in the ſhop?——Yes.

Were Norden or your maſter ſtanding near the ſcales?——I did not ſee either of them ſtanding near the ſcales.

Which went out of the ſhop firſt, Norden or the ſtranger?——The ſtranger.

Who weighed out the candles to the ſtranger?—My maſter, to the beſt of my knowledge.

Are you ſure of that?——No, Sir, I am not properly ſure of it, but to the beſt of my knowledge; I was ſerving other cuſtomers.

Then you did not help at all to weigh out the candles to the ſtranger?—Not at all to the ſtranger.

Did you hear any bargain made by the ſtranger and your maſter?—No, Sir, I did not.

How long had you lived with your maſter?—Eight or nine months, I cannot poſitively ſay which.

Did you ever know your maſter buy any ſpermaceti before?——No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was taken up only late on Thurſday evening, and this being Saturday, is ſuch a buſy day with trades people that I could not get any body to appear for my character.

Court. Let Norden and the girl go out of Court: I want to aſk a queſtion of Weaver.

You ſay that the priſoner came to you laſt Monday about ten?—I thought it was Monday, but on a ſecond thought I believe it was Tueſday.

When was it then that you went and cut off a part of it?—On the ſame day in the afternoon.

Court to Soames. When was it that you met Weaver?—Monday or Tueſday I am ſure.

Cannot you tell which ?——It was Monday.

Are you ſure of that ?——Yes, I am ſure I went to the play on Tueſday, to the beſt of my knowledge I think it was Monday, I went to the Theatre on Tueſday and I am ſure it was not Tueſday, I ſtaid at home all the afternoon, and we drank tea remarkably ſoon, and went there remarkably ſoon.

Weaver. It was ten o'clock on Monday or Tueſday, but I rather ſuppoſe it was Tueſday.

(Norden called in.) What time of the day did you ſay this was ?———It was in the morning about nine o'clock.

Court to the Maid. What time of the day was it that the ſtranger came in ?——About nine in the morning.

Court to Norden. Did you ſee how much money the priſoner gave this ſtranger ?——I cannot tell rightly.

How much was it ?——Five or ſix ſhillings; there was no gold; it was thrown down on the counter.

What ſort of a baſket had he ?———A ſquare baſket.

What might it contain ?——It would hold four or five dozen of candles at the leaſt.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the firſt queſtion is, whether this piece of ſpermaceti is properly identified, in order to prove that it is the ſame, two witneſſes have been called, the proſecutor and his ſervant, and they tell you they can ſwear poſitively to the ſpermaceti; but it is incumbent they ſhould give you ſuch reaſons that ſhould induce you to believe they do not ſwear raſhly; they are called upon to aſſign their reaſons for ſwearing to it: and they are firſt generally, that the ſpermaceti loſt was of the form and faſhion; that is not ſufficient of itſelf: the next circumſtance is this, that all the ſpermaceti of one boiling has a particular caſt and colour, and that they can ſafely ſwear to it, and that it is always diſtinguiſhable from any other boiling: the proſecutor ſays he can alſo diſtinguiſh it, and there are but three other ſpermaceti refiners, and that they do not caſt in round pans as he does, but however it is poſſible they may: the learned Council for the priſoner has very much inſiſted that it is not ſufficiently identified, but you muſt obſerve that in trades and occupations there are certain things that induce men by habit, and otherwiſe, to diſtinguiſh one thing from another, when it is not in their power to produce the minute mark of diſcrimination; and I will tell you what I have found on the circuits, that a ſhepherd ſhall know the face of every ſheep, perhaps if there are a thouſand, and he can ſwear to every ſheep though he cannot point out to you or me the reaſon why. If you think the witneſſes are fully juſtified in ſwearing as they have done, from the colour of it, and comparing it by the ſamples to be the ſame boiling, then the identity will be proved to your ſatiſfaction. The next matter for your conſideration is this, you ſee this was in the cuſtody and poſſeſſion of the proſecutor on Friday laſt, on Monday I think or Tueſday it was found miſſing, on Monday it is in the poſſeſſion of the priſoner, ſo that very little time elapſes indeed from the time that it was loſt to its being found in his poſſeſſion; yet if the priſoner could by facts or circumſtances give a reaſonable account how he came by it; if this had been a commodity in which he uſed to deal, that would have been a ſufficient reaſon; but the ſervant declares ſhe never knew he dealt in it; and Weaver was ſo much a ſtranger in it he did not know the price; the priſoner has called two witneſſes to prove that a perſon ſold it him, if you believe them it is a good defence; but you muſt weigh their evidence and compare the circumſtances and the teſtimony of the one witneſs to the other, and conſider what degree of credit they have; the firſt witneſs tells you that two ſhillings and two-pence was aſked and two ſhillings was given for it: What does this man do? He goes immediately, without complaining of any loſs, and ſells it for two and twenty pence; ſome money was paid, the reſt was in candles; ſome candles were weighed, and there muſt be one hundred and fifty pounds weight of candles, and theſe are put into a baſket that will hold five or ſix dozen of candles; therefore you will conſider what degree of credit this defence is entitled to. I examined the witneſſes ſeparate as to a great variety of minute circumſtances, they did differ in ſome things, but not ſo much I think as to impeach their credit by any great variance: certain it is that when two witneſſes relate a tranſaction that has paſſed even a few days before, they may, partly from the infirmity of human recollection, and partly from inattention at the time, vary in ſmall circumſtances. Norden ſaid the maid aſſiſted, the maid ſays ſhe did not; that might be a miſtake in Norden, but the main leading features are, his ſelling this for twenty-two pence a pound, for which he gave two ſhillings; and the other is, his putting into this baſket, which would only hold five or ſix dozen of candles, one hundred and fifty pounds weight of candles: if you think it is doubtful whether this is the ſame ſpermaceti, and that theſe witneſſes have ſworn truly, then in God's name you will acquit the priſoner: however there is no evidence of this being ſtolen in the dwelling houſe, therefore you will acquit him of that, whatever your opinion may be as to the other part of the charge.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

217. GEORGE BLACKHALL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th of January laſt, two pair of leather boots, value 20s. the property of William Groves, privily in his ſhop.

I am a ſhoemaker, in Watling-ſtreet; laſt Saturday week, between five and ſix I was ſitting in a room behind the ſhop at tea, my wife obſerved the door go, I turned and ſaw nobody, but on looking again I ſaw the ſhadow of a perſon, I inſtantly got up, and as I was going into the ſhop, the priſoner was going out of it with the boots under his arm, or in his left hand; I ſaw the tops of them; I followed him; he turned down Queen-ſtreet, which is about fourteen doors from mine, he dropped the boots; I ſtill kept in purſuit of him, and he was taken up.

Court. Did you ever loſe ſight of him?—Never till he turned the corner to go into a court.

Are you ſure it is the ſame man?—I am ſure it is the ſame man; I have no doubt at all.

Mr. Scott Council for the Priſoner. The room you was in is behind your ſhop?——Yes; there is a partition that parts my ſhop.

Whereabout was you ſitting?—By the fire ſide.

You was not the perſon that firſt of all ſaw this man that you have been ſpeaking of?—I was the firſt perſon.

I underſtood you, your wife told you ſomebody was in the ſhop?—Yes, ſhe was ſure there was ſomebody in the ſhop; ſhe heard him; ſhe did not ſee him.

You have repreſented this perſon that you ſaw as a ſhadow; you ſay you ſaw the ſhadow of a man?—I ſaw the ſhadow of him.

Of courſe you could not ſee the body, nothing more than the ſhadow?—I ſaw his back, I did not ſee his face, I never loſt ſight of him all the time I purſued him.

Is it from the man's back that you now ſwear to the identity of his perſon?—I am poſitive he is the ſame man.

What do you ſwear to ſo poſitively?—To the height and the colour of his coat.

From no other circumſtance?——And from not loſing ſight of him; but I have a perſon here that ſaw him drop the boots.

You was not the perſon that took him?—No, I was not.

Now how far might this thief, whoſoever he was, have the ſtart of you, when you firſt of all came out of your ſhop?——I believe about eight or nine yaads.

It was quite dark I believe?——No, it was not; of a Saturday night the ſhops are light; there was a ſtrong reflection from the lights of the ſhops, next door to me there is a fiſh-monger's ſhop where there is a ſtrong light; I ſaw him go by there.

Did you run mute?——At firſt I ran mute, with intention to catch him myſelf, but I found he gained ground of me, and in Queen-ſtreet I hallooed out Stop thief! he dropped the boots in a minute or two; I had the man in my eye till he turned the corner of Red-lion-court.

Laſt Saturday was week, in the evening, I was going to my maſter's in Queen-ſtreet, and Mr. Groves called out ſtop thief, and I ſaw two pair of boots lay, and I picked them up; I did not purſue the priſoner.

You did not ſee who dropped them?—No, a publick houſe boy ſaid, he knew who they belonged to.

Court. Is that boy here?—No, I took them to Mr. Groves's houſe.

JOHN PAIN ſworn.

Laſt Saturday was a week, in the evening, I was coming up Queen-ſtreet; I heard a man cry Stop thief! and I ſaw a man running and ſeized him by the collar, he wrenched himſelf from me; he ran up Saint Thomas the Apoſtle, acroſs Bow-lane into Baſing-lane; he ran into Red-lion-court, to that part where there is no thoroughfare; there were ſeveral people running, and finding he could not get out he turned round and unbuttoned his coat, and ſaid, what can you find upon me? I never loſt ſight of him from the firſt.

Court. When you firſt ſaw him had he any thing in his hand?—Nothing; juſt as I caught hold of him there was a perſon running after him which was ſome little diſtance behind him.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you obſerve this man lay hold of the priſoner's coat?—No, my Lord; I believe he laid hold of him at the time I called to ſome people in the ſtreet, and ſaid, my friends take hold of the things, and I ſuppoſe he took hold of him whilſt I turned round.

Court to Pain. Was you the next to the priſoner?—Yes.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you ſee this man next to the priſoner?—This was the man that delivered him to me.

Court to Pain. You were next to the priſoner when he turned into the court?—Yes.

Was there any body running before him when he turned into the court?—He was the only perſon before me; the proſecutor was near behind.

Court to Proſecutor. Are you ſure the perſon you ſaw running into the court foremoſt, was the ſame man that you ſaw drop the boots?—Yes, I am ſure of it, I never loſt ſight of him till the moment he turned up the court.

Mr. Scott. Did you ſee the priſoner drop any thing?——No, I did not.

If he had dropped any thing do not you conceive that you muſt have ſeen him?—If he had been near enough to me I might.

WILLIAM BLACKMORE ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner; I produce the boots which were given me by Mr. Groves.

Court to Proſecutor. Are theſe the ſame boots that you received from that man?—They are the ſame boots that my wife received.

When did you firſt ſee them?——I ſaw them when they came by the door, and my wife ſaid he had taken them; I had only theſe two pair in the ſhop, and they hung upon two nails, and they were gone, and theſe were the identical boots, dirty, and they are my boots.

(The boots produced by Blackmore.)

Who had them on Wedneſday?

Groves. I kept them till the Wedneſday, I know them by the cut and by the workmanſhip.

Mr. Scott. You repreſent them as being all over dirt?—They were dirty but they have been rubbed off in the bag, here is ſome dirt in the bag.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Laſt Saturday was a week, I was going for ſome money, for Mr. Hancock that I live with, into Holborn, and I was coming back by this gentleman's place and there was a cry of ſtop thief, and many people were running, and I was running the ſame as another and that man laid hold of me, and they ſearched me and I had nothing about me, and they ſaid I had ſtole the boots, and when we came to Guildhall we had a hearing, and he could not ſwear I was the ſame perſon, and one of the gentlemen that ſat there was going to acquit me, for they could not ſay any thing at all againſt me there.

Court. How came you to run ſo faſt?—There were a matter of thirty people a running then; I ran like the reſt.

The Priſoner called ſix Witneſſes who all gave him a good character, and his maſter offered to take him again directly if he was at liberty.

Guilty

Of ſtealing, but not privily.

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice HEATH.

218. RICHARD BRYAN was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Porter, at the hour of three in the night, on the 13th of January, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one pair of linen ſheets, value 20s. one linen gown, value 10s. one linen petticoat, value 8s. one linen table cloth, value 3s. one ſilk huſwife, value 4d. a glaſs quart bottle, value 3d and a pint of brandy, value 12d. his property.

The Witneſſes examined apart by the deſire of the Priſoner.

THOMAS PORTER ſworn.

The priſoner uſed to come to our houſe every evening for four or five weeks; I keep a publick houſe, the Boar's head, in Crown-ſtreet, St. Ann's, in the morning about four o'clock on Thurſday laſt, the watchman rung at my door, and I came down and found the back door open.

Who had been up the laſt in the houſe?—My wife, ſhe went to bed about a quarter paſt twelve.

Did the back door appear to have been forced open?——There was no mark of violence upon the door; I went into the kitchen and I found the pin of the window was forced open in the kitchen, and the window was open and one quarry of glaſs was broke, ſo that a man might put his hand in to undo the window, and the window was undone, ſo that a man could come in; the next thing I went into the bar, and found the till of the bar almoſt down, the next thing was a ſmall tub that was under the bar, that was broke open, I went and told my wife and ſhe came down ſtairs; I miſſed nothing till ſhe came down, and ſhe miſſed the things; none of the things were ever found again, but the huſwife which was found upon the priſoner when he was examined at the Juſtice's; the watchman gave deſcriptions of the priſoner, that he was at the door at half paſt twelve o'clock, that was the reaſon he was taken up.

When was the priſoner taken up?—On Thurſday night; on that ſame evening I was going out with a pot of beer about ſix in the evening, and I met him, the priſoner, at the corner of Crompton-ſtreet, and I aſked him to go in and drink, he came into the tap-room; then I left him in charge while I ſent for a conſtable, I ſaw him ſearched, and ſaw the huſwife found upon him; it was my wife's.

Mr. Peat Council for the Priſoner. Has this ſtreet any other name than what you named it juſt now?——Some people call it Hog-lane.

What kind of a houſe is yours; what do you generally deal in?—Beer and ſpirits.

You ſit up very late ſometimes, do not you?——Never after twelve.

You are an Iriſhman, are not you?——No.

Had not you a kind of wake for Iriſhmen this night?—No, we have very few Iriſhmen that uſe our houſe.

Had not you ſomething of a wake?——No.

Had not you much company?—No.

Have not you women frequent your houſe?——No.

Had not you fiddles, and dancing, and ſuch things going on in your houſe?—Not as I know of; I never ſaw any dancing; I was in bed.

Is not it uſual for women and men of a certain deſcription to have dancing at your houſe?——No, Sir.

No women come there and ſtay till one, two, three, and four o'clock in the morning?——No.

How came you to be called down?—I came down at four o'clock which is the time I get up always.

Had the priſoner been at your houſe the preceeding evening?—Yes.

Was there a Mrs. Adair with him?——I do not know that there was.

Do you know ſuch a woman?—I cannot recollect that there was.

Was he in your houſe in the courſe of the evening?——Yes.

Was he drunk or ſober?—He had been drinking.

Mrs. Adair frequents your houſe?—Not as I know of.

——— PORTER ſworn.

I am wife to the laſt witneſs; I was the laſt up, it was on Tueſday night that the houſe was broke open, on Wedneſday morning rather.

What time did you go to bed?—A quarter paſt twelve o'clock.

Did you leave the back door and the kitchen window faſt?——Yes, I left all the doors and the windows faſt; I faſtened them myſelf.

After your huſband called you up, tell me what things you miſſed?——I miſſed a pair of ſheets, a gown and coat, a table cloth, a brandy bottle out of the bar, a huſwife; the ſheets and table cloth were under the window that was broke open; that young man, the priſoner, was in our houſe, in our cellar, the Tueſday night about twelve o'clock.

Mr. Peate. Was not your houſe very full of company this evening?——No, it was not, there was very few people.

Do not you remember a lady of the name of Adair?—She came into the paſſage.

Did not you ſee her give the priſoner a huſwife or any thing?—No, I did not.

Was he drunk?—No, he left our houſe a quarter paſt twelve; I put him out of the houſe; he preſſed me very much to let him ſleep.

Did Mrs. Adair adviſe him to ſleep in your houſe?——Not in my hearing.

MARGARET CONNER ſworn.

I am a ſervant maid to the proſecutor; I know the priſoner by his uſing the houſe; I remember the night that the houſe was broke open; I ſaw him in the houſe that night; I was going down ſtairs for a pint of beer, and he was coming up out of the cellar; I aſked him what buſineſs he had there, and he ſaid he was coming down after me; he wanted the key of my room to go up ſtairs, and he was very loth to go out, that was about twelve, or a little after.

Mr. Peate. What time did you go to bed?——A little after twelve.

Was there a good deal of company in the houſe that night?—Yes, there was a good deal in the courſe of the evening, but they were gone before twelve.

Rather noiſy?——Not very noiſy; nobody in the houſe but him at twelve; I heard nobody adviſe him to go to bed.

Was you before the Juſtice?——Yes.

What did you ſay there on this buſineſs?——I ſaid that how the young man aſked me if he could have half my bed; I told him he might; I did not tell him to come.

Did you ſay any thing about his being in the cellar at the Juſtice's?—No, I do not think I did; he ſaid he could not go home becauſe the young woman was out, and had gone to her ſiſters.

Did you give him any bauble that you have to play with?—No, Sir.

Court to Mrs. Porter. How do you know the huſwife was in the box that night?—It was, it is very remarkable, it has ſome writing in it, Greek, or Latin, or ſomething that I do not underſtand; I had it given me, and I value it; I am ſure it was in the box that night, the box was locked, and the back part of it broke open.

You did not hear the girl down that night after ſhe went up to bed?—No, I did not.

Mr. Peat. Did your hear your huſband at any time ſpeak about a reward that he expected for this proſecution, if he ſucceeded, or any thing of that kind; recollect yourſelf?—I never heard any thing of that ſort.

——— SLADE ſworn.

I am the watchman; I was crying half after twelve, and going by, the priſoner was ſtanding at the proſecutor's door, without buckles and his ſhoes ſlipſhod; he was knocking at the door of the proſecutor's houſe; he ſaid he had got a pint of beer within doors a warming, and the maid had got his buckles out of his ſhoes, this he told me; he aſked me if I would have any of the beer; I told him I would not go in? he knocked again, then it was almoſt one; God damn me, ſays he, never mind, I know the way backwards, away he ran; I picked up a piece of parchment, he read it, and he ran away with it.

Mr. Peat. How long have you watched in that neighbourhood?——Only three nights.

What kind of company reſort to that houſe?——I cannot ſay.

Did you ever hear any noiſe?—I never did.

Did this landlord obſerve to you that he expected a reward, or any thing of that ſort?——No.

Do you expect any?—I expect nothing but to be paid for my trouble.

Did you ever ſay to the landlord, or any other perſon, that you expected a compenſation for convicting this man?—No.

——— DIVINE ſworn.

On Wedneſday evening, between five and ſix, one James Davis came to the Rotation Office and aſked for Hatton the conſtable, they had taken a man that was ſuſpected to have broken a houſe open; we took him into cuſtody, and in ſearching him I found a huſwife, which is here, it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; I found it in his breeches, my Lord, between his legs, and he ſtrove to hide it in the tail of his ſhirt as well as he could, and I got it out of his hand; he ſaid it was a thing he picked up in the ſtreet; and the proſecutor was preſent, and he ſaid he believed his wife had ſuch a thing, but he was not ſure whether it was that or not. The priſoner ſaid he found it in the ſtreet at firſt, afterwards he ſaid he picked it up in the public-houſe paſſage, in the ſame houſe that was broke open.

The huſwife depoſed to.

Court to Mrs. Porter. How long has the maid lived with you?——Between two or three months, which is the time we kept that houſe.

Did you obſerve any particular intimacy between her and the priſoner?—I did that evening, never before, they were talking together, I obſerved them with more freedom than what ought to be.

Did ſhe get up when the houſe was alarmed?—Not till I went and called her, ſhe was undreſſed and in bed.

Court to Proſecutor. Did the priſoner come with you willingly?—Very willingly.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I came there about half an hour after eleven, and when I found the door was ſhu and the watchman came up he would no come in, I waited a conſiderable time an he was going away, and I picked up a piec of parchment, I thought it would be o ſome conſequence, becauſe I ſaw a blue ſeal when I met Porter, I was coming up t

Porter's; my ſkull is fractured; Porter told me to come in, and he took me; I went peaceably with them; I put the huſwife in my breeches pocket, and my pocket was broke.

Court to Conſtable. Did you ſearch him thoroughly?—I did.

Was his breeches pocket broke?—No.

Court to Slade. Did you obſerve whether the priſoner was ſober or in liquor?—I do not think he was right ſolid ſober.

MARY ADAIR ſworn.

I live in Phœnix-ſtreet.

Have you ever ſeen the priſoner in liquor?—Yes.

What has been his behaviour at that time?——Very bad.

Did he ſeem different from other drunken men?—Yes, flighty, he appeared to us more like a madman than any thing elſe.

He refuſed to go home when you adviſed him that evening?—He was very much in liquor that night; I never heard any thing againſt his character, the perſon he lived with before is in the Court.

The priſoner called three other witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

219. JOHN QUICK was indicted for that he, on the 29th of November laſt, having in his cuſtody and poſſeſſion a certain bill of Exchange, commonly called an inland bill of Exchange, ſigned and ſubſcribed with the name of John Quick, dated London, 29th, of November, 1783, directed to Mr. William Boyce, No. 23, in Swallow-ſtreet, requiring him to pay to the order of the ſaid John Quick 10l. value received; he, the ſaid John Quick, afterwards, to wit, on the ſame day and place, falſely and feloniouſly did make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſely made, forged, and counterfeited, and willingly act and aſſiſt in the falſe making, forging, and counterfeiting, a certain acceptance of the ſaid bill of Exchange, purporting to have been written by the ſaid William Boyce, with intention to defraud John Martin.

A ſecond Count, for uttering the ſame.

WILLIAM BOYCE ſworn.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. Before you give your evidence Mr. Boyce, I muſt aſk you a queſtion. You are intereſted?—I have been called on reſpecting this bill, it was brought to me for payment; I come to prove that I have no connection or concern whatever with the bill.

Court. We cannot examine you to that fact.

Mr. Sylveſter. Why the priſoner and you were partners.

Court. You are an intereſted witneſs; this bill of exchange, this promiſſory note for 10l. is ſubſcribed with a name which purports to be your name, if the ſubſcription upon it is a true one, you are liable to pay the ten pounds.

JOHN MARTIN ſworn.

I know nothing more than I took this note, and gave change for it; but not on the ſtrength of the acceptor, for if Mr. Quick had preſented his own note to me, I ſhould have taken it; I paid it to Mr. Downs.

Mr. Sylveſter. You had a better opinion of the priſoner than you had of Boyce?—Upon my word I had.

So have moſt people I believe.—I believe they have; I paid it to Mr. Downs; that is the ſame bill.

——— DOWNS ſworn.

Have you the bill in queſtion?—Yes, I received it from Mr. Martin; I believe it to be the ſame bill by the mark in the corner, which is my uſual mark; it has been in the hands of Mr. Child; I do believe that to be my mark, this is the bill I received from Mr. Martin, I ſaw Mr. Martin indorſe it.

Was this bill paid?—Never.

Did the acceptor William Boyce refuſe to pay it?——I know nothing of that, it was carried by a Banker's clerk in the city, he returned it to Mr. Child, they are not here.

Do you know William Boyce?—I only know Martin.

Court to Martin. Do you know the hand writing?—I only ſaw him write, but never looked over his writing, ſo that I do not know any thing of his hand writing.

Court to Boyce. Have you any more witneſſes than theſe beſides yourſelf?—No.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, I have a dozen witneſſes to prove that this is Boyce's hand writing.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Recorder.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, I humbly move your Lordſhip to grant Mr. Quick a copy of this indictment.

Court to Martin. Who are the priſoner and proſecutor?—I am a taylor; I have known the priſoner for ſome years; I underſtood they were partners together in the lottery buſineſs.

Court. I think the Court ought not to interpoſe in this buſineſs, but leave you to take the uſual remedy; and my reaſon is this, that the ground before the Court for the acquittal of the priſoner, is not the falſity but the incompetency of the witneſſes; now we can never preſume, that what a witneſs would ſay who is rejected for total incompetency, would not have put the priſoner upon his defence; if Boyce had been examined as a competent witneſs, and you could then have found a want of evidence, I ſhould not have heſitated: but however, the Court is not limited as to the time when they may grant a copy of an indictment.

220. SARAH WILLIAMS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 30th of November laſt, three woollen blankets, value 6s. one rugg, value 2s. two pillows, value 4s. a bolſter, value 4s. one pair of linen ſheets, value 5s. the property of Charles Ward, in a lodging room let to the ſaid Sarah.

The priſoner lodged at my houſe a fortnight and three days; ſhe left my lodging the 30th of November without warning; ſhe came down on the Sunday and ſaid ſhe had a violent pain in her ſide; ſhe would go and be blooded; my wife lent her a grogram cloak, and ſhe went out and never came home any more, ſhe locked the room that day, and took the key with her, the room was broke open three days after.

What things were miſſing?——Three blankets, a pair of ſheets, a bolſter, two pillows, and a coverlid; they were there when ſhe was there; I know no more.

When was the priſoner taken?—Sometime about the middle of December; a pair of pillows were found again at a pawnbroker's in High Holborn; his name is George Angel.

MARY WARD ſworn.

I had not ſeen the things there from the time I made the bed for her to go in, till the door was broke open, I am ſure they were there when ſhe came to the lodgings, becauſe I laid them on myſelf; I took her myſelf in Cheapſide about the Monday ſe'nnight before Chriſtmas day; I met her accidentally; I ſaid to her, Sally; yes, ſays ſhe it is me; ſays I, how came you to uſe us in this manner; to take away the bedclothes; ſays ſhe, come along with me I will tell you all about it; ſhe took me down Bread-ſtreet, and as it was the duſk of the evening, I did not like to go down with her; I ſaid, here is a publick houſe, let us go in and have ſomething to drink; I handed her in there; ſhe was very unwilling; then I ſent for a conſtable, but I could get nothing at all out of her that night.

Priſoner. When ſhe met me, ſhe told me with many bitter wiſhes, ſhe would not hurt a hair of my head if I would tell her where the things were; there were but two blankets on the bed, and ſhe ſaid it was a ſad miſtake of hers.

GEORGE ANGEL ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker; the priſoner came to my houſe and aſked me to buy ſome goods, about ſix weeks ago, on a Monday morning; I aſked her what goods, ſhe ſaid ſome goods ſhe had put in pawn through diſtreſs; I aſked her whether they were her own property, ſhe ſaid, yes; I aſked her where they were, at what pawnbroker's; ſhe ſaid, in Drury-lane, and I went with her to the pawnbroker's, and we took them out of pawn; they were two pillows, five blankets, two tea-kettles, a patchwork counterpane, and rugg.

Any ſheets?———No; I bought theſe things of her; they were afterwards ſold, all but the pillows. (The pillows produced.) I delivered them to the conſtable.

Were thoſe pillows that you delivered to the conſtable, the ſame that you bought of the priſoner?———I cannot poſitively ſay, to the beſt of my knowledge they were.

Had you any other of the kind?——Yes.

Have you any reaſon to doubt of their being the ſame?——I have no reaſon to doubt it, but I cannot poſitively ſwear that they were the ſame, becauſe there were a great many of the ſame kind in my houſe, and they were mixed one among another, they appeared like the ſame to me, to the beſt of my knowlege, they are the ſame.

DAVID RANKIN ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I had theſe two pillows at Mr. Angel's, in St. Giles's. (The pillows depoſed to by the Proſecutor's wife.) There is a mark in them that I know to be mine, there is a particular tear in one, and the other I know by ſeveral rips that I have ſewed up, I will ſwear to the pillows, I could not ſwear to the blankets.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The broker ſaid at Guildhall that he never bought any things of me but four blankets, one counterpane, and two pillows; and the next day he took his oath, that he bought the pillows in a twenty ſhilling lot, but I never ſold him any ſuch thing, he bought trifling things of me twice.

A STUDENT.

My Lord, I am a Student, there was a queſtion propoſed by the priſoner, whether Mrs. Ward at the time ſhe apprehended her, did not tell her, ſhe would not hurt a hair of her head.

Mrs. Ward. I told her, ſays I, if I can get my property again by the permiſſion of the Alderman; I will not hurt a hair of your head, and the ſecond day ſhe confeſſed.

Priſoner. My friends have been here two or three days.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

221. ANN SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of January, two pewter quart pots, value 3s. the property of Thomas Fiſher.

THOMAS FISHER ſworn.

The priſoner came into my houſe about nine o'clock laſt Wedneſday night, and had a penny-worth of purl, and I had my houſe very full of company, and was very buſy, and ſhe took the opportunity, and went out of the tap room down the cellar ſtairs where the pots ſtood. I only prove the property.

RICHARD DAWES ſworn.

I lodge in the proſecutor's houſe; on Wedneſday evening laſt, I went out from the tap-room into the parlour, and I met a woman in the paſſage, ſhe had a cloak on, and I ſaw ſomething of a lump under her cloak, ſhe paſſed me and was going out of the houſe, I returned and ſtopped her, and ſhe had two quart pots, I ſaw her drop firſt one pot, and then the other, I am poſitive of it.

(The pots depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When I went out of the paſſage, I ſaid, I was very poorly; the two pots was in the paſſage, and the gentleman ſaid I had them, I had no pots upon me, no more than I have now.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

222. SARAH TAYLOR was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of January, one quart pewter pot, value 2s. and two pint pewter pots, value 2s. the property of Lucy Barrett.

LUCY BARRETT ſworn.

I keep a public houſe, on the 7th of this month a gentleman in Court came and aſked me what was come of his beer, for it was gone; the priſoner and three others were in the parlour, I went in and ſhut the door, I ſaid, I will ſearch you all round; the gentleman that loſt his beer ſaid, ſearch me firſt, I put my hand to his coat, he ſaid, now ſearch that woman, I did ſo, I found two pint pots in her pocket, and the pot that had the gentleman's beer in, concealed under where ſhe ſat: upon that I ſent for a conſtable.

JOHN BROWN ſworn.

I went to drink ſome beer and I miſſed the pot, I went to the tap-room, and aſked if they had taken my beer away, they ſaid, no, I recollected the priſoner came to my box when my back was towards her, ſhe was examined, ſhe had a pair of pockets that hung to her ancles, which I ſuppoſe would hold ſeven or eight pots each, and there was one pint pot in each of them and the quart pot was concealed under her.

(The pots depoſed to.)

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay in my own defence, I muſt leave it to the mercy of the Court.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and diſcharged.

223. WILLIAM NORGATE, WILLIAM CAREY alias CADEY were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 23d day of December laſt, ſeventy pounds weight of lead, value 5s. belonging to Nicholas Fleming, and John Sykes, and then affixed to a certain houſe of the ſaid Nicholas and John, againſt the ſtatute.

A Second Count, laying it to be the property of perſons unknown.

On the 13th of December, I received information of a ſack with ſome things gone into a houſe in Bell Lane; I ran down and called upon another officer, and went into the houſe, there were three ſitting by the fire, in a back room, Norgate, Cadey, and one Pearce, I told them my buſineſs, and the priſoner Cadey told me there was no ſuch thing, I looked about, and ſaw ſome lead lay in the floor, and Cadey ſaid a man had juſt brought it in, and threw it down and run away, I aſked Norgate and Pearce what they did there, and they ſaid, they came to ſee Cadey, and they were weavers; I took hold of the hands of Pearce and Norgate, and they were all mortar, I ſaid, you do not look like weavers, I have a notion you have ſtolen this lead; they ſaid, they had been up in a pigeon trap at the top of a houſe, and that made their hands ſo dirty: we took them into cuſtody; and on Monday before the Juſtice, Pearce turned evidence: I and another of our officers went up to the top of the houſe, where the lead was ſtolen from, and we brought a piece of lead away from the top of the houſe, to match with that which was ſtolen; it was taken off the gutter.

Mr. Scott, Priſoner's Council. Whereabouts was this lead laying in Cadey's houſe?—In the back room on the ground.

But that contained ſundry other things?—Yes.

Was this lead laying open?—Yes.

Did you examine the hands of Cadey? I did not, I had no ſuſpicion at that time that he had ſtolen it.

—— POWELL ſworn.

Mr. Fleming came to Mr. Burner's, where I work, and deſired ſomebody to go to the office to look at ſome lead which had been laid on the building.

Who did the building belong to?——I ſhould ſuppoſe to Fleming, he paid us, that was in the year 1782.

Has Mr. Fleming any partners?—I know nothing at all about him; I went to the place where they ſaid the lead was ſtolen from; this gutter was laid in two lengths; the upper length was gone, and the lower length remained, which correſponded, they had joined; it was cut ſtrait down and not indented.

Court. In laying the different lengths of a gutter, do not you lay the one over the other?—Yes.

Do you nail them down at the joining?—Not at the bottom but againſt the rafters, on the ſides where the lead turns up, and ſometimes at the drip.

You did not fit that piece to the place?—No.

Court. Are you clearly ſatisfied as a workman, that that lead was taken away from that place?—I have no reaſon to doubt it, yet at the ſame time I cannot ſwear it, there is a great deal of lead of that length; it was not a very uſual length.

Court. Is there any body here belonging to the houſe it was taken from?

Shakeſhaft. My Lord, I went to Mr. Sykes, one of the executors, and he told me he had had a great deal of trouble with the houſes, and would have no more.

Powell. I believe they were uninhabited houſes; I did not think to examine the nail houſe; I cannot ſwear with preciſion.

THOMAS PEARCE ſworn.

I am an accomplice in this buſineſs, and have been admitted an evidence; Norgate and I was at the Duke's Head, in Winford Street, drinking a pint or two of beer, and agreed to go to Carey's houſe to get ſome chiſſels to go to this houſe: Carey had no chiſſels to lend us, and Carey returned back with a bit of iron bar; then we went to the houſe, and got over a wall and went up two pair of ſtairs and broke through the cieling; I went to the top of the houſe and got the lead off, we brought it down into the yard, and went to Carey's houſe and told him; then Carey took up a bag, and went with us and put it in, and carried it back to his own houſe.

Court. Carey was not with you when you ripped it from the houſe?—No.

Was any body with you but Norgate?—No, it was ſeven weeks laſt Saturday, about ſix or ſeven in the evening, about half an hour before we were found.

Court to Shakeſhaft. Did you perceive how they got up?——Yes, they broke through the cieling.

Mr. Scott. My Lord, I ſubmit that the felony was compleat before Carey was employed, and therefore he is a receiver.

Court. I am of the ſame opinion, becauſe it is not laid generally, but as fixed to the dwelling houſe, and there is alſo no other circumſtance againſt him except as a receiver, but the evidence of the accomplice.

PRISONER NORGATE's DEFENCE.

I only went with Pearce to ſee another lad in the houſe.

The Priſoner called five witneſſes, who all gave him a very good character.

Court to Peance. What were you to have for this lead?—I believe ten ſhillings and four-pence.

Court to Powell. What was it worth?—It is worth at the rate of ſixteen ſhillings a hundred.

Court. Why then ten ſhillings and four-pence was as much as it was worth?—Yes.

WILLIAM CAREY, }
Alias CADEY, } NOT GUILTY.

WILLIAM NORGATE, GUILTY,

To be publickly whipped and diſcharged.

224. JOHN GIBBERT was indicted for that he, on the 9th of January laſt, one piece of counterfeit milled money and coin, to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of the good and legal and current coin of this realm, called a guinea, not being then cut in pieces, unlawfully and feloniouſly did put off to one Archibald Ruthwin for twelve pieces of current ſilver coin of this realm called ſhillings, and one other piece of current ſilver coin of this realm called a ſixpence, againſt the form of the ſtatute and againſt the King's ſtatute.

ARCHIBALD RUTHWIN ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Silveſter.

Did you go on the 9th of January to the Globe Tavern in Hatton Garden?—Yes.

Who did you meet there?—I met a man.

Is he here?—No.

How ſoon did you meet the priſoner himſelf?—In a quarter of an hour? the man ſaid he would ſtep out and ſee if his friend was come; he ſtepped out and introduced the priſoner at the bar to me; the priſoner ſat down by the ſide of me, and he ſays to his friend, is this your friend; then we began to diſcourſe; ſays he now I can depend upon you, I ſaid yes, then he pulled out a guinea to ſhew me, which is this; I praiſed it exceedingly, I turned it over and ſaid I never ſaw ſo good a one in my life, I ſaid it was ſo good I thought I could vend a great many of them; I aſked him the price, he told me it ſhould be thirteen ſhillings; ſays I twelve ſhillings and ſixpence will do I ſuppoſe; why, ſays he, if you take a quantity and are likely to be a better cuſtomer, I will not ſtand; accordingly I had the guinea in my hand, and I kept it in my poſſeſſion till he ſtept to the door to ſend for the reſt; when he came in, he ſaid have you any call for any whites; ſays I you may let me look at them; ſays I they are very good indeed, I think I can be a cuſtomer for ſome of them; ſays he they are nine and twenty for a guinea; he aſked me if I wanted any half bulls, that is half-crowns, then a gentleman came in and interrupted our diſcourſe; my friend ſaid, ſays he, you will be late out of town, ſays I, damn it, we never mind, we travel all hours, only give us a bottle; he then ſaid he could not get them that night, and juſt at that time Mr. Clarke came up, and took him into cuſtody.

The guinea and the ſhilling produced.

Mr. Chetwood Priſoner's Council. You never ſaw this priſoner before?—No, not to my knowledge.

Was any body in company with you?—The man that introduced me.

Where is he?—I do not know.

Is he a friend of the man's or of your's?—I do not know.

But you know that perſon?——I know him by ſight if I was to ſee him.

Do not you know him otherwiſe?—No, Sir.

Upon your oath, have not you ſeen him ſince?—Not to ſpeak to him.

Have not you ſeen him ſo as to ſpeak if you choſe it?—Not to have any connection with him.

Continuation of the Trial of John Gilbert.

He was at the Globe Tavern with you all the time?—He was.

You had no accounts to ſettle with this man?—No.

You ſay you had that that looked like a guinea from him?—Yes.

In the preſence of the other perſon?—Yes.

Are you employed by the mint?—No, Sir, I was employed by Mr. Clarke who is.

How long have you known the other perſon, who you ſay was a friend of the priſoner's?—I never ſaw him but once.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

I am employed for the mint, and have been for many years; I had information of the priſoner; I got a captain of our patrol to act as a deception, not to be known, I deſired him to act as a ſmuggler that he might not be known, and I gave him two twenty pounds notes, and deſired him to go to the Globe Tavern, and when the money was brought he was to ſend one of the notes to be changed, and when that note was ſent out to be changed I then knew that the money was there; I received a meſſage, that he was come they believed, and I took Gilbert in cuſtody and ſearched him, and I found ſeventeen ſhillings and I think ten or twelve ſixpences all counterfeits. (The guinea ſhewn him.) I ſuppoſe that is not worth above three-pence or a groat.

Mr. Sylveſter. Twelve ſhillings and ſix-pence is a pretty good price for it?—Yes, very good.

Is this what they call milled money?—Yes.

RICHARD FRANKLIN ſworn.

I am one of the moniers of the mint.

Was that coined at the Tower?—Certainly not, it is counterfeit.

The Priſoner called four Witneſſes to his character, ſome of whom had deals with him but never knew him attempt to put off any bad money to them.

225. HENRY GRAY was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Wright, at the hour of nine in the forenoon of the 26th of November laſt,

Elizabeth Wright and others of the family then being in the ſaid houſe, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein twenty guineas, value 21l. and twenty-three half guineas, value 12l. 1s. 6d. the monies of the ſaid William Wright.

I live in Fleet-ſtreet, the corner of Fleet Market; on the 26th of November, about nine in the morning I told out ſome money, there was a pile of twenty guineas and twenty-three half guineas, I went out about twenty-five minutes after nine o'clock, and returned in four or five minutes, and when I got back I found the window had been thrown up, and all my money gone but one half guinea.

BENJAMIN THOMAS ſworn.

I am a blackſmith; I know Mr. Wright's houſe; on the 26th of November, I was coming down Fleet Market, on the ſide leading to his houſe; I ſaw a man half way in the window, by the help of a ſledge that lays under the window, he ſtood upon that and he was about half way in the window under the ſaſh, I ſaw him draw himſelf out as I was coming down, I thought he was converſing with ſomebody, and he and another ran by me as hard as ever he could; I had no ſuſpicion of any robbery; I think the man had a caſt in his eye, I cannot ſay, as they went by me they had like to have thrown one another down.

Court. Should you know him again? —I think I ſhould, but I am not ſure; he had then dark, or rather black clothes on.

Court. Look round the Court and ſee if you ſee any body like him.——No, really to be upon my oath, another man may be of the ſame ſize.

Court. The next witneſs is an accomplice, but here is no ground to identify this.

NOT GUILTY.

COUNCIL FOR THE PROSECUTION,
Mr. GARROW.

COUNCIL FOR THE PRISONER,
Mr. SYLVESTER and Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. Garrow, of Council for the Proſecution, opened the Caſe as follows:

Gentlemen of the Jury,

You have collected from the appearance of the Gentleman at the bar, and the combination of ability and experience by which he is defended, that he is not one of thoſe petty offenders whoſe minute offences occupy much of your time in this place. The delinquency of Mr. Aikles is of a much greater extent, and wears a bolder aſpect. You have learnt, Gentlemen, from the indictment, what is the nature of the charge imputed to the priſoner; but it will be neceſſary for the better underſtanding the ſubject of this enquiry, that I ſhould ſtate to you what the ſituation of Mr. Aikles has been, and what his connection with the proſecutor. Mr. Aikles is one of thoſe virtuous and benevolent men, who have diſcovered the ſecret of acquiring large fortunes, and of ſupporting elegant houſes and ſuperb equipages by acts of the pureſt philanthropy, and the moſt diſintereſted and enlarged benevolence; in a word, he is one of thoſe, who advertiſe to ſupply the neceſſities of young men, whoſe indiſcretions have reduced them to want a temporary ſupply of money, for the laudable purpoſe of extricating them from the hands of others, who might impoſe on them to their ruin, and all this for the fair legal diſcount on their notes. In this character Mr. Aikles addreſſed himſelf to the proſecutor Mr. Edwards, who is a very young man, of ſome fortune, and who therefore appeared to Mr. Aikles to be a very fit ſubject for his friendſhip and protection. The priſoner waited on Mr. Edwards, and told him that if in the preſent great ſcarcity of money he ſhould be under any embarraſſment, he would relieve him; in conſequence of this intimation from the priſoner, the tranſaction which forms the ſubject of this enquiry took place. Gentlemen, I ſhall now proceed to ſtate the facts which I ſhall ſubmit to you in evidence, which I ſhall do with ſome particularity, as it will be neceſſary for the Court to attend to them, and to determine on the law reſulting from thoſe facts. And, Gentlemen, I am very much relieved in ſtating to you my imperfect notions of the law of the caſe, by feeling that I do it in the hearing of Judges eminent for their learning and integrity, under whoſe correction it is impoſſible that I ſhould lead you into error. Unleſs my inſtructions miſlead me moſt groſsly as to the facts, and unleſs my conception of the law is utterly unfounded, I expect with confidence that the learned Judges will tell you, that there is a current of deciſions, deriving its ſource at a very early period, and running down uninterruptedly to this day, that will warrant you in point of law to pronounce the priſoner guilty of the felony imputed to him.

Gentlemen, in the latter end of the month of December laſt, about the laſt day but one of the year, Mr. Edwards, in conſequence of the very friendly intimation which he had received from the priſoner, applied to him to diſcount him a note for one hundred pounds, which Mr. Aikles agreed to do, on being paid the very moderate compenſation of two and a half per cent. in conſequence of this agreement, Mr. Edwards drew a bill on his guardian Mr. Wells, payable to his own order; the bill was accepted by Mr. Wells, and indorſed by Mr. Edwards. Mr. Aikles went to Cornhill, and having ſatisfied himſelf that the acceptance was genuine, Mr. Edwards expected to be paid the value of his bill, and for that purpoſe delivered it to the priſoner; but to his ſurpriſe he found that Mr. Aikles was not in caſh (an accident which very generally attends theſe ſort of tranſactions) it was therefore neceſſary for him to go to his apartments in Pulteney Street to get the money, and he propoſed that Mr. Edwards or his friend ſhould go with him to receive it; to this propoſal Mr. Edwards found himſelf under the neceſſity of ſubmitting; but having by this time adopted a ſuſpicion that his bill was in hands not the moſt ſecure, he had the precaution to give expreſs directions to Mr. Croxall to go with the priſoner, and by no means to part with him or to loſe ſight of him till he received the money; Mr. Croxall having received theſe directions, went with the priſoner to his apartment; here Mr. Aikles told him, "I have not the money in the houſe, I muſt trouble you to wait ten minutes till I go and fetch it;" this was oppoſed by Mr. Croxall, who told him he expected the money, and did not chuſe to part with him till he received it; the priſoner aſſured him on his honour, that he would not detain him above a quarter of an hour, but on Croxall ſtill reſiſting his leaving the houſe, Mr. Aikles aſſumed all the importance and affected the feelings of a man of faſhion and nice honour, complained of being diſtruſted, and told Mr. Croxall that Mr. Edwards would not have treated him ſo unworthily: the priſoner left his houſe, and the witneſs, Mr. Croxall, having waited there till his patience was exhauſted, went out in hopes of finding him, but without ſucceſs; he met however with Mr. Edwards, who, impatient of ſo long a delay, was come to enquire for his money, they returned together to the houſe of the priſoner, where they continued three days and nights, during all which time Mr. Aikles never returned; many other perſons indeed came to enquire for him by all the names which he uſed in his numerous tranſactions; but Mr. Edwards ſeeing no probability of recovering his note, or of receiving its value, applied to a magiſtrate, who very properly ſent the priſoner here to abide the event of your inveſtigation of his conduct.

Gentlemen, all that it will be neceſſary for me to adduce evidence before you to prove in ſupport of this proſecution will be theſe ſhort facts; firſt, that Mr. Edwards made the bill in queſtion; that he delivered it to Mr. Aikles for the expreſs purpoſe of diſcounting it, and returning him the caſh by Mr. Croxall, and then the Court will tell you, that in point of law, if the priſoner afterwards embezzled the note ſo entruſted to him for this ſpecial purpoſe, or converted it to his own uſe, he is guilty of the felony, with the commiſſion of which he is charged. You will expect, from the ingenuity of my learned friends who appear as Council for the priſoner, that every objection will be taken that the caſe will in any degree warrant; but unleſs I am groſſly miſtaken, the facts will come out in evidence as I have ſtated them to you; and I aſſure myſelf, that having heard thoſe facts, if the directions of the Court ſhall warrant you to ſay, that under the law of the caſe the priſoner may be guilty of the crime imputed to him by the indictment, you will feel great pleaſure that it has become your duty to diminiſh, by one at leaſt, a neſt of vermin, who have but too long infeſted this metropolis, to the utter ruin of ſome of the firſt families in the kingdom.

SAMUEL EDWARDS, Eſq; ſworn.

Mr. Sylveſter, one of the Priſoner's Council. Do you mean to pay this note when it becomes due?——If I am obliged to pay it, not otherwiſe; if I can poſſibly avoid the paying it, I ſhall not think myſelf bound to pay it; I do not underſtand law, but if the law tells me I muſt pay it, I ſhall.

Examined by Mr. Garrow.

Where do you live?——When I am in town I lodge with Mr. Wells, on whom this note was drawn, who is my uncle, and was my guardian before I came of age.

Mr. Sylveſter. Let the witneſſes go out of Court.

Mr. Garrow. What was the way you firſt became acquainted with the priſoner at the bar?——My firſt acquaintance with the priſoner at the bar was, he left his addreſs about three weeks ago at my lodgings; his addreſs was, "Mr. H. No. 21, Great Pultney-ſtreet, from ſix to ſeven in the evening, or from eleven till twelve in the morning."

Court. Did you know him before?—Never; I enquired of the ſervant with whom he had left it, it was the moſt myſterious thing I ever met with at that time; in conſequence of this addreſs being left, I called the next morning before twelve, at No. 21, in Great Pultney-ſtreet, where I ſaw the priſoner at the bar, and as his face was perfectly ſtrange to me, I aſked him if he had left ſuch an addreſs at No. 11, in Cornhill, where I lodge, he ſaid he had, and he ſuppoſed my name was Edwards; I ſaid it was; he then ſaid he had heard that I wanted a note diſcounted; which I was very much aſtoniſhed at indeed; I could not conceive how he came to know it.

Court. Had you in fact wanted a note diſcounted?——I had a few days before.

Had you ſent any meſſage to Mr. Aikles?——I had not; he ſaid if at any time I wanted a note diſcounted, if it was drawn on a perſon of credit and reſponſibility, that he would diſcount it at any time, on the moſt eligible terms, which terms he then mentioned to me, which were two and a half per cent. agency, and the legal intereſt; in conſequence of this, on the 30th of December laſt, I called at his houſe in the evening, and he was out.

Mr. Garrow. When was the firſt interview?——I ſuppoſe it was about a week before that time; on the 31ſt of December, I ſent one Mr. Croxall to know if he would diſcount me a note of one hundred pounds, mentioning the gentleman on whom it was drawn, and if he would do it, if it was convenient for him to come into the city, he might be convinced that it was good, by applying to Mr. Wells the acceptor; the priſoner came with Croxall, in conſequence of the meſſage I had ſent by Croxall, on Wedneſday the 31ſt; I begged Mr. Wells would ſtep into the room; the priſoner was introduced to me by Mr. Croxall; I then aſked him what he would diſcount my note for, provided he approved of it; he ſaid for twenty-five ſhillings, which he had reckoned was two and a half per cent. for his agency, it was for two months, and five per cent. legal intereſt; I referred him to Mr. Wells, to know if it was his acceptance, he ſaid it was, and immediately Mr. Wells left the room; the priſoner then ſaid if I would go up with him to the weſt end of the town, to Pulteney-ſtreet, he would give me the caſh; I ſaid that Mr. Croxall would accompany him, and pay him twenty-five ſhillings on his receiving the one hundred pounds; I had delivered the note to Mr. Aikles on his applying to Mr. Wells to know whether it was a good one; Mr. Croxall left me to go with the priſoner, and as he went out, I whiſpered him that he would not leave the priſoner without the money, and that he would not loſe ſight of him.

Did Mr. Croxall return with the money?——No, Sir.

You expected him of courſe?——I was to go to prevent Croxall coming; I was to meet him and receive the money; I went to Pulteney-ſtreet, in my way I met Croxall; I afterwards returned to the houſe of the priſoner, he had been gone out about five minutes, and I waited there for three days and three nights, and the priſoner never returned; I am confident of it for three days.

Mr. Garrow. Whilſt you was there the priſoner never returned?——No.

Have you ever ſeen the hand writing of Mr. Aickles?——Yes, I have it now in my pocket.

Did you ever whilſt you was at his houſe receive any letter from Mr. Aikles, that you know to be his hand writing?

Mr. Sylveſter. I object to that; did you ever ſee him write?

Mr. Garrow. Then I will repeat the queſtion; did you ever receive any letter from him that you believe to be his hand writing?—I can only tell by compariſon.

Court. Do you believe it to be his hand writing?——I have reaſon to believe to the contrary, that it was not his hand writing, that he ſent to me by way of letter; I ſaw him afterwards on the Saturday when I went with the conſtable to apprehend him, he was at the houſe of a lady, where he had dined, in Margaret-ſtreet.

Did any thing paſs between you and the priſoner concerning this note when you apprehended him?——Yes, he ſaid he was very ſorry, he made many apologies, and ſaid he would fetch me the note.

I believe you did not truſt him to fetch the note?——No, but I went by his particular deſire to Norfolk ſtreet, I cannot tell the houſe; nothing material paſſed, only that he wiſhed to ſend for ſome perſon; I thought he ſhould go before a juſtice; he ſaid when I went to the houſe in Norfolk-ſtreet, I ſhould receive my note; it was made payable to my order, indorſed by me; I ſaw it yeſterday; I ſaw it two days ago in the poſſeſſion of Smith and Turner; I have ſubpœned them, they ſaid they ſhould keep it till the matter was ſettled.

Mr. Fielding, another of the Priſoner's Council. Are they here?—I do not know.

Mr. Garrow. It is found in the hands of thoſe to whom it has been either delivered by negociation or otherwiſe.

Mr. Fielding. The Gentleman has ſeen it in the cuſtody of men free from all ſuſpicion, Smith and Turner live oppoſite the Pantheon in Oxford-road.

Edwards. I have demanded my note on Saturday ſeveral times, and it has not been delivered to me; he offered it to me on Saturday ſe'nnight, when I took him, if I would give him twenty pounds.

Court. Did he know where it was?——Yes, laſt Saturday night.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Edwards. This note was a note drawn by you on your uncle?——Yes.

What you call an accommodation note?——It was not.

There was money due between you?—There was, and is now.

Was this note ever in the poſſeſſion of Croxall?——Never.

Did not you apply to him by advertiſement?——No.

Now on the 30th, of December you applied to him to get a note diſcounted?——Yes.

He was to have agency for his trouble, and the uſual diſcount of five per cent.?—Yes.

If the money had been brought you would have been ſatisfied?——I ſhould have been well ſatisfied.

So much ſo that you thought it was only a fraud at firſt, till ſomebody put it into your head it was a felony?——I beg your pardon, I ſhould have been guilty of a raſh act if I had met the priſoner.

You advertiſed it as a note that was loſt? Yes.

What was he committed for?——I do not know.

I will read you the commitment, (reads) "Committed on ſuſpicion of having committed divers frauds, and being a common cheat."——That I know nothing of.

You do not know that?——Indeed I do not.

Why, was you not examined before the magiſtrate?——Yes.

(Reads) "Charged before us by the oath of Samuel Edwards," that is your name, is not it?—The bill of indictment was the firſt I ever heard.

Ever heard, why how long was that before he was committed; what was he committed for?——Theſe are things I cannot anſwer; I can only ſay I brought him before Sir Sampſon Wright, and he was committed. I offered five guineas reward, and the payment was ſtopped.

You did not ſuppoſe then that it was a felony, becauſe that would have been compounding felony you know?—I conſidered that he he had run away with my note, but whether that was compounding felony or no I do not know.

Had Mr. Aikles then, when he came to your houſe to enquire about the goodneſs of the note, had he the note delivered to him by you?—He had.

Then having the note in his hand, and the full poſſeſſion of the note, he aſked your uncle whether it was his acceptance?——He did.

How came you to whiſper Coxall?——I generally ſpeak openly; I ſpeak openly now; I did it out of delicacy.

You have had a little converſation about this note?——I have had a great deal.

Did Mr. Aikles offer to ſettle the matter?——He ſaid he had ſettled it on my firſt ſeeing him, on the Saturday evening; when I had him at Bow-ſtreet, he then ſent a man to me.

Upon your oath, did not you intruſt him with this note for the purpoſe of getting the money?——Expecting the money immediately back again certainly, I could have no other purpoſe.

Mr. Garrow. I think you told me that the purpoſe for which you gave this note to Mr. Aikles was to diſcount it?—It was.

Mr. Sylveſter. Was it to diſcount it, or to get it diſcounted?—To diſcount it.

Mr. Garrow. Did you or not underſtand that he was the monied man that was to diſcount it?——He told me himſelf that he belonged to the bank, and that he would immediately give the money on the arrival of Mr. Croxall at his houſe; he deſcribed himſelf to belong to the bank; he ſaid, that he was to have two and a half per cent. agency for the buſineſs, and I conceived him to belong to the bank, he told me, he would give me the money at his own houſe.

RICHARD WELLS ſworn.

I live in Cornhill; I am guardian to the proſecutor; I ſaw the priſoner; he aſked me if the acceptance of the one hundred pounds note was my hand writing, it was drawn by Samuel Edwards, payable to the order of Mr. Edwards for one hundred pounds, it was the 30th of December, and at two months date.

Did Mr. Aikles explain to you the purpoſe of his application?——I do not think he did the leaſt in the world, I am ſure he did not; he had the note in his hand at my houſe; Mr. Edwards was preſent in my parlour, and he aſked me if that was my acceptance; I told him it was; I left the room, and left Mr. Edwards, and the priſoner, and Croxall, to tranſact the buſineſs.

Mr. Fielding. When he aſked you the queſtion he had the note in his poſſeſſion?——Yes.

And the proſecutor was ſatisfied with that?—He ſeemed to be very well ſatisfied.

Court. What age is the proſecutor?—Twenty-ſeven.

JOHN CROXALL ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. You are acquainted with Mr. Edwards?——Yes.

Do you recollect at any time ſeeing the priſoner with Mr. Edwards?——Yes, on the 31ſt of December.

Where did you ſee them?——At Mr. Wells's, No. 11, Cornhill; I was with Mr. Edwards when the priſoner came; he ſaid he came there with intent to diſcount a note of one hundred pounds for Mr. Edwards; I had previouſly made application to the priſoner in the morning when I called at his lodgings; I applied to the priſoner by deſire of Mr. Edwards; it was on the 31ſt of December, at his lodgings, No. 21, Great Pulteney-ſtreet, where I ſaw him.

Court. What did you apply to him for?—I told him I came from Mr. Edwards; Mr. Edwards wiſhed to know when he would let him have one hundred pounds at two months.

Mr. Garrow. Did you go to him to aſk if he would let Mr. Edwards have one hundred pounds for his note?—Yes, I told the priſoner I was come from Mr. Edwards, and he would be glad to know what time he would let him have the money that they were talking about for a note; the priſoner ſaid, when I ſaw Mr. Edwards laſt, I told him, that if he would let me have his note for half an hour I would get him the money, and he likewiſe ſaid, that if he would come or ſend any perſon with the note, they might wait in the parlour while he fetched the money; I then aſked the priſoner what time would be moſt agreeable to meet Mr. Edwards, he told me twelve o'clock in Cornhill, No. 11, I returned to Cornhill, and was in the room when the priſoner entered; Mr. Edwards then produced the note to the priſoner, and aſked him what he was to give for the diſcounting it; the priſoner ſaid, ſeven and a half per cent. which was five and twenty ſhillings, two and a half above the common intereſt; Mr. Edwards ſaid it was a great deal of money, could not he abate any thing of it; he ſaid, no, not for ſo trifling a ſum as one hundred pounds; after that Mr. Wells came into the room; the priſoner went up to Mr. Wells and ſaid, pray Sir is this your acceptance? Mr. Wells ſaid, yes, it was his acceptance, then the priſoner turned round to Mr. Edwards and me and ſaid, now gentlemen, if you are ready, we will go to my houſe, or my apartments, and we will get you the money; I ſaid to Mr. Edwards, Sir, you had better go along with us, he ſaid, no, Mr. Croxall; you go along with the gentleman, and I will be there by half an hour after one o'clock; I ſaid, I wiſh you would be there about one o'clock becauſe I have other buſineſs; he ſaid he would; I went with the priſoner immediately, he called a coach to his lodgings, in Great Pulteney-ſtreet, No. 21.

Mr. Garrow. What was the purpoſe of your going with the priſoner?——To receive the money; in going along, the priſoner told me he had diſcounted many notes for gentlemen, and had found money for ſeveral to a great amount; I ſaid to him, pray Sir, how far have you got to go for this money from the houſe where you lodge, he ſaid about three ſtreets off; when we came into the priſoner's parlour he aſked me to ſit down, and he went backwards; he came in directly and ſaid, pray Mr. Croxall be ſeated; I ſhall be back in a quarter of an hour; I will ſend you the paper to read: I was not ſatisfied with his going out; I was determined to keep ſight of him, and watch his going in and coming out.

Mr. Garrow. Did you object to his going out?——I heſitated rather about it, but he told me, that Mr. Edwards was either to come there or ſend ſomebody to ſtay in the parlour while he went for the money; in turning the corner of Great Pulteney-ſtreet, going into Brewer-ſtreet, I loſt ſight of him in a moment; I walked backwards and forwards, and Mr. Edwards came up; I afterwards returned to the priſoner's houſe; I did not find him there; I continued there ſometime; I went away, and left Mr. Edwards while I went away; and when I returned, I found him there, and I ſtaid till half after nine; the priſoner did not return back; I found Mr. Edwards in the parlour where I left him; I was there the next morning before eight o'clock and continued till Mr. Edwards came to me; we breakfaſted in the houſe the next morning; we continued there the whole of the next day; I went out, and Mr. Edwards was there while I went out; the priſoner did not return; I did not continue there long the third day, but I watched for him at a publick houſe; I did not ſee him go to his houſe.

Did he at any time pay you the money, or any part of it for this one hundred pounds note?—No, Sir.

Nor deliver you the note back?—No.

Was you preſent when he was apprehended?—No.

Mr. Sylveſter. You went to receive the money?—Yes.

He was to return in a quarter of an hour?—Yes.

You never had the note in your poſſeſſion?—No.

You only went for the money?—No.

Did you watch during the night time?—No.

Whether he came home at night you do not know of your knowledge?—No.

It was underſtood by all of you, that he was to return in a quarter of an hour?—Yes.

Walter Smith and William Turner called on their ſubpœnas.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I ſubmit to the Court, that as he has ſworn that he ſubpœned theſe people, and they are not come, that the Court will be ſo good as to ſend for them.

Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt. Let a meſſenger go for them.

Mr. Catchpole the Marſhalman returned, and brought word that they had been waiting at the Court all day.

Court. Call them again.

Walter Smith and William Turner called again but did not appear.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, it is proved, that theſe people have been ſubpœned, and have been again ſent to by order of the Court, and do not appear, therefore I ſubmit to your Lordſhip whether I may not give parol evidence of this note, it being found as every other note is, which is the ſubject of a proſecution for felony, in ſome other hands; it is no longer in the hands or power of the proſecutor, I therefore ſubmit it is competent to the proſecutor to ſhew where he ſaw it laſt; if notes are loſt that are put into the poſt, and are never found again, there muſt of neceſſity be parol evidence given of them or no evidence at all, ſince, like the preſent, they are not in the power of the proſecutor.

Mr. Fielding. My Lord, I ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that theſe men ought to come forward; it is proved that this note is in exiſtence, and ought to have been brought here, and it therefore furniſhes that leading idea in every caſe, that the note ought to be produced which is in exiſtence, and is the beſt degree of evidence; if the note was loſt, then indeed it would be a queſtion with the Court, whether you would receive parol evidence.

Mr. Sylveſter. I take it there is not a clearer principle in law that you cannot give parol evidence of a note that does exiſt: it was the duty of the proſecutor to apply to the Court, and to ſee before the Court was called on, whether his witneſſes did or did not attend. No application was made till about the middle of the trial, when it is found out that they cannot proceed without the evidence of theſe people, then an order of Court is applied for; I believe it would be very unprecedented to give evidence of any part of this note, unleſs the note was here preſent to be produced to your Lordſhip, and I am ſure your Lordſhip will not go out of the common road of evidence.

Mr. Fielding. They might have got the note here.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. I do not think it is ſo univerſal a principle of law as to have no exception, for where priſoners are indicted for ſtealing a note, it is not neceſſary to ſhew that that note is in exiſtence, or to account for its coming into the hands of the priſoner, in ſuch a caſe there could have been no doubt at all, but parol evidence could have been given, and the note being in the hands of this Smith and Turner in a ſtate of negotiation, makes no difference; I think they ſtand in the place of the priſoner, their poſſeſſion is preciſely the poſſeſſion of the priſoner.

Mr. Sylveſter. If it had gone the length that the priſoner had negotiated it.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. I ſhall certainly ſave the point for the opinion of the Judges.

Mr. Sylveſter. In this caſe the priſoner was intruſted with this note to get it diſcounted.

Court. No not to get it diſcounted, but to diſcount it; you aſſume that.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, I contend the priſoner had the free power of this note, the dominion, the poſſeſſion, to part with to any body whatever that he pleaſed; If I ſend my clerk to a banker's with a note, if he goes off with the note it is felony, but if he goes to the banker's and gets the money it is a breach of truſt; where there is only a cuſtody of the thing itſelf, and no power or dominion over it, diſpoſing of it is illegal and felonious; but where there is a power of diſpoſing of it, it is not; here I can ſee a clear fraud; give me your note and I will get it diſcounted; this is a common fraud, a common trick, it is too common, but nobody I believe had an idea at this time that it was a felony: my Lord, I do not know where to draw the line; I ſhould be glad to know where the felony begins, becauſe the poſſeſſion of it is no felony; he is intruſted with it; there is no felony in carrying it home; and he paſſes it to a perſon to get it diſcounted.

Mr. Juſtice Heath. You miſtake the fact and then you argue upon it; you argue upon wrong facts: Mr. Edwards and Croxall both ſay, that this man was to diſcount this note for a price, for Croxall ſays, that Edwards produced the note to the priſoner and aſked him what he was to give him for diſcounting it, and he ſaid two and a half, and the priſoner ſaid, if Mr. Edwards ſent any body to his lodgings they might wait in his parlour till he ſent for the money.

Mr. Fielding. My Lord, upon theſe facts I beg leave to follow my learned friend in this idea as a matter of law growing out of the fact; as to the definition of a larceny, I underſtand from Lord Coke and others, that the taking muſt be from the poſſeſſion of a man, and not of the property when removed from the poſſeſſion; if poſſeſſion be obtained by the perſon without out the ingredients of felony, it then becomes ſuch a ſubject as cannot ſupport the allegation of larceny; here there is, in my conception, a clear poſſeſſion, and ſuch a poſſeſſion as removes the property clearly out of the hands of Edwards, if ſo then upon that ſubject, clearly cannot be built the definition of larceny.

Court. I conceive there is ſome difference as to the change of property, if this man had kept the note, would it have been a felony in him to have kept poſſeſſion of the note, certainly not; then he alters this thing and he changes it into money; Edwards expects the money; he does not get the money; he never expects to have the note back again; the matter ſtrikes me as not to be rendered a bit more plain by any thing that can be ſaid.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I ſhould leave this caſe with the utmoſt pleaſure to the Court, but that all arguments of this ſort are addreſſed to the Jury, and are intended to have their operation there, it therefore becomes my duty to trouble your Lordſhip with a very few words by way of reply. My Lord, I am not at all diſpoſed to controvert the poſition of my learned friend, Mr. Fielding, as to the definition of larceny, I am ready to admit that there muſt be a felonious taking from the poſſeſſion of the proprietor, and on that ground I am perfectly contented to argue this caſe, for I am warranted by a long uninterrupted ſeries of deciſions to ſay, that this, to the hour of the converſion, was the poſſeſſion not of the priſoner but of Mr. Edwards. The caſe which we are now arguing, is preciſely like the caſe of a man who goes to Smithfield Market and cheapens a horſe, the owner delivers him the horſe for the purpoſe of trying his paces, and the ſtranger rides away with the horſe; if I was to addreſs myſelf to the common underſtanding of any man who hears me, and was to aſk in whom the poſſeſſion in the horſe reſided, he would anſwer, that the actual poſſeſſion of the owner was determined by his delivery to the ſtranger; but the law has ſaid, that this poſſeſſion having been acquired with a felonious intent, ſhall not alter the poſſeſſion in contemplation of law, but that ſuch a taking is a felony. What was the caſe of Sharpleſs at this place about nine years ago? It was the faſhionable trick of that day (for every period has its faſhions in artifice) to go to a goldſmith's and to order a quantity of his goods to be ſent home; and it was the caution of the day for the goldſmith to direct his ſervant not to leave the goods without the money, but on ſome pretence Sharpleſs ſent back the ſervant and kept the goods, and the Judges held that this was felony, though it would be difficult to prove that the goldſmith had any actual poſſeſſion of his goods after they were delivered by his ſervant to the ſtranger. This caſe ſeems to me to be perfectly in point, but the ſame principle is, if poſſible, more ſtrongly recognized in two caſes, decided very recently; firſt, in the caſe of the ring dropper, where a man drops a ring or purſe, and on pretence of dividing its produce with ſome byſtander; he delivers the thing found, and takes as a ſecurity for his proportion a watch or a cloak, which he converts to his own uſe; here your Lordſhip ſees there is ſomething given for the thing ſtolen; your Lordſhips have repeatedly held that this is felony, and yet no man will ſay, that after the watch or cloak are delivered they remain any longer in the actual poſſeſſion of the owner. I have had the honour of ſtating to your Lordſhips one caſe of horſe-ſtealing, there is another, which has received a ſolemn determination of all the Judges of England within a very ſhort time, which is concluſive of this caſe. A man hires a horſe on pretence of taking a journey into Eſſex, in point of fact, he never takes ſuch a journey but ſells the horſe; this has been determined to be felony: but, my Lords, I feel that I have troubled your Lordſhips with more caſes than it was neceſſary to have cited in ſupport of a poſition ſo clear, I ſhall therefore conclude with ſtating one very recently determined, and which, if it ſtood alone, might ſerve as an anſwer to the objection of my friend Mr. Fielding.

A man goes to a publick houſe and orders a pot of beer and change for a guinea, to be ſent to the houſe of Mr. Stiles, and when it is brought, he ſends the ſervant back on ſome pretence, takes the change and goes off; permit me to aſk whether the publican who remained in the bar of his houſe, had any more controul over, or poſſeſſion of his money, than any man who hears me; and yet your Lordſhips have held, and held with great wiſdom, that this taking is a felony; but Mr. Silveſter aſks, When did the felony commence? I anſwer precisely at the ſame period of time, at which it commenced in the caſes which I have had the honor of ſubmitting to the Court; in the caſe of the horſe-ſtealer, it commenced at the inſtant in which he put his foot into the ſtirrup with an intent to ſteal the horſe; ſo here the felony commenced at the inſtant in which the priſoner got the note into his hands, with a felonious intent to convert it to his own uſe. If your Lordſhips feel yourſelves mature by the deciſion of to-night to batter down the authority of all theſe caſes eſtabliſhed on mature conſideration by the wiſdom of your predeceſſors, and ſo often fortified and confirmed by the concurrent wiſdom of your Lordſhips: if you are prepared to ſay that the ſtrong principle which ſo uniformly runs through all theſe caſes is no law, then your Lordſhip muſt direct the Jury to acquit the priſoner; but if your Lordſhips feel yourſelves bound to act in uniſon with theſe determinations, it ſeems to me that your Lordſhip has no alternative but to direct the Jury to find the priſoner guilty.

Court. If by any fraudulent means or contrivance, the party gets the poſſeſſion of goods into his hands with intention to ſteal them, and undoubtedly the party whoſe property they are never meant to part with them in that way, therefore it becomes a felony; I ſhall therefore ſum up to the Jury, and I ſhall afterwards take the opinion of the Judges upon it.

The learned Judge then ſummed up the evidence to the Jury as before recited, and added as follows.

Gentlemen of the Jury, firſt as to the law reſpecting this caſe, I muſt tell you that as at preſent adviſed, my idea of the law is this, that under the authority of the caſes which have been ſo ably cited by the learned council for the proſecution, if the priſoner got this note into his poſſeſſion with a preconcerted deſign to ſteal it, that is a felony, though in fact it was delivered to him, eſpecially if you ſhould be of opinion that it never was the intention of Edwards to part with the poſſeſſion, but that he or Croxall ſhould be preſent till the money was actually paid; the poſſeſſion of the thing in law does not mean the bodily apprehenſion of the thing, the holding it and taking it: if it was given to him with the ſpecial purpoſe of his diſcounting it, and that Croxall was ſent with the priſoner as an agent of the proſecutor, and that the other ran away with this note in order to defraud him; why then it will amount to a felony, and what is the evidence that he did ſo? why you will find from Edwards's evidence, that he undertook to give him caſh, and then Edwards ſaid Croxall ſhould accompany him and pay the twenty-five ſhillings; ſo that you ſee the firſt propoſal on behalf of the priſoner was, that Croxall ſhould go with him and he would give him the caſh, which is contrary to the defence, which is, that Edwards intruſted him with this note to get it diſcounted, for he was to diſcount it himſelf for a ſtipulated ſum, and Croxall tells you, that the priſoner ſaid, when he ſaw the proſecutor, if he would let him have the note for half an hour he would give him the money; then Croxall is ſent with the priſoner, and the propoſal was, that he is not to go out of his houſe, but he was to be in the parlour till he ſent for the money; therefore it was the idea of Edwards and Croxall, and the priſoner's propoſal, that this note ſhould never be out of his poſſeſſion, and his going away with it, and ſtaying away from his lodgings three days and three nights is a very conſiderable circumſtance; then when they went to the houſe in Norfolk-ſtreet, there were ſeveral ſhuffling excuſes; the queſtion therefore is, whether you think it was ever the intention of the proſecutor to let this note be out of his poſſeſſion till he got the one hundred pounds; if you think it was not, you will find the priſoner guilty, otherwiſe you will acquit him.

Guilty.

Court to Jury. You find that he took it with a preconcerted deſign?——Yes, and that he undertook to diſcount it.

Are you of opinion that Edwards the proſecutor intended to leave the note in the priſoner's poſſeſſion without the money?—No, not without the money.

The two queſtions then are, whether the priſoner had not a preconcerted deſign to get this note into his poſſeſſion, with intention to ſteal it.

Jury. Certainly ?

Court. And whether the proſecutor intended to part with that note to the priſoner without having the money paid before he parted with it?

Jury. No.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice Heath.

OPINION of the TWELVE JUDGES

On the reſerved Caſes of Samuel Gaſcoyne and Daniel Hickman, delivered by Mr. Juſtice Ashurst.

The Priſoners Samuel Gaſcoyne and Daniel Hickman being called to the Bar, Mr. Juſtice Aſhurſt addreſſed them ſeverally as follows:

Samuel Gaſcoyne, you are tried and found guilty of a highway robbery on Jane Edwards; there was ſome doubt on your trial, either on a queſtion moved by your Council, or ſome doubt entertained by the Court, and the caſe was reſerved for the opinion of the Judges: the facts appear to be, that the proſecutrix was brought before Mr. Green, a Juſtice of the peace, on a complaint for an aſſault on another woman: the magiſtrate adviſed the parties to make it up; upon this the proſecutrix ſent for her huſband, and he went to get bail, of which ſhe informed the magiſtrate, but the Juſtice leaving the office, you told her, you would take her to gaol; the proſecutrix begged and intreated that you would ſtay till her huſband's return, as he would be back preſently; you then aſked her if ſhe would have a coach, ſhe ſaid, no; ſhe then fell on her knees, and intreated you not to ſend her away from her children till her huſband returned; ſhe had a ſhilling in her hand which ſhe offered you to ſtay till her huſband returned; you forced her into a coach; you came into the coach; you put a handkerchief to her; you then handcuffed her to a man who was going to priſon, and who had before reſcued himſelf, as was alledged; that you then took the ſhilling out of her hand, and ſaid, this will buy us a glaſs a-piece; you then aſked her for her money, and ſaid you would bring her back, and immediately you put your hand into her pocket and took all the money you could find, which was three ſhillings; you then ſtopped at an alehouſe and called for ſome gin, and you gave the ſhilling you firſt took from her to pay for the gin, and had ſome change; ſhe made no complaint then, as you had promiſed to carry her back again, but ſaid, if you would ſo do you ſhould be welcome to the three ſhillings you took out of her pocket; that no part of the money was ever returned, but the coachman ſaid you paid for the coach either one ſhilling or one ſhilling and ſixpence.

xpence; that you was not a conſtable or officer, but attended at the publick office; nor had any order to convey the proſecutrix to priſon: the learned Judge who tried you left it to the Jury with this direction, that if they thought you had originally, when you forced her into the coach, a felonious intent of taking her money, and that you made uſe of that violence of the handkerchief as a means of preventing her reſiſtance, they would in that caſe find you guilty; that the Jury found you guilty, and they added, we find that the priſoner had a felonious intent of getting what money the woman had, and that the putting her into that ſtate was only a colourable means of putting his intention into execution. The Judges have conſidered of your caſe, and upon theſe facts they are unanimouſly of opinion, that this is clearly a felony and robbery; and that your original intention of forcing her into the coach, was an intention of carrying your purpoſe into execution, and that you made uſe of the ſanction and pretence of law for the perpetration of the offence, and therefore you was very properly convicted.

Daniel Hickman, your caſe was alſo referred to the twelve Judges; the facts on your trial appeared to be, that you had obtained money from the proſecutor by charging him with the crime of ſodomy, and threatening, that if he did not make you ſatisfaction, you would bring a ſerjeant and a file of men to take him before a magiſtrate: the proſecutor ſwore, that he parted with his money for fear of loſing his character, and that he had no other fear; the Jury on that found you guilty; but ſome doubts having been entertained upon a late caſe that has been determined I believe, upon the opinion of all the Judges, the Judge who tried you wiſhed to have your caſe likewiſe referred; the Judges have conſidered of your caſe, and they are of opinion that your caſe does not materially differ from the caſe of Donelly; for that the true definition of a robbery, is the ſtealing or taking from the perſon, with ſuch a degree of force or terror, that induces the party unwillingly to part from his property, whether terror to mens perſons, or the loſs of fame and reputation, which to ſome men may be an equal terror; the law makes no kind of difference; the principal ingredient in robbery, is a man's being forced to part with his property; therefore you having obtained the property of the proſecutor by threatening to charge him with the greateſt of crimes, that is ſuch a kind of threat as is ſufficient to conſtitute the crime of robbery, and the Judges are of opinion that you have very properly been found guilty by the Jury.

MISDEMEANORS.

227. JUDITH BAREW wife of Iſrael Barew, otherwiſe Iſrael Barrow, ABRAHAM NATHANS, SARAH JEFFRIES, and FRANCES wife of DAVID DAVIS were indicted for feloniouſly receiving, on the 19th of December laſt, one ſet of moreen bed furniture, containing thirty yards, value 5l. and two ſets of moreen window curtains, value 30s. then lately ſtolen by certain ill diſpoſed perſons, well knowing the ſame to have been ſtolen, taken, and carried away.

DANIEL LUCKHURST ſworn.

I only prove the property.

JOHN CHAPMAN ſworn.

On the 17th of September laſt, I was in the houſe of Mr. Luckhurſt that was robbed; it was left in my care, I faſtened it in the evening of the 17th, about eight o'clock, I went again on the 10th to open it, and I found it had been broke open.

What things were miſſing?—The furniture of a moreen bed and nine window curtains ; I know nothing of the defendants, nor of the property being found.

MICHAEL NATHAN ſworn.

About three months ago, on a Saturday night, I went to Whitechapel to buy a quarter of beef ; I left my maid at home in my houſe, and ſhe ſhewed me theſe curtains ; I found them at my houſe.

Court. Is your maid here.

Proſecutor. My Lord, ſhe was here juſt now, but I am afraid ſhe is ſent out clandeſtinely.

Court. Do you know any thing of theſe four defendants ?——No, no farther than the maid told me they took the curtains up to the Juſtice's, and the conſtable has them.

DENNIS M‘DONALD ſworn.

I have had them ever ſince.

Mr. Peat Council for the Defendants. How long ago is it that you carried them to the Juſtice's ?——The Friday following, about three weeks ago.

Judith Simons called on her recognizance, but did not appear.

Court to Nathan. What is become of your maid ?——She has been gone from me better than three weeks, I could not keep her any longer.

What did you part with her for ?——Becauſe ſhe wanted more wages, and I would not give her any more.

Have you ſeen her ſince that ?——I ſaw her on Saturday, and I ſaw her here to day.

Upon your oath, do not you know where ſhe is at this time ?——No, I do not.

Did you deſire her to go away from here ? ——No, and pleaſe you my Lord, what ſhould I deſire her to go away for.

Did you ?——I did not.

Did you hear any body elſe deſire her to go away ?——No, I do not ſpeak to her ; I ſaw her at the Pitt's head going into the tap-room.

Were any of the defendants there ?——I did not ſee any of them.

Court. Send to the houſes over the way and ſee if ſhe is there.

Dennis M‘Donald. The curtains were brought to me about the 26th or 27th.

Of what month ?—Of September, and I kept them in my cuſtody, and took the people.

SARAH NATHAN ſworn.

Michael Nathan aſked me to go with him to the Juſtice's to deliver the curtains up ; I went with him, and I was bound over.

Do you know any thing of the matter ? ——No.

Where do you live ?—In Shoemaker-row.

In whoſe houſe ?—In Iſrael Mordecai's ; I am married ſince to Michael Nathan.

Do you know how the curtains came into the houſe ?——I do not know, I was not there then ; I ſaw the young woman this morning ; I do not know who deſired her to go away.

Mr. Montague. My Lord, I have been over, and ſhe was at the Pitt's Head with the reſt of the witneſſes, and they came over here together.

Mr. Peat to Sarah Nathan. How long is it ago ſince you went up to the Juſtice's ? ——Three or four months.

ELIZABETH ALEXANDER ſworn.

On a Sunday in September I heard ſome words in the houſe where we live, and I got up to the door and I ſaw Mrs. Davis, one of the defendants coming down ſtairs, and I heard her ſay, thank God it coſt twelve guineas and an half, it does not belong to me ; but what ſhe meant I do not know ; that is all I know about it.

Who was ſhe ſpeaking of ?——I do not know.

Had ſhe any thing with her ?—No, ſhe had not.

What houſe did you live in then ?—The ſame as I do now, in Allen's-court, St. James's, Duke's-place ; one Mrs. Wright is the landlady ; I am a lodger.

Does Mrs. Davis live in the ſame houſe with you ?——No.

Do any of the defendants live in the ſame houſe with you ?—No ; Mrs. Simons lives in the ſame houſe.

LEAH SIMONS ſworn.

Michael Nathan deſired me to go along with him to bring theſe goods to the office, for the maid told him that the goods were left at that houſe; I know nothing of my own knowledge.

Court. Do you know Judith Simons the maid?——Yes; ſhe is my daughter.

Then what is become of her?—She is not under my juriſdiction; ſhe has been at ſervice.

Who deſired her to get out of the way?—I cannot tell.

Court to Proſecutor. Have you any other evidence?—No, my Lord, that that is out of the way is the principal evidence.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, this trick as it appears to me, has ſucceeded for the preſent, for there being no evidence you muſt acquit the defendants.

Court. Take care of the recognizance.

All Four Acquitted.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

228. THOMAS JAMES was indicted, for that, on the 1ſt of December laſt, before William Earl of Mansfield, one of the Juſtices aſſigned to hold pleas at Guildhall, in the city of London, a certain iſſue was joined between Richard George, plaintiff, and William Wells, defendant, in a certain action of treſpaſs, on the caſe that was tried before a jury of the ſaid city of London; and that the ſaid Thomas James did then and there appear, and was produced for a witneſs, and was duly ſworn, and did take his corporal oath on the holy goſpel of God, that his evidence ſhould be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; he the ſaid William Earl of Mansfield then and there having competent authority to adminiſter the ſame oath; And it then and there became a material queſtion, whether the plaintiff was ever inſolvent, or ever made any compoſition with his creditors, or whether the ſaid creditors had been paid their full debts: And that the ſaid Thomas James, not having the fear of God before his eyes, &c. knowingly, falſly, wickedly, maliciouſly, and corruptly, by his own act and conſent, did depoſe and give in evidence, in ſubſtance and to the effect following: that is to ſay, That Richard George the plaintiff, meaning the plaintiff in the ſaid iſſue, was never inſolvent, and had never made any compoſition to his creditors, and that no aſſignment of his effects ever was made, and that the creditors had been paid their full money of 20s. in the pound by Mr. Dublois, whereas in truth and effect the ſaid Richard George the plaintiff had been inſolvent, and had made a compoſition with his creditors, and an aſſignment of his effects had been made, and the ſaid creditors had never been paid their full money of 20s. in the pound, but whereas in truth and in fact the ſaid creditors of the ſaid Richard George were paid after the rate of 8s. in the pound, as a compoſition, and the ſaid creditors accepted the ſame accordingly; and the ſaid Thomas James well knew the ſame to be true; and ſo the jurors aforeſaid upon their oaths ſay, that the ſaid Thomas James, by his own proper act and conſent, &c. did commit wilful and corrupt perjury.

Court. How is the perjury aſſigned with reſpect to 20s. in the pound?——"The creditors of the ſaid Richard George never paid their full money 20s. in the pound."

Court. It does not add by Mr. Dublois.

Mr. Sylveſter, of Council for the proſecution, thus opened the caſe.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an indictment againſt the defendant Thomas James, for wilful and corrupt perjury. The priſoner at the bar who now appears before you to anſwer this charge, is an attorney belonging to the Court of King's Bench, and the indictment charges that an action came to be tried before Lord Mansfield, in which Richard George was plaintiff, and William Wells defendant: it was an action brought to recover the ſum of ſixteen pounds, due from Wells to George; before this action there had been many tranſactions between theſe two gentlemen, tlemen, and the ſum at one time was forty-nine pounds, due from Wells to George, part of that money having been paid, and about ſixteen pounds odd remaining unpaid; George applied to Wells to beg the favour that he might have ſome money, he deſired the ſum of twenty pounds; Wells gave him his note at a ſhort date, not having caſh by him; this note by ſome means or other got out of the hands of George; he told Mr. Wells, ſays he, I have been defrauded of that note, and I deſire you to ſtop the payment, I have been ſwindled out of it by a man of the name of Sharp, and I will give you an indemnity. Sometime after this, this note was put in ſuit againſt Wells by Sharp, but it was nonproſſed, and he gave him another note, and it was agreed that the balance of ſixteen pounds ten ſhillings ſhould remain in his hands as a counter-ſecurity; Mr. George, however, by the advice of I do not know who, whether by the advice of Mr. James, or ſomebody elſe, thought proper to bring an action againſt Mr. Wells for this very ſixteen pounds odd; when that cauſe came to be tried, ſays Wells, I am not indebted to you in that money, my note is outſtanding; that in point of law was looked upon to be no defence; then the queſtion was, whether this had not been agreed by the arties to remain as a ſecurity, and, that it as the meaning of the parties was certain, ecauſe George having become inſolvent, had omitted this ſixteen pounds in the ccount of his debts, becauſe he knew it as to remain as an indemnity for the note hich Wells had given. When the cauſe me on to be tried, they firſt produced the idence of the debt, and Mr. James the torney, wiſhing to get a verdict for his ient, was examined as a witneſs for his ent; he was aſked, Was the plaintiff orge ever inſolvent, did not he make a poſition with his creditors, was there aſſignment of his effects? all which he ied; and ſaid the creditors had been the ſum of twenty ſhillings in the nd: upon which Lord Mansfield ſaid ſee every fact that has been ſuggeſted is denied by Mr. James; upon which a verdict was immediately found for the plaintiff in this buſineſs.

Gentlemen, this is a juſtice due to the country for you to try and determine on the offence of Mr. James. I need not tell you that the crime of perjury is a very foul and horrid crime, and deſerves the moſt exemplary puniſhment. If the facts are not proved clearly, I am ſure you will rejoice with me, that Mr. James ſhould be acquitted. I am ſure I only wiſh, and the proſecutors only wiſh to have the matter come fairly before you; if the witneſſes prove the fact charged againſt the defendant, you are bound to find him guilty, and he muſt abide by the conſequences; one thing is admitted by the learned Council who conducts his defence, the record of the proceedings is not here, but it is admitted that there was ſuch a cauſe, and that the cauſe was tried before Lord Mansfield. Gentlemen, I ſhall call the witneſſes, and prove the facts, without taking up any more of your time.

The Witneſſes examined apart by deſire of Mr. Fielding, Council for the Defendant.

JANE WELLS ſworn.

(Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.)

Was you Madam at the ſittings after laſt term in the Court of King's Bench?—Yes.

Do you remember a cauſe between George and Wells?——Yes, I was preſent and heard the Counſellor aſk Mr. James, I believe, whether he was an inſolvent man.

Whether who was?——Mr. George, and whether he had not made a compoſition with his creditors, and Mr. James ſaid no, he was not, but had paid every body twenty ſhillings in the pound, or at leaſt Mr. Dublois had paid it for him; the Council then aſked Mr. James how he knew that, and he ſaid he had been concerned in the buſineſs all through.

Mr. Fielding. Old Lady, you ſeem to have a pretty accurate memory as to what the Council ſaid to Mr. James, do you remember the manner in which my Lord

Mansfield treated the cauſe?——I cannot ſay I do.

You do not remember that?——No.

You do not remember my Lord Mansfield's ſaying, pho! pho! there is no defence at all?——No.

Was not my Lord Mansfield of opinion that there was not a ſhadow of defence?—I do not remember.

Do you remember that it was not at all neceſſary for Mr. James to go half through the evidences?——I know we were not called any of us.

And the verdict went againſt you?—Yes.

Now you affect to recollect very well the queſtion of the Council and the anſwer of Mr. James?——That is all I remember.

How often now have you rehearſed this queſtion and anſwer?——Not very often, becauſe I have ſomething elſe to do than to think about it.

Where was it firſt talked over?—Sometimes I forget things, and ſometimes I can remember them.

Court. Was Mr. James produced and ſworn as a witneſs?—Yes, Sir, they aſked him if he was a lawyer, he ſaid no, a lawyer's-clerk, and then he was produced as a withneſs.

Court. Did you ſee the oath adminiſtered to him?——Yes I did; before he was aſked any queſtions he was ſworn.

Mr. James. What part of the Court was I in?——On the left hand as they went into Court.

Court. You ſay you heard the Counſellor aſk Mr. James the defendant whether Mr. George was an inſolvent man, and whether he had made a compoſition with his creditors, and Mr. James ſaid he had not, but had paid all his creditors twenty ſhillings in the pound, or at leaſt Mr. Dublois had paid it for him; was he aſked the two queſtions together, or did he anſwer the one firſt, and then the other?——One followed the other as faſt as he could aſk them; he anſwered he had not, he had made no compoſition at all.

That was all you recollect he ſaid?——Yes.

THOMAS HOLMES ſworn.

(Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.)

Was you at Guildhall the ſittings after laſt term, when the cauſe of Richard George and William Wells was tried?—I was, I was ſubpœned as a witneſs, I remember Mr. James there, I remember Mr. Wells's Council ſtated to the Court that Mr. George was inſolvent, and Mr. James ſaid he was not.

Do you remember his being ſworn?—Yes Sir.

Was he ſworn before he was aſked any queſtions?——Upon my word I cannot ſay whether it was before or after, I remember his being ſworn.

Which ſide produced Mr. James as a witneſs?——He was a witneſs for Mr. George; the Council aſked Mr. James if Mr. George was inſolvent, he ſaid he was not, and had never made any compoſition, he had paid every one their full money, twenty ſhillings in the pound, at leaſt Mr. Dublois did for him.

Court. In anſwer to the queſtion, whether he had made any compoſition with his creditors, repeat as diſtinctly as you can what he ſaid, and all that he ſaid?——He ſaid he had not made a compoſition, he had paid every one his full money, twenty ſhillings in the pound, at leaſt a Mr. Dublois did for him.

Mr. Fielding, Defendant's Council. Maſter Holmes, you ſay that Mr. Wells's Council was ſtating to the Court that Mr. George was inſolvent, upon which u ſtarted Mr. James, and ſaid he was no and then came the queſtion, Is that fo the Council was going on, as my learne friend Mr. Sylveſter very often does, ſta ing that which will not be proved, and M James got up and ſaid to the Court, he not inſolvent; is that it.

Mr. Sylveſter. Was he examining th upon oath?——I ſaw him ſworn, b whether he was ſworn then or not I ca not ſay.

Court. The words aſſigned as perju are, "That he never made any comp

“ tion with his creditors, but had paid
“ them the full money, twenty ſhillings
“ in the pound.”

MARY HOLMES ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Do you remember Mr. James being at Guildhall?——I do.

Do you remember whether he was ſworn or not?——Yes he was.

What happened after he was ſworn?—Mr. Wells's Council ſaid Mr. George was inſolvent, and Mr. James ſtarted up and ſaid he was not inſolvent, then the Council ſaid he made a compoſition with his creditors, and he ſaid he never made any compoſition with his creditors.

Court. Was he ſworn before he ſaid ſo?——Yes.

Mr. Fielding. Do you remember the words, “ or at leaſt Mr. Dublois did for him?”——Yes.

Then he gave the Court to underſtand that Mr. Dublois had actually ſettled with his creditors?——Yes.

BLOIS DU BLOIS ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Do you remember Richard George?—Yes.

Do you know Mr. James?—I have ſeen him once or twice, I have no acquaintance with him, there was a meeting of the creditors, I did not attend them, I believe George was in very low circumſtances, he was obliged to make an aſſignment of his effects.

Has any compoſition been made?——There was a compoſition of eight ſhillings in the pound, which I paid amongſt the principal part of his creditors, but I do not know that any of them were paid their whole debts except one man who arreſted him.

Who was his attorney then?——Mr. James I believe, he attended with him ſeveral times in order to make up his affairs.

Mr. Fielding. You had ſome opinion of George yourſelf?—Certainly.

And you paid the compoſition?——Yes.

Mr. Sylveſter. In the account did Mr. George include the ſixteen pounds due to him from Wells?—I never ſaw his name in my liſt.

Mr. Fielding. Have you got the aſſignment here?——I have not, it is with Mr. Barnard the attorney, I thought I had it, I am glad I had not, if I had, I ſhould have loſt it as I was burnt out.

Court. Was Mr. James privy to this ſettlement?—He attended ſeveral times to get the aſſignment, and afterwards he attended with me for Mr. Barnard.

Did he know there was a compoſition of eight ſhillings in the pound, or any other compoſition made with George's creditors?—Mr. James came with George to me, and George told me how his affairs were, that he wiſhed to make an aſſignment of his effects; James came along with him then.

Court. Did George ſay any thing in the preſence or hearing of James about making a compoſition; for an aſſignment and a compoſition are two very different things; an aſſignment of effects may produce twenty ſhillings in the pound, a compoſition is an agreement for debts: does it therefore appear from any fact that Mr. James knew that George had made a compoſition with his creditors, do you know whether Mr. James knew of a compoſition of eight ſhillings in the pound?—I have every reaſon to believe that Mr. James was privy to the compoſition, becauſe he attended with Mr. George for that purpoſe.

For what purpoſe?——For making the aſſignment.

—Aye, that is the thing I mention?—The compoſition was mentioned in the aſſignment.

Court. We muſt ſee the aſſignment, you ſay George paid one creditor twenty ſhillings in the pound?—I believe he did.

Did Mr. James know it?

Mr. James. I was concerned in it?—I cannot tell, I only ſuppoſe he did by being Mr. George's attorney.

Mr. Fielding. (A paper ſhewn him.) Is that your hand writing Mr. Dublois ?—— Yes.

TIMOTHY FISHER ſworn.

What are you ?—A linen-draper at Holborn Bridge.

Do you know George ?——Yes, he was an upholſterer in 1781, he owed me money, it was about October, we met at the Half-moon Tavern, before which it was agreed we ſhould take eight ſhillings in the pound, I received two notes for the eight ſhillings; I never received more ; I have ſeen Mr. James, I have no acquaintance with him.

Was he at the meeting at the Half-moon Tavern ?—I believe he was.

Did you ſee him after that ?—I cannot ſay ; I have ſeen him within this month, for he has called upon me merely to aſk me concerning this matter.

Mr. Fielding. Do you know Mr. Wells ?—No.

Mr. George was an upholſterer was not he ?—Yes.

Do you recollect with certainty, whether Mr. James was at that meeting or not ?—I believe he was the perſon that was to ſettle the matter, I think he was there, but I cannot be ſure.

HENRY LADYMAN ſworn.

I was one of the creditors of Mr. George, we met at the Half Moon.

Was Mr. James preſent ?—I really do not recollect, but I think he was, I did not charge my memory.

What was the compoſition to be ?—Eight ſhillings in the pound.

Did you ever receive more than that ?—No, never.

What year was this in ?—One thouſand ſeven hundred and eighty-one.

Court. You have not fully explained to me, in what manner this evidence of Mr. James was material to the cauſe that was trying in George againſt Wells.

Mr. Sylveſter. George looked upon this not to be a debt due to him, and therefore he had no right to pay it, there was a note of Wells's to George of twenty pounds, which he had been defrauded of, that was not ſtanding againſt Wells ; George agrees this ſixteen pounds, which Wells owed him, ſhould remain in his hands.

Court. That remained in his hands equally whether George had made a compoſition or not.

Mr. Baldwin. I was in Court, my Lord Mansfield ſaid it was not material.

——— BALDWIN Eſq; ſworn.

I only wiſh to inform the Court how the cauſe ſtood, this was an action brought by George againſt Wells, to recover a ſum of money due to him for a debt in trade, ſometime before this George had applied to Wells, telling him he could get caſh on his note, he had indulged him with a note of his, though I believe the debt was not then due ; George put this note into the hands of ſome Jews, he never could get any thing for his note, which Wells had given him ; the note got amongſt many others into the hands of Sharp, an action was brought againſt Wells by Sharp, Mr. George took up the defence and ſaid he would defend that ſuit ; this man in defending this action expended about the ſum of ninety pounds ; Sharp did not ſucceed in his cauſes, of courſe Sharp got non-proſſed ; the note is now in the hands of Mr. Welch, attorney, concerned for Sharp ; now George ſays to Wells, it is time you ſhould pay me your debt ; you never will be called upon ; Sharp has ran away ; I have expended ninety pounds in defending it : now whether George had made a compoſition or not, it had nothing at all to do with it ; this was rather a converſation that paſſed between Sharp and James, who fooliſhly enough entered into converſation on the ſubject.

Mr. Sylveſter. Was not Mr. James a witneſs ?——I do not know ; he ſtood by ; it is very likely he was.

Mr. Sylveſter. Lord Mansfield's words were theſe ; can either of you ſwear there is no ſuch tranſaction ?—I do not remember that.

Mr. Fielding. My Lord Mansfield ſaid it has nothing at all to do with the caſe.

Court. I will tell you on each ſide, how far I conceive it is material in trials of this kind, the ground on which I conceive it to be material and neceſſary, that the point on which the perjury is aſſigned, ſhould be material to the point in iſſue in the cauſe; for it goes to the queſtion of the perjury being wilful and corrupt, for it is not to be preſumed that a man would incur the guilt and penalties of perjury for that which could have no benefit, and for which he could have no motive: it ſhould be in ſome degree more or leſs material to the point in queſtion, if I am right in that view of conſidering it, it is not neceſſary that the fact given in evidence ſhould be really and truly material to the queſtion, but ſuch a fact as might appear to the witneſs to be material to the queſtion at the time.

Mr. Fielding. Here they have laid it as an averment, that this is material to that point, therefore the materiality is a fact neceſſary to be eſtabliſhed: the indictment ſays, it became a material queſtion, whether the ſaid George was ever inſolvent or ever made any compoſition with his creditors, or whether the ſaid creditors had ever been paid their full debts.

Court. They muſt ſupport that part, ſuppoſing it is conſidered in this point of view, whether it may not be conſidered as material to the defence meant to be ſet up; that he had got a conſent and permiſſion to retain that debt as an indemnity for him, againſt that outſtanding note; that was the general ſhort nature of the defence intended to be ſet up; then was it not material to ſhew that he was in inſolvent circumſtances, and that therefore the defendant could have no other indemnity that would be ſatisfactory to him.

Court to Mr. Sylveſter. We have at preſent no evidence of the defence that was opened on the queſtion that was tried, all that is admitted is, that a cauſe was tried between George and Wells.

Mr. Sylveſter. We will now call William Wells.

Mr. Fielding. He cannot be a witneſs, for there is no final judgment ſigned.

Court. No; and if it was a point material he would be entitled to a new trial; if this is material the effect of it will be a new trial; if not, the defendant cannot be convicted.

ANN WELLS ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Was you preſent in Court when the cauſe was tried between George and Wells?

Yes, I heard Counſellor Power ſay George was inſolvent; Mr. James ſaid he was not; he made no compoſition; he paid all his creditors their full money; twenty ſhillings in the pound; or, at leaſt, Mr. Dublois paid it for him; I recollect that Counſellor Power ſaid, how do you know that, and Mr. James ſaid, becauſe I have been concerned in the buſineſs all through.

Court. What was the defence that Counſellor Power ſet up for Mr. Wells?—I do not recollect exactly; I have a notion it was, that he had given this note to indemnify him; I recollect now, it was this, that he was liable ſtill to this note; upon which Mr. Welch, who was in Court, ſaid he had the note, but it was good for nothing: Lord Mansfield aſked Mr. Welch to give up the note; he ſaid, he did not think himſelf juſtified in doing it.

Mr. Baldwin. I believe the cauſe was over; my Lord Mansfield had decided in his own mind; the Jury had not found a verdict.

Mr. Sylveſter to Ann Wells. Do not you recollect the defence was, that he could have no other ſecurities; George being an inſolvent man?—I cannot recollect; Mr. Welch is the proper perſon to give you that, he knew what defence he meant to ſet up.

Court to Proſecutor. Have you any farther evidence?—No, only Mr. Wells the defendant in that cauſe.

Court. Certainly not.

Mr. Fielding. Gentlemen of the Jury, I am to ſolicit your attention to the caſe of the defendant, Mr. James, who now ſtands before you, and I truſt you will give me credit when I aſſert, that if I ſtood up as the advocate for a man who I thought had been guilty of perjury, I ſhould feel myſelf extremely awkward, and extremely embarraſſed in offering any ſort of apology for that crime; but I do promiſe you, that I feel myſelf in a very different ſituation here, I feel myſelf addreſſing you on the part of a man who has been extremely improperly indeed brought before you, under the weight of an accuſation which reflects as little credit on Mr. Wells as a matter can well do. The parties who were concerned at firſt, Mr. Wells and Mr. George, they had ſome tranſactions together, and Mr. Wells was indebted to Mr. George in a ſum of money, and George deſired Wells to give him a note which he would get diſcounted if poſſible; he parted with it, and he could get no money for it, therefore the note was outſtanding; in this ſituation he applies to Wells, tells him the manner in which this note had been got poſſeſſion of, and concludes he will hear of it; but ſays he, do not pay it; I will take upon myſelf all the expence that ſhall be incurred, therefore, I will now give you this indemnity againſt all the eventual expence of that buſineſs; he gives him therefore two notes, one of ſixteen pounds, to remain in his cuſtody as an indemnification: the note is afterwards put in ſuit by a Mr. Sharp; the action is defended; Mr. George himſelf is at the expence of all this; Sharp abſconds, a non proſs is ſigned, and there is an end of that action; Mr. Wells during this time had not been a ſhilling out of pocket, not a ſixpence, and therefore the notes ought to have been returned; but after this there was a bill due, for the firſt note that Wells had given to George being good for nothing, that could not be taken as a payment for the goods; Wells ſtood indebted to George, therefore George ſays to him, deliver up my note and pay me; he held him at arms length, which obliged George to bring an action; upon this action Wells pleads a ſett-off, and gives in evidence theſe two notes, given to him merely to anſwer the purpoſe of indemnification; but it ſo happened, that at the very time Mr. George gave theſe two notes to Wells for an indemnification, Wells gave him a memorandum, and that memorandum we are in poſſeſſion of; ſo that the queſtion of compoſition, or ſolvency, or inſolvency, were perfectly immaterial in that queſtion, and being defeated in this, corrupt as it was in Wells, to think of ſetting of any thing like theſe notes, you are not at all ſurprized at this matter being followed up with all the animoſity and vindictiveneſs that could poſſibly be ingrafted on ſuch a cauſe; Mr. James had ſome ſolicitude about his client, he had no motive, he had no intereſt, he merely ſtood up by way of converſation between him and Mr. Bower; Mr. Bower aſſerted, that he had made a compoſition, although that was perfectly immaterial to the buſineſs, but Council very frequently ſtate things which are perfectly immaterial; Mr. Bower ſays, did not he make a compoſition? No, ſays he, or if he did, Mr. Dublois made it for him; the very anſwer goes to this, that he could not ſay there was no compoſition, becauſe he acknowledged there had been one, for that Mr. Dublois had made one; Dublois knew nothing of James, therefore, if George had intruſted Mr. James to ſettle for him to a certain amount, Mr. James might very well ſay that in Court; Lord Mansfield would not hear James; but the converſation between Mr. James and Mr. Bower was perfectly immaterial: now they have averred that this was a material matter before the Court, and they have not proved it. As for Mr. James the defendant, he has gone through life with unimpeached integrity, and it would not therefore be ſufficient for me to cloſe with mentioning any defect in their evidence, without ſubmitting the caſe to you; you have heard Mr. Baldwin, and it ſeems a little ſingular, that the two firſt witneſſes, one of which is Mrs. Wells, a relation, ſhould be brought here to bolſter up a cauſe like this; the manner in which she has given her teſtimony, the affectation as to her memory of what I am ſure no one of you would have affected to remember——

Court. I do not think Mr. Fielding that you ſtand in a ſituation that I ought to allow you to throw any imputation on the witneſſes.

Mr. Wells, Attorney for the Proſecution. I aſſure your Lordſhip there was nothing malicious in the proſecution.

Court. I am ſure if you was concerned in it, Mr. Wells, there was not.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, being of opinion, that in point of law it is material for the proſecutor of this indictment to prove this that was alledged in the indictment, which is, that the facts that were the ſubject of this indictment were material to the cauſe upon the trial on which this perjury was ſuppoſed to be committed; but the proſecutor, upon whom it is incumbent, not being able to prove in a diſtinct or clear manner what the queſtion in that cauſe ſo tried really was, I am of opinion, that in point of law, they fail in proof of material allegation, which it is neceſſary for them to prove; therefore I ſhall abſtain from giving any opinion whatever on the merits of the caſe.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Recorder.

* William Corne ſerved on the trial of George Barrington in the room of William Jackſon.

230. JOHN JARRETT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of January laſt, one paper hat-box value 6d. and one woman's chip hat covered with ſilk value 2s. the property of James Bell.

James Bell and John Dowſe called on their recognizances, and not appearing, the priſoner was ACQUITTED.

A copy of the indictment ordered on the motion of Mr. Sylveſter.

231. WILLIAM MARTIN, otherwiſe THOMAS BANKS, was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Charles Peavey, about the hour of twelve in the night, on the 18th day of February laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein two large copper boilers value 21s. one ſmall copper kettle value 7s. and one hempen ſack value 1s. the property of the ſaid Charles.

CHARLES PEAVEY ſworn.

I live at Whitton, in the pariſh of Twickenham, on the 18th of February laſt, I was in poſſeſſion of two large boiling pots and a kettle.

Court. Where were they?—They were in the waſh-houſe, the back part of the houſe, which joins to the houſe.

Is it under the ſame roof?——Yes.

When did you laſt ſee theſe articles?—I ſaw them in the evening, but I cannot tell what time of the day; the next morning, before ſix, the ſervant girl came and informed me the houſe was broke open, I got up immeditely and obſerved the wall was broke by the ſide of the door, and the door of the waſh-houſe was open.

Had you made any obſervation on that part of your houſe before you went to bed?——No, I went to bed that night by a little after ſeven.

Did you loſe any thing elſe?——Yes, I loſt a ſack, with my name at full length, Charles Peavey, Whitton.

What reaſon have you to ſuſpect the priſoner at the bar?——On the Thurſday in the afternoon a man came to me from Kenſington Gravel-pits, who was a conſtable, his name is Thomas Collis.

Do you know the priſoner?——I have ſeen him before, he is an inhabitant of Iſleworth.

REBECCA GROVE ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor, I was laſt up in the houſe; I ſaw the door faſt, and the porridge pots ſafe; the wall was ſafe and not broke down, it was as uſual at eight in the evening.

What does your family conſiſt of?——Three men ſervants and me, and my maſter and miſtreſs.

What time did you go to bed?—About a quarter after eight.

Court. It was dark then?—Yes, there were two bolts to the waſh-houſe door but no lock; the front door was locked.

Court. And the houſe was in perfect ſecurity as uſual?——Yes.

Court. Did you get up firſt in the morning?——No, the men were up firſt, but they went out the contrary way to that door.

Court. Is there any other communication to your houſe except by the front door and the waſh-houſe door?——Yes, Sir, through the hall.

You may go into that hall and get out of the houſe without having any communication with the waſh-houſe?——Yes.

Was that hall door faſt?——Yes, I got up a quarter before ſix.

Court. Did you go immediately into the waſh-houſe?——Yes.

What did you obſerve there?——I obſerved the wall broke down and the door unfaſtened, it was not quite open, but the bolts were puſhed back.

Where you obſerved the wall broke down could a man get in?—Yes, and they might unbolt the waſh-houſe door; I turned myſelf round and miſſed the two portidge pots and a kettle, and the covers belonging to them; I immediately told my maſter and miſtreſs.

JAMES COLLIS ſworn.

I am a baker and conſtable, at Kenſington Gravel-pits; I know no farther than Mr. Shares, a cowkeeper, and Aldridge who keeps the plow, came to inform me there was a ſuſpicious perſon who had got ſome pots at the houſe; that was the priſoner; I went to him and aſked him how he came by them things.

Court. What had the priſoner in his poſſeſſion when you went to him?——He had two pots in a ſack; and one was too big to go in.

Are you ſure it was the priſoner?—Yes; I aſked him how he came by that property;

he behaved very inſolent, and would not tell me, I told him I would take him to a place where he ſhould tell, with that he talked of going to law with me, and entering an action againſt me for ſtopping him with his own property; I took him to Bow-ſtreet about two hours and a half after.

(The ſack and pots produced and depoſed to by the Proſecutor and his maid.)

——— ALDRIDGE ſworn.

I keep the Plow, at Kenſington Gravel-pits; the priſoner was in my tap-room, in the morning between ſix and ſeven o'clock, when I came down ſtairs; Mr. Shares came to my room door and informed me he thought ſome goods were there that was ſtolen; I came down and the large pot was outward; the ſack was inſide out; I ſaid, where are you going with them pots? ſays he, what is that to you; he would not tell me; I went to the conſtable and brought him over, he would give no anſwer, and was very inſolent; he threatened to puniſh us; I told him I would cut the ſack; the ſack was inſide out, and there was Mr. Peavey's name upon the outſide of it, I have known a great many years.

Court. Are you ſure that theſe things were brought there by the priſoner?—Yes.

JAMES SHARES ſworn.

I am a cow-keeper; I live juſt by Mr. Aldridge; I was going by on Thurſday morning, and ſaw theſe pots ſtanding at the door; I went into the houſe, and the priſoner came out and owned the pots, this was juſt before ſeven o'clock in the morning, I am ſure it was the priſoner; I went up and called the landlord, as I ſuſpected the priſoner, and he went for a conſtable.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I found the things in a ditch coming to London that morning.

Court. Have you any witneſſes here?—No; I was brought here laſt night, and I had no time.

Have you any witneſſes to your character?—No, nobody knows any thing of it.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, you are firſt to judge whether this houſe was broke open in the night time, which is neceſſary to conſtitute a burglary, the woman went to bed at a quarter after eight, that is the night certainly; and the property is found at Kenſington Gravel-pits, between ſix and ſeven o'clock in the morning, therefore theſe things muſt have been taken away in the intermediate time, now you are to judge at this ſeaſon of the year, whether it was in the night; the diſtance is near ten miles.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

232. WILLIAM WHITE was indicted for that he, on the 1ſt of February, about the hour of eight in the night of the ſame day, being in the dwelling houſe of Abraham Iſrael, one ſet of cotton bed window curtains, value 40s. the property of the ſaid Abraham, feloniouſly did ſteal, take, and carry away; and that he the ſaid William White afterwards, to wit, on the ſame day, and at the ſame time, feloniouſly did break the ſaid dwelling houſe to get out of the ſame.

ABRAHAM ISRAEL ſworn.

I live in Little May's-buildings, St. Martin's-lane; on Sunday was three weeks, the priſoner came into my houſe at the ſtreet door, which was open, between ſeven and eight o'clock in the evening; I ſat in my little parlour, and I heard ſomebody ſtep up ſtairs in my room; I took the candle and went up ſtairs, and when I came upon the ſtairs, I ſaw the door of the room over me open, ſo I went down ſtairs again and ſhut the ſtreet door, and hallooed out for aſſiſtance; I was afraid to go up ſtairs.

Court. Was any body in the houſe beſides yourſelf?——Yes, lodgers; I called for aſſiſtance, and the priſoner came down ſtairs, and finding the ſtreet door locked, he went up ſtairs again, and wanted to jump out of the window.

Court. Was the window open?—I ſuppoſe he opened it.

But do you know whether it was faſt or no?——I cannot tell; I did not venture into the room; I waited for people to aſſiſt me; they came and ſaw the priſoner out of the window upon the tiles; I ſuppoſe he was afraid to jump; when I ſaw the people come, I opened the ſtreet door to let them in to help me take the man, they took him half off upon the ſtairs; that was the priſoner; when we came into the room the bed was laid together upon the bedſtead, and the furniture was taken half off from the bedſtead.

Court. Was there any thing moved from the room?——No.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, in the firſt place this is a crime as charged in the indictment which the law has made equal to burglary, but in this caſe here had been no breaking at all; he came in by the ſtreet door, and got out by a window, which the proſecutor does not know but it was open: the next thing charged here is, that he ſtole a pair of bed curtains, now you hear he had got them half off, but they were not all removed; if they had been ſeparated from the bed and had been removed but a foot, that would have been a felony; but in this caſe it is not ſo; therefore in point of law, the evidence does not ſupport this indictment.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

233. DANIEL CLARK was indicted for feloniouſly and burglariouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Richard Garrett, between the hours of four and ſeven in the afternoon on the 2d day of February laſt, no perſon being therein, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein thirty-ſix yards of linen bed furniture value 40s. three pair of linen ſheets value 30s. ſeven linen ſhirts value 20s. ſixteen muſlin neckcloths value 16s. two linen nightcaps value 2s. one pair of worſted ſtockings value 12d. one pair of ſilk ſtockings value 5s. one pair of ſilk gloves value 6d. two linen handkerchiefs value 2s. one ſilk handkerchief value 1s. one cloth coat value 20s. two cloth waiſtcoats value 10s. one pair of breeches value 10s. one pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles value 3s. one pair of ſtone ſhoe buckles ſet in ſilver value 3s. one ſilver watch value 40s. one other ſilver watch value 20s. a ſilver pint mug value 50s. three ſilver table ſpoons value 30s. and ſix ſilver tea ſpoons value 6s. the property of the ſaid Richard.

I live in Holywell-ſtreet, Shoreditch; I left my houſe about four in the afternoon on the 2d of February, I returned about eleven at night; I am ſure the houſe was faſt and double locked when I went out, there was nobody left in the houſe; when I firſt put the key in the outſide gate I found it had been opened, the bar was down and the ſtreet door wide open; it was quite light; I pulled to the door and called in the watchman, and we found the front door forced open, and the lock wrenched, and the ſtaple forced away, it was wrenched out, and the locks up two pair of ſtairs were all open; I loſt all my wearing apparel, except what I have on my back now; I loſt all the things mentioned in the indictment.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Proſecution. What was the value of all the things you loſt, have you made any calculation?——I cannot rightly tell; the mug and ſpoons about 3l. two pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles value 10s.

JOHN ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I am a conſtable, on the 2d of February, between ſix and ſeven at night, Mr. Harper and me, the officers for Shoreditch, were walking along, and we ſaw the priſoner, and Harper ſays to me, here comes Daniel Clark; ſays I he has ſome property upon him; as ſoon as he ſaw us, he tried to avoid us; we let him paſs; he came to the place called Dirty-lane, he turned up there with his face to the wall and his back to us, as if going to make water, and I think he ſaid, what is the matter, Sir; I ſaid, nothing, do not be alarmed; when he ſaw the other come up, he threw down the bundle and ran away, there was a woman at a houſe door, and he puſhed a perſon on one ſide and ran in, and he immediately ſhut the door; the other officer came up to the door and ſaid, where is the man that came in here? ſays the woman he came in and ſaid for God's ſake, ſave me, hide me, and ſo I opened my back door and he is gone; I then went out, and there were two walls, and he had got over two doors, and we found him in another woman's cellar; a woman came out from another houſe, and begged we would come in for there was a man in the cellar; ſays I, that is the man, we will take you to a magiſtrate; the other officer was in company, and we took him to Juſtice Wilmot's, the Juſtice was not at home, and the priſoner wanted to leave a ſum of money for his appearance, he wanted to go to the watch-houſe, but my brother officer had known him ſome years, and ſaid, he would take him to gaol, the next morning the proſecutor came to Juſtice Wilmot's, the property was produced, and he ſwore to it.

Jury. You ſaw the things fall from the man?—I ſaw him throw them down.

——— HARPER ſworn.

I can only repeat what Mr. Armſtrong has told you, I knew the priſoner, and he did not, I ſaid, here is Daniel Clark, ſays he, do you know any thing of him, yes, ſays I, I do; he went to him and talked to him, I heard them talking together, and he threw down a bundle.

Court. Did you ſee him throw down the bundle?—Yes.

What did you do with it?—I have kept it in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, this is the ſame.

(The things produced and depoſed to.)

Court to Proſecutor. Can you take upon yourſelf to ſwear whether the things were or were not there when you went out?——Yes, my Lord, they were all there, and the door locked.

Court. What was the value of all you loſt?—About ten pounds.

Have you any linen bed furniture here?—No, only a few ſhirts, and neckcloths, and one pair of ſheets.

Priſoner. There were a hundred people in this yard, and they ſaid, this is the man, and that is the man, and the other is the man; and I was brought out of the houſe, and then they ſaid I was the man.

Court to Harper. Did you ever charge any other man with being the man?—No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was drinking at a public houſe, I was never out ten minutes from three o'clock in the afternoon, till this affair happened, I have not a ſoul here, I have a liſt of the people to my character, there is the man at the public houſe, that they know, that came and took his oath that I was at his houſe, there was a great many people in the houſe, that will ſwear I was not out of the houſe ten minutes in the courſe of the time.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen: Upon indictments of this ſort, there are in general three queſtions very material to be attended to, the firſt is, as to the fact of breaking into the houſe, and to that Mr. Garret ſays he left the houſe perfectly ſecure when he went out, and when he came home the door was broke open, the lock forced, and the ſtaple wrenched out, if that be ſo, it muſt have been done by force, then there is no doubt but the houſe was actually broke open; the next queſtion is, whether there was any perſon in the houſe at the time, to that you have the proſecutor's evidence alſo: the next queſtion is, as to the value; now where the houſe is broke open in the day time no perſon being in it, it makes a very material difference as to the degree of guilt and the degree of puniſhment, for if the value does exceed five ſhillings, in that caſe it is capital; the articles now produced are much above that ſum, and therefore, if you are ſatisfied with this evidence, you will find the priſoner guilty, if not, you will acquit him.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

234. JOHN DAVISON, BENJAMIN BARLOW (a child ten years old) and DANIEL LOVE were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of James Barkley, on the 26th day of January laſt, about the hour of one in the night, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one black bombazeen gown and petticoat, value 5s. one ſilk cloak, value 6s. one ſhift body, value 3d. four pair of linen ſleeves, value 1s. two linen aprons, value 2s. two check aprons, value 6d. three laced caps, value 3s. one ſilver tea ſpoon, value 1s. one muſlin ſhawl, value 1s. one ſilk handkerchief, value 3s. one black ſilk apron, value 1s. the property of Jane Box; one linen ſtock, value 6d. two linen table cloths, value 10s. one ſilver table ſpoon, value 4s. one cotton bed gown, value 1s. one ſhaul, value 1s. and one linen apron, value 1s. the property of the ſaid James Barkley. And two linen aprons, value 6d. the property of Eleanor Clegg, ſpinſter.

JAMES BARKLEY ſworn.

I live in Lower Brook-ſtreet, Groſvenor Square; I am a houſe-keeper; on the 26th of January laſt, I loſt ſeveral things out of my houſe, the night preceding, I went up to bed about twelve o'clock, and carried my ſhop-books with me; I made no obſervation of my houſe being faſt, me, and my wife, and a maid, and a man, and an apprentice, were in the houſe; I cannot tell who was up laſt, I aroſe about half paſt ſeven, when I came down ſtairs I obſerved ſome drawers on a chair in the parlour, which were brought out of the front ſhop, and were there when I went to bed; I carried them into the ſhop again, and the maid came crying up ſtairs, and ſaid, we were robbed, I went down ſtairs, and the back kitchen window was ſtanding ſtraight out, with the line puſhed ſtrait out, I went up ſtairs, but I miſſed nothing then; afterwards the patrols came to me with a ſilver ſpoon, and the inventory of the things which they had taken to the watch-houſe, I do not know what I loſt.

JANE BOX ſworn.

I am aunt to the proſecutor's wife, I loſt the things mentioned to be mine in the indictment.

What were the value of thoſe things?—About a guinea, the things are in Court, the patrols produce them.

Were theſe things in the houſe the night before?—Yes.

Was you the laſt perſon up?—No.

JOHN DISNEY ſworn.

I have an inventory of the things that are took, I am one of the patrol of St. George's Pariſh, Hanover Square, on the 27th of January, as my partner and me were upon duty, going up Oxford-road, near Groſvenor Square, we met three boys coming down, one of them had a bundle, which is Daviſon; this is the bundle, we ſeized him with the bundle; the other two, to the beſt of my knowledge and belief are the ſame but I cannot poſitively ſwear to them, I ſwear to Daviſon.

You took the bundle from him?—Yes; I aſked him where he had been at that hour in the morning, he ſaid, he had been up to Hammerſmith, I aſked him what he had in the bundle, he ſaid, foul linen, he was taking them to his mother's, ſhe was a laundreſs, I took them to the watch houſe, and found the bundle quite different to what he had ſaid, I aſked him when we got to the watch-houſe, who the other two were, and he ſaid, he met them on the road, and they gave him a ſhilling to carry the bundle, the other two ran away.

Has the bundle been in your cuſtody ever ſince?—Yes, ever ſince.

(The things produced and depoſed in Court to Proſecutor.

Will you take upon yourſelf to ſwear that theſe things were in the houſe that night?—Yes.

ELEANOR CLEGG ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor, I went to bed about twelve o'clock, I examined the houſe, it was all faſt; the next morning about eight, I found it broke open and the kitchen door was wide open.

Who was firſt up?—The apprentice got up before, but he did not know the houſe was robbed.

Might not the apprentice have opened it?—No, Sir.

Is he here?—No, I obſerved the kitchen poker lay on the dreſſer, I went into the back kitchen, and the tinder-box lay on the table, it was not there the night before, it was in the work ſhop, there were two or three window sbroke, one window was in the middle of the kitchen in the wall, and was not made to open, ſome of the iron was broke, any little boy could get in, this window looked into the fore kitchen.

Had that window any communication with the outward door?—No.

Then a perſon from the outſide could not break that, they muſt have got in before?——They got in at the back kitchen window.

How was that broke?——It was pulled out half way, any perſon might have acceſs through that window, I obſerved the window to be faſt when I bolted the back kitchen door the night before; I went up and told my maſter in the ſhop.

Did you ſearch whether any thing had been taken away?——Not juſt then, I did not, I loſt two aprons. (The aprons depoſed to.) Theſe aprons were with the other things for the purpoſe of being waſhed.

JANE BARKLEY ſworn.

I am wife to the proſecutor, I went to bed about twelve o'clock, I ſaw the girl bolt the back kitchen door, and we went to bed, and in the morning my huſband came up and informed me that the houſe was broke open, then I came down, and the firſt thing I ſaw was the poker laying on the dreſſer with which I ſuppoſe they had got into the front kitchen, I could almoſt get in myſelf, there was a bottle with ſome phyſic in it, and a glaſs without a foot, I ſuppoſe they had been taſting it, thinking it was ſome liquor; I ſuppoſe they did not get out the ſame way that they came in, I believe one of them got in at the kitchen door and went and unbolted it, I only loſt a ſhaul which is here, and a bed gown, and an apron, a pair of ſtockings, and a table ſpoon, I have the fellow of it in my pocket now.

(The table ſpoon produced by Diſney, which he found at the lodgings of the Priſoner Love.

THOMAS UNDERHILL ſworn.

I am the other patrol, we met the three priſoners about three o'clock in the morning, the lower end of Brook's-ſtreet, Groſvenor Square; the priſoner Daviſon had this bundle on his back, we ſtopped and aſked him what he had there, he ſaid ſome dirty linen, that his mother was a laundreſs, and he was going to take it to his lodgings; I told him to go with us, I took him to the watch houſe, the other two ran away.

PRISONER DAVISON'S DEFENCE.

They promiſed me that I ſhould be an evidence, if I would tell who the other two were.

Court to Daviſon. Have you any thing to ſay to the fact?—No.

PRISONER BARLOW'S DEFENCE.

I know nothing at all of it.

PRISONER LOVE'S DEFENCE.

I work at the carpenter's buſineſs, I rented a room, and went to bed at half paſt nine, and this little lad came in and went to bed along with me, he ſaid, he was locked out; I have known his mother ſome years, and ſhe knew my mother, and he got up at twelve o'clock, he ſaid, he was going home, and was affraid his mother would lick him if he lay out all night, he went, and about ſix in the morning he came in, and ſaid, he had been walking the ſtreets all night, and that he could not go home for he was affraid, and he lay down again, and the patrol came and ſearched the room, and found a table ſpoon, and I was quite aſtoniſhed when it was found.

Priſoner Daviſon. I have friends enough, but they did not know I ſhould be tried to day.

Jury. Is there nobody comes after that child, Benjamin Barlow.

Mr. Akerman. There is a hard working woman his mother, that comes after the child.

JOHN DAVISON, GUILTY, Death.

BENJAMIN BARLOW, } NOT GUILTY
DANIEL LOVE, }

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

235. GEORGE BARRINGTON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 31ſt day of January laſt, one ſilk purſe, value 2s. ten pieces of gold coin of this realm, called guineas, value 10l. 10s. and one piece of gold coin of this realm, called a half guinea, value 10s. 6d. the property of Sir Godfrey Webſter, Baronet, privily from his perſon.

(The Priſoner challenged William Jackſon as one of the Jury, on which account William Corke was ſworn in his ſtead.)

Sir GODFREY WEBSTER ſworn.

On Saturday, the 31ſt of January laſt, about half after ten o'clock, ſoon after the opera was over, I was attempting to get into the tea room, but there was ſuch a prodigious number of people, and the room was ſo crowded, I could not get in without great inconvenience; I leaned againſt the door way; I had a new gold watch chain, which had caught on a lady's clothes, and I took it in my hand to put it into my fob, in doing which, I felt a ſilk purſe in my pocket, which contained a fifty guinea note of Hamerſley's and ten guineas and a half; a part of my hand reſted ſlightly on this purſe, and barely touched it; I felt in half a minute a perſon lean againſt my right ſhoulder, which was next the paſſage; that was the priſoner; I looked him ſteadily in the face, and while I was ſo doing I felt a gentle pulſation juſt above my right cuff; I thought it was ſingular that any body could be ſo cold to tremble at the opera; in a very few ſeconds after, I perceived my purſe was gone; my Lord Weſtmorland was ſtanding by me, and I told him I was robbed; that perſon that leaned againſt me had walked away.

Court. Did not you perceive your purſe go out of your pocket?——No, I did not.

What was there in your purſe?—There was a fifty guinea note of Hamerſley's, payable at ſight, and ten guineas and a half in gold; from feeling the purſe in my pocket a very few ſeconds before that perſon leaned againſt me, and miſſing it a very few ſeconds after he walked away from me, and before he was out of my ſight, I was thoroughly convinced he was the perſon that took it; had I known his name and his former character I ſhould without the leaſt heſitation have ſeized him on the ſpot, but his dreſs and his appearance put him externally ſo much above committing a crime of that ſort, and not wiſhing to make a riot and buſtle in a publick place, I reſolved not to diſturb the ſociety at that inſtant, but to follow him; I followed him from the paſſage door where I ſtood by the outward lobby, between twenty and thirty feet to the outward lobby where the ſtove is, and where the money is received from people that come to the opera; he turned into the inner lobby that leads to the front boxes to the right; he there addreſſed himſelf to a little man in a dark brown, or a ſnuff coloured ſuit of cloaths, and I think laid hold of his arm, as I do of Sir Robert Taylor's now, and ſaid, is the carriage ready; whether that perſon made any reply to him or not I really cannot take upon me to ſay, he then turned ſhort about, paſſed by me, and went into the outward lobby again; he then made a ſemblance of joining ſome ladies, who were going into the great hall where the ſervants were, he proceeded with them till he came to a flight of ſeven or eight ſteps which were very much crouded with ſervants who wait there, and as he deſcended the ſteps through a line of ſervants on each ſide, he rather raiſed himſelf a little as if looking for his domeſticks, and cried, are my ſervants there; the door which goes out of the opera faces the upper of the three arcades; he went through the line of ſervants, but inſtead of proceeding ſtrait forwards which he ſhould have done, he deviated to the right and went out of the center arcade; I followed him without ſaying a word, or making the leaſt geſture or hint of ſuſpicion, at the diſtance of between four to ſix feet; when he came to the centre arcade, he took rather wider ſteps acroſs the flag pavement, but he did not run; the moment he put his foot on the kirb ſtone of the pavement he ſet off, ſtooping under the pole of a carriage that had two bay horſes, into the center of the Haymarket; I purſued him down the middle of the ſtreet through the carriages, as they were going on, to very near the bottom of the Haymarket, in Pall-mall, where he attempted to throw himſelf under a coach; I threw myſelf upon him and caught him by the ſkirt of his coat; finding I laid hold of him I believe he ſaid, zounds, Sir, what do you mean, but however he ſaid, Sir, what do you mean, I am a gentleman, or words to that effect; I ſaid to him, Sir, it is an aukward thing to mention, but I think you have robbed me of my purſe, or that you have ſtole my purſe; he rather made ſome effort to get away; I took him by the collar and ſhook him, and ſaid, Sir, do not compel me to be rough with you; a great concourſe of people naturally got round us, and we were ſome how or other carried by the preſs oppoſite to Pinchbeck's, and a coach was called, which he was half way forced into, and my foot was on the ſtep, I objected to going into the coach, and ſaid, I ſhould carry him to the Opera-houſe; I did ſo; and at the Opera-houſe and frequently after, he ſaid, Sir, have a care, I am not the ſort of perſon you take me for, you will get yourſelf into a ſcrape; pray Sir, do not expoſe me; take care what you are about; but whether he ſaid it before we got to the Opera-houſe or after I cannot ſay.

Court. You had no knowledge of him before?—No, Sir, I never ſaw him before; when I took him to the Opera-houſe I aſked for the conſtable, who ſeeming to be a a ſtupid ignorant fellow, and I had my doubts whether he was quite ſober; I called to the corporal of the guard, as I wanted to find my buckle, which I had loſt, and likewiſe to caution the company there; I think the corporal's name was Bridgen; I bade him be anſwerable for him as a military man, for me, a Member of Parliament; Mr. Breadhill offered to walk up with me to the Rotation-office; I returned to the corporal and ſaid, can you ſpare me a couple of men to take this man up to the watch-houſe, he ſaid, yes, and gave me a file of ſoldiers, and I went up with him to the watch-houſe; in the way to the watch-houſe he repeatedly ſaid, Sir, have a care, you will get yourſelf into a ſcrape, I am not the perſon you take me for; I was rather irritated, and ſaid at laſt, if you have any friends that can ſpeak for you I do not wiſh to expoſe you, I will take you to a tavern or coffee-houſe, and you may ſend for your friends, but I will never quit you; upon his again repeating it, I ſaid, to him, if I have done you any injury I will beg your pardon or do any thing you wiſh; I am the laſt man in the world to do a thing of this kind unoffended; he bowed his head and made no anſwer to that; when I conducted him to St. James's watch-houſe, I gave the ſoldiers ſomething, and left him in the cuſtody of the conſtable of the night, and at the ſame time deſired him to tell me his name, which he did not refuſe, but made a ſort of waving his hand and a bow; when I had given in my own name, and he had declined giving his, I was going, not being uſed to tranſactions of this ſort; but one of the conſtables ſaid, Sir, would not you have him ſearched; the priſoner then walked up to me and ſaid, Sir, I am ſure you are a perſon of too much feeling and delicacy to have me ſearched by vulgar fellows of this ſort, my dreſs and appearance do not make that neceſſary; but however he was ſearched without the leaſt ſcruple they ſtripped him, and upon him wer found a few ſhillings, ſome papers, and lancet, which lancet I can ſwear to, and think there were a ſmall pair of compaſſes and a box of Irvin's lozenges for a cold he had on a white marcella quilted waiſtcoat, an under waiſtcoat, a new plain blue coat, black ſattin breeches, and clouded ſilk ſtockings; he was perfectly well dreſſed, and there was a ſort of bandage under his waiſtcoat: they ſearched him very minutely, even to his hair, but nothing of mine was found upon him; I went to Mr. Breadhill's houſe to get my hands and face waſhed, and a freſh pair of ſhoes, and a meſſage came there to inform me, that the perſon who robbed me was George Barrington; it ſeemed Sir Robert Taylor's ſon coming home, came paſt the watch-houſe and knew him, I returned immediately to the watch-houſe, and there I found Mr. Taylor, Sir Robert's ſon, I then gave the depoſition as nearly verbatim as I have to your Lordſhip, and ſwore to it; after the depoſition was over they aſked me when I ſhould appear againſt Barrington; I ſaid, Mr. Barrington, if that is your name, I do not wiſh to oppreſs you or any man; I do not wiſh to hurry or drive you; he made a bow and ſaid, I thank you Sir, your time is mine; I immediately ſaid, on Monday; but on Monday morning a tranſaction happened, which, whether I am to narrate or not I cannot ſay; I ſhall certainly ſubmit to the Court; it was a meſſage I received from a Mr. Mitchell, whom the magiſtrate thought proper to bind over.

Mr. Chetwood Priſoner's Council. Will your Lordſhip hear that.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. If in conſequence of that meſſage you had an interview with the priſoner afterwards, it would be evidence?——I had not any further than ſeeing him at the office in Litchfield-ſtreet.

Court. You mentioned at the door of the tea-room there was a very great crowd?——Yes.

Was there any body within your touch, or near you, that you ſuppoſe could be guilty of a fact of this kind?——There was nobody near me; there were many people to the left; the room was as full as it could be; the priſoner leaned againſt me, which I thought ſo extraordinary a thing that I looked him full in the face; my left arm was to the room which was very full, my right arm was next the paſſage, I had a little gold chain doubled up in my hand, my purſe was in my right hand pocket, I felt it not three ſeconds before that perſon leaned againſt me, and I miſſed it not three ſeconds after.

Court. There was no perſon near you but the priſoner on the left-hand ſide?——No, I fancy nobody within five or ſix feet, ſomebody might be ſtanding behind him, or retired where I could not ſee them, but I ſaw nobody but him, and he leaned againſt me.

Mr. Chetwood. Pray Sir how long had you ſtood at the door of the tea-room before you obſerved any thing at all?——I fancy about a minute and a half, I had been at the other ſide of the houſe, the tea-room is the right-hand ſide.

Did nobody paſs you in that time, Sir Godfrey?——I rather think not, I do not recollect.

They might, but nothing ſtruck you?—Nothing at all.

You ſay Sir, you had wrapped up your chain?—No, I held it looſely in my hand, my hand reſted on my pocket, and in putting my hand into my pocket, which I did when I went into the door-way, I felt my purſe.

I think you ſaid juſt now that you thought you felt your purſe?—I ſaid ſo then, but I mean to ſay now, I am ſure I felt my purſe.

Court. I took it ſo.

Mr. Chetwood. This perſon leaned againſt you?—Yes.

And you was going into the room, and was prevented by the crowd, may be you leaned againſt ſomebody?—No, I did not, there was a lady next to me, and I ſhould not lean againſt her.

You did not obſerve him do any thing?——Yes, Sir, I felt five or ſix very ſlight pulſations over my right cuff, like a perſon ſhaking.

It was a very cold night?—Yes, but it was exceedingly hot in the room.

You was not in the room?—No, in the door.

Then in the paſſage the air draws; you ſaw him move off?—Yes.

Did you keep your eye upon him?——Certainly.

And you ſaw him ſpeak to a perſon to aſk him if the carriage was ready?—I did.

Did you ever ſee that perſon afterwards?——I never ſaw him before or ſince, I ſhould not know him now, I ſaw the priſoner ſpeak to him.

What I mean is, what you may underſtand, Sir, did you obſerve him give any thing to the man, or was it poſſible he could give any thing to that man?——I am perfectly well aware of the inſidiouſneſs of that queſtion.

It is not an inſidious queſtion, Sir Godfrey; had you him in your eye all the way till he came to the door?——I did not ſee him for three or four ſeconds, I ſaw him go out of the door, and I did not ſee him for three or four ſeconds after.

Was you by when he was ſearched and nothing was found?——Yes.

From the time you miſſed your purſe, had you him ſo much in your eye all the time, that it was or was not poſſible for him to deliver any thing to that perſon?—What he gave to this perſon in the ſnuff-coloured coat I cannot take upon me to ſay, I did not ſee him give any thing; he joined ſome ladies, I did not ſee how his hands were employed at all; nothing of mine was found upon him.

Court. You ſay you did not ſee him for a few ſeconds?——No.

Are you ſure it was the ſame perſon?—I have not a ſhadow of a doubt, if I had I would not ſay it was the perſon, I am perfectly clear that was the perſon, perfectly ſure of it.

James Mitchell called, but did not appear.

Court. If in conſequence of the meſſage received from this witneſs, Sir Godfrey had found where his purſe was, it would have been evidence; but, as it is, if he was here I ſhould not examine him, therefore I ſhall not eſtreat his recognizance.

Court to Priſoner. What have you to ſay?

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: I had an opportunity to ſee the opera on this Saturday night, through the means of a performer belonging to the houſe, who received from me at the ſame time ſurgical aſſiſtance; when the opera was over, I had proceeded as far in my way home as the outward door, and I found the foot-way to the right and left ſo taken up with chairs, chairmen, and link-boys, that it appeared to me the beſt way to go ſtrait acroſs if I could; I had another reaſon for this choice; I had appointed to meet an acquaintance at the Orange coffee-houſe, it was a fine moon light night, a very ſevere froſt, and the ground in the middle of the ſtreet as dry, or drier than on the foot pavement; I had got about half way acroſs the ſtreet, when one of the many carriages which are aſſembled there on ſuch occaſions, driving very hard, obliged me to uſe my endeavours to avoid the danger of being run over, I proceeded ſome little way down the Haymarket, within about one hundred yards of the Orange coffee-houſe, when Sir Godfrey laid hold of me, I had never ſeen him before, and he charged me with having his purſe; I did not make any reſiſtance, or endeavour to avoid giving him every ſatisfaction in my power, I adviſed him to go into the coffee-houſe, and I hope I ſhall not offend in informing the Court, that he ſwore in the moſt violent manner that he would not be convinced; if I do not miſtake, he damned his heart and his blood, and expreſſions of that kind, that he would not be convinced; I was brought to the watch-houſe immediately, and when I was there, previous to my being ſearched, I told him he was miſtaken, he told me he ſuſpected me, and if he was miſtaken he would give me every ſatisfaction, he would fight me or any thing elſe; I was ſearched as you have heard, and neither his property nor the property of any other perſon was found in my poſſeſſion; you obſerve gentlemen, the proſecutor has not ſaid that I ran till I reached the outward door; he has ſaid, that after he had miſſed his purſe, he followed me firſt in the inner lobby, then into the outward lobby, from thence down the large flight of ſtone ſtairs, and then through a large ſtone hall; he followed ſo cloſe that he heard, or fancied he heard me ſay ſomething about a coach or ſervants, expreſſions which might have been made uſe of by ſome gentleman that was there, and miſtakenly attributed to me: You will perceive, Gentlemen, that in all this time of his following me, he did not accuſe or moleſt me, though it is evident, and I hope will appear to you evident, that he might have done it ten times over; I do not know whether you have been able to perceive the temper and diſpoſition of the proſecutor; but this is certain, that he is fiery and hot, and of that I could give many convincing proofs; you will be the beſt judge, whether if his ſuſpicions were well grounded, he would not have charged me on the ſpot, and taken me into cuſtody; as to my running, I hope it may be accounted for, the coldneſs of the night, or a deſire of being home by times, may induce a perſon to make more than ordinary ſpeed: This is my caſe, and I moſt humbly hope that the Court will hear me with patience; it is not my intereſt or my inclination to offend any perſon in this honorable Court, and if I ſhould happen to let drop any expreſſion which may not be ſtrictly proper, I truſt it will not be conſtrued into an offence, but that it will be imputed to ariſe from that anxiety and deſire of vindication, which every man in my unhappy ſituation muſt naturally feel. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you were to be aſked whether any rumour or report to my diſadvantage had reached your ears, unconnected with the preſent, you would perhaps ſay yes; if you were aſked again, whether you would ſuffer yourſelves to be influenced in the ſmalleſt degree by ſuch a rumour or report, I am ſure you would with one voice cry God forbid! I truſt therefore, Gentlemen, that no inſinuations, or rumour, or ſuggeſtions, from what channel ſoever you may have received them, will induce you to deprive me of life, or to condemn me without clear and ſubſtantial proof; but as prejudice from ſuch reports, will ſometimes penetrate into the minds of the beſt and wiſeſt, and make an impreſſion before they themſelves are aware, of it, you will do well, Gentlemen, and I moſt humbly and earneſtly beg of you, before you determine your verdict on this occaſion, to aſk yourſelves one queſtion; would you on the evidence you have now heard, condemn any other perſon of whom you had never heard any thing before the preſent time. Gentlemen, my life is in your hands, and I do not addreſs myſelf to your feelings, but to your candour and impartiality.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, you have a trial that requires your very ſerious attention, and you will diveſt yourſelves of all prejudice that might ariſe from any thing that you have heard before concerning the priſoner at the bar, and confine yourſelves to the evidence in this caſe: Gentlemen, the priſoner is indicted for a capital offence, in privately ſtealing from the perſon of Sir Godfrey Webſter a purſe and money: the queſtion for your conſideration will be, whether, upon this evidence, you are of opinion that he was the perſon that actually took the purſe or not, and whether there is ſufficient evidence for you to be ſure, and to conclude, that he was the perſon without any heſitation or doubt. The evidence for the proſecution is that of Sir Godfrey, the proſecutor only. [Here the learned Judge ſummed up the evidence and then added] Gentlemen, this is the whole of the caſe, and upon this evidence there is no pretence to ſay, that this purſe was not taken privily from his perſon, therefore, it is either a capital offence or no offence at all: I told you before that you muſt diveſt yourſelves of every circumſtance that you have heard relating to the priſoner, you are to judge whether he was the perſon that took the purſe or not; the evidence appears to me to carry preſumption with it, but there is not ſuch proof in a caſe of life as appears to me to be ſatisfactory: there is ſtrong reaſon of ſuſpicion, but you muſt be ſatisfied in your own conſciences, that the priſoner at the bar was the perſon; it was a place crouded, it was at the Opera Houſe, Sir Godfrey was at the door of a room full of people, there might be other perſons behind the priſoner at the bar, on his right ſide; the priſoner was immediately purſued, Sir Godfrey the proſecutor had his eye upon him and obſerved him, and ſaw him ſhift no property to any other perſon, and the priſoner is ſearched minutely at the watch-houſe, and no property found on him: it ſeems to be ſuch a ſort of a caſe, that whatever your ſuſpicions are, there does not appear to me ſufficient grounds to convict him of a capital offence.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

236. DANIEL GUNTER was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Joſeph Campfield, on the King's highway, on the 9th day of February, and putting him in fear, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſhilling, his property.

JOSEPH CAMPFIELD ſworn.

On Monday the 9th of this month about nine o'clock at night, I was robbed near the Red Cow, Hammerſmith.

Court. Is that houſe in the public ſtreet? —Yes.

Was any one with you?—Yes, it was in the Brentford Stage, Elizabeth Booth was with me, nobody elſe, the coachman ſtopped at the Red Cow to water his horſes, and when he came out, a man on horſeback followed him, I do not know the man, and he called the coachman on one ſide, but what paſſed I do not know, the man then directly rode off, and the coachman came to the coach door, and opened it, and aſked me if I had any matters to loſe; I aſked him why, he ſaid, a man had called him on one ſide, and aſked him who he had withinſide, and he told him, he had only two ſervants out of place, and had been ſo ſome time; he drove on, when we had got a little diſtance from the Red Cow, a man came up and ſtopped the coach in the open ſtreet.

Court. How far might it be from the Red Cow?—About forty or fifty yards, and the man demanded my money, he had a piſtol in his hand, I gave him what money I had, which was only one ſhilling, he then demanded my watch, I told him I had none, I had one but I had concealed it, he told me if I did not deliver my watch he would blow my brains out, and with that, Elizabeth Booth gave him her money, he took that and rode off.

Court. How long might he be with you?—A very little while, about a minute or two.

Can you ſpeak to the perſon of the man? —No, really I cannot, my Lord; it was nine o'clock at night.

Was it dark?—It was not very dark.

Was there any moon?——None, that I recollect.

Did you obſerve the colour of his clothes? —In dark coloured clothes he appeared to be.

You ſaw he came out from the Red Cow on horſeback?—Yes.

Did you obſerve the colour of the horſe? —It appeared to me to be a bay horſe.

You are not ſure of it?——No, I did not take particular notice of him.

When did you ſee this man afterwards? —I never ſaw him afterwards to my knowledge.

Then you have nothing to ſay againſt the priſoner?—No, I do not know that I have, I do not know that is the man, I ſaw the priſoner the next day at Bow-ſtreet.

Was you ſent for?—Yes, I was ſent for from Brentford.

ELIZABETH BOOTH ſworn.

Do you know the laſt witneſs?—Yes.

Was you and him in the Brentford coach?—Yes, on the 9th of this month, it was about nine o'clock.

Did you ſee any man on horſeback com out of the inn at that time?—I ſaw a ma on horſeback go into the houſe, and giv

th

the hoſtler his horſe, he came out and went behind the coach and ſpoke to the coachman, he came from behind the coach, and mounted his horſe and rode off, the horſe was held at the door; the coachman came and told us we ſhould be robbed, and the young man that was in the coach aſked him what reaſon he had to think ſo, and he told him that a man on horſeback had juſt called behind the coach, and aſked the coachman whether he had any body in his coach that could ſtand againſt him, the man gave the coachman a glaſs of brandy, we begged to get out, but the coachman ſaid he would run all hazards, and we had not gone twenty yards before he ſtopped us, he had a piſtol, and he preſented it, he aſked us for our money, and ſaid, if we did not give it him he would blow our brains out.

Court. Did you obſerve whether Campfield gave him any thing?—Yes, he gave him what ſilver he had, and I put my money into my glove, but the highwayman was ſo quick upon us, that I gave him my glove and money together; he robbed us both, he aſked the young man for his watch, and the young man ſaid he had never a one; he ſaid if he did not give him it he would blow his brains out, but on my giving him my money in my glove he rode off.

Did you take ſuch notice of the perſon that robbed you to know him again?—No, Sir, I would not pretend to ſwear to him.

Did you obſerve any thing of his clothes?——He was dreſſed in brown clothes, but I cannot ſay particularly.

Do you know any thing of the horſe?—No, I was ſent for to the Juſtice's, but I could not ſwear to him.

THOMAS BRADLEY ſworn.

Did you drive the Brentford coach on the 9th of this month?——Yes.

Do you remember theſe two perſons being in your coach that night?—Yes.

Did you ſtop at Hammerſmith?——Yes, at the Red Cow, about half after eight.

Did you go into the houſe?—Yes.

Do you know the priſoner?——Yes, as I was coming out of the houſe he came in, he met me and ſtruck me in the face.

Court. What in anger?—I do not know, I did not ſee him till I felt him, I took him a bit of a puſh with my arm, and told him I did not like it; he then aſked me if I knew him, I ſaid, no.

Court. Did you not know him at that time?——No, I did not know him till he told me who he was; he aſked me to have ſomething to drink; I told him I had had enough; he deſired me to have a glaſs, and ſaid it would not hurt me; I had a glaſs and he had another, I thanked him, and was coming out of doors, I took hold of my reins to get upon my box as uſual, then he called to me, and ſaid he wanted to ſpeak to me, and I went by the ſide of the coach, rather behind; he then aſked me who I had got inſide; I told them there were two poor people going to Brentford, that I had plenty of room; I thought he wanted to tie his horſe, which the hoſtler had in his hand, and ride withinſide; I never looked at the horſe to take any notice of it; he then aſked me if the paſſengers had got any money; I told him no, I did not think they had; he ſtaggered up againſt the windows, and ſaid he warranted they could ſtand a guinea, and he would give me half; he ſeemed to me to be very drunk; I told him I could work for half a guinea as well as he could; he then mounted his horſe and rode away; I ſtopped about ten minutes, but I ſpoke to my paſſengers firſt, and told them if they had any money to leave it with the landlord.

Court. Should not you have done well to have ſeized this fellow, and taken care of him?——It was impoſſible for me, we are afraid to do that, becauſe often times a paſſenger will run away, and not pay us, and if we go to hold them, they ſummons us before a Juſtice of Peace.

Court. What was your opinion of it?—I could not tell whether he was romancing; I drove on, and in about fifty or ſixty yards I was told by the priſoner to ſtop.

Was it the ſame man that you drank the glaſs with, and had this diſcourſe with, was he the man that ſtopped you?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was.

Look round and ſee whether the priſoner is the man?——To the beſt of my knowledge he is.

Did you ſee any other man before you ſaw him?——I ſaw one other man before I ſaw him, there was another man came paſt before he rode away to London.

When this man that you talked with mounted his horſe, which way did he ride?——I cannot ſay.

Which way did the man come from that ſtopped the coach?—He came from Brentford.

What did he ſay?—He told me to ſtop, or he would blow my brains out; I went on, he had ſomething in his hand, then he rode up rather before me again, and told me to ſtop, then I ſtopped; the man rapped at the coach, and told them to put down the blinds, and I heard him aſk the people in the coach for their money; he ſtaid about two minutes.

Was you before the Juſtice?——Yes, on the Saturday following, it was on Monday the coach was ſtopped, and the next day I was rather in liquor; on the Saturday following I ſaw the priſoner at the bar.

Did you know him again?——I did not think I could be certain of him.

Court. Had you ſuch a diſcernment of his face at Hammerſmith?—I did not ſtay any longer than my liquor was poured out, and he drank his.

Then you did not take ſufficient notice of him at Hammmerſmith to know him again?——I did not take great notice of him, I rather had doubts of him, I do not think I can be perfect as to the man.

I have nothing to ſay againſt the priſoner; a friend of the priſoner's came to me the 8th day of this month, and hired a horſe of me, the priſoner was in company with him.

What coloured horſe was it?—A cheſnut horſe; the priſoner told me he was going to Greenwich, and to return that afternoon; on the Tueſday following I met with the horſe at a ſtable in Long-acre, and I was informed he was forfeited; I know nothing of the priſoner, but only that my horſe was in cuſtody.

SAMUEL MAYNARD ſworn.

I am one of the patrol on the Brentford road, on the 9th of February we were out about eight o'clock, and I met a poſt chaiſe and four between Kenſington and Hammerſmith turnpike gate, and the gentleman that was in the poſt chaiſe informed us he had been fired at by a ſingle highwayman, giving us a deſcription of his clothes and horſe, which was a bay horſe with a ſwitch tail.

Court to Jones. Does that anſwer the deſcription of your horſe?——Yes, the horſe I found in this man's poſſeſſion is my horſe, my horſe is called a bay cheſnut, with a ſwitch tail, commonly ſo called.

Maynard. We went to Hammerſmith, and enquired for ſuch a perſon, they ſaid there had been ſuch a perſon; after that I returned back to Kenſington turnpike-gate, and when we had got within three hundred yards of Kenſington gate, we heard a horſe coming very faſt; we then ſet off, and ran three of us, and left two men behind, there were five of us all together, and in a few minutes the horſe came up, he did not aſk for the gate to be opened, but ran againſt it, and it almoſt diſmounted him, and I laid hold of him and ſaw a piſtol ſtick on one ſide of his pocket; I ſeized him, that was the priſoner at the bar; he was about to lay hold of the piſtol that was in his pocket, and I took it out of his pocket; we then took him off the horſe, and took him into the turnpike houſe to ſearch him, there we found another piſtol in his other pocket, and in his right hand coat pocket there was found a woman's glove, with two ſhillings and threepence halfpenny in it, I did not take that out; in his waiſtcoat pocket was found ſome powder and balls; in his breeches pocket there was two ſhillings and ſixpence and half a guinea; the piſtols were loaded with powder and ball; he was taken the next morning before Sir Sampſon, the two paſſengers were there, but I believe they ſaid they could not tell whether it was the ſame man; we took the horſe to the George in Long-acre, and it was there when Jones claimed the horſe; the coachman was at Sir Sampſon's the next morning on the 10th, with his coach, he ſaw the priſoner, and ſaid he could not ſtop, but that that was the man that had treated him with brandy.

Court. What do you ſay to that, you told us you was not there till Saturday, you ſaid you was fuddled the next morning; was you at Sir Sampſon Wright's the next morning, recollect yourſelf?——I was not had before any magiſtrate, I was up at the office, I was up there, and took up ſome paſſengers from the the Brown Bear.

Was you there when Camfield and Elizabeth Booth was there?——That was on the Saturday.

Did you ſee the priſoner at the Brown Bear?——I had been drinking that night and the next morning, I do not know who I ſaw; I had been drinking the moſt part of the night and the next morning.

Court to Maynard. Did he appear to you to be ſober?——He did.

Did you hear that man ſay, that the priſoner was the man?——He ſaid it many times over that the priſoner was the man, and he could ſwear to him; he appeared to me to be as he is now.

Coachman. I had been drinking moſt part of the night, and I had drank a great deal of purl, and one thing or another.

Court to Maynard. What did the priſoner ſay?——I do not know that the priſoner ſpoke.

Did you ſee the coachman there on the Saturday?——Yes, and Sir Sampſon Wright was very angry with him.

Court to Coachman. Did you, or did you not, ſay that the man that gave you the glaſs of brandy was the man that ſtopped you?—I did not tell my maſter the words that Mr. Maynard ſays, I told my maſter I had ſtopped at the Red Cow, and ſet down two paſſengers, and that a man gave me a ſmack in the face, and that he gave me a glaſs of brandy, and that I had not gone above fifty yards before I was ſtopped; I did not te my maſter, that the man that ſtopped me was the man that gave me the brandy.

Court to Maynard. Was this man's coach there?——Yes.

PETER THOMAS ſworn.

I am one of the patrol, I was preſent when the priſoner was taken; I found in his right hand coat pocket a piſtol, loaded with powder and ball, and this glove with money in it; he had a piſtol in his left hand pocket.

Elizabeth Booth. That is my glove, I have the fellow of it.

Court. What money had you in that glove when you loſt it?—I had about eight or nine ſhillings, but there was not ſo much money when the patrol took it, I gave the highwayman my glove and money in it.

Jury. Is that the glove that you gave the highwayman?——Yes.

Court. You are ſure that is the glove that you delivered to the highwayman?—To the beſt of my knowledge it is.

Have you got the fellow here?—Yes.

(The two gloves ſhewn to the Jury.)

Court. Were the two gloves fellows?—Yes.

Court to Thomas. What money was in the glove?——Two ſhillings and three halfpence.

Court to Booth. Was your money all ſhillings?——There was one half crown, and the reſt were ſhillings, and five pence in halfpence, there was about ſix ſhillings beſides the half crown.

Court to Thomas. What ſilver was there found in the other pocket of the man?——One ſhilling and two ſixpences, one half crown, and half a guinea, and a penny, that was in his breeches pocket.

EDWARD HUGHES ſworn.

I am one of the patrol, and I was in company with the reſt; I was preſent at the apprehending the priſoner, and I ſaw him ſearched, he was taken at Kenſington gate, I held his left hand while he was ſearched; I ſaw Maynard take one piſtol out of his pocket, and Thomas took another and a glove; and I went the next morning to ſearch his lodgings, I found a loaded piſtol over his bed.

Did you ſee the money taken out of his pocket?——Yes.

How much?—I cannot ſay.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went down to Windſor on the Sunday evening, I ſtopped there all day on Monday, and ſpoke to the waiter about a place, and him and I could not agree upon terms, and I ſet out from Windſor on Monday night about five o'clock, and I was taken by theſe men; they came directly and pulled me off my horſe, and lugged me into the public houſe, and took the piſtols out of my pocket, and what elſe they took I do not know; but one of them ſtruck me, I was a good deal in liquor when I was taken, very much, I could hardly ſet on my horſe, and perhaps I might go up againſt the gate pretty hard; I believe I have witneſſes to my character.

The priſoner called eight Witneſſes, who all gave him a very good character.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

237. JOHN FOX and JOHN JONES were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of January laſt, five weather ſheep, price 50s. the property of John French.

JOHN FRENCH ſworn.

I live at Carnaby-market; I am a butcher; on the 16th of January, in the afternoon, I miſſed five weather ſheep, which ſhould have been in a ſtable; I enquired after them and offered a reward; my drover gave me hints and ſuſpicions that they were killed at ſome butcher's, I thought I ſhould know the mutton, I ſearched ſeveral ſhops on the Saturday morning, that I thought did not ſell extraordinary good meat, and I ſearched one ſhop, and there I found two large hind quarters of mutton, at the ſhop of Edward Davis, one of the witneſſes: thoſe hind quarters anſwered in my own mind, for we can form ſome little judgment, but not enough to ſwear to the mutton; however, I thought they were mine; I aſked Davis, whether he killed in his own cellar, he ſaid, no, in Drury-lane; his wife ſhewed me backwards to the yard; I then went to a neighbouring butcher's ſhop and enquired the character of this Davis, and I applied for a ſearch warrant at Bow-ſtreet, I employed two men to watch the houſe while I was gone, that nothing came out; Sir Sampſon would not grant me a warrant till I ſwore I believed the mutton to be mine; we then ſearched the houſe, and found hid under the cellar ſtairs in dirt, I imagine concealed, four ſheep ſkins; I examined them and knew them to be mine, they had a private mark of my own, and one of the owners; the ſkins had laid ſo much in the dirt that I could not ſwear to them; the large ſheep had very broad oaker upon it, and I am ſure, in my own mind, that all four were mine; on ſearching the houſe farther, I found a pair of hind quarters of mutton concealed in a bedſtead; I alſo found a pair of fore quarters in a dirty place, which were very dirty, and which they ſaid had been gnawed by the pigs: Davis was not there when they were found; he went out, after he had told me where he killed, under pretence of going to a cuſtomer in Pall-mall: Davis abſconded.

Court. Do you know any thing of either of the priſoners?—No; one of the priſoners came near the place on the Saturday morning when we had the warrant, and Sir Sampſon's men thought it proper to apprehend him, but he was diſmiſſed.

When was Davis taken?——I do not know; It was by Sir Sampſon's order; the ſheep ſkins were certainly mine.

EDWARD BROZEY ſworn.

I am a drover; I put ten ſheep in Mr. French's houſe the 14th of January; I have ſeen the ſheep ſkins ſhewn me by Mr. French; I knew them again; they are Mr. French's ſkins.

Court to French. Were the ſkins you ſhewed that witneſs, the ſame you found in Davis's houſe?—They were the ſame ſkins.

Court. Do not permit the witneſs Davis to go out of Court, look to him.

JOHN TOWNSEND ſworn.

On Saturday, the 17th of January, French came up to the office for a ſearch warrant, to ſearch a butcher's ſhop in Exeter-ſtreet; it was granted, and I, in company with another officer, went down; we ſearched as narrowly as we well could ſearch; while French was ſearching up ſtairs, I and another officer was ſearching below, and underneath the ſtairs, I ſtepped my foot in a puddle of water, it was a very naſty place, and there were four ſheep ſkins underneath the ſtairs; I immediately called down French, he came and looked at them, and ſaid they were his property; I found nothing elſe in the houſe but what Mr. French found above; there was a vaſt quantity of mutton.

When was Davis apprehended?—That day, while French was getting the ſheep ſkins and beſt part of the mutton which he ſaid he believed to be his; one of the priſoners whom I knew before, and another man in company with him, came near the ſhop; ſays I, what is the reaſon of their lurking about the ſhop; I came up with them, and they whipped into a public houſe, and I brought them before Mr. Juſtice Gilbert, but there being not a tittle of evidence to affect the men, they were diſcharged; that night I was in ſearch of Davis but did not find him; one of the captains of the patrol knew Davis, and Davis ſent him a note that he would reſign himſelf up upon conditions of no harm coming to him, and he would tell of whom he got the five ſheep; and in conſequence of that the two priſoners were apprehended afterwards: it was the patrol that gave him the promiſe.

Court. I ſhall not examine Davis the witneſs, becauſe he is the man that ought to be proſecuted.

Townſend. I do not know whether the patrol promiſed him any ſort of favour if he would reſign himſelf; the patrol is not here.

Court. Davis was a man known by the patrol, was not he?——Very well, he had been abroad with him.

You could have taken him up in a few days?—Yes, my Lord, unleſs he had left the country.

Where is that patrol?——He is at the office, his name is Allen.

Proſecutor. The wife of Davis ſaid that he was going to Portſmouth, but would return if I would ſhew him favour, for he ſaid, death was preferable to exile, or ſomething to that effect.

Court to Townſend. How came any of your officers to preſume to do any ſuch thing without the advice of the magiſtrates?—I cannot ſay, I was not at the apprehending of either of the priſoners.

Do you know what anſwer was ſent to Davis's information, or how he was taken up?—I believe that he came to the office the very day that Allen ſent for him.

But how could Allen preſume to ſend for him without the authority of the magiſtrate?

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, in this caſe it is certainly, at leaſt unneceſſary, if not improper, to examine Davis; there is full evidence againſt him from theſe witneſſes to prove him at leaſt an accomplice, if not a principal in this fact himſelf; therefore the evidence of him as an accomplice, ſtands in ſuch a light in point of law, that it cannot be received, as the law will not admit any perſon to be convicted on the ſingle teſtimony of an accomplice; there is not now one tittle of evidence againſt either of the priſoners, and you could not, in point of law, convict them on the evidence of Davis, there being no other circumſtance againſt them.

BOTH NOT GUILTY.

Court. Let Davis the witneſs be detained.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I have known multitudes of theſe improper inſtances.

Mr. Recorder. Magiſtrates ſhould be very cautious who they admit as evidence, not to admit thoſe againſt whom there is clear evidence, unleſs they have reaſon to think important diſcoveries can be made.

Court to Davis. There is the moſt clear and ſatisfactory evidence to the Court, that you, whatever the other priſoners might be, are guilty of this offence, and if you had been in the ſituation of the priſoners you would have been convicted, therefore take warning; but having ſurrendered on the aſſurances of this man, however improper, the Court will not now proceed againſt you, but it will be remembered if you ſhould be found guilty of any thing again; for you are much more guilty than theſe men, as you are a ſhop-keeper yourſelf.—Let him be diſcharged, but let the officers keep an eye over his conduct.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. The officer ought to have gone to the magiſtrate and aſked his advice about it.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

238. HUGH GRAHAM was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of January laſt, eighteen yards of painted floor cloth, value 5l. the property of John Barnes, privily in his ſhop.

I am a floor cloth manufacturer, the corner of Bow-ſtreet, Bloomſbury; on the 16th of January I loſt ſome floor cloth; I and another perſon, one Evans, were in the parlour, I heard a ruſtling in the ſhop at two different times; I got up twice, and the ſecond time I miſſed ſome cloth out of the window; I loſt about twenty yards; the value of the whole was near 5l. but the value of this piece now produced is 3l. I aſked a little boy, and he pointed which way the man went, and Mr. Evans went one way, and I another, into Dyot-ſtreet, and I ſaw the priſoner walking gently along with the floor cloth on his ſhoulder, and I ſecured him, and took him before Mr. Walker, the magiſtrate in Hyde-ſtreet, and Mr. Evans took care of the floor cloth.

Court. Did you know it to be your floor cloth?——Yes.

By what?——It is all my own work and the exciſeman's mark is on it.

What is there particular in the exciſeman's mark?——It is the admeaſurement of the cloth, the cloth was lying in my ſhop window, withinſide, I ſaw it about ten minutes before; I was in a back room with a glaſs partition, I could ſee all the ſhop.

Court. How long after you heard the ruſtling was it before you went out of your room into your ſhop?—I went out in leſs than a minute or two.

JOHN EVANS ſworn.

I was with Mr. Barnes, I heard the ruſtling of cloth, and thought ſomebody was taking away the cloth; I told Mr. Barnes ſo, and we both ran out, and a little boy told us which way to go, and I went down St. Giles's, and up Dyot-ſtreet, as faſt as I could; the proſecutor went up Bow-ſtreet, and I ſaw the priſoner coming down Dyot-ſtreet, with the cloth on his ſhoulder; the proſecutor ſecured the man, and I took care of the cloth; I know this cloth to be the proſecutor's; I ſometimes repair the blocks, the man was committed.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was paſſing by the ſtreet, and I ſaw a man with it on his ſhoulder, he aſked me to earn ſixpence and carry it, I ſaid I ſhould be very glad of it, as I was in want, and theſe two gentlemen took me.

The remainder of this Trial will be concluded in the next Part, which will be Publiſhed in a few Days.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of Hugh Graham.

Court. Who was the man that you carried it for?——He was dreſſed like a painter, I do not know the man.

Have you him here?——No.

Have you any witneſſes to prove that?—No.

Have you any witneſſes to your character?——No, I am a ſtranger in London.

Court to Jury. This priſoner was found with ſtolen goods in a ſuſpicious manner, and the uſual courſe is, that he ſhould ſatisfy you that he came honeſtly by them. The queſtion is, whether this is within that act of parliament of King William, which takes away the benefit of clergy, and makes it a capital offence, where goods are ſtolen out of ſhops and warehouſes, that is, ſuch ſort of goods as are uſually kept there in their courſe of dealing, that ſort of commodity in which they deal, to the value of five ſhillings, privately and without the knowledge of the party, then it ſhall be a capital offence. Upon all theſe acts of parliament the conſtruction has been always exceedingly ſtrict; in the caſe of a private pick pocket, the act of parliament ſays pretty often in the ſame words, privately and without knowledge of the party; if they feel but the ſlighteſt ſenſation before the property is removed from the perſon, it has been the conſtant rule, that that takes it out of that act of parliament; ſo in my apprehenſion, in the preſent caſe, this was not abſolutely without the knowledge of the proſecutor, becauſe he heard a ruſtling in the ſhop, and if he had gone out the firſt time upon that alarm, he certainly would have detected the offender; therefore, I think that the ſame conſtruction ſhould be put on this evidence, and you ſhould acquit the priſoner of ſtealing privately.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing but not privately.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the Firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

236. THOMAS CAPP was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th day of February, one iron bar, value 5s. the property of Edward Meux, Eſq.

WILLIAM HICHIN ſworn.

The proſecutor loſt an iron bar on Wedneſday, the 4th of this month, from a houſe which I keep under him, in High-ſtreet, Bloomſbury, it was in the paſſage behind the bar window; it was to bar the outſide ſhutters when they were put up, the value of it is five ſhillings, the weight is thirty-three pounds: the priſoner ſold it for half a crown; he came into my houſe on the 4th at a quarter paſt ten o'clock, and called for a pint of beer, he ſtopped a quarter of an hour, went into the paſſage and took this iron bar and carried it off, he went away about a quarter of an hour, and returned, and had ſome purl, and went away at eleven o'clock, I ſuſpected him, and after he was gone I miſſed the bar, and the next evening about half paſt eight o'clock, the priſoner came in again, I was in the back room, the maid informed me, and I came into the tap-room, and charged the conſtable with him, he was taken to the watch-houſe, the next morning between nine and ten, he was brought paſt my door to be carried to Mr. Walker's, and the conſtable brought him into my houſe, and he ſat down, and I told him, I was in great diſtreſs about my irons, if he he would tell me where the irons were I would be favourable to him.

Court. Do you know any thing of his ſtealing them, otherwiſe than by his own confeſſion?—No, my Lord.

Court to Jury. Then Gentlemen, you will acquit the priſoner.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

237. JOHN JACOBS, SAMUEL SELSHIRE, and RICHARD M'DONALD, were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Charles Chapman in the King's highway on the 27th day of January laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one watch, with the inſide caſe and outſide caſe made of ſilver, value 40s. one ſilver ſeal, value 1s. one ſteel chain, value 2d. one ſteel key, value 2d. one metal key, value 1d. and four ſhillings in monies numbered, the property of the ſaid Charles.

CHARLES CHAPMAN ſworn.

On the 27th of January, about ſix in the evening, I was robbed in the paſſage or road leading from Kenſington to Kenſington Gravel Pits, I was on foot, and was overtaken by three perſons, who immediately ſurrounded me, and one of them preſented a piſtol to my breaſt, they all demanded my money in a confuſed manner, I ſaid, I would immediately give them what I had about me; upon which they immediately dropped down the point of the piſtol, and one of them took my watch from my fob, it was a ſilver watch with a ſteel chain, a ſilver ſeal with my cypher and two keys, one ſteel and the other braſs, and four or five ſhillings in ſilver.

Court. Did you deliver it to them, or did they take it?—I delivered it to them by their demand; they immediately run towards the Gravel Pits.

Court. What ſort of a night was it?—It was near dark.

Court. Did you take any notice of their perſons?—I cannot ſwear to them.

Have you ſeen your watch ſince?—Yes, at Sir Sampſon Wright's.

How long after the robbery?—About three days after, there were three perſons brought up, but I did not know them, they bore the appearance of the men that robbed me, but I could not ſwear to any of them.

JOSEPH CREEDLAND ſworn.

I am one of the patrol belonging to Sir Sampſon Wright on Uxbridge and Kilburn roads; on the 27th of January about a quarter before ſeven, we came off the Kilburn road, and when we rode to Tyburn Turnpike, we heard that three footpads had committed a robbery on the Uxbridge road; we went down Park-lane into Hyde-park, there were ſix of us, and as ſoon as we came to the Baſon, I ſaw the three priſoners coming towards us, and towards Groſvenor-gate, I then made up towards the priſoner Jacobs, and he took to his heels and ran away, I purſued him, he then took a piſtol a piſtol out from withinſide his coat, and turned round to fire at me; he turned juſt half way round, he preſented the piſtol to me, and he found I was rather too much on the left ſide of him, and he threw his piſtol down, and as it fell it flaſhed in the pan; he was ſtill running, and I purſued him and laid hold of him; I tied his hands and ſearched him, and found on him this watch, which was in the fob of his breeches pocket, with one ſeal and two keys.

Court. What became of the other two priſoners?——My other partners took the other two, I held him faſt, and kept him in cuſtody till we came to Covent Garden watch-houſe; we all came into Oxford-road, and there we took two coaches and went to Sir Sampſon Wright's, and about two days after I ſaw the proſecutor there, the watch was then produced: I found on Jacobs one ſhilling and ſixpence, and one penny.

I conduct that party of the patrol; on the 27th of January I was firſt, the three priſoners came paſt me, Jacobs firſt, and M'Donald next; I alſo ſaw Selſhire, he was very near M'Donald; the ſignal for my men to lay hold of them was my laying hold of Selſhire; in conſequence of that Selſhire and M'Donald were immediately ſecured.

Court. Did you ſee the other priſoner taken?——No, he run off, I ſearched Selſhire, the man I had hold on, and found this piſtol loaded upon him, I have the balls in my pocket, and eight pence in halfpence. There was a loaded piſtol found on M'Donald.

Court. How long after this was it that you ſaw the priſoner Jacobs and Joſeph Creedland?——In about half a minute, as ſoon as I had hold of Selſhire, I turned round, we took them to Sir Sampſon Wright's, they were ſent to different priſons; I was preſent on the Thurſday following when Mr. Chapman came, he then ſaw his watch after the charge was laid to the priſoners; Sir Sampſon aſked them what they had to ſay, and they then all of them acknowledged the crime, and Selſhire in particular deſired to be admitted an evidence.

Did Sir Sampſon take down any thing in writing?—No.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I have heard that a queſtion did ariſe which was pretty thoroughly debated, whether evidence ſhould be admitted of a confeſſion by a priſoner before a Juſtice of the Peace; the law is, that the Juſtice of the Peace is to take the informations of the witneſſes, and the examination of the priſoner, and ſhall reduce them into writing, and return them to the gaol delivery.

Court to Mr. Reynolds. Was not there ſome queſtion whether parole evidence might be given of confeſſion taken before a Juſtice.

Mr. Reynolds. It has always been underſtood that where no written examination had been taken, parole evidence may be admitted; but if the Juſtice takes the examination in writing, then they cannot give in evidence his parole examination.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. It is his duty to take it in writing: the rules of law are the things that you ſhould ſteer by, but I want to know whether ſomething of the kind has not been thought of, and conſidered here, and under that diſtinction the parole proof admitted.

Mr. Reynolds. My Lord, the parole proof has been admitted where no written examination was ſet up; a very little while ago a witneſs aſſerted in his evidence, that an examination had been taken in writing, and the examination was not returned, but that having been aſſerted by him, the Court would not admit the parole evidence.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I underſtand by Sir Sampſon, who ſits by me, that he reall thought that this evidence had been take down in writing; indeed the Juſtices hav hardly time to take down the examinations, but yet the law is not to be departe from, and the Act of Parliament ſays, t Juſtice ſhall take the informations of t witneſſes, and the examination of the pr

ſone

ſoner, and ſhall return them.——

Mr. Reynolds. In London, unleſs it is a very ſpecial caſe, examinations are never taken in writing, as only one gentleman ſits there, and they could not do the buſineſs.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. What is ſaid in other places may be received, but before the Juſtice of Peace, there it ſhould be reduced into writing, therefore I cannot admit this.

Bowyer. The priſoners were taken in about half an hour after the robbery.

JOHN CREEDLAND ſworn.

I am one of this patrol; about a quarter or twenty minutes before ſeven, we got into Hyde-park; I was preſent when the three priſoners were apprehended, and I took this piſtol from M‘Donald, loaded with three balls; I know nothing more than has been mentioned, only that he had fourteen balls in his pocket, ſome powder, and eight ſhillings in money, and the priſoners were taken to Sir Sampſon Wright's.

JOHN TOWNSEND ſworn.

I am one of the patrol; I can only ſay what the others have ſaid, except juſt as we came into Hyde-park and went down walnut tree walk, I thought I heard ſomebody ſay, damn my eyes, here is ſomebody a coming.

Court. Did you hear it, or did you not?—I did hear ſomebody ſay ſo, and I mentioned it to Captain Bowyer; we had ſcarce got a yard farther before up came the three priſoners, Jacobs was the firſt man I ſaw; I went to make up to him, and he immediately advanced from me, and attempted to run, he clapped his hand to his ſide inſtantly to draw out this piſtol; the moment I ſaw it I called to Creedland; ſays I, Creedland! Creedland! take care, he has pulled out a piſtol! the inſtant moment I ſaid ſo, it flaſhed in the pan, and he threw it away; I then called out, purſue him, and I will wait here and ſee whereabout he has hove that piſtol; I ſaw him throw it away; then we took him to Sir Sampſon's.

Court to Creedland. Was not the piſtol thrown to the ground before it flaſhed in the pan?—As it fell it flaſhed.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. It is a very different thing as to the conduct of the priſoner.

PRISONER JACOB's DEFENCE.

I had been out that afternoon, and as I was coming up to the Lock Hoſpital I found a red and white pocket handkerchief, with two piſtols in it and a watch; I found it almoſt facing Mr. Tatterſhall's; Selſhire was with me; he ſaid, ſays he, I will have half; I gave him the piſtol and the handkerchief, and I had the piſtol and the watch; coming to the turnpike we met M‘Donald, and as we were going through Hyde-park he came with us, and juſt coming through Walnut-tree Walk we met three gentlemen, ſo I threw the piſtol away; I thought, may be they would take me up or ſomething.

PRISONER SELSHIRE's DEFENCE.

I was along with this man coming from Batterſea, he picked up this handkerchief, and he gave me that piſtol.

PRISONER M‘DONALD's DEFENCE.

I had been with an acquaintance of mine, and coming by Kenſington turnpike I met theſe two young men; I had the piſtol about me, and the bullets, which I found in Hyde-park the day before; I carried them about me for my own defence.

The Priſoner Jacobs called three Witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

The Priſoner Selſhire called three Witneſſes who gave him a very good character, one of whom was Mr. Thomas Lane, clerk to Mr. Burton, one of his Majeſty's Council, with whom this Priſoner had lived ſervant, and by whoſe particular deſire Mr. Lane attended.

JOHN JACOBS,
SAMUEL SELSHIRE,
RICHARD M‘DONALD, } GUILTY, Death.

The Priſoners John Jacobs and Samuel Selſhire were both humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

275. RICHARD O'BRIEN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 3d day of February, two cloth coats, value 15s. one pair of nankeen breeches, value 5s. one pair of velveret breeches, value 14s. one velveret waiſtcoat, value 5s. two linen ſhirts, value 7s. one muſlin neckloth, value 1s. the property of John Jones; one ſilk waiſtcoat, value 1s. four linen waiſtcoats, value 4s. four linen ſhirts, value 12s. one pair of velveret breeches, value 4s. one pair of ſilk and cotton breeches, value 4s. three pair of worſted ſtockings, value 6s. one pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 3s. one other pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 1s. nine linen ſtocks, value 3s. two cloth coats, value 3s. and two linen handkerchiefs, value 1s. the property of Thomas Parker, in the dwelling houſe of Charles Hatton.

JOHN JONES ſworn.

I lodge in a publick houſe, kept by Charles Hatton; on the 3d of this month I was called home at ſeven in the evening from the ſhop where I worked, I immediately went home; when I came into the tap-room, there was a man in the cuſtody of a conſtable, which was the priſoner; I left the door of my room locked when I went out, and the key in the bar, where it was always left; I know nothing of the robbery, only to prove the property.

THOMAS PARKER ſworn.

I only prove my property.

CHARLES HATTON ſworn.

I keep the Robin Hood, in Marybone-ſtreet, Golden-ſquare; about ſix o'clock in the evening, on the 3d of February, the priſoner came in for a penny-worth of purl, which he paid for; he then ſaid, landlord, or maſter, I will be much obliged to you to ſhew me the way to the vault or coffee-houſe, whatever it may be; I ſhewed him backwards, I went into the parlour and ſtaid a few minutes, and when I was coming out, he was going down the cellar ſteps; ſays he, maſter, I believe I am going the wrong way; I did not ſay much to him; he immediately came into the tap-room again and drank his purl; he ſtaid there about ten minutes; I went into the parlour again, and then I miſſed him; the priſoner was ſtanding at the door; I ſtaid in the tap-room about twenty minutes, and as I was ſtanding there, I ſaw a glimmering of his coat paſs our bar window which fronts the paſſage going into the tap-room, the hatch-way is very low; I heard ſomething catch on the door, and I ran to the tap-room door, I laid hold of it with my right hand and opened it half way, and I ſaw the priſoner in the paſſage, about three yards from me, with a box on his head; I cried out, Stop thief! he ſtepped about three ſteps farther off the ſteps, and threw the box into the ſtreet and all the clothes; I did not ſtand to pick up the clothes, but I purſued the priſoner down a little court about forty yards from our door; I juſt miſſed his coat laps; he ran through Caſtle-ſtreet; I never loſt ſight of him only where the turning was; I purſued him into Badman's-mews, below Jermyn-ſtreet, where he ran into a vault; I pulled him out, with aſſiſtance, and brought him to my houſe.

Court. Are you ſure he is the ſame man that was in your houſe?—I took a penny of his money; I am ſure of it; I have no doubt of it.

What became of the box that he had?—Richard Davis ſpeaks to that.

RICHARD DAVIS ſworn.

I was in the houſe of Mr. Hatton the evening the robbery was committed; I ſaw Hatton run out and the cry of ſtop thief was called, I then went to the door and ſaw a box with ſundry wearing apparel laying on the pavement.

Court. Did you ſee it thrown down?—No, I did not; I picked it up and brought it into the houſe and laid it on one of the benches.

Proſecutor. It has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

Court to Davis. Did you ſtay till Hatton came?—Yes.

Was the box the ſame that you found on the ſtep of the door?—It was.

(The things depoſed to by Jones and Parker.)

THOMAS PARKER ſworn.

I am ſure theſe two cloth coats are mine, there is no particular mark; here are four linen waiſtcoats and four ſhirts, one pair of ſilk and cotton, and one pair of velveret breeches, ſix pair of thread ſtockings, three pair of worſted ſtockings, one ſilk waiſtcoat, and one ſilk pair of ſtockings; theſe things were in the room where I ſleep; it was broke open when I ſaw it, but I left it locked.

Court to Jones. Where were your things?—In a cheſt of drawers.

Were they locked?—No, they were not.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming down from Berkley-ſquare, and I had been very bad with a pain in my bowels, and I aſked the way to the vault; I was very bad, and when I came in I warmed my feet, and I went out, and it took me again, and I leaned on the rails, and I intended to go to a ſhoemaker that lodged there for a pair of ſhoes; I was going up ſtairs and I heard the proſecutor crying out ſtop thief, then I ran as well as I could till I came to Eagle-ſtreet, then down into the Mews, and I ſaw no one there, and I aſked the way to the vault; by the time I had gone into the vault and had eaſed myſelf, a parcel of people were coming down, and one ſaid, there is a man in there, perhaps it is him; they went to take me, I deſired them not; they hauled me, and dragged me, and knocked me down, and as I was told after, I fainted; they got a bucket of water and threw down me, and they took my hat, and my ſhoes, and cravat about my neck; my friends are not here.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

276. WILLIAM NEWLAND was indicted, for that he, on the 11th day of November laſt, feloniouſly did make, forge, and counterfeit, and cauſe and procure to be falſely made, forged and counterfeited, and willingly aid and aſſiſt in the falſe making, forging, and counterfeiting one bank note with the name William Lander thereunto ſubſcribed, dated 6th January, 1783, ſigned by the ſaid William Lander, for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, for the ſum of 100l. to Mr. John Schutz, or bearer, on demand, with intent to defraud the Governor and Company of the Bank of England.

A ſecond Count charges the ſame offence as the firſt, only ſaying, a certain note in the form of a bank note, with intent to defraud the Governor and Company of the Bank of England.

A third and fourth Counts charge it to be with intent to defraud Thomas Wagſtaff.

A fifth and ſixth Counts charge it to be with intent to defraud Thomas Hayward.

A ſeventh Count charges that he having ſuch bank note of one hundred pounds in his cuſtody, feloniouſly did diſpoſe and put away the ſame, knowing the ſame to be forged and counterfeited, with intention to defraud the Bank.

An eighth Count charges that he having a note, purporting to be a bank note of one hundred pounds, in his cuſtody, feloniouſly did diſpoſe and put away the ſame, knowing the ſame to be forged and counterfeited, with intent to defraud the Bank.

A ninth and tenth Counts charging it to be with intent to defraud Thomas Wagſtaff.

An eleventh and twelfth Counts charging it to be with intent to defraud Thomas Hayward.

A thirteenth Count for feloniouſly forging a promiſſory note for the payment of money, laid to be the ſame as in the firſt count, with intention to defraud Thomas Wagſtaff.

A fourteenth Count for uttering the ſame with the like intention.

A fifteenth Count for forging the ſame promiſſory note, with intent to defraud the ſaid Thomas Hayward.

A ſixteenth Count for uttering the ſame with the like intention.

A ſeventeenth Count for forging the ſame promiſſory note with intention to defraud the Governor and Company of the Bank of England.

An eighteenth Count for uttering the ſame with the like intention.

Mr. Fielding, one of the Council for the proſecution, opened the indictment as follows:

“Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an indictment againſt the priſoner at the bar for a forgery on the bank of England; it has been neceſſary in order to meet this crime to vary the deſcriptions of the offence, and it has taken up no leſs than eighteen different counts in this indictment; it is charged to defraud the bank, and the different perſons therein mentioned, and the priſoner is likewiſe charged with the crime of publiſhing it, knowing it to be forged; you will hear the evidence, and then you will pronounce upon his guilt or innocence.

Mr. Bearcroft, of Council for the proſecution thus opened the caſe:

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: I have the honor to attend you as Council for this proſecution, which is carried on by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, as it is their manifeſt duty to do. Gentlemen of the Jury, the charge in plain Engliſh, ſtripped from form is, that the priſoner at the bar, William Newland, has been guilty of forging a bank note deſcribed in the indictment, which will be produced; it is likewiſe charged that he uttered this knowing it to be forged: if theſe facts are brought home by proof to your ſatisfaction againſt the defendant, you will convict him of a capital offence. I doubt not but you are well appriſed of the neceſſity of a law of this nature, and that you are diſpoſed to put it in force if the facts are proved to your ſatisfaction; I ſhall therefore ſtate to you without much obſervation, for I am afraid the grounds of bringing the guilt at leaſt of uttering this note by the priſoner at the bar, will be but too clear. Gentlemen, the priſoner has of late appeared in the character of a farmer at Chinkford in Eſſex; you will find that in November laſt he applied to Mr. Wagſtaff, a weaver by buſineſs, and with whom the priſoner had a ſlight acquaintance, and upon the ſtrength of that, hardly ſufficient for the purpoſe, he deſired that he would contrive to get him changed two bank notes of one hundred pounds each, one of which is the note in queſtion, the ſubject of the indictment, and that which will be produced; Wagſtaff undertook to do it, and for that purpoſe he went to Mr. Hayward, who is likewiſe deſcribed to me to be of the ſame buſineſs of a weaver, he told him he wiſhed to change for a friend of his theſe two bank notes of one hundred pounds each, and Mr. Hayward was prevailed upon to change them; Wagſtaff delivered them to Hayward, and afterwards went to the priſoner and delivered to him in part one hundred and twenty pounds in caſh. Gentlemen it is clear that they ſhould identify the bank note that is produced to you, and the witneſſes Hayward and Wagſtaff will ſpeak to it by particular marks which they obſerved on the face of it; by ſuch obliterations which were remarkable, but which I ſhall not attempt to point out to you, becauſe they come in the fitteſt way from the witneſſes themſelves; they will tell you what ſtruck their obſervation when it was firſt produced to them, and with what certainty they can prove it be to the ſame note: I underſtand that they will prove that the note was firſt delivered from the Priſoner to Wagſtaff, and afterwards from Wagſtaff to Hayward, and by him to another perſon who will be produced to you, and he found it was a forged bank note: I ſhall perfectly ſatisfy you of that by the uſual evidence, ſo as to leave no doubt on your minds; that perſon returned the note to him, and as ſoon as he found it was forged, he called upon Wagſtaff, as was perfectly natural in his ſituation, and upon conſideration together, they determined to go to Newland to make enquiries on this buſineſs; they ſettled to go on Sunday; they went to his place of reſidence in the country, and they found him at home; immediately they entered into converſation with him, and told him the notes, or rather I will confine myſelf to the note, which is the regular and proper way, was a forged note; the expreſſions he made uſe of, and I mean to ſtate correctly the expreſſions he made uſe of, in the ſeveral converſations he had, and to deſire you to attend to that and to his behaviour, when he was firſt appriſed that this was a forged note; you will attend to theſe circumſtances in order to ſettle in your minds whether his behaviour and conduct was that of an innocent man, or whether he did not manifeſtly ſhew a conſciouſneſs of guilt; for it is in that way that you are to ſatisfy yourſelves of the guilt of the priſoner at the bar. On his being told they were forged, his expreſſion immediately was, I am ſurpriſed at that, for I had them from a man of property; this was in converſation between Wagſtaff and the priſoner, he told him he had brought Mr. Hayward down with him, and he was waiting at ſome little diſtance, and he deſired him to go to Mr. Hayward; they went to Hayward, as ſoon as he appeared, Mr. Hayward addreſſed him in this manner: he ſaid, Newland, you had no right to expect me without a number of armed men to take you into cuſtody; I might have been dragged out of my bed to gaol: Where did you get theſe notes? the priſoner's anſwer was, as it had been to Wagſtaff before, I had them from a man of property: Hayward immediately aſked him, from whom: now what would have been the anſwer of an innocent man; if he had known of whom he had them, would not he have directly told the perſon's name for his own ſake, and for the ſake of public juſtice: that ought to have been his conduct, and for his own ſake it would have been natural; for if an innocent man, which certainly may happen by accident, becomes poſſeſſed of a forged bank note, and he is told it is a forged bank note, his own perſonal ſafety, and common prudence dictate, that if he knows of whom he received it, he ſhould inſtantly diſcloſe it: therefore as the priſoner, when firſt aſked, acknowledged that he knew the man of whom he had it, it remains for him to tell you, if he can, why he did not immediately diſcloſe that perſon's name; he was preſſed to tell, but he refuſed, and he was deſired to go to town with Wagſtaff and Hayward in order to find this man in particular, from whom he received theſe forged bank notes; his anſwer was, I cannot find him if we go now, and I promiſe I will come to you at ten o'clock tomorrow to your houſe, and ſtill expreſſed himſelf ſaying, I cannot ſuppoſe theſe are bad notes; Hayward had a ſtrong ſuſpicion of the priſoner, and he again made uſe of expreſſions importing that ſuſpicion, even ſo ſtrong as to ſay, Newland, I will certainly hang you; the anſwer the priſoner made, is little like the anſwer of an innocent man; his anſwer was, all you want is your money, you ſhall have your money, that is what you want; he promiſed to call on Hayward again, but before they parted they had other converſation, and it will appear, I am told, by the further converſation, that there was a great deal of reſervation, and much equivocation, utterly inconſiſtent with the behaviour of a man intirely innocent, and who by misfortune (for it is a very great one) had got hold of a forged bank note; there was further converſation between them before they parted that day, and Hayward charged him with the actual forgery; his anſwer was ſomewhat ſingular; no, I could not forge them, as I can neither read nor write; Hayward told him the law is the ſame for uttering them: upon this they quitted him, he promiſing and they believing that they ſhould have the money produced. On the 8th of December Wagſtaff met the priſoner in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, he aſked him if he had been at Hayward's, no he ſaid, he had not been there, upon which Wagſtaff deſired him to go. They went to a publick-houſe, and he ſaid he had not been to Hayward, becauſe the gentleman he had them from was gone to Stratford, and would not be at home before the evening;

he ſaid he was then under a neceſſity of going home, but promiſed to meet the next day: Wagſtaff and Hayward were both together at this publick-houſe, and they both preſſed him extremely to name the perſon from whom he had the notes, but he declined that, and ſaid he was perfectly ſure that the gentleman from whom he had them did not know they were forged, and he begged in the moſt earneſt manner that they would not diſcloſe this matter, but keep it ſecret. Now you will conſider gentlemen, as I go along, whether this was the conduct of an innocent man: the priſoner did not come as he promiſed; he promiſed another day to come, and he did not: therefore Wagſtaff and Hayward both together went again to his houſe, he excuſed himſelf with ſome frivolous excuſe for not having kept his promiſe of coming, and then promiſed again to come the next day, and again intreated them not to mention it, for that he was juſt got into an extraordinary farm, and begged for God's ſake that it might not be buzzed abroad. On the Friday this priſoner met them both again, and then Mr. Hayward inſiſted upon it that he ſhould tell him where and from whom he had the notes; then his conduct appeared more ſuſpicious, (but however of that you will judge) for being preſſed to the wall by Hayward, he ſaid he would not tell in the preſence of any witneſs, but if Hayward would retire alone with him, he would diſcloſe to him the name of the perſon from whom he had them, then the priſoner and Hayward went into a room by themſelves, and he extorted from Hayward a ſolemn promiſe not to diſcloſe it, and then he aſſerted that he had this forged bank note, together with the other from Mr. Henry Davis, a potatoe merchant, as he is deſcribed, in Spitalfields, and he undertook to Hayward that he would either bring him or the money by times the next morning; for he told him that Davis, from whom he had received the note, was gone to ſeek after the money; and he again begged of him to keep it ſecret, and if Davis or the money was not brought him the next morning, he ſhould be welcome to diſcloſe it. Gentlemen, in ſhort not to take up more of your time, after many enquiries about Davis, and talking with Davis, (for what Davis ſaid will not be evidence againſt the priſoner at the bar) it was found that the priſoner and this Davis were gone off: a proper enquiry was made to get at them if poſſible, and you will find, that after a great deal of diligent ſearch, under many ſuſpicious circumſtances which I will not ſtate, at a great diſtance from London, the priſoner and Davis were found by the ſea coaſt going by different names from their own; if you attend to theſe circumſtances, you will ſee from the beginning the priſoner at the bar inſiſting that he had the note from a man of property, and though preſſed, declining to declare the man's name, in a way that an innocent man, I ſhould ſubmit to you, could not poſſibly do, but you will form your own judgement; at laſt, however, he conſents to tell Hayward alone (for he would not talk to Wagſtaff) that he had it from Davis, and he undertakes to produce Davis the next morning, but he never comes himſelf, nor does Davis come: ſearch is made after both, and both of them are found by the ſea coaſt of this country, for what purpoſe you will judge.

Gentlemen, this is the caſe we have to lay before you, we ſhall endeavour to prove before you, that the priſoner at the bar uttered this forged note; and the queſtion for you to determine therefore is, whether it was a forged note to the knowledge of the priſoner at the time of the uttering; and in order to determine that, you will conſider whether this conduct, and theſe expreſſions of his can at all be made agreeable to the conduct of an innocent perſon, and added to that, after this promiſe to produce the party to the perſon injured, from whom he had it; his failing of that promiſe and attempting to elude any ſearch, and coupled with that promiſe, and alſo to his being at a diſtant place by a feigned name; it ſeems therefore to me, that a clearer caſe cannot come before you to ſatisfy you of the guilt of this priſoner at the bar, in uttering this note knowing it to be forged. Gentlemen, it is a queſtion as to his knowledge, it is a queſtion of conſcience, it is a queſtion concerning what paſſes in a man's mind, and it cannot be proved by any thing but circumſtances; and I conceive the circumſtances we ſhall lay before you are incompatible with the conduct of an innocent man. Gentlemen, this is our caſe, and if you are ſatisfied by the teſtimony of the witneſſes, of the guilt of the priſoner at the bar, your duty to the publick requires that you ſhould find him guilty; if you are not ſatisfied, it is no leſs your duty to the individual to acquit him.

Mr. Garrow Council for the Priſoner. My Lord, on the part of the priſoner I am inſtructed that all the witneſſes, except thoſe that belong to the Bank of England, to whom your Lordſhip cannot eaſily believe my inſtructions were to extend, may be examined apart.

THOMAS WAGSTAFF ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

What are you?——A weaver.

Where do you live?——In Nova Scotia Gardens, Bethnall-green.

Do you know the priſoner?——Yes.

How long have you known him?——Between four and five years.

Did he apply to you in November laſt?——Some time in November he applied to me.

Where?——At the Sun in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet.

At what time?——In the afternoon.

What paſſed?——He aſked me if I knew any body that had got any money, he wanted two notes changed for one hundred pounds each.

Did he give you any reaſon for applying to you?——The Bank was ſhut up, I think that was the reaſon; I told him I would go and aſk an acquaintance of mine if he had ſo much money in the houſe; I went to my acquaintance, his name is Thomas Hayward; he ſaid he had but one hundred and twenty pounds in the houſe, I went back and told the priſoner, he told me that would do, and he would leave the notes with him till he came out of the country.

Look at that note?——This is one of them.

You are ſure of it?——Yes.

Look at that?——That is the other.

Theſe two notes he put into your hand?——Yes.

What money was paid to him?——One hundred and twenty pounds in caſh and ſmall notes.

Did any thing elſe paſs at that time?—Nothing particular, only we drank together.

What happened afterwards?—In about a fortnight, or ſomething more, I believe it was, Mr. Hayward came to me and told me the notes were forged, and we agreed to go down to Mr. Newland; he lived at Chinkford-hall, in Eſſex; I called him out of his parlour, and told him there was a ſad piece of work had happened, for thoſe notes were forged that I had of him.

What did Mr. Newland ſay?—He ſaid he was ſurprized at that, he had them from a man of property.

Did he ſay who that man of property was?——No he did not.

What then paſſed?—Then we came to the chaiſe to Mr. Hayward; I told him he was in the chaiſe; Mr. Hayward got out of the chaiſe as ſoon as he ſaw him, and told him he might have expected that he ſhould have brought ſome perſons down to have taken him into cuſtody; he ſaid he knew nothing of their being forged; I then told him the man muſt have his money back again; he ſaid, yes, certainly he muſt, and he would come the next day and go to the man whom he had them of, and get the money returned back for them, he did come the next morning at ten o'clock and ſaid he could not find the man, he was gone out of town ſomewhere.

Did you aſk who the gentleman was?—Mr. Hayward did, but he omitted telling him, he ſaid he would come the next day, but did not, and the next day, or the next day but one we went down to Chinkford again; when we came to Chinkford, we were very angry with him, both Mr. Hayward and me, for not coming according to his promiſe; he ſaid he was vexed that he did not come, but he had been buſy, he had been to ſome market at Waltham; on Friday he came to town, and we met at a publick houſe in Camomile-ſtreet; he then told Mr. Hayward who it was he had them of, but he would not let me hear him.

How came you not to hear him?——He deſired me to go out of the room while he told Mr. Hayward, for he ſaid he would tell him, but he would not tell any body elſe.

Did he ſay any thing elſe?—No, I had no diſcourſe with him that day.

Had you any diſcourſe with him any time afterwards?——No, I aſked Mr. Hayward whether he ſaid any thing ſatisfactory.

Mr. Garrow. You muſt not tell us what Mr. Hayward ſaid.

Mr. Sylveſter. Had you any diſcourſe with the priſoner after?——I do not recollect I ſaw him till I ſaw him at Bow-ſtreet.

Could you find him at all after that?—No.

Mr. Garrow. You never went to the place where you was likely to find him?—No.

This man was but a ſlight acquaintance of yours?——I have known him four or five years.

You knew Davis, the potatoe merchant, in Spital-fields-market.

I knew him about the ſame time I knew Mr. Newland, but I have not ſeen him above ten months.

The priſoner applied to you at a publick houſe, and aſked you if you knew any body who could give change for two one hundred pounds bank notes?—Yes.

Then he depoſited with you as a pledge, two notes of one hundred pounds each, receiving from you one hundred and twenty pounds?——Yes.

It was a fortnight before you had occaſion to apply to the priſoner again?—Yes.

The priſoner then for all that you know on that ſubject, was, during that fortnight, reſiding at Chinkford, in the uſual way of his trade as a farmer?—For ought I know he was.

He had met with no obſtruction from you or the governors of the Bank?—Not that I know of.

Did he tell you it was for a friend of his?——No.

But on your telling him they were forged and there had been ſad work, he ſaid directly, I ſhall apply to the gentleman from whom I had them, and I will endeavour to get the money returned?——Yes.

Your object and the object of Mr. Hayward was, in truth to have got the money for theſe bad notes?—He wanted his money again.

And if the priſoner at the bar had had the diſcretion to deliver the money, you would have given him the notes?—I did not hold the notes.

The priſoner did not avail himſelf of this opportunity to eſcape, but put you off from day to day, with always telling you he would get the money?——Yes.

You ſay he did in fact come to town and meet you more days than one?—Two days.

And he returned of courſe to his own houſe for any thing you know?——Yes.

Mr. Sylveſter. When he offered you theſe notes, it was for you to give him caſh for them, was not it?——Yes, it was.

Did he ſay the reaſon why he wanted caſh?——He ſaid he was going into the country to buy ſome goods.

Mr. Garrow. How long was it after the time that you found theſe notes were forged, that he was apprehended?—It was ſome time more than three weeks, but he was in the country.

What diſtance from town?——At Yarmouth I heard.

That you know nothing about to your own knowledge?

Court. But from the time that you firſt gave intimation that theſe notes were forged, what ſpace of time intervened?—From the time I had the laſt interview with him at the Coach-maker's Arms, I did not ſee him afterwards; he did not go out of town directly after, I know.

He might have gone any where ?—Yes.

Jury. How do you know theſe to be the two notes which the priſoner gave you ?——There is a particular mark, there is a word blotted in the word Schutz, in both of them, and one more than the other; when they were opened by Mr. Hayward he ſaid, how they have blotted them.

Jury. Is it your cuſtom to write the name of the perſon from whom you received the bank notes upon it ?——I am not much accuſtomed to bank notes.

Then there is no other mark whatever that you know them by, ſave that of the blot ?——No.

Mr. Garrow. Are you a maſter weaver ?——What goods I make is my own.

You are not extremely converſant in bank notes ?—No, Sir.

Therefore, whether they are frequently blotted or not you cannot tell ?——No, I thought it was no harm to them.

THOMAS HAYWARD ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Fielding.

Where do you live ?—In Primroſe-ſtreet, I am a weaver.

In the month of November laſt, did Wagſtaff make any application to you ?—Yes, on the 11th of laſt November, Thomas Wagſtaff called on me, and he aſked me if I could give change for two ſingle hundred pounds bank notes; I told him I had no more than one hundred and twenty pounds in the houſe; I aſked him who it was for, he ſaid it was for farmer Newland.

What paſſed between you after that ?—Wagſtaff went away, I did not ſee the notes the firſt time, he returned again in a very ſhort time with the notes, and ſaid that would do, that Mr. Newland was going into the country, and I might have the uſe of the other eighty pounds for about two months.

What paſſed then between you ?—Nothing more, than that I advanced him the money, and I had the notes, and I obſerved a blot.

Should you know theſe notes again ?——Yes, Sir, I believe from a thouſand. (The notes ſhewn him.) Theſe are the notes, I am very poſitive, on the 13th of November, which was the Thurſday, I paid one of theſe notes away to John Ellis, in Holywell Lane, No. 75.

When was it, and to whom that you paid the other note, No. 76 ?——No. 76, the other note, I paid ſometime in November, but cannot tell the day, I called upon Mr. Buxton, a haberdaſher, and aſked him to change me that note.

Where does he live ?—In Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, he ſaid, he had but about thirty pounds, he gave me that, he was buſy in the ſhop, he took the note and put it by, ſeemingly careleſs, I called again the next day, as I call in generally moſt days in the week, ſays he, you may take back your note, for I do not know when I ſhall have enough give you change for it, and you may give me the thirty pounds in a day or two.

Had you indorſed it at that time ?—No, Sir, there was no mark at all.

When did you indorſe it firſt ?—At Bow-ſtreet.

What negotiation did you put the note in ?—None at all, I kept it from that time, the other note I paſſed away to Mr. Ellis.

When was it that any notice of a ſuſpicion came to you, that theſe notes were forged notes ?—The latter end of November, I cannot be poſitive, as ſoon as Mr. Ellis told me it was a bad note, I applied to Mr. Wagſtaff.

When was that, as near as you can recollect ?—The Saturday, but I cannot tell the day of the month, I found him at home, and ſaid to him, Wagſtaff, theſe two notes that you have brought are forged, and we concluded to go to him the Sunday; this was the Saturday evening, we thought it more likely to find him the Sunday; the Sunday morning we took a chaiſe and went down to Chinkford Hall, in Eſſex, there I ſat in the chaiſe while Wagſtaff went into Newland's houſe, I cannot poſitively ſay the day of the month, but it was of a Sunday, Wagſtaff and Newland came out of the houſe together, I got out of the chaiſe and met them both; the firſt word that I ſaid to Newland, was this, ſays I, Newland, you had no right to expect me by myſelf, without five or ſix armed men to take you into cuſtody, I added, I might have been taken and dragged out of my bed, and dragged to a gaol; then I told him the notes were forged, he ſaid, if they were forged, he could not forge them, for he could neither read nor write, I told him he was as liable to be hanged for putting them off, as the man that made them, I aſked him who he had them from, he ſaid, he had them from a man of property, I aſked him, who that man of property was, he did not chuſe to tell me.

Court. He did not tell you?—He did not.

Mr. Fielding. How do you mean that he did not chuſe to tell you?——I aſked him ſeveral times and he did not tell me.

He was ſilent upon it?—Yes, I aſked him to go with me to town, then I told him it was a matter of a very ſerious concern, and that certainly his life was in danger, if he did not produce the man in a proper manner; he begged I would not mention it any where thereabout, he would not have it mentioned for five hundred pounds; that he had juſt got into a farm of two hundred a year, and it might be the ruin of him; I ſtill preſſed him to let me know from whom he had them, he told me the money was all I wanted, and I might depend upon having it; he aſked me what was to be done in caſe the money could not immediately be had, I told him, I would hang all that was concerned, he ſaid, he hoped, I would not talk about hanging any body, and appointed to meet me at my own houſe the next day at ten o'clock; I then left him, and he came according to his promiſe, I told Wagſtaff to watch in the ſtreet, and he came at eleven to the Coach-maker's Arms; as ſoon as we had got into the back parlour, I aſked him if he had brought the money, he ſaid, no, he had not, I aſked him who the man was again, this man that he had got them of, and he then refuſed to tell me, he ſaid, the gentleman was gone to Stratford, and would not be at home before the evening, and that he wanted to go home, but would meet me the next morning, and would bring me the money; I let him go away; he did not come the next day, on the Thurſday, Wagſtaff and I took a chaiſe, and went down to Chinkford Hall again.

Did you find him there?—Yes.

Jury. Can you ſpeak to the day of the month?——I have not got the day of the month down.

Mr. Fielding. Then you went to Chinkford Hall?—Yes, I told him, I thought he was run away, he pretended he had been to ſome market juſt by, and had not had an opportunity of ſeeing the gentleman whom he had the bills from.

Did he make uſe of the word gentleman?—Yes, Sir, he always treated him as a man of property.

Jury. Did he ſay the gentlemen or gentleman?—He did not call it more than one, I did not ſtay but a very little while, but I told him, that if the matter was not ſettled, that he muſt expect to be taken into cuſtody, this was on the Thurſday, he appointed to meet me the next day at the Coach-maker's Arms, Camomile-ſtreet; accordingly he came at the hour he appointed, but I cannot tell the hour, I believe he was there rather before me, Wagſtaff came much about the ſame time, he rather refuſed then to tell me or give me any ſatisfaction, then I told him, I would not part from him till he did tell me who he had them from, he ſaid, he would not tell me before any witneſs, meaning before Wagſtaff, and we went up ſtairs into the club-room, Newland and I, and nobody elſe preſent, and there he made me promiſe in a very ſolemn manner, that I would not mention the man's name, and he would tell me, I told him that if he did not bring me the money that night or the next day, he could not expect me to keep my word, but that he muſt expect that I would divulge it, he then told me that he had them from Henry Davis, a potatoe merchant, in Spitalfields-market, he ſeemed not deſirous that I ſhould call on Henry Davis, becauſe he told me I ſhould have the money, I might depend upon it, as much as a man could ſay, he was to meet me the next morning or that night; I believe very little paſſed but aſſurances, that I ſhould have the money.

Did you join company with Wagſtaff again?—No, I believe we went out.

When was it that you made an appointment to meet again?—The next day he was to call at my houſe, I always appointed my houſe, but he rather wiſhed to go to other places, I went to Davis the next day, the priſoner not coming on the afternoon of the Saturday, I enquired for Davis, and I found him at home, he was ſtanding at the door, I ſaid is your name Henry Davis, he ſaid, yes.

Mr. Fielding. We muſt not have any converſation between you and Mr. Davis; where did you ſee the priſoner after the Friday?—On the Monday morning following, he called at my houſe pretty early, then he brought me ten pounds, in delivering me the ten pounds, he ſaid, as I underſtood him then, it was all he had got by him, but when he was at Bow-ſtreet, he ſaid to Sir Sampſon Wright, there is Mr. Hayward, he cannot deny that I told him at the time, there was ten pounds, and that was all the money I got by them.

What did you underſtand this to be when he delivered it to you on the Monday morning?—I did not pay any credit to what he ſaid, I am hard of hearing of one ear, and I might miſunderſtand him, but when we were in Bow-ſtreet, he inſiſted upon it, that he ſaid, and he dared me to contradict him, that it was all he got by them.

What paſſed between you when he brought you the ten pounds?—I told him ten pounds was nothing, ſays I do not trifle with me any longer, but ſet your time and keep it, for I will be ſhuffled with no longer; he appointed that day three weeks, it was a great deal of money, but I did expect to get it as I could; though I may be blamed, before that day three weeks he was gone away; I could not find him at all, I never ſaw him after that Monday till he was apprehended, I then went to one of the gentlemen belonging to Sir Sampſon Wright's, and aſked him whoſe hands it was proper I ſhould deliver the notes to.

At what time was it that you applied to the Gentlemen of the Bank, and informed them of this matter?—I cannot tell how long, they were gone a long while, but when I heard that he was apprehended, I was determined to deliver the notes up, I delivered them to Mr. Acton's hands at Sir Sampſon Wright's office.

What time was that?——I do not know.

What day did you firſt go to Chinkford?—The day that Wagſtaff firſt applied to me was on the 11th of November, the Tueſday.

How long was it before you firſt went in ſearch of him at Chinkford?—I cannot be exact.

How long was it between the time you received the notes from him, and the time he appointed to meet you?—It might be a fortnight, it was either the 30th of November, or the 7th of December.

How long was it after you delivered this note to Mr. Ellis, and the other to Mr. Buxton, before you received notice that theſe notes were fabricated?——About a fortnight.

Court. From the time that you firſt had a ſuſpicion that theſe notes were forged to the time that the priſoner abſconded, what was the portion of time that elapſed?—He abſconded before the time he fixed to come to me, but I cannot tell, for he living eight miles off, I was tired.

Court. Then from the Sunday you firſt went with Mr. Wagſtaff, to the Monday when he paid you ten pounds, that was but a week?—Yes.

Did you know any thing of Newland?——I did formerly know him, when he was a hay broker at Whitechapel, I underſtood he had borrowed three or four hundred pounds to ſtock his farm with, and I underſtood this was part of the money.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. You have told the Court very candidly, and I dare ſay, very truly, that this being a conſiderable ſum of money, one hundred and twenty pounds, and a great deal too much to loſe, you was very anxious to get it?——I was.

In conſequence of that you had four or five interviews with the priſoner?——Yes.

You had ſeen him in the courſe of a week four times, ſometimes he kept his promiſe, ſometimes he did not, but you however had ſeveral interviews with him on the ſubject, and the firſt time you applied to him, you informed him of his ſituation, told him how his life would be affected, that he would be hanged, and that any body that had a hand in uttering forged notes were as guilty as the forgers?——Yes.

But his anxiety however did not ſeem to keep pace with your advice, for he only ſays, for God's ſake, do not mention it hereabouts, for I am juſt got into a farm of very conſiderable extent?——Yes.

That was the ſort of anxiety that ſeemed to preſs on the mind of the priſoner, neglecting all that you told him: he appeared to you to be a man of ſome property, renting a conſiderable farm?——He did.

It would not have been very difficult, one would have thought, for ſuch a man to have raiſed ſuch a ſum as one hundred and twenty pounds?—I believe he could have raiſed it.

Aye! if he had been anxious ſo to do, I dare ſay you would have been very glad to have got good ſecurity for your money, you would not have inſiſted on hard caſh?——I wanted hard caſh, I gave him my hard caſh.

Now the laſt time, after he paid you ten pounds, you gave him perfect latitude for the payment of remainder, that was your converſation, and he took three weeks; now did you hear that the priſoner living in Eſſex, had been in a ſituation which I muſt mention, had not you heard that he was a ſmugler?——I cannot ſay I did.

That note is No. 76, that you lodged at Mr. Buxton's?——Yes.

He gave you thirty pounds, and the next day he returned you a note for one hundred pounds?——Yes.

Can you, or can you not, in a caſe of life, venture to ſwear that that note, whilſt it was in the hand of Mr. Buxton, might not have been changed?——I took ſuch particular notice of the notes, I remarked them to be blotted in ſuch a manner, that I could have known them again from a thouſand.

If you had ſeen a bank note, No. 876, payable to Mr. John Schutz, for one hundred pounds, dated the ſame day, could you have diſtinguiſhed it from this?——I do in my conſcience believe that to be the note, and as ſuch I do declare it.

So I underſtand you, you are of opinion that you had the ſame note back again?—I am pretty ſure of it.

You have told us that even when he made the laſt appointment with you, he was endeavouring to gain time?——I think he never meant to give the money at all.

You told him the ſecond time you would hang all that were concerned?——Yes.

Do you happen to know Davis?——I ſhould not know him if I was to ſee him now.

Did you know him by reputation?——I know nothing at all of him.

You told us that the priſoner ſeemed not deſirous that you ſhould call on Davis?—When he enjoined me to ſecrecy, he ſaid, he would bring me the money himſelf, and ſaid, he would not wiſh me to call on Davis, he did not wiſh I ſhould call on him.

Now during the whole of this month you ſay you did not diſcloſe to the Governors of the Bank of England or any other perſon, that you had theſe notes in your poſſeſſion?——I did not.

You felt that your ſituation was an aukward one, if he had run away, and you had been found with theſe notes?——Yes.

And then for a whole month you did not apply to the Governors of the Bank?——There is one word I remember now, he told me it was put in ſuch a train, that th money I ſhould be ſure of having.

My queſtion is whether you did not kee theſe bills, and did not diſcloſe to any bod that you had them in your poſſeſſion during that month, that is ſo, is not it?——I believ

I believe I did mention it to a friend or two, I did want to get my money.

Do you know any thing of the priſoner's abſconding, you found him at Chinkford?——Yes.

Did you go at any other time?——I went after he was gone, and I was very well informed that he was gone to Norfolk.

Do you know that the priſoner was taken at his own houſe?——I have heard that he was.

You ſaid it was your wiſh to meet at your own houſe, but the priſoner choſe a public houſe?——We was in a private room.

Mr. Fielding. Do you know whether he had a farm or not at Chinkford, or whether it was his brother's, was he a tenant to farmer Lott?——I have heard ſo, his appearance looked very wretched when I went down firſt.

Mr. Fielding. This note had remained in your poſſeſſion till you gave it in to the magiſtrate?——Yes.

Then this is the note you received from Wagſtaff?——Yes.

Jury. When did you go down to the priſoner's houſe, after that Monday that he had paid you the ten pounds, and was to pay you the remainder in three weeks?——I was informed that he was at Norfolk, therefore, I did not go down, but I was there on the Thurſday that he was apprehended; on the Saturday or Sunday, I went to Chinkford, a few days before he was apprehended, after the three weeks had elapſed, his wife told me he was at Norfolk or ſomewhere there, and as I underſtood he was gone upon a ſmuggling party.

Examined by Mr. Bearcroft.

I know Mr. Hayward, he brought me a bank note of one hundred pound to change, ſix weeks ago I told him I had thirty pounds, he ſaid, he had his people to pay, I gave him the thirty pounds, he threw the note on the counter, he called upon me the next day, ſays I, you may take your note again, and when you have got change for it, you may bring me the thirty pounds.

Take this note in your hand, and tell me whether you believe that is the ſame note?—I cannot ſay poſitively to it, but I believe it is.

I do not aſk you to be poſitive, but according to the beſt of your belief and recollection?—I do not know rightly, it looks like it, I fancy it is.

Did you change away the note you received from Mr. Hayward, or did you return the not you had from Mr. Hayward to him again?——I returned the ſame piece of paper, it was only out of the counter into the drawer, and out of the drawer into his pocket.

Locked up I ſuppoſe?—No, Sir, it was not; nobody ſtands behind the counter but my wife and me.

Mr. Garrow. Whether your wife had changed it for another you cannot tell?—No.

So that while it was in that drawer it might have been changed you know?—I do not know that it was.

No! nor that it was not?—No.

JOHN ACTON, Eſq; ſworn.

I am ſolicitor to the bank, I received this note from the hands of Thomas Hayward the witneſs, who wrote his name upon it in my preſence, and I likewiſe: that is the ſame note.

JAMES WILLIAM LANDER ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Will your Lordſhip indulge me with a queſtion or two to Mr. Lander.

What are you, Sir?——One of the caſhiers of the Bank.

You are authoriſed to ſubſcribe notes?—Yes.

Do you give ſecurity to the Bank of England for your fidelity?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I take the liberty of ſubmitting an objection to the competency of Mr. Lander, I take it for granted the gentleman is called to prove that the note produced is not his hand writing, I truſt, my Lord, that the ſituation in which I ſtand, and the ſituation in which that unfortunate man at the bar ſtands, will apologize for me to your Lordſhip, for taking the liberty of troubling your Lordſhip; and if, ultimately, it ſhall be the fate of my objection to be overruled, yet I truſt I ſhall be forgiven for having made it, when it is conſidered that the defence of the priſoner at the bar is to be conducted by my inexperience and inability, againſt the firſt abilities and moſt confirmed experience that this country affords. I intreat your Lordſhip to believe that in this, and every objection I may take, I ſhall endeavour ſo to conduct myſelf, as to convince the Court that it is not my purpoſe to ſport with their time, to trouble them with frivolous objections, or to impede the courſe of juſtice: the objection which I take the liberty of ſubmitting to your Lordſhip is, that Mr. Lander is intereſted in the event of this trial, and I beg leave to premiſe that this objection does not go one ſingle tittle perſonally againſt the character of Mr. Lander; I mean to argue it in the general, without ſuggeſting an imputation on him or any of the gentlemen of the bank; and I ſay this, that not one individual here ſhould entertain an idea, that criminality is imputable to thoſe gentlemen, whoſe conduct and integrity raiſe them above ſuſpicion; but it is my duty to ſubmit to the Court, that an intereſt the ſmalleſt that can poſſibly be conceived in nature, is objection enough to the examination of a witneſs, this is the law in civil caſes, and therefore, I ſubmit it is an objection, which applies a fortiori in a criminal proſecution: the caſe of a commoner, who comes to ſay that a common is not commonable but to ſuch a number, or by ſuch a deſcription of perſons, is extremely minute: yet ſuch a man's evidence is uniformly rejected; the evidence of a corporator, who would confine the exerciſe of a franchiſe, is liable to the ſame objection; and even in queſtions about the ſettlement of a pauper, it is every day's experience that the pariſhioners can not be examined; I have heard it from the firſt authority in this country, recognized in this Court by great authorities on the trial of Mrs. Rudd, that Courts of juſtice do not ſit to weigh what degree of temptations the minds of men may reſiſt, but to take care that they ſhall not be expoſed to any temptations whatever. My Lords, if a gentleman is going along the ſtreet, and his ſervant is aſſaulted, and an action is brought by the ſervant, the maſter is not bound to pay the coſts, ſo ſays the law; but if the maſter is tendered as a witneſs, he is aſked, do you pay the coſts? the maſter will anſwer as a man of honour and generoſity, I think I ought not to let my ſervant pay them; if I were ſtating ſuch a caſe to the common underſtandings of men; of ſuch a man as this, I ſhould ſtate, that he was actuated by principles of the firſt ſtandard in morality, principles of juſtice to his ſervant, and acting under the influence of thoſe principles, it is impoſſible that he ſhould be biaſſed, to the commiſſion of perjury, yet a witneſs ſtanding in in this ſituation, is rejected in a Court of law. In the caſe of Mrs. Rudd, Mrs. Perreau was called as a witneſs, and it was aſked of her, whether ſhe had a hope that if Mrs. Rudd ſhould be convicted, that conviction might have ſome effect to procure the pardon and diſcharge of her huſband, who was already convicted: on her anſwering ſhe did hope ſo, the Court refuſed to receive her evidence; what was the ſuppoſed bias on this woman's mind, viewed in the light of a legal objection. It amounts only to a hope, which might be fallacious, that if Mrs. Rudd ſhould be convicted, that event might tend to induce a belief, that Mr. Perreau had been improperly convicted, and that mercy might be extended to him as the reſult of that belief; in the caſe of a common forgery the objection would be certainly unanſwerable, we all know that a man who has ſubſcribed a note, and is therefore prima facie liable to pay it, cannot be examined as a witneſs; but it will be ſaid that Mr. Lander is not perſonally liable to pay this note; but my Lords, I conceive his intereſt in this queſtion may be no leſs conſiderable, for he has told your Lordſhips, that he gives ſecurity for his fidelity, and I am entitled to ſuppoſe his bonds are to the amount of twenty thouſand pounds: if Mr. Lander, or any officer belonging to the bank ſhould receive ten pounds, or any other ſum, and iſſue a note without carrying the amount to the account of the Bank of England; if the Bank of England ſhould have no value for that note, ſo iſſued by the officer, but if the officer ſo intruſted ſhould ſubſcribe his name, putting the money into his pocket, he would come here under this bias, if this is proved to be my hand writing, as it is not carried to the account of the Governors of the Bank of England, I am liable to a civil proſecution, on my ſecurity bonds for a breach of duty, and to a criminal proſecution, for a fraud on the bank. My Lords, when I ſtand here as council for a priſoner, and addreſs myſelf to your Lordſhips, I am intitled in this ſtate of the proſecution, to ſay, that the priſoner is as innocent as the witneſs tendered to be examined; then my objection is that this witneſs comes under the bias which I have taken the liberty to ſtate, and I aſſure myſelf that if this objection ſhould not meet with an inſuperable anſwer, from thoſe gentlemen whoſe anſwers I dread extremely, and the weight of whoſe abilities have almoſt deterred me from troubling your Lordſhip; I aſſure myſelf your Lordſhips will not receive the evidence of Mr. Lander, but will leave the fact to be proved by other and better, and leſs exceptionable means.

Mr. Bearcroft, Council for the Proſecution. My Lord, it is certainly very proper for a Council concerned for the priſoner to make any objection that may occur to him; and I am the laſt man in the world, as Council for a proſecution, that will even complain of the exertion of the ingenuity of an advocate in ſuch ſituation: it is only my duty to ſubmit to your Lordſhip the anſwer, which is, firſt, and it is a very ſtrong anſwer, that the conſtant current of practice has been to admit ſuch a witneſs as is now objected to, and I am only to appeal to your Lordſhip's experience, and that of the other learned Judges upon the bench for the truth of this aſſertion; that of itſelf my Lord is a ſtrong anſwer to this objection: but however, there is another circumſtance I am ready to admit, that it is the clear law of the land in civil caſes, as well as in criminal, that whenſoever a witneſs is called to prove a propoſition in which he ſtands directly intereſted, to ſay yes, rather than no, he ſhall not be admitted as a witneſs to ſay yes; and I alſo admit that the queſtion is not on the quantity of the intereſt, for if the intereſt amounts only to five ſhillings, it is as complete an objection, as if it amounted to twenty thouſand pounds; the difficulty is to ſee how the learned gentleman applies the reaſoning to the preſent caſe: Mr. Lander is a clerk of the Bank, but his ſignature does not bind himſelf, his ſignature profeſſes to be for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England; if he were to offer himſelf here, upon an indictment for a forgery of Mr. Lander's note, beyond doubt he would not be competent a witneſs; but here he can never be ſued civilly, becauſe he profeſſes to ſign for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England; and whoever therefore receives that paper, muſt call on them and them only. The learned gentleman then raiſes another objection, in which he is forced to make a preſumption, and a violent one it is, and contrary to the very firſt principles of law; he aſſerts that this Mr. Lander has given ſecurity to exerciſe his office faithfully, and then ſays, he, now I will preſume he has not exerciſed it faithfully, but that this is his handwriting; that is, I will preſume he is guilty of a capital forgery, in order to make him an intereſted witneſs, and to repel his evidence. My Lord, the law never preſumes guilt, the law preſumes innocence, and the learned gentleman cannot ſtate his objection but in that form; by poſſibility, ſays he, it looks likely, or you are to take it for granted, that Mr. Lander has put his name to bank paper iſſued by the Bank, for certain purpoſes, and that he is guilty of the forgery: ſtate the caſe, that here is a genuine bank note, that Lander puts his name falſely without authority, and add ſome other circumſtances that do not exiſt, and that is the foundation of the objection. Take it for granted that he is guilty of the forgery himſelf, and moſt undoubtedly he is guilty of the forgery; but your Lordſhip ſees the objection ſtands on the illegal aſſumption, contrary to the firſt principles of law: nevertheleſs, it is no reflection on the learned gentleman who has taken the objection.

Court. This objection is taken by the Council for the priſoner to the teſtimony of the witneſs Mr. Lander, as an intereſted witneſs; I remember in the caſe of Doctor Dodd, my Lord Cheſterfield, whoſe bond it was ſuppoſed to be, and whoſe name was ſubſcribed to it, before he was examined as a witneſs, he executed a releaſe which made him a competent witneſs; now I take it, that to repel the evidence of a witneſs, it muſt appear that they would be liable to be ſued or proſecuted: you are not to preſume that a man is guilty of a capital crime in order to repel his teſtimony, and Mr. Lander has by no means engaged himſelf, and I think his teſtimony ought to be received.

Mr. Recorder. I am of the ſame opinion; the anſwer ſeems to be this, that in order to allow this objection, it is neceſſary to preſume the criminality of the witneſs; the intereſt muſt therefore be either apparent on the nature of the tranſaction, or come out from his own examination: if the witneſs is intereſted, or if he admits himſelf to have an intereſt that operates in his own mind, in either of thoſe caſes, to be ſure it would be an objection.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Lander. Look at that note?—It is a plain forgery.

Is it?—Yes undoubtedly.

Court. Is it your hand-writing?—No, my Lord.

Is it on bank paper?—No.

GEORGE VINCENT ſworn.

I am entering clerk at the Bank.

Look at that bank note?—It is a forgery, it is not my hand-writing, it is not bank paper.

(The note read.)

"1783. No. 876. I promiſe to pay
"Mr. John Schutz, or bearer, on demand,
"the ſum of one hundred pounds, for the "Governor and Company of the Bank of "England. William Lander, £100. En"tered Geo. Vincent."

(The note ſhewn to the Jury.)

Court. There is no variance between the note and the record.

Mr. Fielding to Mr. Vincent. You have ſeen that note?—Yes.

In the firſt place you ſay it is not your hand-writing?—It is not.

Wherein does it differ?—There is a very material difference in the one hundred pounds, which extends further than ours, the paper is more flimſy than ours.

Has that note any water mark in it?—I never obſerved it.

Be ſo good as to look at it now?—It is a very faint water mark if there is one, but I cannot diſtinguiſh it.

To Mr. Lander. Tell us the difference?—I ſee no water mark, here is ſomething, but it is not clear, here is the word pounds printed in it, which is not in real bank notes, here is the hundred in the black, is joined with the letter F. it is jumbled together.

Mr. Sylveſter. Is it either the plate or the paper of the Bank?—Neither.

Mr. Garrow. I do not doubt but theſe are perfectly diſtinguiſhable to you, but to men of common obſervation are they ſo very bad, as that a man taking notes in the common way of trade, might not have have taken them?—They might take them.

Continuation of the Trial of William Newland.

EDMUND PATMAN ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Do you know the priſoner ?—Yes.

Did you at any time go to Norwich, or the ſea coaſt ?—Yes, I believe it was about ſix weeks ago.

Where was you ?—I went from London, a young man and I, to Swolen in Norfolk, there we met Newland and Davis ; it was about ſix weeks ago.

Was it before or after Chriſtmas ?——After ; we ſtaid there that night, it is about thirty miles from the ſea coaſt, we went from there to Southwold, which is cloſe joining to the ſea, I believe we ſtaid there ſeven or eight days.

Who ſtaid with you ?—Davis and Newland, and one Handby that went down with me, and Newland's man.

What name did Newland go by ?——By the name of Brown.

What name did Davis go by ?——By the name of Pitt ; we continued there ſix or ſeven days, then we went to a place called Cuthie, it is about three quarters of a mile from the ſea, we ſtaid there I believe much about the ſame time, eight or nine days.

Where did you go from thence ?——From there we came home to London.

Court. What was your buſineſs in going there ?——We went there to aſſiſt him to get the goods away from the water ſide.

Mr. Garrow. Maſter Patmar, there is ſome good moon-ſhine at Southwold, is not there ?——I do not know what that is.

Lord bleſs me ! I thought you had learned that in the Exchequer long ſince ; do not you know what white brandy is ?——I never ſold any.

Oh ! you only carried it, you was a ſort of huckſter then ; pray Maſter Patman, what might your travelling name be in this expedition ?——My name was Smith.

Pray Mr. Smith, alias Patman, what was your reaſon for exchanging your name ?——That the Cuſtom Houſe officers ſhould not lay hold of us.

It is very common you know, for gentlemen and nobleman to go incog. ſo the cutter did not come in ſight, and you came away to town, is that it ?——Yes.

Mr. Sylveſter. Who deſired you to take the name of Smith ?——I do not know whether it was Newland or Pitt, or who it was.

Mr. Garrow. It was ſome of the gang?——We expected ſome ſmuggled goods that Woodin and Thurſton went over to buy.

Mr. Sylveſter. What were they to pay for the goods?——I underſtood it was paper.

Who was to pay for them in paper?——Woodin.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, is it proper for us to hear the whole journey of this gang to Bruges. What did Newland ſay to you about theſe tranſactions of this journey?——Very little.

How came you and Newland to leave the coaſt?——I went down to Yarmouth, and I heard they were taken up for a forgery on the Bank, I told Newland, that I heard a man on the other ſide of the water was taken up for forgery, he ſeemed to be ſurpriſed, and ſaid, he knew nothing about it; we came about fifteen miles the next day to the place were Davis took coach, and Newland and I came up in his little cart.

What name was there on the cart?——I do not know, I believe Newland, I am not ſure whether it was upon it or not, I cannot read.

Mr. Bearcroft. Why did the party break up? tell the whole, upon your oath?——I do not know.

What was ſaid about parting company?——Nothing particular.

How came you to leave the coaſt and part company?—Upon the account of the other man being taken up on the other ſide of the water, for a forgery on the bank, that was what I underſtood at Yarmouth.

Mr. Garrow. Somebody told you theſe men were taken up for forgery?——Yes.

And you told Newland ſo?——Yes.

And he afterwards came up to his own houſe?——He came to Rumford near to it.

You cannot read?——No.

Nor Newland neither?——I believe not, I believe he can neither read or write.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

I went to Chinkford to apprehend the priſoner, it was on a Sunday morning, and very ſnowy; we ſaw a woman come from Chinkford Hall, to light a candle at that man's houſe, as ſoon as the door was open we went in immediately, I went up ſtairs, there were two people in bed, a man and woman, he ſaid, his name was George Newland, ſays I, where is your brother Will; ſays he, I do not think I have ſeen him for this ten days; I went into another room, I ſaw a woman, and I aſked her when ſhe ſaw William, ſhe ſaid, not for a great while, I then ſaw I believe his nephew.

Mr. Garrow. Will your Lordſhip take the account of what all theſe people ſaid to the witneſs.

Court. Where was he found?—I came into the waſh-houſe, and I ſaw a man come out, and I aſked him where he came from, he ſaid, down that ſtair-caſe, I immediately went and clapped a piſtol to his head, and ſaid, if you ſtir, I will blow your brains out! ſays he, I ſhall make no reſiſtance, he ſaid, he ſuppoſed we wanted him; we brought him down from there, and he aſked what was the matter.

Did he know you before?—Not to my knowledge.

Did any thing paſs after that?——He aſked what it was for, I told him it was for making bank notes, and he ſaid he could neither read nor write.

Mr. Bearcroft. My Lord, there is a piece of evidence behind which I did not open, I have a witneſs to prove, that previous to the time of delivering theſe bank notes that have been produced; the priſoner at the bar offered to ſell eight hundred pounds in bank notes for four hundred pounds.

Court. I do not think I ſhould receive that.

Mr. Garrow. I wiſh Mr. Bearcroft had contrived any way that the Jury ſhould not have heard it.

Priſoner. My Lord I never offered any bank notes under the value in my life, here I ſtand, my life is at ſtake.

Court to Priſoner. There is no evidence on that ſubject, theſe bank notes you were to have received the full conſideration for, though part of them only were to be received at the time.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

These notes my Lord I had of Henry Davis, I told them I had them of him, for he was a man of property; I am as innocent of the forgery as a child unborn, I ſaid that Davis had lent me ten pounds of the money, and I put my hand in my pocket and gave it him; he ſaid he was very glad of it, that is all I know of the matter.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord I am ready to call ſeveral witneſſes to prove the purpoſe of going to Norfolk; but I take it to be proved that this man went into Norfolk on a ſmuggling party, and that he came back again to his own houſe.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

277. The ſaid WILLIAM NEWLAND was again indicted for forging and uttering the other bank note, laid the ſame as the former; and there being no further evidence, he was of courſe

ACQUITTED.

Mr. Garrow moved the Court that the priſoner might be immediately diſcharged; but he was ordered to be detained till the Gaol Delivery.

278. WILLIAM PROSSER was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Iſaac Poland, on the 17th of February laſt, on the King's highway, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one linen handkerchief, value 1s. one man's hat, value 5s. and one half guinea, value 10s. 6d. and 1s. in money, the property of the ſaid Iſaac.

ISAAC POLAND ſworn.

On Tueſday laſt was a week, the 17th of February, I was coming out of Drury-lane play-houſe, coming up Bridges-ſtreet, two men came running with great force, one of them and the priſoner took me between them, directly off the pavement, I ſaid where will you puſh me to, and a coachman from a gentleman's carriage called out, Sir, one of the men has his hand in your pocket; when I looked about, this priſoner at the bar had my handkerchief in his left hand, and threw it away to another man, and when I looked up there were four more of them, I went to run after the other man who had the handkerchief of this man, he directly took hold of me, and four of them came againſt me, and dragged me between two hackney coaches, I ſaid, what do you mean by all this? one of the men laid himſelf on the ground, and gave me a punch, and I fell under a coach, and this man put his hand in my breeches pocket, I cried out murder directly, then he took my buckles, then I cried out murder again, when he took the money he cried out, Will hated and he came and took the money from him, and took my hat and run away, then I called out murder again, and he held up his elbow, and gave me a knock here, and I have the mark yet.

Did you feel him take your money? —— Yes, he put his hand into my pocket and took out the money, and gave it to another perſon.

Did all this happen in the publick ſtreet, when all the people were coming out of the play-houſe? —— Yes, there was ſuch a noiſe with coaches and link-boys; this ſoldier came and took the priſoner.

Now upon your oath did he take the money from you, or did it drop out of your pocket in the ſcuffle? —— No, he took it out of my pocket.

Are you ſure it did not fall out in the ſcuffle? —— I ſaw him take the money out and give it to the other perſon.

And did they attempt to take your buckles out of your ſhoes in the ſtreet? —— One time and unbuckled one buckle, and the priſoner came and laid over me; I held the man that laid over me, while this ſoldier came and releaſed me.

Priſoner. Before the Juſtice the proſe-

cutor aſked me if there was any body with me; now he ſays there were.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you aſk him that queſtion?—No, I told the ſame ſtory I tell you.

Priſoner. It is quite a different one, upon my honor, my Lord.

Proſecutor. I knew him directly.

THOMAS HAYES ſworn.

I know no further than taking the priſoner from the proſecutor's body in the ſtreet; when I went to them among the coaches, there was one in a blue jacket and trowſers with his face towards the ground, and the ſaid Iſaac Polland was with his face upon that man's back, I laid hold of him, and ſaid, Sir let him go, and I took him to my poſt and kept him till a conſtable came, I did not ſee him take any thing, there was ſomebody running away.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming up Bridges-ſtreet, and coming by Drury-lane play-houſe this genman caught hold of me by the arm, and told me I had picked his pocket, I immediately denied it, he ſaid I had his handkerchief about me, and he gave me into the charge of one of the ſoldiers, when I came to the watch-houſe I was charged with picking a pocket of a handkerchief, then afterwards he ſaid eleven ſhillings and ſixpence, I was paid off two months ago, I have no friends in London.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

279. SAMUEL CHAMPNESS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Dorothy Jennings, ſpinſter, on the King's highway, on the 21ſt of December laſt, and putting her in fear and danger of her life, and taking from her perſon and againſt her will, one black ſattin cloak, value 20s. and one pair of women's pattens, value 6d. the property of the ſaid Dorothy.

DOROTHY JENNINGS ſworn.

On the 21ſt of December I loſt my cloak, a little after ſix in the evening, I was going up Conſtitution-hill, I met two men, they ſtopped me.

In what manner did they ſtop you?—The firſt man juſt paſſed me, and the other immediately ſpread out his arms and ſtopped me, the priſoner at the bar turned about, and put his hand on my mouth, and ſaid if I ſpoke a word, he would kill me immediately; I puſhed him off me, and begged he would let me alone, and let me go about my buſineſs.

What did they do or ſay about that?—They ſaid if I ſpoke a word they would kill me immediately.

Did they take any thing from you?—Yes, my Lord, they took a black ſattin cloak from me.

Did they take any thing elſe?—The priſoner took my pattens out of my hand.

Did they go away when they had taken them?—They went away, and then I was going after them, and they turned about and ſaw me going after them, and they came up to me again and threatened me if I ſtirred; the priſoner put ſomething to my face, and ſaid, did I ſee that, I ſaid yes, and they deſired me not to ſtir, and I ſaid I would not.

What was that he put before your face?—I do not know, I was ſo frightened I cannot tell.

They did not attempt to take any thing elſe from you, did they?—No.

Did they aſk you for any money?—No.

How ſoon afterwards was the priſoner taken?—They both of them ſet a running again, and I run after them, and as ſoon as I ſaw ſomebody coming, I called ſtop thief; the other was taken and tried laſt ſeſſions, the other man was ſtopped juſt by the Queen's Palace; the priſoner was taken the 26th of January.

How came he to be taken up?—I do not know.

Was your cloak and pattens ever found?—No.

Was any body with you when you was robbed robbed ?——No, Sir, nobody but myſelf.

What light had you by which you ſaw theſe two men ?—It was juſt under a lamp where they robbed me, juſt by the Queen's Palace, that ſide next to the Queen's Palace, not in the Green Park.

Had you any light but that lamp ?—No.

You was very much frightened at his ſtopping you ?—I was not ſo much frightened then.

The priſoner paſſed you and turned back? —Yes.

Then at firſt your back was to the priſoner ?—He was not above a yard or two from me.

Was not you very much frightened when the priſoner put his hand over your mouth ? —I thought it was ſome man that had a little liquor, and ſo I did not mind it.

Will you take upon you to ſay that you had opportunity enough to obſerve the priſoner by the light of that lamp to know him again, at above a month's diſtance ?—Yes, they ſtopped ſo long with me, they were with me ſix or ſeven minutes, the Juſtice ſent for me, there was a cloak found in his pocket, and I went to ſee if it was mine, but it was not, and then Mr. Bond told the man to take me over to the publick-houſe, and there I ſaw the priſoner, there were a matter of thirteen or fourteen priſoners with him, I knew him as ſoon as ever I ſaw him.

Are you ſure that he is the man ?—Yes, I am very ſure of it.

Priſoner. When that woman came to Bow-ſtreet when I was as a priſoner, ſhe came into the office backward, and was aſked if ſhe knew any perſons that were preſent, ſhe looked at me and ſeveral other perſons, and ſaid ſhe knew nobody, Mr. Wright ſaid, what, do not you know any body ? ſhe then came and looked at me, and when ſhe looked at me, ſhe ſaid I was not the man; ſhe was preſent when I was examined, the man was brought to ſwear to me, he declared I was not the man, he ſhould have known me.

To Proſecutrix. Is this ſo ?—No, he was in the middle, and I knew him directly.

Did you ſay at firſt that you knew nobody there ?——No, I did not.

SAMUEL MAYNARD ſworn.

I went by Sir Sampſon's orders, on Monday the 26th of January, with Mr. Macmanus and ſeveral more down into Eſſex to ſearch for them, and we found the priſoner and five other old offenders, in ſearching this man a cloak was found, and notice was ſent to the girl, and ſhe was ordered to attend; I was not at the office when ſhe came.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I did not think my trial would have come on, therefore I have nobody preſent, the other perſon that was robbed in the Park before did not know me; nobody knew me; but by the perſuaſions of Mr. Wright, that woman ſaid ſhe knew me; there were two men and a boy were called upon, and none of them knew me, only this gentlewoman by the perſuaſions of a man, ſwore to me for the lucre of gain. I had called in at a houſe to receive ſome money, for ſome coals for my father.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the Firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

280. JAMES BURNE was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Elizabeth the wife of Richard Luke Farmer, on the King's highway, on the 27th of January laſt, and putting her in fear and danger of her life, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon and againſt her will, one black ſilk bonnet, value 4s. and one ſilver hat pin, value 4d. the property of the ſaid Richard Luke Farmer.

ELIZABETH FARMER ſworn.

I am wife of Richard Luke Farmer, I was robbed on the 27th of January laſt, it was exactly five minutes after ſix o'clock by my watch, when I went from my own houſe, which is oppoſite the London Infirmary, and I was robbed at the laſt lamp fore I came to the end of the workhouſe wall.

Was you walking?——Yes, with my nephew, a little boy, I was ſtopped by the priſoner, nobody elſe was with him, I was walking on towards the wall, and my nephew by the ſide of me, and I felt a ſmall blow on the back part of my head, I turned ſhort and thought it was Mr. Farmer that had run after me, to ſpeak to me; I went to ſay my dear, and I ſaw the priſoner look me full in the face, I had a large riding cloak on, as I had juſt come out of the chaiſe, he pulled the cloak ſo tight that it ſtopped my ſpeaking, my arms were through the holes, he then attempted to pull my bonnet, he gave me another blow, but whether I fell down with the fright as he was pulling my bonnet, or whether he knocked me down I, cannot ſay, but he took off my bonnet, and a ſilver pin; he paſſed me and run down Mr. Haydon's yard.

Did you cry out afterwards?——Not till I got up, I got as far as Mr. Lake's the tinman's, I then cried ſtop thief! Mr. Lake's man came out and aſked me what was the matter, and I went into Mr. Lake's to compoſe myſelf a little, and as I was coming home Mr. Lake's clerk run after me, and ſaid, Madam, we have got the man, I believe it might be about a quarter of an hour, I ſaid to my nephew run home to your uncle, when I had got to the end of the ſtreet, the priſoner was behind me with Mr. Lake's clerk, and he ſaid, here take your bonnet, why do not you let me alone as I go along the ſtreet; and I ſaid, my friend, I never ſpoke to you, and I took the bonnet I believe from him; there was a tall man that had taken the priſoner, but whether it was him or the priſoner that I took the bonnet from I do not know, he was brought home to my houſe, and a conſtable ſent for, and the priſoner was taken into cuſtody.

Do you know the priſoner at the time of the robbery?——I ſaw his face as plain as I ſee yours now.

But if he had not afterwards come with the bonnet would you have known him?——Yes, he had a pair of trowſers, and a coat on; he was taken before Juſtice Staples that evening.

THOMAS DALMAN ſworn.

On Tueſday the 27th, of January, as I was going through Mr. Haydon's yard, between ſix and ſeven o'clock, I heard the cry of ſtop thief, in the road two or three times; I ſet myſelf againſt the wall in the narrow part of the paſſage, and I heard a man come running up full ſpeed towards me, when he came up to me, I caught hold of him, and there was this bonnet in his hand, and this pin on the left ſide, I ſecured him till I delivered him to the conſtable, when I took him into the road I ſaw Mrs. Farmer, and ſhe owned the bonnet.

How came you to ſpeak to her?——I did not ſpeak to her till I brought the priſoner back, I followed after her by the people at the tin ſhop, telling me ſhe was gone on; the priſoner told me it was a bonnet he had made his whore a preſent of, but had taken it away from her, I ſaid, then return it to your whore again.

What did he ſay when he came up to Mrs. Farmer?——I cannot recollect.

Did he ſay any thing to her about the bonnet?——I cannot recollect, I think the priſoner delivered the bonnet to Mrs. Farmer.

JOHN VAUGHAN ſworn.

I know nothing reſpecting the robbery, I took the priſoner into cuſtody, after he was taken, he ſaid, it was the firſt offence he had committed, and he did it intirely through neceſſity and want, and he told me as I was taking him to Newgate in the coach.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, I leave it to the mercy of the Court, I am quite a ſtranger, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY, Death.

He was was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutrix.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

281. JOHN RAYBOLL was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Richard Jennings, on the King's highway, on the 9th of Feb. and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one piece of gold coin of this realm called half-a-guinea, value 10s. 6d. and eight ſhillings and ſixpence in monies numbered, his monies.

RICHARD JENNINGS ſworn.

I was robbed on Monday the 9th of February, about half after ſeven o'clock, by the wall which incloſes the French Hoſpital, near the City Road, leading from Old-ſtreet Road, I went from my own houſe in Old-ſtreet Square, to the New workhouſe, and juſt as I got to the corner of this wall, there is a lamp, and before I came up to the firſt lamp, I ſaw two young fellows, one of them went to the wall as if to make water, I paſſed them ſome paces; after I had paſſed them, one of them comes running after me, and laid hold of me by the collar, and deſired me to ſtop, I did ſo; they held ſomething to my head, which appeared to me a thick wooden ſtick, a truncheon, I do not think it was a piſtol; after that the man that ſtopped me, pinned me up againſt the wall, there was a lamp juſt above my head, which was the ſecond lamp on that wall, the other inſtantly came up that was along with him, and took my money out of my right-hand breeches pocket, there was half-a-guinea and about eight ſhillings and ſixpence in ſilver, as near as I can tell; previous to their taking it, one of them tried ſeveral times to pull my hat down over my face, but it being very ſtiff over my head, it went up again, I could diſcover both their perſons exceeding well, it was on high ground juſt under a lamp, and they were below me, then after they had taken my money, I aſked them which way I ſhould go, whether I muſt go on, or which way; they ſaid, I might go on, they run down Old-ſtreet Road and I went the City Road.

How long might they be with you?——Not above a minute and a half at moſt, I made no reſiſtance, I had not ſo much as a ſtick; in the City Road I ſaw the watchman in his watch box, and I gave him information, and a deſcription; ſoon after that, ſome of Sir Sampſon's Officers from Bow-ſtreet came after me, I was then going with the patrol in the City-road, they aſked me if I was the perſon that had been robbed, I told them yes, and what I loſt, I gave a deſcription of the perſons of the robbers, the officers ſaid they would let me know; the next evening I was informed that a perſon was taken into cuſtody, near the ſame ſpot where I was robbed; I went to Bow-ſtreet on the Monday after, when I came to the office there were five people at the bar, and Sir Sampſon aſked me to look at the five, and ſee if I knew any of them, I ſaw the priſoner who was one of the five.

Did you pitch upon him immediately?——I did, I knew him very well before this tranſaction, I have known him from a child, I am ſorry to ſay it, he is one of our own pariſhioners.

Did you know him by ſight only?——I knew him by ſight, I knew the whole family; I was not confident at the time I was robbed that it was this perſon, but when I ſaw him at the office, it ſtruck into my mind directly that he was the perſon that ſtopped me, I was clearly convinced he was the perſon that ſtopped me.

Was not you flurried at the time?——I was very much flurried at the time, one run after me very hard, and laid hold of my collar, but I had opportunity enough to obſerve them afterwards; and it came into my recollection before I went to Bow-ſtreet, that it was this lad which I knew.

Are you clear now that that was the man?——I have not a doubt in my own min about it, I believe he is not the perſon tha took the money from me.

What was this lad?——I do not kno what buſineſs they were, but the famil had lived in a ſtreet near me for years.

What did the priſoner ſay at the offic when you firſt pitched on him?——He did n ſay thing then.

JAME

I am one of the patrol, I took up the priſoner on the 10th of this month, the Tueſday evening a little before ſeven o'clock; we took along this dead wall, it is a place called Ratcliffe Row, we had ſeen the proſecutor the night before, and he gave us a deſcription of the men; he ſaid he was ſure he ſhould know them, he had ſeen them in and about Old-ſtreet; the night following about twenty minutes before ſeven o'clock, we were walking along this wall, and we ſtopped the priſoner at the bar, and my partner caught hold of him and ſearched him, and found a cutlaſs on him in his coat, he had a large coat on, he ſaid, he was going to Noble-ſtreet, and he was going at the ſame time into the City Road.

JOHN SHARROW ſworn.

I can ſay no more than what Macmanus has ſaid.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When the proſecutor went home, he ſaid, he had been robbed, and that he knew the party that had robbed him, which was a capital tradeſman's ſon, when I was taken up to Bow-ſtreet, and when Mr. Jennings came and learnt my name, he went home again and told his man, ſays he, it is one Raybold's ſon that was examined, but it was not him that robbed me; the man told my father.

Court. What is the man's name?——John Shepherd.

Court to Proſecutor. Is that ſo?——So far from that, I have never had any converſation with that perſon that he ſpeaks of on the matter, and that night that the robbery was, did not go home to my houſe in Old-ſtreet Square, for part of my family is at Iſlington, and I went up to them, I never had any converſation with the man at all, on no ſuch ſubject in my life.

The Priſoner called three witneſſes who gave him a good character.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

282. MARY TALBOT and SARAH DAVIS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th day of February, twenty yards of white thread lace, value 20s. the property of Henry Pearſon, privily in his ſhop.

HENRY PEARSON ſworn.

I am a haberdaſher in Oxford-ſtreet, I only ſwear to the property, which I had before.

JOHN BARNES ſworn.

I am ſhopman to the laſt witneſs, we loſt part of the lace that was in the box, and two cards of lace, between four and five on Monday the 9th in the afternoon; I know the priſoners; Davis and the other priſoner came about four or five o'clock in the afternoon, and ſaid they wanted to look at ſome lace, for they ſold it again, and ought to have an allowance; they were at our ſhop in the morning before, and I ſhewed them ſome lace, and I miſſed a length of lace then, but could not be ſure they had taken it then, therefore we concluded if they came again to be very cautious in ſerving them; Davis bought three yards at ninepence; ſhe paid me a part and Talbot paid the reſt, they ſaid, they would buy ſome more if I would ſhew them any thing of bargains, I ſhewed them ſeveral afterwards; and they made a heſitation about the price. Davis took one card in her hand, ſhe undid it till ſhe came to the joining where it was pinned: ſhe unpinned, and took the lace.

Court. All this in your view?——Yes, but ſhe did not know I took any notice; ſhe took the lace and put it between her body and the other, and dropped it on the ground, ſhe then took another card up.

Court. Did you make any objection to this?——No, I ſaw her put the card into the box, and I was convinced ſhe had dropped the reſt on the ground; but ſhe had done the lace up ſo as if there was the whole on the card; I did not ſee them take the other two cards, nor I did not miſs them at all; at laſt they went out of the ſhop, and ſaid no more would ſuit them; I went out about a minute after, and went into Mr. Agar the confectioner's two doors off, who was conſtable, and gave him charge of the priſoners, they were taken into Mr. Roberts's, an ironmonger.

Court. Are you ſure of the priſoners? ——Yes; their hands were tied together, and we took them to the watch-houſe, juſt as we were going to take them out, Mr. Roberts's young man ſaid, here is a card of lace, that was about two feet from Talbot, and immediately after, he ſaid, here is another card, that was about four feet from Talbot, the priſoners were ſtill in the ſhop.

Court. Had the priſoners been in that part of the ſhop where the cards were found, or were their hands ſo much at liberty, that they could have thrown the cards there? ——They had been moving about, and I ſuppoſe they dropped them there; I then ſaw the two looſe lengths on the ground, underneath where Davis ſtood; I know the lace, it was the ſame pattern and quality, and every thing with that which remained.

Court. Are you ſure thoſe two lengths of lace were on that card when theſe two women came into your ſhop?——Yes, I ſaw them do the fact, and I ſtrongly thought, I was ſure Davis had the property about her, I did not ſee the other two cards in the box, and I cannot ſwear either of them had theſe two cards in their poſſeſſion, but theſe two cards were my maſter's property, there is my own private mark on them.

Court. Had Mr. Roberts's family purchaſed any lace of you that day?——No.

Where were thoſe two cards of lace, when they came into your ſhop?——If they ſtole them at that time, it muſt be out of that box, but I will not ſwear they were in that box; the priſoners were taken to the watch-houſe, I had the lace in my poſſeſſion till the conſtable came, he ſearched them and found nothing on them, but a bit of lace in Talbot's bonnet, which was not ours.

Court. You found the three yards of lace that you ſold them?——Yes, Sarah Davis took that lace in her hand, and ſaid, this is my lace; Samuel Agar is the conſtable, he has been here two days, he gave me the property, and hoped he ſhould be excuſed attending.

Court. That lace has been in the cuſtody of the conſtable who delivered it over to you?—Yes.

Court. It may have received ſome alteration, he may have ſubſtituted other lace, I cannot take your evidence on that ſubject.

SARAH DAVIS's DEFENCE.

I am innocent, I know nothing of the lace, he tells a falſity, I went in to buy three yards of lace, I deal in lace; I had nobody to ſend for any witneſſes.

MARY TALBOT's DEFENCE.

I know no more about it than ſhe does, I have friends and relations, but they are not here, they were here the day before yeſterday.

Jury. I received a letter from Mr. Agar, and ſent to him, to tell him, the neceſſity of his attending.

Court. I have mentioned it to my brother Gould, and he thinks it would be too much to eſtreat his recognizance, therefore let it be diſcharged.

(The lace opened and depoſed to by Barnes)

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, it appears the ſhopman obſerved every thing that was going forwards, therefore this is certainly not the caſe, that the act of Parliament provides againſt, which is privately taking from the ſhop, for it was an open taking in the view of the perſon: I have mentioned it to my learned brother here, and he concurs with me in opinion, that notwithſtanding the two cards were not obſerved to be taken, yet he obſerved the firſt taken, that was the firſt act, and the other will not vary the caſe at all: your verdict will therefore in my apprehenſion be, that they are guilty of ſtealing, but not privily out of the ſhop.

MARY TALBOT, }
SARAH DAVIS, } GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not privily.

To be each confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

282. MATTHEW COSTILLO otherwiſe COSTELLA was indicted for that he, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the devil, on the 15th day of January laſt, with force and arms, in and upon one Elizabeth Tarrier, ſpinſter, in the peace of God and our Lord the King then being, did make an aſſault, and her, the ſaid Elizabeth, againſt her will and conſent, feloniouſly did raviſh, and carnally know, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

The Witneſſes examined apart by the requeſt of the Priſoner.

Mr. Williams of Council for the Proſecution, opened the caſe as follows.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, it is a painful circumſtance to any perſon of feeling, who has attended this Court on this ſeſſions, to think of the number of culprits, that are brought here for ſuch a variety of crimes; in the morning we heard of burglaries, of highway robberies, of pocket picking; we are now about to prove a crime, which you have juſt heard named in the indictment, a crime of very different, and of a moſt enormous nature: a crime which has been held by the laws of all civilized countries, juſtly deſerving to be puniſhed with the moſt extreme rigour. But it would ill become me, Gentlemen of the Jury, who am of Council on the part of a criminal proſecution, and would alſo be utterly inconſiſtent with my feelings as a man, to attempt any appeal to yours; I ſhall therefore barely mention the facts, I am inſtructed to ſay, will be proved in evidence before you, for it is from them alone you muſt decide.

The proſecutrix is ſtated to me to be a girl of about fifteen years of age, a poor, country, fatherleſs child, who was left with nine more to be maintained by a poor widow in Hertfordſhire, and one Skelton a coachmaker, who married an aunt of this woman's, merely out of charity, ſent for this girl, and recommended her as a ſervant maid to the Hoſpital for Inoculation for the Small Pox, at Pancras, where ſhe lived for about ſix months, and bore a very extraordinary character, as you will hear from the Matron of that hoſpital: after ſhe came away from there, ſhe was recommended as a ſervant to Mr. Owen Connolly, who keeps a publick-houſe, the Fountain in Monmouth-ſtreet. The priſoner is a ſaleman in Monmouth-ſtreet, one of thoſe that hang out clothes for ſale, as you ſee in that ſtreet; he lives nearly oppoſite the Fountain: whether this girl might have been a prattling girl or what I do not know, but it ſeems very ſoon after ſhe came to live at this houſe, he formed a deſign to commit a crime of the ſort which he afterwards executed, and on the 15th of January laſt, the priſoner at the bar went to the Fountain where this poor girl lived ſervant, to order a pot of beer; it happened that the man who generally went about to carry the beer, a ſoldier of the name of Barnet, was not in the way, and this poor girl was deſired to carry the beer over to the ſhop of the priſoner at the bar; it was then after nine o'clock at night, as ſoon as ſhe went with this beer, and entered the ſhop where the priſoner lived, the priſoner immediately locked the ſtreet door upon her, took the beer out of her hand, and took her by the arm; the girl aſked the priſoner what he was going about, he gave her no anſwer, but put her neck and her heels together, and put her petticoats over her head, and notwithſtanding all the reſiſtance this poor girl could poſſibly make, committed this crime for which he is now to be tried by you. The girl as ſoon as ſhe could get away, came directly to her miſtreſs, Mrs Connolly, who, one would ſuppoſe, would have been irritated at the thoughts of ſuch a thing being committed on a poor fatherleſs child, but inſtead of that ſhe ſays to her, “ Well Betty, “ if Mr. Longlegs (meaning the priſoner) “ has got you withchild, he will be a rare “ father to it, for he is worth a good deal “ of money, and you need not be afraid.” The girl then fell a crying and wanted to go home, but her miſtreſs ſent her to bed: in the morning the girl wanted to go home, but however ſoon after Mrs. Skelton came to the houſe, and the girl told him the whole ſtory, and he upon hearing it thought it his duty to bring this proſecution forward. Gentlemen, it is proper for me to inform you that you will find one material piece of evidence wanting on the part of the proſecution, and of which we are deprived by an accident; it is the evidence of a Mr. Hall, a ſurgeon, who examined the girl; he had the misfortune on Friday laſt to fall down in Chancery-lane, and hurt his leg; upon this event I meant to have moved the Court to have put off the trial, but Mr. Skelton, who proſecutes only for the ſake of publick juſtice, ſaid he could not afford to put it off. Gentlemen, theſe are the facts which I am inſtructed to lay before you, and which will be proved in evidence. I am well aware that proſecutions of this nature are, with great propriety, very cautiouſly attended to by Courts of criminal juriſdiction, as they are proſecutions which may be very eaſily made, and which are very hard to be defended: but however, gentlemen, when you ſee this poor girl, and hear her give her evidence, you will be able to judge whether a rape has or has not been actually committed by the priſoner: if it has been committed, the offence is certainly, as a great man has ſaid, a very deteſtable one; if the crime has not been committed, if this is a mere trick, a mere conſpiracy, to bring an innocent man to this bar, you will then acquit the priſoner, and I am ſure he is extremely fortunate, in having ſuch reſpectable gentlemen as you, to decide on his life.

ELIZABETH TARRIER ſworn.

(Examined by Mr. Williams.)

How old are you?—Sixteen, I am ſervant to Mr. Conolly, at the Fountain in Monmouth-ſtreet, I lived there nine days.

When did you come away?——On the tenth day, on the Friday.

Court. How long after this affair?——The next day.

Relate to the Court what happened to you?——On Thurſday the 15th of January laſt my maſter ordered me to take a pot of beer to Mr. Coſtello.

Do you mean the priſoner at the bar?—Yes, I took it to his ſhop, and he bid me ſet it down on the compter.

Court. Where does the priſoner live?—In Monmouth-ſtreet.

What is his buſineſs?——A ſaleman; I ſet the beer on the compter, and coming out again, he caught hold of my arm, and doubled me neck and heels together.

Court. I do not underſtand that doubling neck and heels together?——He put my head to my legs, and took and carried me neck and heels together.

Court. Did he tie you neck and heels?—No, he did not tie me, but he held my head and my heels together, that I ſhould not proceed to call out.

Was there any body in the houſe at that time?—There was nobody in the parlour, nor yet in the ſhop.

You ſaw no perſon in the houſe?—No, then he took me into the parlour, and locked the parlour door; he then downed me on the bed, which was in the parlour, and I got up again; then he forced my legs open with violence, and entered my body with violence; after he had his will of me, he wanted me to lay hold of his private parts, and he would not let me go till ſome time after? then our man came to the door and aſked whether Betty was there, he aſked what Betty, and the man ſaid Betty that lives at Mr. Connolly's, and he ſaid ſhe has been gone half an hour, and he ſtood doubling his fiſt at me, and ſwearing in ſuch a manner that I durſt not halloo out.

How long did you ſtay there afterwards?—Then he ſwore God damn me for a bitch, he would raviſh me, he would raviſh me.

Where did you go afterwards?—I went home to my miſtreſs.

Di

Did you ſay any thing to her?——No, ſhe began to ball jeers at me, ſo I did not think it was fit to tell her.

How ſoon did he let you out?——In about half an hour; I did not ſay any thing to my miſtreſs, becauſe ſhe ſaid, Betty, never mind it, never look down, if long legs has got you with child; but caſt yourſelf up, and make yourſelf as briſk as you can, I will be bound he will be a good father to it; this was as ſoon as ever I got into the houſe.

How long afterwards was it before you ſaw your aunt?——On the Friday night the day after.

Did you complain to her of this outrage?——Yes, my miſtreſs took my aunt into the bar, and ſaid, Mrs. Skelton, here is a very bad accident happened to Betty.

Court. Then your miſtreſs firſt told your aunt of it?——Yes.

Say what you ſaid yourſelf to your aunt?——I told my aunt the firſt beginning of it, and every thing; ſhe came to me and inſiſted on my telling her, and I told her how Mr Caſtello uſed me, and every thing about it; ſhe went home directly to my uncle, and I ſaw my uncle, and I told him the ſame.

Did you ſee the priſoner at the bar afterwards?——Yes.

Did you accuſe him before any perſon?——My miſtreſs fetched him and I face to face, and I told him it was ſo, and he denied it.

What did he ſay?——He ſaid he never meddled with me.

Court. You ſay this happened on the Thurſday night?——Yes, between nine and ten.

You ſay you came home in a quarter of an hour after, and you never mentioned it till the Friday, at what hour on the Friday did you mention it?——About ſix in the evening.

From the night preceding, when you returned home, till ſix o'clock the next evening, was you confined in the houſe of Mr. Connolly?——My miſtreſs made me go to bed.

But when you got up in the morning, had you not free liberty to go to your uncle and aunt?——I got my hat and cloak on, and my miſtreſs would not let me go, but ſaid ſhe would ſend for my aunt.

At what time did you make an attempt to go?——About twelve.

Court. You might have gone before that, and it was natural that you ſhould have given the earlieſt intelligence to thoſe perſons that you thought your relations and friends, you ſhould have gone immediately; how came you to debate on this matter for ſuch a length of time, was you ballancing in your mind whether you ſhould make any complaint or no?——My miſtreſs would not let me go.

That was at twelve o'clock, but previous to that you was at liberty to go, and eſpecially when your miſtreſs treated you in the manner you have repreſented, and laughed at you; I ſhould have gone to my friends, to my uncle and my aunt; but the manner in which you have deſcribed this thing is not ſufficiently explained to the Jury; you muſt be more explicit; you have ſaid that he forced open your legs with violence, and entered your body with violence, but you ſhould deſcribe the manner of it, becauſe if there was not compleat carnal knowledge, the priſoner cannot be convicted of this offence; he might enter your body with violence, and yet not have carnal knowledge of you?—He had knowledge of me.

You muſt ſpeak particularly.

Mr. Sylveſter Council for Priſoner. What o'clock was it when you carried the pot of beer on Thurſday night?——At firſt and laſt I had been with him half an hour.

What o'clock was it when you returned home?——I do not know, I returned back about half after nine.

Your miſtreſs threw jeers at you you ſay, and bid you be in good ſpirits?——Yes.

You took her advice, I believe, and was in pretty good ſpirits that night, was not you; what o'clock did your maſter ſhut up that night?——Always ſhuts up at eleven.

Then during that time from half after nine till eleven the doors were open?—Yes.

You never attempted that night to go to your aunt's?——My miſtreſs would not let me.

I believe you was fool enough to take your miſtreſs's advice, you was in good ſpirits that night?——No.

You ſupped with your maſter and miſtreſs?——Yes.

Tolerably chearful, I believe?——No, Sir, not very chearful.

Did you tell your miſtreſs of it?—We were all at ſupper in the parlour, and my miſtreſs and my maſter halled ſuch jeers at me.

What did they jeer you about?——She ſays, Betty, do not look down, if he has got you with child, his long legs is able enough to keep it.

Why; why ſpeak about being with child, you had not told them any thing about it?——No.

Who got up firſt the next morning?—The man.

What is his name?—William Barnett.

He came to the houſe for you?—Yes.

You heard his voice?—Yes.

Did you call out to him?—No, I was afraid to ſpeak to my fellow ſervant.

Then you never at all called out to Barnett?——No, I ſcreamed once as loud as ever I could, and nobody came to my aſſiſtance.

Recollect yourſelf, you hallooed out as loud as you could?—Yes.

How often?—Once.

Only once during the whole tranſaction?—No.

During the nine days you had been in this ſervice, do not you know Mr. Caſtello lets lodgings, do not you ſerve the perſon that lodges in the firſt floor with beer?—I do not know.

Do you know who lives below ſtairs in the cellar?——No, it is let to ſomebody, but I do not know who lives there.

Did you ſtamp upon the floor at all?—Yes, and when the man came to the door he heard me ſcuffling about as much as I could.

How do you know that?——He ſaid ſo, and the priſoner ſaid, damn you for a bitch, hold your tongue.

Court. Muſt not thoſe words have been heard by Barnett, who was at the door?—I do not know.

Mr. Sylveſter. Why, they were loud, were not they?——Yes, all the time Barnett was at the door and after he was gone the priſoner ſtood ſwearing and doubling his fiſt at me, ſo that I was afraid.

Now when you got home you went to bed I ſuppoſe firſt?—Yes.

Barnett got up firſt?—Yes.

Who got up ſecond?—Me.

What o'clock?—Six.

At what o'clock does your maſter get up?—Eight.

At what o'clock does your miſtreſs get up?——Nine.

From ſix to nine, why did not you go to your aunt's?——Becauſe I did not like to leave the houſe before my miſtreſs got up.

Oh, that was the reaſon! then you was in the houſe from ſix to eight and nobody to controul you?——Yes.

Then at that time you had never told either your miſtreſs or your maſter any thing of this tranſaction?——No.

How came your miſtreſs then to prevent your going out?——She ſaid I ſhould not go for ſhe would ſend for my aunt.

For what?——To tell her.

Tell her what?——What had happened to me.

Why you had not told her?——No.

Had Mr. Caſtello been there?——No.

You had not told either your maſter or your miſtreſs, then how could ſhe ſend for your aunt to tell her?——She did.

She did not know of it you know my dear?——No, Sir.

Nobody elſe could tell her?—No.

Then ſhe did not know of it?——No.

Then you never told any body of it till ſix o'clock on the Friday evening?—No, then I told my miſtreſs and my aunt together.

Did you do your work and go about houſe as uſual ?—Yes.

You have told this gentleman that he threw you down with violence, and forced your legs open with violence ; do you remember, when you was aſked that queſtion before the Juſtice, your ſaying no ; when the Juſtice aſked you whether he threw you down with violence, and you made any reſiſtance, you ſaid, no, no ?—I made as much reſiſtance as ever I could.

Court. It is a plain queſtion that the gentleman puts to you ; while you was before the magiſtrate, did not he aſk you whether the man, charged by you with this offence, had thrown you down with violence, and whether you had made all the reſiſtance you could, and you anſwered no ; recollect now, did you ſay no, to the Juſtice, or yes ?—I did not know what reſiſtance was.

Mr. Silveſter. You know what reſiſtance is now ?—Yes.

Who told you that you muſt ſay now it was done with violence?—Nobody told me.

How did you hear it ?—I heard ſomebody ſay ſo.

Now pray who was that ſomebody ?—A woman going by.

What did that good woman ſay to you ?—She was talking about reſiſtance.

What did ſhe ſay ?—As I was going by ſome woman was telling another woman what reſiſtance meant.

So two women were talking together about reſiſtance, and there you learned what reſiſtance meant ?—Yes.

Then you did ſay, before the Juſtice, that you did not reſiſt ; you anſwered no, when the queſtion was put to you there ?—Yes.

The priſoner, I underſtand, is a man of ſome property, is not he ?——Yes.

Some of your friends have made enquiries about that ?—No, none of my friends that I know of.

Did you underſtand likewiſe, that this houſe of his he lets out in lodgings ?—Yes.

Now when you ſaid there was nobody in the ſhop and in the parlour, do you mean to tell my Lord that there was nobody elſe in that houſe, either above ſtairs or below ?——I did not know there was any body.

Then you only meant to ſay that there was nobody in the front ſhop, and in the back ſhop, which he occupied ?——No, Sir.

What did you mean by being doubled together neck and heels ?——He put my head and my heels together.

What ſo ? (doubling up his brief.)—Yes.

Then he laid you on the bed, there he left you, and you ſtaid, I hope, till he ſhut the door ?——No, I got up again.

Did you call out ?——No, I called once, and nobody came to my aſſiſtance.

Did not this hurt you, being doubled ?——Yes.

Very much ?——Yes.

And yet you did not ſcream out then ?—I could not ſcream out, he laid his hands ſo upon me.

Why you know he doubled you like this ſheet of paper, and carried you in, and you never cried out ?——I could not.

Why did not you tell Barnet your fellow ſervant of this ?——No, Sir, I did not, I want to ſee ſome of my friends to tell them firſt.

Do you know a man of the name of Grant my young woman ?—He is a lodger of my maſter's.

Who is he, he is a good likely young man, is not he ?——He is a ſailor.

You and he are acquainted I underſtand ?——No.

Do you know him ?——No other than giving him a candle to go to bed by ; I know nothing of him no otherwiſe.

How otherwiſe do you mean that you you might know him?—I never had nothing to ſay to him, nor he to me.

Never ?——No, Sir, never.

No converſation ?——No.

No acquaintance, no connections at all ?——No.

Upon your oath ?——Yes.

And even to him you did not tell this ?——No.

Why, I thought he was a bit of a ſweetheart of yours ?——No, Sir, he is not, nor ever was.

What did they ſay to you, when you returned home, after you had carried the beer ?—They aſked me why Mr. Caſtello kept me there; I did not tell them any thing farther.

Mr. Williams. When you was examined before the Juſtice, what did you ſay ?—I told the Juſtice the ſame as I told you now.

Did you ſay to the Juſtice, that he forcibly, and againſt your will lay with you ? ——Yes.

Court. It will appear by the depoſition what ſhe ſaid there.

Court. Your maſter's houſe was a publick houſe ?——Yes.

When you returned, about half an hour after nine o'clock, were there no perſons drinking in the houſe ?—Yes, there were five or ſix.

Did you ſee Mr. Grant that evening after you received the injury ?——He was in the tap-room when I came in.

Did you make any complaint to him ?—No.

Did you make any complaint to the five or ſix perſons that were drinking there ?—No.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, here is the examination in writing.

Court. It is no evidence, only to aſcertain that fact.

ANN SKELTON ſworn.

Mr. Williams. I believe you are the aunt of this unfortunate girl ?——Yes.

When did this girl go to Mr. Connolly's ſervice ?——I cannot ſay, but the raſh act was committed the 15th of January.

She was there about ten days before that ? —Yes.

When did you ſee her after the 15th ?—I ſaw her on the Friday about ſix o'clock, as that happened on the Thurſday ; I went to carry her ſome things, and when I came to the bar her miſtreſs deſired me to walk in, and her miſtreſs ſaid, here is a terrible thing happened, ſays ſhe, to Betty ; ſays I, what ; ſays ſhe, it is a man has raviſhed her, one of our cuſtomers ; I ſaid, can I ſee her ; and ſhe ſaid, if you will ſtop a little I will go into the kitchen along with you ; I went to her, and ſhe was crying bitterly at the ſink, waſhing the diſhes, and I deſired her to tell me the truth, whether the man had laid with her, or whether he had not, and ſhe ſaid, yes, he had ; and I made her anſwer, then you ſtay here, I will go and ſend your uncle, and her miſtreſs deſired me not to go home and tell my huſband ; for the man had money and he would maintain the child and her too, if in caſe ſhe had one, and it was pity to take a man up to loſe his life ; I went home and my huſband was not come home, I ſent for him, and told him, and he went to her maſter's ; I did not go with him.

Court. What way of life are you in ?—My huſband is a coachmaker.

Mr. Silveſter. How far do you live from the fountain ?——I live at No. 20, Plumbtree-ſtreet, one part of which comes into St. Giles's.

It is not many minutes walk, I believe ? ——No.

Did the girl complain that ſhe could not come before to you ?—Yes, ſhe ſaid her miſtreſs would not let her come, but ſaid ſhe would ſend for me, but ſhe did not.

She ſaid, he was a man worth money, able to pay for this or any thing elſe ?——Yes, and that it was a pity to hang him.

How came you not to take your niece home with you ?—I thought it was better to ſend my huſband for her.

You thought your niece full as ſafe Mr. Connolly's as with you ?—I thought could ſoon run home for my huſband.

You might walk it in a couple of minutes I believe ?—Yes, in three minutes.

JAMES SKELTON ſworn.

I am a coachmaker ; I went to Mr. Connolly's houſe, and I aſked Mrs. Connolly what ſtrange thing has happened here concerning the girl, a very bad one, ſhe ſaid indeed ; I aſked her where the girl was, ſaid ſhe was in the kitchen ; ſhe let me in the waſh-houſe, and I ſaw her there; ſhe was waſhing her diſhes and crying; I ſaid, Bet, what has happened, I inſiſt on your telling me the rights of it; ſhe ſaid, I will; after the girl had told me what he had done to her, and the rights of it, I ſaid, I will take him up; as I was coming through the parlour to the waſh-houſe, there now, Mrs. Connolly ſays, now you ſee what you have done Betty; aye, ſays Mr. Connolly, now the man will be taken up and hanged; I ſaid, I am determined to follow the law of him; and juſt as I was going away in came the priſoner at the bar, and I heard Mrs. Connolly ſay, Mr. Caſtello, you will be taken up to-morrow; he made a laugh at it; I went to Bow-ſtreet; I had no converſation with the priſoner at all.

Mr. Silveſter. They had not told you then that this was a man of property?—Not then, the next morning.

Did you ſay any thing to the priſoner?—No, I thought he would have made his eſcape if I did.

But he did not make an eſcape?—No.

What time the next day was he taken up?—Two o'clock the next day.

ISABELLA JONES ſworn.

Mr. Williams. I believe, Madam, you are Matron to the hoſpital at Pancras?—Yes, Sir.

During the time this poor girl lived under your care what was her general character?—She behaved very well during the time.

Mr. Silveſter. What year was this?—Laſt year.

What ſervant was ſhe?—Kitchen maid.

Did you hire her Madam?—Yes.

Did you give her a character?—No.

Court. What age did you look upon her to be when ſhe was in your ſervice?—I believe about ſixteen.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I have nothing to ſay; I am innocent of the charge; I leave my defence to the honour of the Court and to my Council.

FOR THE PRISONER.

MARY COX ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Silveſter.

You are the wife of Darby Cox?—Yes.

He is a Taylor?—Yes, I lodge in the houſe of the priſoner at the bar, up one pair of ſtairs in the fore room.

Was you at home the 15th of January?—I was at home the 15th of January and all the week.

Can you hear from your apartment if there is any noiſe or any diſturbance in the apartment of the priſoner?——I can.

Was there any noiſe, any crying out, any ſcuffling or any thing ſingular that evening?——None at all, had there been any noiſe whatever I muſt have heard it.

Who lives in the cellar?—One Mr. and Mrs. Soper.

What is the priſoner's character?—A very honeſt induſtrious man.

Croſs-examined by Mr. Williams.

Where was your huſband?——He was gone to a club; he gave a leg of mutton that night.

Is your huſband a maſter taylor?—He is a journeyman.

You did not hear any noiſe, I think you ſay that night?—I did not hear any noiſe any night at all.

I dare ſay you are a very induſtrious woman; you do not ſit with your hands before you; therefore it is poſſible, I ſhould ſuppoſe, that any noiſe might happen below, and you being buſy above, might not hear it?——I was very ill of a cold.

Where did it affect you?—I was bad all over.

Was it a cold in your head?—Yes.

Perhaps you was a little deaf?——No.

Was you in bed?——I was waiting for my huſband.

Was you at ſupper?—No, I was ſitting by the fire at that time.

Do your know what hour this was?——No farther than I heard, I went to bed at twelve o'clock; my huſband did not come home before twelve, and I was too ill to do any thing.

How did you amuſe yourſelf?——I generally have a book, I might be reading, I generally do read when I have nothing elſe to do.

You are a very good woman, I am ſure, but it is poſſible this might happen and you not hear it?——He could not even laugh loud but I muſt hear him, the ſtairs are ſo low, and it is a thin partition, and if ſhe had made any noiſe I could have heard it.

You live in the fore room, one pair of ſtairs, and this is the back parlour, how high is this room?——No higher than the common rooms, they are but new built houſes.

But you was reading you ſay?——I was certainly the ſtiller for that.

Upon your oath, might not ſhe have cried out or made a noiſe without your hearing?——No, Sir, I do ſwear, that nobody could ſcream out, or if they had even knocked againſt the wainſcot, but I could have heard them, and I muſt have heard her, being ſo ſtill as I was by myſelf.

Court. Suppoſing a woman had ſcreamed out violently once only?——If any body was to make any noiſe at all, or to call Mr. Caſtello, I muſt hear it.

Was you in your room from nine till half after that evening?——I was.

And if any ſcream had happened of this kind, you muſt have known it?——I muſt.

Does your huſband work for the priſoner?——No, he does not.

SARAH SOPER ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

Your huſband I underſtand is a ſhoemaker?——Yes.

He rents of the priſoner the cellar?——Yes.

You live there?——Yes.

Was you at home on the 15th of January?——Gentlemen, I am never out of my place from months end to months end, I was there; my huſband was not well, and he went to bed.

Is your apartment directly under the ſhop and parlour of Caſtello's?——Directly under the ſhop, there is juſt a little wainſcot between us.

Can you hear what paſſes in Caſtello's room above you?——If they ſpeak loud, I can hear every thing, or even if he moves a chair, or the leaſt thing in the world in compariſon.

Do you recollect a young woman coming there with beer that night?——I recollect ſomebody coming, but whether it was a woman or a man I do not know.

What did you hear paſs?—I heard a perſon ſay beer, then the door was ſhut, and I heard no more.

Could you have heard if there had been any noiſe?—Oh! Gentlemen, if any child had cried the leaſt in the world I muſt have heard it, for our apartment is ſo low that a man can ſcarce ſtand upright in it; I heard ſomebody ſay beer, and I heard no more that night; I heard Mr. Connolly's man come and ſay is Betty here, and I heard Mr. Caſtello make anſwer and ſay what Betty; and he ſaid did not ſhe bring a pot of beer; and Caſtello ſaid ſhe had been gone half an hour; that was a good while afterwards.

Mr. Williams. How did you know it was Mr. Connolly's man?—By his voice, becauſe he comes ſo often into the houſe.

How long have you lived at Mr. Caſtello's?——Three years.

Do you owe him any rent?—A quarter.

Is the place you live in juſt under his?—Juſt under the ſhop.

Then you know the houſe very well?—Yes.

There is a bed in the parlour, is not there?——Yes.

There he lays?—Yes.

You live under the ſhop and not under the parlour?—One apartment is ſo near the other, that we can hear.

You ſaid there was but juſt a little wainſcot between you?—Our place is ſo low.

Court. What time do the ſaleſmen in Monmouth-ſtreet ſhut up their ſhops?—About eight.

OWEN CONNOLLY ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

I am landlord of the Fountain in Monmouth-ſtreet; this young woman was a ſervant of mine; I remember her going with a pot of beer the 15th of January; when ſhe came back I was in the cellar, and ſhe came down ſtairs to me, and had a pint pot to the beſt of my memory in her hand, and I aſked her, Betty, ſays I, where have you been; ſhe ſaid, at Mr. Caſtello's; ſays I, why do you ſtay ſo at Mr. Caſtello's when it is the hurry of our buſineſs; Sir, ſays ſhe, you will not blame me when I tell you; ſays I, then tell me directly; then ſhe told me that Mr. Caſtello had her by the hand and would not let her go; then I aſked her, had he any thing further to do with you; and ſhe ſaid, no, indeed, Sir, nothing elſe.

You ſupped together that night?—Yes, Sir, all four of us.

How was ſhe at ſupper?——She ſat at ſupper, and was as merry that night as ever ſhe had been ſince ſhe was at my houſe, and my wife in a joking way ſaid, Betty, ſays ſhe, ſuppoſe we drink a good health to young Caſtello, if you have got one to night; no, indeed, Madam, ſays ſhe, there was nothing of that kind; and the next morning ſhe ſaid never a word, nor until her aunt came at night; ſhe had her breakfaſt along with us all the ſame, took no notice, nor no complaint of any kind howſomever.

How did ſhe beheve herſelf during the few days ſhe was in your ſervice?—Her aunt knows very well, the Sunday before I ſent her out with a pint of beer and a pipe to a neighbour, and ſhe ſtaid away half an hour; ſome of it was ſpilt, and ſhe was very much in liquor when ſhe took up the pot; and on the Monday following ſhe could not ſee one thing, nor we could not get her to do any thing.

Had you giving her warning?—Yes, I told the aunt ſhe would not do for me, and her aunt ſaid let her ſtay till ſhe gets a ſervice.

Mr. Williams. How came it into your head to aſk her that other queſtion, "Had he any thing further to do with you?"—Becauſe ſhe ſtaid a time, and I ſhould not have wiſhed that any thing ſhould have happened.

Why did you think of that particularly?—It happened to come into my head.

Firſt of all hear my queſtion, and then give me an anſwer; what induced you particularly to aſk her that queſtion, "Had he any thing further to do with you?"—Becauſe ſhe ſtaid ſo long out of my ſight, I did not know what might happen.

You may think it a very jocoſe thing to hurt a young girl, did you ſay, let us drink to young Caſtello?—I did it to find whether any thing had been done.

Is that the way of behaving to a young girl that you are afraid is injured?—That is the way I ſpoke.

Court. I thought it was your wife that ſpoke it?—My wife ſpoke it too.

Who is Caſtello?—The priſoner in the bar.

How far does he live off?—Not a great way.

How long has he been your cuſtomer?—As long as I have had the houſe, like another cuſtomer.

In what capacity was this girl?——A ſervant.

She was not hired to go out with porter?—To take out beer if required.

You take your oath of that?—Yes.

Who is William Barnet?—He is a ſervant and ſoldier, he takes out beer or any thing elſe; we all take out beer.

What was the reaſon that this girl went this night particularly to Caſtello's?—Becauſe we were all buſy; Barnet was drawing beer at the ſame time.

Did you ever ſend her to Caſtello's houſe before?—I ſuppoſe ſhe had been there, I hired her to do my buſineſs, and that is my buſineſs to ſerve my beer, or any thing elſe that is wanted.

Mr. Sylveſter. What is the character of Mr. Caſtello?—He is a very honeſt young fellow, as ever was in the world, and that there is plenty in Court will ſay.

WILLIAM

(Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.)

I am a ſervant to Mr. Connolly, I was examined before the Grand Jury for the proſecution.

You know that young woman?—Yes.

Do you know Grant?—Very well.

He is a ſeaman, is not he?—Yes.

Lodges in your maſter's houſe?—Yes.

Is he and Betty acquainted at all?—Yes, Sir, they were acquainted.

In what manner?—Why they were acquainted ſo far, that I uſed to go up ſtairs to fetch the candleſticks, and I went up ſtairs one night, and I catched him and ſhe on the bed, and he atop of her.

Mr. Sylveſter. I believe my Lord I need not call any more witneſſes.

Court to Jury. It ſeems to me that this caſe, if it ſtood on the evidence of the proſecutrix herſelf, is not ſufficiently proved; but I am not at all averſe to ſumming up the evidence, if the Jury deſire it.

Jury. We need not trouble your Lordſhip.

Court. Indeed Gentlemen, there is not the leaſt foundation for this proſecution, for it is not ſupported by the evidence even of the woman herſelf: I have ſeen her depoſition, which could not be given as evidence here, becauſe nobody was here to prove it, but ſhe gives a very different account of the tranſaction now to what ſhe did then. This is a cooked up ſtory, calculated to extort money from the priſoner, who is repreſented to be a man in circumſtances of ability; for it is impoſſible that a woman, who as ſhe now repreſents it herſelf, had opportunities of informing numbers of people of a tranſaction of this kind, ſhould make no complaint either to her maſter or her miſtreſs, or Barnet, or any of the cuſtomers, any of whom would have taken the part of an innocent woman; ſhe was entirely a free agent in croſſing the ſtreets, and all that evening, and the next morning; and ſhe had only three minutes walk to communicate the whole to her uncle and aunt; therefore in my apprehenſion there is not the leaſt foundation for the proſecution; and when you conſider the evidence of the lodgers in the houſe, in ſuch a ſituation that they muſt have heard that cry, which ſhe only mentions to have made once, although ſhe might have made cries perpetually; ſhe might have alarmed people that paſſed in the ſtreet, and certainly the people over head would have heard, but yet theſe people underneath and above heard no cry, but one of them heard her cry beer, and heard Barnet come after her, and when ſhe heard the voice of her fellow ſervant, would not it have been natural to have called to him; if ſhe had not conſented, ſhe certainly might have made it known: I think there is not the leaſt foundation for this proſecution, nor could it be ſupported in point of law, for ſhe has not given that teſtimony that I ſhould think would be ſufficient to make it appear that he had carnal knowledge of her body.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron Perryn.

The next Part will contain the remarkable Trial of William Wade for the Murder of his Apprentice Girl, by ſtarving her to Death, with ſeveral others, and will be publiſhed in a few Days.

283. JOHN HARRIS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Lewis, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 23d of January laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, three metal girdle buckles, gilt with gold, value 10s. one iron girdle buckle japanned, value 1s. and one ſilver nutmeg grater, value 7s. the property of the ſaid Thomas Lewis.

THOMAS LEWIS ſworn.

On the 23d of January I ſat in my parlour, and I obſerved the priſoner at my ſhop window.

Court. What time?—Between ſix and ſeven, near ſeven I ſaw the priſoner go from the window, and return again in the ſpace of a minute, I had a gentleman with me in the parlour, and I told him I muſt go to my trap, I had contrived a trap at my window, I had been robbed ſo frequently, and if he had introduced a hand, or a finger, or thumb, I ſhould have caught them, and held them faſt; I went into the ſhop behind ſome ſhutters that I had put to ſecrete myſelf, where I could obſerve every tranſaction at the window. I ſaw the priſoner extend his finger againſt the glaſs of his right hand, and with his left hand he was working his hand, and I heard the glaſs crack; as well as ſeeing his hand in this manner, I ſaw ſome of my goods go out of the window, without his hand being introduced, I then conſidered it was by an inſtrument; a gentleman at this inſtant knocked at the door, and informed me of him, I ſaid I was obliged to him, but I ſhould know the man if I ſaw him, I would go out and look for him.

Court. Had he drawn any thing out?—Three girdle buckles, a black girdle buckle, and a ſilver nutmeg grater.

Are you ſure theſe things were in the window before?—Yes, I advertiſed in two papers for this gentleman to come forward, but he never appeared, I had my window mended on the Saturday morning, and on the Saturday evening I went out, and when I returned I found two or three of my neighbours and the priſoner in my parlour, I addreſſed him with, O you are an old acquaintance of mine, I ſaw ſaw you here laſt night, for he had on a double breaſted coat, it was not a lappelled coat, and the button holes were ſo cloſe to the buttons, that when they were buttoned, the buttons touched within a quarter of an inch, which is remarkable, and I deſcribed him ſo to my wife, and he went away and came again ſix or eight times before he had compleated his purpoſe; therefore I had an opportunity of ſeeing him, for I had at a high window four lights, which gave me a full view of him, ſo that it is impoſſible I ſhould be miſtaken.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Proſecution. Are you ſure the priſoner is the man?—I am.

Court. Then the lights were in the window between you and him?—They were.

Mr. Scott Council for the Priſoner. What time of the evening might this be?—Between ſix and ſeven.

What part of the ſhop was you in?—At the end of the counter, facing that window he was at.

I ſhould have ſuppoſed if the lights had been behind you, you could have ſeen into the ſtreet?—The lights were cloſe to the window; they gave light that I could ſee him.

Had he a hat on at that time?——He had a ſlouched hat.

And a great coat?—Yes.

You never ſaw any thing more of that man on the Friday evening?—No, there is an inſtrument that he threw away.

JOHN COWARD ſworn.

You live in Fleet-ſtreet?—Yes, I know Mr. Lewis's ſhop; on Saturday the 24th of January, as I was coming down Ludgate-ſtreet between the hour of ſix and ſeven in the evening; juſt before I came to Mr. Lewis's door, I perceived the priſoner at the bar at the bulk on the left-hand ſide, juſt by the door; and juſt as I came almoſt on a line with him, I both ſaw him break and heard the crack, which was made with ſomething he had in his hand; he directly left the window, rather in haſte, as though conſcious ſomebody had ſeen him; he went down Stationers-alley, and then wheeled round; by this time Mr. Lewis's boy run out of the ſhop, and ſaid that is the man that broke the window; I immediately went up to him, he made a ſlip as if he had fell, I laid hold of him, and the people began to gather round him; I ſaw him hurl ſomething into the highway; I ſaid he has thrown ſomething into the highway, I wiſh you would try to find it; I took out a candle, and a boy picked up a knife, which I have in my pocket; Mrs. Lewis immediately ſent away for Mr. Lewis; when Mr. Lewis came and ſaw him, he ſaid you are the man that I ſaw here laſt night.

Mr. Sylveſter. That knife you ſaw him hurl away?——I ſaw him hurl away ſomething, there was no goods upon him.

Mr. Scott. You ſaw this man break a window as he went through the ſtreet.

Court. When you firſt obſerved him, was he ſtanding or walking?—Standing, with his hand cloſe againſt the glaſs; I perceived ſome motion againſt the glaſs and heard it crack.

Priſoner. Sir, I do not know what to ſay, there is my Council; I have people to call that I am innocent of what I am charged with.

Mr. Sylveſter to Priſoner. You may call your witneſſes if you like, but I caution you.

Mr. Scott to Priſoner. Would you have me call Mary Anderſon.

Priſoner. Yes, and all of them.

The Priſoner's witneſſes ordered to be examined apart.

MARY ANDERSON ſworn.

I am a married woman; my huſband is a copper-plate maker; I live at No. 7, Little Shire-lane, Temple-bar.

Mr. Scott. How long have you known John Harris?—If you aſk me that I muſt tell you the plain truth, that he is a relation, and I have known him from his childhood, he is my firſt couſin.

Do you recollect his being at your houſe on Friday the 23d of January?—Yes, and the reaſon I remember it is, that I ſent a few lines to Mary Cam, who is one of the witneſſes, on the Thurſday evening at half paſt ſix, to come to my houſe the next day; ſhe came there and met her huſband at my houſe at twenty minutes paſt four; there had been a little diſpute.

Court. And how do you remember the time that you wrote that letter?——It was half paſt ſix in the evening, before I wrote the letter the 22d, the day before.

Court. How do you know what day it was?——It was the 22d, I well know the day of the month, I dated my letter, Thurſday, half paſt ſix in the evening, that is in the letter, which I believe ſhe has in her pocket.

Do you recollect ſeeing the priſoner come to your houſe?——Yes, I ſat down to tea exactly as St. Clement's chimes played five, and he came in as I was drinking my third diſh of tea, it could not exceed half paſt five, and he never departed till five minutes before nine; I would ſpeak the truth between God and the world.

Croſs-examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

You are very exact as to times and circumſtances?——I am only poſitive to the clock, becauſe St. Clement's always plays at nine and five; I ſent this letter by the penny poſt, and ſhould have dated it.

What penny poſt was it put in at?—At Blackmore-ſtreet.

That was put in then of the Thurſday night?——Yes, at half paſt ſix.

You knew your Couſin Harris very well before?—Yes; he ſaid he would not have any tea; he ſaid he would have ſomething better; they had half a pint of the beſt double diſtilled aniſeed; I have a little child of ten years old that fetched it.

Did he eat a bit of toaſt with it?—No.

What had you with your tea?—Toaſt.

Who had the muffin?—Nobody.

Who had the bread and butter?—There was none cut.

Who was your company?——The company was Joſeph Cam and Mary Cam; Mr. Cam was to come at three, but he came at twenty minutes paſt four.

What o'clock did Mrs. Cam come?—As near as poſſible at ten in the morning.

Then ſhe had been in your houſe all that time?—Yes; ſhe is a mantua-maker, in St. James's-market, her huſband is a Captain's cook.

Where does the priſoner live?—He did live at Walworth till this affair happened.

Where did he live on the day he drank tea with you?——He lived at Walworth, he rented a houſe there.

Did you uſe to viſit him there?—I was there on the Sunday before.

Do you know any of his neighbours there?——No, I have ſeen his next door neighbour there.

Mr. Cam came at four?——Twenty minutes paſt four; he and his wife went away, and I went part of the way with them.

What did they quarrel about?—That is not a thing that concerns me between a man and his wife; you will excuſe me, but I do not know, I went home with Mrs. Cam, that night to her mother's; ſhe and her huſband parted at the door.

What after they had made it up?—Yes.

What became of Mr. Cam after that, you do not know?—No.

MARY CAM ſworn.

I am wife of Joſeph Cam; on the 23d of January, on a Friday, I went to the houſe of Mrs. Anderſon to meet my huſband, by his appointment and her's; I received the appointment by a penny poſt letter; I was informed I was to meet him; there had been ſome difference between me and my huſband, and we had not been together ſince July laſt; I met my huſband there; I ſaw John Harris there; I went there in the morning.

Mr. Scott. What time?—I cannot recollect.

Who was with Mrs. Anderſon when you firſt went?—I do not recollect any body; my huſband was the firſt perſon that came as near as I can remember, it was near upon four; the priſoner came, as near as I can remember, about half paſt five, but I am ſure it was not more; he ſtaid till about a quarter or twenty minutes of nine; I am poſitive to the time of his coming being very near half after five, becauſe we went to tea at five, as St. Clement's chimes were going.

Did your huſband drink tea?—Yes, but Harris did not.

Had they any other liquor?—Yes, anniſeed.

This Gentleman will aſk you preſently whether you had muffin or bread and butter.—I believe we had toaſt, becauſe Mrs. Anderſon generally has.

Croſs-examined by Mr. Silveſter.

What makes you recollect the day?—The Sunday following was my own child's birth day that I buried.

How came you to meet there?——Mrs. Anderſon and me are very old acquaintance.

Who fixed on the ſpot?—I believe my huſband or her; I received a penny poſt letter.

Have you that letter?—I have not.

That is a pity; have you looked for it?——No, I do not think I have the pockets on; the letter is of very little conſequence; I have not it about me; but ſuch a letter I really did receive; I live in St. James's Market.

Mr. Silveſter. Mr. Harris did not drink any tea at all?—I do not recollect; when he came in I told him we were but drinking the third diſh.

How many diſhes do you generally drink?——That is juſt as it happens; ſome times I drink ſix or ſeven; I am fond of tea.

How came you to fix juſt on the number of three?——I am ſure we had drank no more.

You had toaſt and bread and butter I underſtand?——I do not know that Harris eat any thing; Harris went away at a quar- before nine; I did not go away till after ſupper; I believe it might be turned of ten, but I cannot tell as to the time of my going away, what time it was.

Which way did you go home?—I went as I generally do, through Chandois-ſtreet and Taviſtock-ſtreet, the way to St. James's-ſtreet; my huſband ſaw me as far as the linen draper's in St. James's Market; I lodge at the corner of St. Alban's-ſtreet: he parted from me at the linen draper's.

Nobody elſe went with you?——Nobody elſe at all; I never ſaw Mr. Harris afterwards.

Then you are ſure that nobody went with you?——Nobody but my huſband.

You two went together arm in arm after making this quarrel up?—We went home together.

What became of your huſband after that?——He went to his lodgings.

But it was made up?——No, I have ſeen him, but it is not made up, nor may be never may.

Who elſe was in company?—Nobody elſe was in company the whole evening that I remember.

Did not Mrs. Anderſon walk home with you?——I do not remember that ſhe did.

JOSEPH CAM, ſworn.

Mr. Scott. What are you by trade?—A cook.

Are you a married man?——Yes.

Do you live with your wife?——No.

There has been ſome difference?——There has.

Do you recollect being ſent for at any time to the houſe of Mrs. Mary Anderſon?——I do.

For what purpoſe?——To ſee my wife.

Did you meet your wife?——I did.

When was that?——It was the 23d of January to the beſt of my knowledge.

Be ſo good as explain to the Court your reaſon for ſuppoſing it on the 23d of January?—Yes, Sir; on the 22d I went to the Bank and received ſome money, for which reaſon I appointed on the 23d to be at Mrs. Anderſon's.

Court. What day of the week was it?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was Friday.

Why do you ſuppoſe it was Friday?—Becauſe on the Thurſday I went to the Bank.

Did you ſee your wife there?——I did; when I was at St. Margaret's Church, it was paſt four; I cannot ſay to the minute; I then went from thence to the Strand; I found I was beyond the time; I was to have been there at three; I called in the Strand; I did not ſtop as long as I have been here; I went immediately to Mrs. Anderſon's, where I met my wife; I look upon it, it might be about a quarter after five; my wife was there firſt; I ſuppoſe I ſtaid there four or five hours; I ſtaid there till I do not know whether it was ten or eleven; there was Mrs. Anderſon and a child, and there was the priſoner, he came in afterwards.

Who went away firſt, you or the priſoner?——The priſoner.

Did you drink any thing there?—Yes.

What?—Anniſeed.

Who went home with your wife?—I did.

Any body elſe?—Mrs. Anderſon.

Did you and your wife walk together and Mrs. Anderſon follow you, or did you all walk in one bunch?—I cannot ſay; I parted with my wife in Market-lane, cloſe to the Market, and then my wife went home and Mrs. Anderſon with her, and I ſaw Mrs. Anderſon home after.

Mr. Silveſter. You went with her and parted in Market-ſtreet; what became of you?—I ſtaid there till Mrs. Anderſon returned.

What! in the ſtreet; where did ſhe go; how came you to part there?—Becauſe it was not my deſire to go any farther; my wife lived about a ſtone's throw off.

You did not choſe to go that ſtone's throw then?——No.

Why the quarrel was made up?——I do not know that.

Did not you make up the quarrel between you and your wife?—I do not know that I did, I appointed to ſee my wife there upon ſome buſineſs.

Then it was not to make up the quarrel at all?——I did not come here upon that quarrel, nor upon the affairs of my wife.

What was the buſineſs you met there about?——To ſee my wife.

That was all?——Yes.

And that you call buſineſs?—I do call that buſineſs.

What did you go there for beſides?——I do not chooſe to tell you what I went there for, nor neither ſhall I.

Then it was not to make up the quarrel at all; now, Mr. Cam, this going home, you do not know what time it was, whether ten or eleven, or half after eleven?——I have told you I did not know exactly the time I went away; I did not mention any time to my knowledge; I told you I did not know the time; I cannot recollect.

How long did you ſtay there?—I cannot ſay rightly.

Then you ſay you went home?—Yes, Mrs. Anderſon walked as far as Market-lane with me and my wife, and ſhe and my wife went away together.

Your wife ſaid nobody went with you?——I cannot ſay that, I am ſpeaking for myſelf.

What is Mrs. Anderſon?—I cannot ſay rightly, ſomething in the feather way.

Mr. Silveſter. My Lord, I beg leave to call a perſon that lives next door to the priſoner at Walworth.

Mr. Scott. My Lord, they have kept their witneſſes in Court and now they are going to call them, while our witneſſes have been all out of Court.

ANN WELCH ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Silveſter on the part of the proſecution.

What are you?——I do not know what you mean.

Where do you live?—At Walworth.

Do you know the priſoner?—Yes, he lived the next houſe to me.

What buſineſs is he?—I do not know indeed.

Did you ſee him or hear him at any time in January laſt?—Several times.

When did you hear he was taken up?—On the Saturday, I heard him on the Friday night.

Do you know the hour?—I had been to Camberwell, and within five minutes walk of my own houſe, I heard ſome church clock ſtrike five; I came home and pulled off my hat and cloak, and I went to tea; and while I was at tea I heard him go down ſtairs as I thought.

What paſſed?—I heard nothing that paſſed, I heard him go down ſtairs.

Court. What down his own ſtairs?—Yes.

Jury. You did not ſee him?—No.

Court. How do you know it was him if you did not ſee him?—I thought it was him.

JANE INNWOOD ſworn.

I am ſervant to the laſt witneſs Mrs. Welch, who lives at Walworth; I know nothing of the priſoner; only I heard him go out one evening.

What evening?—I cannot recollect the day of the month, it was the Friday before the ſearch warrant was on the Sunday.

What Sunday was that, do you recollect?—I cannot recollect the day of the month; it was in January ſometime.

What did you hear or ſee?——I ſaw nothing, any farther than I thought I heard him come down ſtairs to the beſt of my knowledge.

Why do you ſuppoſe it was this man?——Only by the quickneſs of his ſteps, I have often heard him.

What time was it?——To the beſt of my knowledge it was a quarter after five o'clock, I cannot tell for a quarter of an hour, I heard nothing paſs.

Court to Mrs. Welch. How came you here to day?——In a coach.

What did you come for?—I was ſubpœned here.

By whom?——By Mr. Lewis.

How came Mr. Lewis to know that you knew any thing of this man?——I cannot tell.

Court to Mr. Lewis. How came you to ſubpœna this woman?——I had a ſearch warrant, on the Sunday in the morning, to ſearch his houſe; Mrs. Welch came to me at the door, and aſked me what was the matter, I told her; after that I called at Mrs. Welch's but did not ſee her, and I called again after the examination at Guildhall, on the Monday afternoon.

Court. At that examination at Guildhall, were theſe witneſſes, Mary Cam and Mary Anderſon called?——No; Harris gave an account of them at Guildhall, that they were to appear.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, with reſpect to the crime of burglary, the Judges in conſtruing the law reſpecting it, have extended the conſtruction of it certainly very far, for they have held that it isnot neceſſary for a perſon actually to go into the houſe, but that the putting into a houſe any part of their body, or even any thing which they hold in their hands by which the felony is committed, is ſufficient to conſtitute an entering; that is certainly a very extenſive conſtruction, but it has been ſo decided for many years.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

284. JOHN SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Francis Franco, Eſq. on the King's highway, on the 12th day of February, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one watch, with the inſide and outſide caſes made of gold, value 20l. two cornelian ſeals ſet in gold, value 4l. one ſilk purſe, value 6d. and forty-one guineas, value 43l. 1s. and two half guineas, value 1l. 1s. his property.

I was robbed on the 12th of February, at two in the morning, in Harley-ſtreet, in a hackney coach, I was alone, the carriage ſtopped, the door was opened, and a piſtol preſented to me, and I was told to give my money.

Court. What words?—Deliver: I rather heſitated, upon which the priſoner ſwore he would ſhoot me, if I was not quick. I gave him my purſe, containing forty one guineas and two half guineas; he then demanded my watch, which I gave him, it was gold, juſt on delivering the watch, I ſaw a watchman come round the corner of the ſtreet, and at the ſame time I heard him rattle, and in the mean time the priſoner ran off; I then jumped out of the coach, and the coachman getting off the box with the watchman, we purſued him, and he was taken by another watchman.

Did you ſee the man run?—Yes.

Did he turn out of your ſight?—Yes.

What diſtance was he from you when he turned out of your ſight?—I ſhould ſuppoſe as far as from here to the door.

No further than that?—It might be two or three yards further.

How long was it before he was taken?—I ſuppoſe in about two minutes there was a cry that he was taken; as ſoon as I came up I did not know at the inſtant whether he was the man or no, but I ſaid you had better feel whether he has got any thing about him; the watchman put his hands in this way to his great coat, and found a watch in his great coat pocket.

Court. Was that your watch?—It was, on my ſaying it was mine, the priſoner then ſaid, as you have got your watch you may as well have your purſe, and took my purſe out of his pocket himſelf and gave it me, it was my purſe.

FRANCIS BULGER ſworn.

I am a watchman; between one and two in the morning that this gentleman was robbed, I heard a coach ſtop in Harley-ſtreet, I immediately went out of the box, and in going up towards the coach I ſaw the coach door open; going up further, I ſaw a man come from the coach.

Should you know him?—I will know him when I ſee him; I called out murder at the firſt, and ſtop thief; then I ſprung at him and purſued him; between the time of my following him and his being taken might be about five minutes.

Was the man that ſtopped the coach the priſoner?—He was, he was taken in about five minutes after; I hearing that he had got a piſtol, I went and ſearched the round that he went, and found a piſtol; he got a fall in his running, and it was about a couple of yards from where he fell.

——— FRASER ſworn.

I took the priſoner a few yards from Harley-ſtreet.

Did you ſee Mr. Franco?—Yes, he was ſtanding by the coach.

Did you ſee any watch found in the man's coat pocket?—Yes, I was the perſon that found the watch in his body coat.

Was it a wide coat or a cloſe coat pocket?—His cloſe coat pocket the gentleman took it out, I felt it; the purſe he had in his left-hand ſide pocket; he ſaid it was ſome halfpence; I believe he took it out himſelf and gave it Mr. Franco; I did not ſee it.

JOHN LANGFORD ſworn.

I am another watchman, I had the firſt ſight of him before Fraſer met him, I was the next man to Fraſer, I aſſiſted in taking him; I ſaw the watch taken out of his pocket by Mr. Franco, and Mr. Franco ſaid you have got my purſe then, I ſuppoſe; the man made no other anſwer, but put his hand into his left-hand pocket, and gave it him directly; he made no anſwer at all.

Priſoner. I ſhould have ſpoke before if I knew I might; I am guilty of the robbery; great diſtreſs and neceſſity forced me to do it; I leave myſelf to the mercy of the Court and the proſecutor; I have no friends in town.

GUILTY Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutor and Jury.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

285. JAMES BIXBY and JOHN EDWARDS were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of James Bradbury, at the hour of two in the night, on the 13th of February, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, thirty pounds weight of beef, value 10s. the property of the ſaid James Bradbury.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

JAMES BRADBURY ſworn.

I am a butcher in Sharp-alley, Cow-croſs; I am a houſekeeper; on the 13th of this month, when I had done work, we left the ſlaughter-houſe, and every thing was ſafe.

Court. Does your ſlaughter-houſe adjoin to your houſe?—Yes.

Is it under the ſame roof?—Yes.

On the fourteenth, in the morning about five; I found three flanks of beef cut away and carried off.

Court. Have you another door that communicates from the ſlaughter-houſe to your houſe?——There is a back door opens to the kitchen door.

Where theſe three ſides in the ſlaughter-houſe the night proceding?——Yes.

What time did you ſhut up your ſlaughter-houſe?—Between eight and nine, then they were all whole; they took out three flanks, value ten ſhillings; the next morning I received information that the priſoners had taken the beef to one Slokum's houſe, who is here; his mother-in-law and he had a quarrel, and ſhe diſcovered it: the bolt of the ſlaughter-houſe was wrenched and the padlock haſp, and all the doors were open; when we left them the bolt was' faſt on, and the haſp in good repair, but the next morning the haſp was ſtrained all to pieces almoſt; we took Slokum directly, and he confeſſed who brought the beef to him, and we took up the priſoners, and Slokum fetched the beef. I ſaw the beef at Juſtice Blackborough's, it was delivered to me; the beef was particular, a piece of what we call the cod was cut to it.

Court. Do you know any thing of the priſoners taking the beef?——No, only by Slokum's confeſſion.

CHRISTOPHER NEWCOME ſworn.

I know nothing of the priſoners, only I was at this ſlaughter-houſe the night before, and I ſaw the place ſafe.

Court. Gentlemen, there is nothing to affect theſe priſoners but from the teſtimony of Slokum, and unleſs there had been ſome foundation laid, I cannot examine an accomplice.

JAMES BIXBY,
JOHN EDWARDS, } NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

---

286. JONAS ABRAHAMS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Hill, about the hour of four in the night, on the 8th of February, and feloniouſly ſtealing ſix pewter diſhes, value 6s. twenty-four pewter plates, value 12s. a copper porridge pot, value 2s. a large copper tea kettle, value 8s. two coffee pots, value 2s. a drinking pot, value 2s. a boiling copper, value 2s. a linen ſhift, value 2s. an apron, value 12d. a linen jack towel, value 12d. a knife cloth, value 3d. and ſeven yards of black velveret, value 30s. the property of the ſaid John.

I keep the Green-man, Bethnal-green, my houſe was broke open on Sunday the 8th of February, the padlock of a coal hole was picked, but they could not get forward there, and they untiled the roof, and cut the pantile lath, and ſo got into the waſh-houſe, they then forced a bar of the door into the kitchen; I found the houſe in this condition about ſeven the next morning; every thing was perfectly ſafe when I went to bed; I always ſee every thing ſafe before I go bed; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment; I undervalued them; the velveret and jack towel were in the little parlour, and all the other things were in the kitchen; I had ſeen the velveret in a glaſs caſe three or four days before, but the caſe was not locked; on the Thurſday I went with a carpenter whoſe name is William Carter, to buy another copper, I ſaw one, and a woman aſked me ten-pence a pound, I ſaid I would give her half a crown earneſt, it came to twelve ſhillings and ſixpence, I paid for it, and afterwards found it to be my own copper, I told the woman I thought it was my copper, we got a ſearch warrant to ſearch the woman's houſe.

Court. Who did the woman ſay ſhe had the copper of?——Of the priſoner; Mr. Daniels, the woman's huſband, went with me and Wade the officer to the priſoner's houſe, who lived in Old Gravel-lane, and kept a houſe there; the priſoner ſaid he had the copper of his brother, and he would give an account how he got it; his brother lodges in Red Lion-ſtreet, Whitechapel, and the priſoner walked with us, his brother was at home at ſupper; we found two coppers there, and the officer took the brother into cuſtody, and in the morning the priſoner was committed.

Court. You found nothing of your property at the brother's?——Nothing.

What was the reaſon the juſtice committed this priſoner?——I do not know.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. Henry Abrahams is diſcharged now?——Yes.

You went and found a copper at Mrs. Daniel's, who is ſhe?—She keeps an iron ſhop.

That copper you had put into the brick-work?——Yes.

Did you ever take the dimenſions of the copper before you loſt it?——No.

Nor the weight of it?——No.

So that any further than what ſomebody elſe has told you, you know nothing of it?——No.

You never took either the gauge of it, the diameter of it, or any other admeaſurement?——Never.

As to this copper, whether it is your's or not, of your own knowledge you cannot tell?——I cannot, I will not ſwear to it.

That copper, however, ſuch as it is, you found at Mr. Daniel's, and not at the priſoner's?——Yes.

JOHN DANIELS ſworn.

I know no further than I bought a copper of the priſoner weighing fifteen pounds, which my wife ſold to the proſecutor.

Mr. Garrow. Was you by when ſhe ſold it?—No, the priſoner ſaid when he ſold it it was not his property but his brother's, and he owned before the juſtice———

Mr. Garrow. Do not tell us that, Sir.

Court. Did you hear the priſoner ſay any thing?—No, his brother owned he delivered this copper to the priſoner.

Mr. Garrow. You bought a copper that weighed fifteen pounds of the priſoner, and what became of it, you do not know of your own knowledge?—No.

Court. Do you or do you not know that the proſecutor had that copper again?

Mr. Garrow. No, my Lord, he was not at home.

Court. Was you at home, Sir, when it was ſold?—No, I was attending a Jury at Whitechapel.

MARY CLASSALL ſworn.

I was ſervant to Mr. Hill at the time the houſe was broke open, I knew it was broke open, and I know that is our copper, that is all I know about it; I have ſeen it ſince it was brought back; I know nothing about the priſoner.

WILLIAM CARTER ſworn.

I was at the buying of this copper of Mr. Daniels with the proſecutor.

EDMUND WADE ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner.

Court to Mary Claſſall. How can you be poſitive that this was your maſter's copper?——The very laſt time I uſed it, which was the Saturday night before it was ſtolen, I thought there had been a hole it, and that mark was in it when it came back, and by that I ſwear to it.

Mr. Garrow. Does your Lordſhip take the copper mentioned in this converſation to be ſufficiently identified?

Court. This woman ſwears it is the ſame copper.

Court to Mary Claſſall. You ſaw the copper after it was brought back?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Daniels ſays he bought a copper of the priſoner, and his wife ſold a copper to Mr. Hill, that copper which is ſo found in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Daniels is proved to be the copper that was loſt, but non conſtat, if it was the copper that Daniels bought of the priſoner at the bar, that is not ſo traced.

Court to Hill. Did you carry the copper from Daniels to the priſoner's houſe?—No, to my own houſe.

Did the priſoner ſee that copper?——At Mr. Wilmot's Office.

That ſame copper you bought of Mrs. Daniels?—Yes.

Was Mary Claſſal at the juſtice's?—Yes, and the priſoner was there.

Did the priſoner ſay that was the copper he ſold to Mr. Daniels?—I cannot ſay.

Court. Mrs. Daniels ſhould have been here.

Court to John Daniels. Did you take any notice of the copper that you bought?—No, Sir.

Then you cannot ſwear that this was the copper you bought of the priſoner?—No, Sir, I cannot.

Jury. Had you any other copper?—No, Sir.

Did you buy one of Abrahams?—Yes.

Then of courſe that muſt be the copper.

Mr. Garrow. You keep an iron-ſhop?—Yes.

And a broker's ſhop?—Yes.

You was on a Jury in Whitechapel?—Yes.

Your wife conducts your buſineſs in your abſence?—Yes.

Whether ſhe in your abſence bought a copper and ſold it again, you cannot know?—No.

Court to Hill. When did you buy the copper of Mr. Daniels?—On Thurſday as it was ſtolen on the Sunday Morning.

Court to Daniels. Had you any other copper?——We had coppers of different kinds but not of that kind, not a boiling copper; we had different kinds of coppers; I ſaw the copper there that evening.

Did you ſee it on Wedneſday?—No.

Did you ſee it on Thurſday?—No.

Have you any the leaſt reaſon in the world to conceive or imagine that there was any other copper in the houſe between the time you bought it and Thurſday morning?—I cannot ſay.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, we muſt not go on an uncertainty, they have left the material witneſs at home, the man's wife, who generally manages the buſineſs, and we muſt go by the rules of law and evidence.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the Firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

287. ALEXANDER CULLUM was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Pearce, about the hour of nine in the night, on the 13th of February, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein two large Cheſhire cheeſes, weight ſixty-five pounds, value 20s. the property of the ſaid John Pearce.

JOHN PEARCE ſworn.

I live at No. 17, Old Compton-ſtreet, St. Ann's, on the 13th of February, I was ſitting in the parlour writing, I ſhut the ſhop door myſelf, I had juſt before ſeen the priſoner lurking about my window, I noticed him, I watched him till he left my window; I then began writing again, I wrote about two lines, and I then took my head off from my writing to look towards the ſhop, and I ſaw the priſoner at the bar in my ſhop, and his face was turned towards the ſhop door, facing the ſtreet; he then went to my ſhelf and took a Cheſhire cheeſe, I purſued him, and followed him till he was taken; I ſaw him take one cheeſe out of the ſhop, he was taken in the ſpace of half a minute, or leſs than a minute; the cheeſe he threw down about twenty yards from my door, and it was picked up by one of my neighbours; I did not ſee him immediately throw it down, I ſaw him take it out of my ſhop; I did not look after that, I purſued the priſoner, he ran down Dean-ſtreet, and he turned round a coach, and I loſt him the value of half a moment; I am clear he is the man, I had made a particular obſervation of him before he came into the ſhop.

Court. In what manner had you ſhut the door of the ſhop?—I went and ſhut the door faſt, it was faſt by a ſpring lock.

Are you ſure you ſhut it?—Yes.

Is your ſhop part of your dwelling-houſe?—Yes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming along, and I heard a noiſe of ſtop thief! I run, and two people before me were running, I turned down, the people gathered together, and I was taken and brought to this bar; as for taking or ſtealing this cheeſe, or any thing elſe from man, woman, or child, I never did, ſo help me God; I have no witneſſes.

THOMAS PERRY ſworn.

I was juſt going from my own houſe, about twenty minutes before nine, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief as I turned out of the paſſage, the priſoner was running, and another little man after him, the other man caught him, and I came and collared him; coming back I met Mr. Pearce; damn him, ſays he, this is he, this is he, bring him along, I ſearched him, we found nothing upon him.

Court. Had he the cheeſe at all when you ſaw him?——No.

JAMES BLAND ſworn.

I am a heel and patten maker, I live in Compton-ſtreet, No. 19, I was coming by at the ſame time, and I picked up this cheeſe about twenty yards from the door where I imagine it was taken from; ſomebody ſpoke to him, and he ſaid, I think, it was the firſt time he had ever been guilty of ſuch a thing.

Court. Did they tell him he had better own this?——Yes, and he did not deny it.

Court. And upon that he ſaid that was his firſt offence?——Yes.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, firſt, as to the hour of the night, it was long after it was dark; then, as to the fact of breaking the houſe, the door, Mr. Pearce ſays, was ſhut, and that he was looking particularly to it; if he had latched it, and the priſoner had opened it for the purpoſe of committing a felony, it is a burglary.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

He was was humbly recommended to mercy by the Proſecutor.

---

288. WILIAM HUBBARD was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Beresford, between the hour of five and ſix in the night of the 20th of January laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein 14 yards and a quarter of printed velveret, value 3l. the property of the ſaid William.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

WILLIAM BERESFORD ſworn.

I am a woollen-draper and man's-mercer, the corner of White-hart-yard, Drury-lane, No. 82, on the 20th of January laſt, very near ſix o'clock, it being then dark, the candles were lighted, I was in the parlour ſhaving myſelf, I heard a report againſt the ſhop window as if ſomething had ſtruck the glaſs, that alarmed me, and in about five minutes I heard the ſame report, the parlour door was open that fronts the ſhop, I went into the ſhop, I thought the ſhop was beſet, and I took another candle and placed it in the ſhop, to deter any perſon from making an attempt; my ſervant returned ſoon after, in about five minutes, and I deſired him to ſhut in the ſhop or elſe I ſhould be robbed; there was no perſon in the ſhop, I found nothing amiſs then; he began ſhutting the ſhop, and I went into the parlour to finiſh my ſhaving, I had not been there above a minute, before I heard a pane of glaſs break, and fall into the ſtreet, I immediately ran into the ſtreet, I ſaw a pane of glaſs was broke, and a piece of ſpotted velveret taken out, I immediately cried out Stop thief! and my ſervant took the priſoner, and put him into a houſe about four doors above mine, I went up and identified the velveret, and charged the conſtable with him.

JOHN BERESFORD ſworn.

On the evening of the 20th of January, I was ſent out, when I returned, my maſter deſired me to ſhut the ſhop, in putting the laſt ſhutter but one, on the White-hart-yard ſide, I obſerved the priſoner and another man at the corner, he inſtantly left his companion and went to the place, I looked after him, and ſaw him break the window, and put in his hand, and take a piece of velveret, I purſued him, and took him with the piece of velveret under his arm, he had the velveret when I took him.

Priſoner. In what manner did I break the window ?——By a ſtroke of his hand.

Proſecutor. It appeared by the breaking of the glaſs as if there was ſome inſtrument made uſe of.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was walking through White-hart-yard, and going round the corner, ſomebody was ſhutting up the ſhop, I kicked againſt ſomething, and picked up much ſuch a thing as that, I took it up, and put it under my arm, that gentleman came and laid hold of me, and gave me a pull and threw the property from under my arm into the gutter; I ſaid, I was willing to go with him, ſays I, I found this property juſt now, he took me, I never offered to make any reſiſtance at all; I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY, Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

289. CHARLES MANNING was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Frances Knight, ſpinſter, on the king's highway, on the 13th of January laſt, and putting her in fear and danger of her life, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon and againſt her will, one woollen cloak, value 3s. one linen apron, value 2s. one cotton bed-gown, value 1s. one flannel bedgown, value 1s. one cotton handkerchief, value 1s. two linen clouts, value 1s. and one linen night-cap, value 2d. the property of Godfrey Haſleton.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner.

Court to Frances Knight. How old are you ?——Turned of ten.

Do you know the nature of an oath ?—I know this, that I ought to ſpeak nothing but the truth.

Do you know what will happen to you if you ſhould tell a lie ?——If I tell a ſtory I ſhall go to the naughty man, and if I tell the truth I ſhall go to Heaven.

And do you know that you will be liable to be puniſhed here ?——Yes.

FRANCES KNIGHT ſworn.

Court. Now tell me the whole ſtory and the truth ?——I was going from Whitechapel to Poplar, on the 13th of January, about noon.

Were you carrying any thing ?——A bundle.

Whoſe was it ?——My mother's.

Do you know who the things in the bundle belonged to ?—They were my daddy's property.

What was in the bundle, my little girl ?——A Bath cloak, and two clouts, and a child's bed-gown, and a flannel bed-gown, and a night-cap, and a white lawn apron; they belonged to my father, the reſt were my mother's.

Court. What is your father's name ?—Godfrey Haſleton.

What happened to you ?—Charles Manning ſaid he would blow my brains out, my mother was with me, and ſtood a little diſtance from me, it was in Stepney Fields, going from Whitechapel to Poplar.

What had your mother ſtopped about ?—I was with my mother when he ſtopped us, and then he came up and threatened to blow my brains out, and I went a little way off.

Who came up to you ?—Charles Manning.

Do you know him ?——Yes.

See if you ſee him ?——There he is.

Had you ſeen him before ?——No, I ſaw him at the juſtice's.

Was any body elſe with him ?——Yes, three more men.

What did he threaten to blow out your brains for ?—Becauſe I ſcreamed out.

What did you ſcream out for ?—One of them ſnatched my bundle, and another of them went to pick my mother's pocket, upon which I ſcreamed out twice, and then it was that the priſoner threatened to blow my brains out.

Did any body take your bundle from you?——Yes, a tall man, not the priſoner.

Was it before or after the priſoner threatened you?——Before.

In what manner did the man ſnatch your bundle from you?—— He went a little way before, and then turned back and ſnatched it out of my hand.

Court. Did he ſnatch it away in a violent manner?——Yes.

When this man threatened to blow your brains out, what happened after that?——I clapped my hands together, and ſaid, pray, Sir, I will be a good girl, and not ſcream any more.

What became of him and the reſt after that?—They then left me and my mother, and all four of them then went away to ſome other man, and took my bundle away with them.

Now are you quite ſure that the priſoner was one of them?——Yes.

How long was it after you ſaw him at the juſtice's?—I believe a fortnight.

Now when you ſaw him at the juſtice's, who pointed him out to you, who ſhewed him to you?——I pointed at him myſelf.

What as ſoon as you ſaw him?——Yes.

Were there more people with him at the juſtices?—A great many more, but I believe nobody belonging to him.

And you picked him out from amongſt them all?—Yes.

Do you think you ſhould have known any of the other three men if you had ſeen them?——No, I cannot juſtly ſay that I ſhould.

How came you to obſerve him particularly beyond the reſt?——I looked at him more than I did at the reſt, for the reſt did not look at me.

Was not you very much frightened at the time of the robbery?—Yes.

Then could you in that ſtate of affright obſerve the face of the man, ſo as to be ſure that you could know him again?——Yes.

You think you could?——Yes.

Have you any doubt whether that is the man?——No, I am quite ſure.

Priſoner. Was not you perſuaded by the runners to pick out a man in a brown jacket?——No, Sir, the man had a brown jacket, with double breaſted buttons on, when he ſtopped me.

Court. Did any body perſuade you to pitch upon the priſoner as the man?—The juſtice deſired me to look round and ſee if I could find the man that ſtopped me, and I looked round and ſaw the priſoner.

Did any body tell you to point at a man in a brown jacket?——No.

Had he the ſame clothes on that he had when he robbed you?—Yes.

Was it by his face or his clothes that you knew him?—By his face and his clothes too, but particularly by the brown jacket.

Priſoner. I do not diſpute but ſhe will ſay what ſhe has, becauſe it is an old grudge.

FRANCES HASELTON ſworn.

I am mother to the little girl, I was with her, going from Whitechapel to Poplar, I had a young baby ſucking at my breaſt, and four men paſſed in the road, they croſſed juſt by the Infirmary, they outwalked me, and went acroſs the field, and by the courſe of time, I imagined they went as far as Stepney, and in the laſt field they turned back and met me; I ſtepped acroſs a muddy place, and turned round to ſee for my little girl, who was behind, and ſhe ſcreamed out, and ſaid, mamma, that tall man has taken my bundle, I ſaid, my dear, I cannot help it.

What happened after that?——The tall man ſaid ſomething to the other, and immediately the priſoner at the bar came to my left arm, and another ſhort man came to my right arm; I turned and ſaid, what do you want with me; the priſoner ſaid, your money to be ſure.

Did you ſee him do any thing more to the little girl?——My little girl ſcreamed out, and the priſoner ſaid, you little bitch, if you ſcream I will ſettle you, I will blow your little bitch's brains out; I ſays to the priſoner I have but little money.

What became of them?——They bid us go about our buſineſs.

Are you ſure the priſoner is one of the men?——I am punctual ſure; I had ſome little knowledge of him before.

Where had you ſeen him before?——I had ſeen him about Tower-hill, by Iron Gate, and when he threatened my little girl I looked him ſteadfaſtly in the face.

Had you any acquaintance with him?——No, only knew him by ſight.

You had ſeen him ſo as to know and obſerve him, from another man?——Yes.

You have no doubt but he is the man?——I am ſure he is the man.

Were the things that were in the bundle ever found?——No.

What things were in the bundle?——A child's Bath cloak, one white apron of mine, one ſtriped linen bedgown, one flannel bedgown, two clouts, a child's night-cap, and a yard-wide handkerchief; they were tied in the handkerchief.

Priſoner. Did you not ſay when I was brought in, you believed it was me by the jacket?——No.

Court. How long after was the priſoner taken?——That day fortnight.

Was he taken up for this robbery, or on ſuſpicion of ſomething elſe?——I believe on ſuſpicion of ſomething elſe.

WILLIAM WHITEHEAD ſworn.

I am an officer; I took the priſoner, I found nothing upon him, I know nothing of the robbery, nor does Mayne my brother officer.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have witneſſes at the door to ſhew where I was at that time, but I had affronted the people, and they would not attend at the juſtice's.

Court to Proſecutrix. What day of the month was it?—On Tueſday the 13th of January.

You are ſure of that?—Yes, it was the ſecond Tueſday in the month.

About what time of day, as nearly as you can fix?——Between eleven and twelve; the clock ſtruck eleven when I went out.

Are you ſure it was before twelve?——Before twelve.

Priſoner. She ſaid it was twenty minutes after one before the juſtice.

Court. Call in the priſoner's witneſſes ſingly.

ANN PEARCE ſworn.

Court. What are you?—What am I?

Yes.—Why my huſband is a waterman, and he maintains me.

Where do you live?—In St. Catherine's Lane.

What number?——No. 16, Chequer Court.

Are you a houſekeeper, or do you lodge there?——A houſekeeper.

Do you know the priſoner at the bar?——Yes.

What do you come here particularly to ſay with reſpect to him?——To ſpeak in his behalf ſo far as this, that he was at my houſe the beginning of January, and was there every day for a good bit.

Did he lodge there then?——No.

What did he come there about?——He came to his wife.

Does his wife lodge at your houſe?——Yes, now ſhe does, ſhe did not at that time.

How came he to come there to his wife?—Becauſe ſhe uſed to come in the morning.

What did ſhe come for?—To ſee me.

Priſoner. It is my wife's mother.

Court to Ann Pearce. Did your daughter uſe to come every morning?—Every morning, and ſtay all day long, and ſo ſhe does now, without ſhe goes out to work, but the weather was ſo cold then ſhe could not go to work.

Down to what time did ſhe come every morning?——She keeps there now.

But ſhe goes out to work now?——Now and then a day ſhe goes out crying old clothes; ſhe came every day, he uſed to come generally between nine and ten, or ſometimes at nine.

Did ſhe come with her?——No, ſhe uſed to come firſt.

Where did they live?——In a ready-furniſhed lodging in Catherine-wheel Alley, Whitechapel.

Did he follow any employment at that time?——No, his employment ſhould be a waterman, but at that time he was out of employment by the froſt; he applied to his pariſh, St. John's, the other ſide of the water.

St. Catherine's Lane is in Wapping, is not it?—No, it is a precinct by itſelf.

It is between Wapping and Poplar, is not it?——No, between Wapping and Whitechapel.

Now how long did he uſe to come every day to your houſe?—He came till he was taken up.

And how long did he uſually ſtay?—He uſed to ſtay from ten or eleven till ſeven or eight at night.

Do you mean to ſay that he uſed to ſtay ſo every day?—Every day, excepting ſometimes he uſed to go over to the overſeer to get his two ſhillings.

Did he never go out all that time?——Never went out all that time.

How came he to confine himſelf?—I do not know, he did not chooſe to go out.

Did he never go out during that time?—He went generally at one o'clock to find Mr. Fogg at home, and then ſometimes at ſix in the evening.

Did he ever go at any other time?——Never.

Do you mean to ſay poſitively that he never was out of your houſe all that time, but at one o'clock in the forenoon?——Never.

Did your daughter ſtay as cloſe at home as he did?——Yes.

Both of them uſed to ſtay at home?——Yes.

How did he employ himſelf at home?—One time he wanted a pair of ſhoes, and he ſat himſelf down to work, and made himſelf a pair of canvas ſhoes, he was three days in making them.

How did he uſe to employ himſelf?—Sit by the fire, and ſometimes read a book.

Priſoner. I have the ſhoes on now.

ANN TRUTON ſworn.

Court. Where do you live?—In Chequer Court, St. Catherine's Lane.

Is that near Mrs. Pearce's?—In Mrs. Pearce's houſe.

What do you know about this man?—I know that on the 13th day of January, I went to Mrs. Pearce's houſe between eleven and twelve, and I ſaw the priſoner at her houſe.

What time did you go there?—Between eleven and twelve.

Court. Let Mrs. Pearce go out of Court.

You went to Mrs. Pearce's houſe between eleven and twelve?—I called to ſee my mother.

Who is your mother?——Mrs. Pearce.

You are ſiſter-in-law to the priſoner?—Yes.

Who did you ſee there?——My mother, and my mother's lodger, and the priſoner, and his wife, I went on an errand, and returned about twelve.

What lodger?——Alec. Fox his name is.

What were they doing at this time?—They were dreſſing their dinner.

Did you ſtay and dine with them?——I ſaw Charles Manning going to dine as I came away.

You did not ſtay and dine with them?—No, I came away as they were going to dine.

Did they ſit down to dinner before you came away?—They were all ſat down and going to dinner, but I came away and left them.

Was the dinner on the table?—Yes, two boiled ſmall cod and tatoes.

Any thing elſe?——There were ſome ſtewed ſprats on the table.

Thoſe that ſat down to dinner were your mother, and Mr. and Mrs. Manning, and the lodger Fox?—Yes.

Thoſe four?—Yes.

Were there any body elſe?—Only my young ſiſter of all.

How came you to remember particularly that this was the 13th of January?——Becauſe I was coming away on the 25th, to leave my place.

How long was it before you left your place?—I left my place a few days afterwards.

How does your leaving your place on the 25th, put you in mind of the 13th?—I left my place on the 25th.

How many days was it before you left your place?—I cannot recollect how many days.

And yet the reaſon you recollect it was the 13th was, becauſe you left your place on the 25th?—I minded the day as I ſaw Charles Manning there.

Was he often there?—Yes, always there almoſt when I uſed to go there.

Then how could you mind the day if he was there every day? (No anſwer.)

Who told you to ſay it was the 13th of January?——I know it was the 13th of January.

But I want to know a little how you know it; what fixed this particular day in your memory?—Becauſe I remember the day of the month.

Do you remember where you was on the 7th of January, or any other particular day of the month; where was you on the 7th of January between eleven and twelve?——I was at home.

Do you remember that?—Yes, I am very ſure of that.

And where was you on the 17th;—I was at home.

Was you at home every day except the 13th?—I uſed to come out of an errand.

How many days after did you leave your place?—I left it the 25th, I am not much of a ſcholar, and I cannot recollect.

How long after was it that he was taken up?—This was on the Tueſday that I ſaw him at my mother's, and it was a fortnight afterwards that he was taken up.

What day of the week was this 13th of January?—Tueſday, as I recollect, to the beſt of my knowledge.

What day of the week was it you left your place?——I cannot rightly recollect that.

Then how came you to recollect this 13th of January better than the day you left your place?—I cannot tell rightly.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Do you recollect the day of the week that the priſoner was taken up?—Yes he was taken up on the Thurſday night.

When did you hear of it?——I heard of it on the Friday following.

When you heard of his being taken up, did you then mention that you ſaw him on this 13th of January?—Yes, Sir, I am ſure it was the 13th of January.

Did you mention it to any one?—Yes, I did.

Court. Did you hear what he was taken up for?—I heard it was for robbery.

Who told you ſo?——I heard it at the juſtice's.

Did you go to the juſtice's?—Yes.

And did you hear what day that robbery was committed?—No.

Do you know now what day that robbery was committed?—No, Sir, I do not.

Then how came you to tell any body that you ſaw him on the 13th of January?—I told my mother ſo.

Mrs. Pearce called in again.

Court to Mrs. Pearce. That young woman is one of your daughters, is not ſhe?—Yes.

Do you remember her coming to your houſe on any particular day?—She came on that very day that Charles Manning brought two fiſh to my houſe.

What day was that?—On a Tueſday.

What Tueſday?—It was in January, I believe it was the 13th, he came that day between ten and eleven, and brought two little codlings.

What time did your daughter Truton come to you?—She came about eleven.

Did ſhe come to dine with you?—No,

ſhe came in, ſhe was going on an errand, ſhe ſaw him cleaning the fiſh, ſays ſhe, mother, what is Charles a doing; ſays I, he is cleaning two fiſh; ſhe went away, and came again about one, as ſhe was going home; he dined between twelve and one, but my huſband and me dined between one and two.

Did he dine on the fiſh, or your huſband and you?—He dined and his wife.

Did any body dine with him?—Nobody but him and his wife.

Had they any thing elſe for dinner but theſe two fiſh?—Nothing elſe.

Had they any thing elſe to eat with the fiſh?—I think a halfpenny-worth of potatoes, and a little melted butter.

Had they any thing elſe for dinner?—Nothing elſe.

Was that before your daughter Truton went away?—She came in and ſaw him a doing of them; ſhe came in a ſecond time and ſaw them at dinner.

Did not ſhe ſit down and eat a bit?—No, me and my huſband dined afterwards, my lodger dined with us, he is a boarder, his name is Alexander Fox.

What had you for dinner?——My huſband had a fancy to have ſome ſtewed ſprats, in vinegar and allſpice, and I got about ſixpennyworth of them, and ſo ſtewed them up in vinegar; we never uſed to dine together.

Did you know when Manning was taken up?—Yes.

How long was it after this?—A little better than a week.

Recollect as near as you can the time he was taken up, and how long it was after?—I think it was a little better than a week.

Do you recollect the day?—I think it was on a Thurſday.

Then it was the Thurſday week after this?—Yes.

How ſoon did you know he was taken up?——Directly.

Did you know what for?——They firſt mentioned before the juſtice that he was ſtopped for cutting a man to pieces in Stepney Fields, and the man was ill, and in the hoſpital, and could not appear; in the afternoon this good woman appeared againſt him, and the child.

Was you preſent at the juſtice's?—Yes.

Did you hear the evidence?—No, I did not come in the afternoon.

When did your daughter Truton tell you any thing about this robbery?—I told her: I told her that Charles was taken up.

Did you tell her what day this robbery was committed upon?—No, it was her ſiſter told her.

Was you preſent?—Yes, at my houſe.

When was that?—I cannot ſay, rightly, it is ſet down that it was the 13th day of January.

Court to Truton. How long was it after you left your place before you heard of the priſoner being taken up?—I came away the 25th, I cannot rightly tell, I heard of it before I left my place, a day or ſo.

ALEXANDER FOX ſworn.

What do you know of this matter?—I lodge at the houſe of Mrs. Pearce, I know no further than that the priſoner was often in and out of the houſe before he was taken up.

Do you remember any particular day or time?—I cannot remember one particular time any more than another; he was very often out and in, and ſtaid whole days there; ſometimes he ſtaid the whole day, and ſometimes half the day; he went home about ſeven.

Did he come every day?——No.

How many days in the week might he come?—I cannot tell rightly.

Did he come two or three time a week? Yes.

What, as often as that?—Yes.

I mean from the beginning of January to the time he was taken up, did he come two or three times a week then?—Yes, he did, two or three times a week.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I had Mr. Fogg here yeſterday, the churchwarden, that I was to have gone to work for when the froſt was over, but he is gone out of town. On the 22d of January I had a few

had a few words, and I drank with one Mr. Whiteway; and one Mr. Marnes who is here aſked me to drink; I ſaid, you do not owe me ſo much good will, ever ſince you belonged to the rendezvous and I was preſſed; I ſaid I cannot ſtop, for ever ſince my laſt misfortune I never go to any houſe but my own, and I am obliged to be very particular; he knows he always takes me up on ſuſpicion of any thing that is done on the water, and when I was going away Mr. Marnes ſaid, I have a ſuſpicion of you Charles; ſays I, why ſhould you be always troubling of me; I ſaid you will take away my life one of theſe days; this was on the Thurſday, I was brought before a magiſtrate on the Friday, and committed till Monday; on the Monday morning, this gentlewoman that was here juſt now came to me, in a very ragged dreſs, and looked very hard at me, I took her to be ſomething of a ballad-ſinger; ſays I, good woman, is it you that is to ſwear againſt me; I do not know, ſays ſhe, but what it is; I was ordered to pull my coat off, and go over to the juſtices, which I did; the woman ſaid ſhe believed it was me by my jacket. I hope you will not be affronted with me for detaining you ſo long; in the evening the woman was brought and a girl,* the girl ſwore punctual to me.

Court to Whiteway. When was the priſoner taken up?——He came to me on the Thurſday night, as he mentions, about ten o'clock, to give me information of a robbery that he was going to do that evening; that he was going to rob that houſe where his ſiſter-in-law lives; his ſiſter-in-law was to let him in, and he deſired I would be ſomewhere near the houſe, that I might detect him in the matter, in order to bring him in as an evidence; upon this I took him to the public houſe, where our fellow officers were, and I conſulted on the matter, and I then thought it was better to lodge him in the houſe that night; I did ſo, there was nothing done that night, but he was detained on ſuſpicion of other robberies, and he was detained from that time.

Priſoner. My Lord, I can bring proof where I lodge, that ſince laſt September I never was out after eight o'clock at night, and I was on the pariſh, I had two ſhillings every other day from Mr. Fogg; once on a time I was tried here for piracy, but not for any thing on land, and was I given to any thing that way, I could get more gains on the water than I could on land.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the proſecutrix.

Priſoner. I beg, for Chriſt's ſake, to ſpeak one word; that is, we were all ſet down to dinner, and that young man, Fox, was not there every day, he only came in that day, I do not ſuppoſe he may remember; I am ſure I am a dead man, for Mr. Marnes, who is one of the runners, had a warrant againſt me, and he ſaid he never would ſerve that till he had the forty pounds; he ſells many a poor fellow; and God bleſs you all.

290. RICHARD M'DONAH was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Robert Heſler, in a certain field and open place near the King's highway, on the 26th of January laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one ſilver watch, value 40s. one pair of ſilver ſhoe buckles, value 40s. one pair of ſilver knee buckles, value 10s. and three pieces of gold coin of this realm, called guineas, value 3l. 3s. the property of the ſaid Robert.

ROBERT HESLER ſworn.

On the 26th of January laſt, about half paſt four in the afternoon, I was going from Batterſea to Kenſington, acroſs the fields, and between Brompton and Kenſington, on the narrow foot path I met three men, who ſtopped me, one of them was the priſoner at the bar, they ſtood looking through the hedge, the priſoner at the bar told me to ſtop and deliver, and pulled out a piſtol and preſented it to my breaſt, two more men came directly after he ſtopped me, and one of them pulled out another piſtol, but I did not ſee his face, they robbed me of three guineas, a ſilver watch, a pair of ſilver ſhoe-buckles out of my ſhoes, and a pair of ſilver knee-buckles out of my breeches pocket, after this they went away directly, there were ſome people coming, they were with me about five minutes.

Did they offer you any ill treatment after they ſtopped you?——No.

What became of you after they left you?——I went down to Kenſington to my maſter and told him, then I came home, I heard afterwards that the men were taken on the next night, I went on Tueſday morning, and gave an information of the robbery.

Are you ſure this is the man?——I am very poſitive.

Were any of your things ever found?—No, the priſoner ſtood fronting me, I ſaw his face.

You had never ſeen him before?—No.

He was not with you above five minutes?——No.

Did he take any pains to conceal his face?——No.

Now from being that ſhort time with you, and in the hurry and confuſion of ſuch a tranſaction, can you take upon yourſelf to ſwear poſitively that he is the man?—I can.

Did the Priſoner ever ſay any thing about it?——No.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

THE WHOLE
PROCEEDINGS
UPON THE
KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of Richard McDonah.

When did you firſt ſee him after?—On the Saturday following.

When you firſt ſaw him, was he pointed out to you?——No, he was with many others.

Priſoner. Did you pick me out from other people?—Yes.

WILLIAM BOWYER ſworn.

I know nothing of the robbery, only I conduct one of the parties of the patrol belonging to Bow-ſtreet; there was a loaded piſtol found upon the priſoner, and a little ſilver, and a pair of trowſers were found at his lodging, which the proſecutor deſcribed the priſoner to have on.

Was you at the Office when this man firſt ſaw him?——I was not.

JOHN CREEDLAND ſworn.

I was at the apprehending the priſoner.

Was you at the Office when the proſecutor came there to look at him?——Yes.

What paſſed there; who ſhewed the priſoner to him?——I ſhewed the priſoner to him, Sir Sampſon aſked me whether that was the man that I took, and I ſaid yes.

Aye, but when the proſecutor came, who ſhewed the priſoner to the proſecutor?——I cannot tell, I do not remember any perſon ſhewed him.

Where was he when the proſecutor firſt came in?—Standing at the bar.

Was any body elſe with him?——There were two more.

When he ſaw him at the bar, he ſaw him as a priſoner?——Yes, he was a priſoner then.

What did you take him up for?——We took him on ſuſpicion; after the information, we went to ſee if we could find him, and we did ſo.

Priſoner. He firſt ſaid I was the perſon, and ſhewed me to the proſecutor, and then he ſaid he did not.

FRANCES JOHNSON ſworn.

I have known the priſoner five or ſix weeks in his place, he uſed to come to my room to have ſome victuals, and when he came out of his place he came to be with me quite entirely; I know nothing of his ways of going on, his Maſter gave him a good character.

Bowyer. Sir Sampſon thought proper to bind this woman over to prove that he uſed to wear theſe trowſers.

Court to Proſecutor. You took notice of the dreſs the man was in?—Yes, he had a pair of ſtriped trowſers on when he ſtopped me.

Jury. Did you give in that as your deſcription of the perſon that robbed you?—Yes.

Bowyer. The proſecutor gave information of his being in red ſtriped trowſers.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

All that I have to ſay in my own defence is, that I do not know my proſecutor; and this runner has threatened my proſecutor with the pillory if he will not ſwear againſt me, he told that young woman ſo.

Court to Johnſon. Did the proſecutor tell you ſo?—No, indeed, he did not.

Court to Bowyer. Where did you firſt find theſe trowſers?——In the priſoner's lodgings, where this woman was, theſe trowſers were hanging on the head of the bed, and when the proſecutor came to the Office the ſecond time, and related the circumſtance of his having red ſtriped trowſers on, and it then ſtruck me that I ſaw ſomething, which I took at that time to be a ſtriped jacket, but when I went again, I ſaw they were trowſers; theſe are the trowſers.

The priſoner called one Witneſs, who gave him a good character.

GUILTY Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

291. The ſaid RICHARD M'DONAH was again indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Charles Angier, in a certain field and open place, near the King's highway, on the 24th of January laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, two pieces of gold coin of this realm called guineas, value 2l. 2s. the monies of the ſaid Charles.

CHARLES ANGIER ſworn.

I was robbed in the foot path from Earl's Court to Kenſington, about a quarter after four, I was going to my own houſe, on the foot path between two hedges; when I came up to the hedges, I ſaw two young men about a hundred yards from me, as ſoon as I entered into the lane, and they ſeemed as I thought to make water, which is a thing very common in theſe bye places, and therefore it gave me no ſuſpicion; I immediately went on, and when I came up to theſe two young men, I ſaw one was tall, and had on a kind of an olive coloured coat and a pair of trowſers, which was the priſoner; the other was dreſſed in a light coloured coat, but much ſhorter; the priſoner came up to me, and deſired me to deliver what I had about me quietly, the other young man that was by the ſide of me, immediately drew out a piſtol, and held it by my ſide, and rather ſideled; I immediately gave what I had out of my pocket, which were two guineas and ſome halfpence; the halfpence covered the guineas; he looked at his companion, and ſaid this is a poor man, and ſeemed to be going to return it me; then the halfpence ſlipped off, and as ſoon as he ſaw the guinea, he ſaid, Oh! here is a guinea, and they ſet off immediately; I went home, and went to Sir Sampſon's that night and gave the information I have now given; on the Tueſday following ſome of Sir Sampſon's men came for me to come to their Office on the Thurſday; I went and I ſaw Mr. Bond, he deſired ſome perſon there, the keeper of a priſon, to deſire me to go over to the White or Black Bear, I do not know which, to ſee all the priſoners; as ſoon as I went into the room I was ſhocked to ſee the priſoner among them, on account of the man's compaſſion, ſaying to his companion, this is a poor man; I really felt for him, for he ſeemed as if he had no deſire of uſing me ill, if I had had no more money.

Court. You ſpeak very fairly; are you ſure of the perſon of the man?——I am certain of his perſon, it ſtruck me with horror, I am ſure I felt as much in ſeeing him as he could in ſeeing me; I hope, for the man's conſideration to me and my family, the Court will have mercy on him; as he conſidered me as a poor man, and recommended me to the mercy of his companion, who had death in his hand; and I conſider his as a conduct not very common; as ſoon as he ſaw the guinea, then they went away immediately and deſired me not to follow them; I have enquired of the priſoner who he was, and where he came from; I have wrote to Ireland to know his character there, I have not had an anſwer,* I cannot ſay any thing at all in that matter.

Court. You have ſhewn a great deal of humanity in your conduct.

Court to Bowyer. The other three witneſſes can ſay no more than you on the former indictment?——No, my Lord.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, this proſecution reſts on the evidence of the proſecutor, and his feeling diſpoſition leaves no room to doubt that he is ſatisfied the priſoner is the man; it is for you to judge whether, under the circumſtances, he had ſufficient certainty; if you think he had, the charge is proved againſt the priſoner.

GUILTY, Death.

Proſecutor. I hope the Court will recommend him to mercy, as he had mercy upon me.

Jury. From the circumſtances of his behaviour, the Jury would wiſh to recommend him to mercy.

(See Part II. of this Seſſion, No. 237, this Priſoner tried and capitally convicted with John Jacobs and Samuel Selſhire.)

292. THOMAS TURNER was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Edward Whitemead, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 26th day of January laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, two pair of linen ſheets, value 40s. three linen table-cloths, value 15s. one ſilk gown, value 10s one ſilk petticoat, value 5s, one cotton gown, value 15s. one cotton petticoat, value 15s. one cotton counterpane, value 5s. one linen frock and waiſtcoat, value 5s. one pair of black pluſh breeches, value 2s. four pair of cotton ſtockings, value 4s. one cotton frock, value 6d. one linen frock, value 6d. twelve pieces of linen, value 6d. and ſix pieces of gold coin of this realm, called guineas, value 6l. 6s. the property of the ſaid Edward Whitemead.

SARAH WHITEMEAD ſworn.

I live in Mill-hill Mews, in the pariſh of Marybone; I am a married woman, the wife of Edward Whitemead, he is a coachman, we rent two rooms.

Court. Who lives in the reſt of the houſe?—They are two rooms over coach-houſes.

How do you get at them?——There is a ſtair-caſe out of three ſtables.

Is the ſtair-caſe open to the ſtreet?—No, my Lord, it goes down a different paſſage out of the Mews.

You have two rooms?——Yes.

Are there other rooms on the ſame floor?——No.

Are there any rooms over your's?——No.

Are there more ſtair-caſes?—Only this ſtair-caſe.

What number of ſtables are there in the Mews?—I do not know.

There are ſeveral ſtables within the Mews?——Yes.

Are there not other rooms over the ſtables?—Yes, and other dwelling houſes in the Mews.

What ſort of a door have you at the top of the ſtair-caſe into your room?—A ſingle door.

Do you lock your room at night?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. It is a private room.

Is the Mews incloſed?—Open at both ends.

Court. How is it by night?—Open at all times.

By night as well as by day?——Yes.

What is there to protect your rooms

---

* This Proſecutor, three days afterwards, informed the Court, he had received an anſwer from Ireland in favour of the Priſoner's character.

from being attacked by perſons who are travelling at that end of the town?—Nothing, Sir, but my door of my apartment, which is at the top of the ſtairs.

Then from the Mews to the ſtairs there is no door?——There is a door, but no faſtening, and any body that has a mind may open it.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Is there a door at the bottom of the ſtairs next the yard—No.

Jury. There is a paſſage that goes into her apartments before ſhe aſcends the ſtairs.

Court. Then ſhe goes out of the Mews into a paſſage, and out of that paſſage into her room?——Yes.

Mr. Juſtice Buller. You have only one door at the top of the ſtairs?—Two rooms, and two doors which go into different rooms.

Court. The ſtair-caſe is open, and when ſhe gets to the top of the ſtairs there are two doors that go to two different rooms.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, ſhe has two outſide doors to her houſe upon this evidence.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. They are ſeparate habitations for herſelf and huſband, as I conceive; that being the caſe, whether there is a communication from one room to the other; whether one room lays on the left-hand or the right-hand you have two doors to communicate, the one and the other are one manſion and the dwelling houſe.

Mr. Garrow. My Lords, this woman has two private doors to her two private rooms, either ſhe has two outſide doors to her two dwelling houſes, or ſhe has no outſide door to her dwelling houſe; if there is any outward door to this dwelling houſe, in my poor comprehenſion, it muſt be that door to the paſſage, after that ſhe aſcends the ſtair-caſe to two private dwelling rooms; but I fancy your Lordſhip will not ſay to any dwelling houſe. It is ſituated in a Mews, for the purpoſe of gentlemen's coach-houſes and ſtables; over ſuch a building there is generally a hay-loft, which ſome gentlemen have converted into lodging rooms; but ſurely in a very penal caſe indeed, which affects the life of a priſoner, the Court will not go the length in a new caſe of ſaying that this is a dwelling houſe, in which a burglary has been committed; I have not yet aſked the witneſs, but it will appear, that this is not rated as a dwelling houſe, that it is not treated as a dwelling houſe, but as it always has been, and always will be, as appurtenant to the coach-houſe; it would be deſcribed to be the building of the owner of the coach-houſe and ſtable. It may perhaps be conſiderable too to this indictment, whoſe dwelling houſe it is; for if theſe people, the proſecutor and his wife, are the coachman and the wife of the coachman to ſomebody that keeps their coach and horſes there, I ſhould then ſubmit if it can be called a dwelling houſe at all; it is not the dwelling houſe of the proſecutor: but at preſent I ſubmit with the greateſt deference in the world to your Lordſhips, that this cannot be conſidered as a dwelling houſe.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Does your huſband rent the rooms?—I took the rooms.

Then you pay for them?—I pay for them.

They do not belong to any gentleman to whom your huſband is coachman?—My huſband is coachman to Lady Harvey; her coach and horſes ſtand in the Mews.

Court. Who does your huſband rent the rooms of?—Of Mrs. Baffetti, and ſhe let them for an acquaintance.

What acquaintance?——I do not know his name.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. In reſpect to your obſervation of the door, ſuppoſe a perſon lives in my houſe with the ſtreet door open, and as to theſe two rooms, whether their not happening to communicate one with the other, otherwiſe than by a platform or the landing-place, may be conſidered as the manſion houſe: it is very clear this man and his wife inhabited there, and it communicates with no other lodgings or apartments. I remember a caſe tried in this Court, which was reſerved for the opinion of the Judges; I tried it. The owner of a houſe let all the houſe in lodgings, diſtinctly and ſeparate, if the owner lodges in any one part of the houſe, it ſhall be called and determined his houſe; and though there may be ten inmates, you ſhall not call it the manſion houſe of the lodger, but the manſion houſe of the owner; but in that caſe, all the houſe was let out in apartments, and there was an open door; there was a ſhop, and a parlour within the ſhop, and a cellar underneath, were let out in one bargain, at a given ſum of twelve pounds ten ſhillings; I have it in my memory; and the landlord the owner agreed with the leſſee to have the cellar to place lumber in, and he abated him thirty ſhillings a year out of the rent for the uſe of the cellar: The objection was taken that the burglary was in one of the apartments ſo let out, laid to be the manſion-houſe of the lodger. I reſerved the caſe for the opinion of the Judges, and they were of opinion, that as the owner did not at all inhabit there, though he had reſerved this cellar for the ſake of keeping furniture; yet he not occupying as an inhabitant any part of this houſe, that it was an exception out of the general rule. There are a number of inſtances in this town of apartments ſo let, and it might leave thoſe apartments open to be robbed, without the robber being liable to be convicted of a burglary; and all the Judges were unanimouſly of opinion, it was a burglary. Now apply that reaſoning to this caſe; this is the habitation and the domicile of the man and his wife, without any communication with any other inhabitants, and this door in the paſſage we will call the outward door to this domicile; then there are two inner doors if I may ſo ſay to this manſion houſe; whether it is a houſe, a habitation from the ground outwardly, or whether ſhops or warehouſes are underneath, or, as in the preſent caſe, ſtables, does not alter the caſe at all in my opinion.

Mr. Baron Perryn. My opinion concurs with my brother Gould's.

Mr. Juſtice Buller. You do not know who your landlord is?——No, I had it of Mrs. Baſſetti, but I know it was not her's.

Have you ever paid any rent?——I have not been in the lodging above three weeks.

What are you to pay?——I am to pay ſix pounds ten ſhillings a year.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, ſhe does not know her landlord.

Mr. Juſtice Buller. Was you acquainted with this place before you took theſe rooms?——No.

The door of the paſſage has never been kept locked ſince you went there?—No.

Is there any lock upon it?——I will not be ſure, I never ſaw any lock upon it.

Is there any bolt upon it?——I do not know, I never examined the door.

Where does that paſſage go to?—It leads to my ſtaircaſe.

Does it go any where elſe?——It leads down a little further to three ſtables.

Do the horſes go through that paſſage to thoſe ſtables?—Yes, down that paſſage.

Court. Were your rooms broke open at any time?——I left my lodgings between one and two in the day, a month laſt Monday.

How did you leave the door?—Locked.

Which door, you have two rooms?——Both doors were locked, I am poſitive of that; I returned about a quarter after nine in the evening, and found my left hand door open.

Was the door broke?——My key would lock and unlock it as well as it would when I went out, the door was wide open, but the lock and ſtaple were all right, there was no mark on this door, but on the other door there was the mark of a little chiſſel.

How was the bolt of the lock?—It was ſtanding out, I found my cheſt of drawers open, and gowns and petticoats and linen of all ſorts, table linen taken away, and two pair of ſheets.

Court. What was the value of them?—The ſheets ten ſhillings, I loſt three table cloths, five gowns, and three petticoats.

What was the value of them?——I cannot poſitively tell the worth of them, they were all good gowns.

Speak within compaſs?—Ten ſhillings a piece, the petticoats five ſhillings, and there were ſix guineas in gold, which were pinned up in a pair of thread ſtockings, and was put in the drawers.——

Was the drawer locked?—Yes; I was in great diſtreſs when I ſaw the things were gone; and I afterwards found a pair of ſheets, three ſhifts, a flannel coat, a pair of ſtockings, and ſix gowns.

Where were they found?—At the priſoner's lodgings.

Mr. Garrow. You was not preſent?—No.

How long has your huſband been coachman to Lady Harvey?—A good many years.

How long have the horſes ſtood at this Mews?——About five years.

You told my Lord you lodged at Mill-hill Mews?—Yes.

MARY MATTHEWS ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Barker, at the Red Lion, in Chandler's-ſtreet; I took the priſoner at the top of the one pair of ſtairs at Mr. Barker's on Tueſday night; I thought I heard ſomebody go up ſtairs; I know nothing of this robbery, I only took the priſoner.

Did you find any thing upon him?—No, he was not examined there.

MARY LAVER ſworn.

I live at No. 14, New-ſtreet-hill, between Shoe and Fetter-lane.

What are you?—I am a married woman, my huſband is a taylor, I know nothing at all of the robbery; the priſoner was a lodger of mine, they had been there a fortnight laſt Saturday; the wife took it.

How long before he came did his wife take it?—The day before.

Has he lived there during that time?—Yes.

What is it you come to ſpeak to?——I am only ſubpœned about the things being found in the room.

What things were found in the room?—I do not know.

Mr. Garrow. This lodging was taken by a woman?——The wife of that man.

Do you know that?——No.

Court. Did you ever hear him ſay whether ſhe was or was not his wife?—No.

Mr. Garrow. You ſay the woman paid you the rent?—Yes.

Court. Did he ſleep there conſtantly?—Yes, till the night he was taken.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

On the 18th of February, the priſoner was brought to Bow-ſtreet for another offence; Sir Sampſon aſked him where he lodged; he ſaid he did not chuſe to tell him; I ſaw a young woman which they ſaid was his wife.

Mr. Garrow. Do not tell us what they ſaid.——But I will tell you more, Sir, preſently; I watched her home; I went up ſtairs with her immediately, the firſt things I ſaw in the room, was the clothes the priſoner has on, and I found theſe picklock keys, and this ſaw, and a piſtol.

Court. Were they under lock and key?——No, they were not; and I found this linen.

Was that locked up or open?—In a box, I have had it ever ſince.

Mr. Garrow. Now Jealous, this man being aſked at Bow-ſtreet where he lived, did not chuſe to tell you?—He did not chuſe to tell Sir Sampſon.

And you followed a woman to her lodgings?—The woman told me herſelf———

What at it again, Jealous; why now you know the Court will not ſuffer you to tell us what that woman ſaid. You went to the room of this woman; what the woman either before or ſince has acknowledged is nothing to the purpoſe.—The priſoner acknowledged the things himſelf, and ſaid he found them, it was before the proſecutrix, there ſhe is, and I was by; that was at the Brown Bear, in Bow-ſtreet, on Monday laſt.

It is pretty ſingular you did not tell my Lord that before; you found ſome linen in a box, and you found a ſuit of clothes which you believe to be his clothes?—I am poſitive of it, he acknowledged the woman was his wife at Bow-ſtreet.

What did he ſay about it?—He ſaid ſhe was his wife, and he had been married to her a week.

(The Things depoſed to.)

Court to Proſecutrix. When had you ſeen the ſix guineas before?—About three days before, I had the key.

Had your huſband any key?——No.

Was the drawer broke open?——Yes.

Are you ſure you had that linen in your houſe the day the robbery was committed? Yes, I am poſitive it was in the drawers.

SAMUEL NAYLAND ſworn.

I was at Bow-ſtreet, and was ordered by Sir Sampſon Wright to go to the watch-houſe, to ſee if there was not ſomething there, as the perſon who ſtopped him ſaid he had a deal more money; I went up there, and there I found a dark lanthorn and an iron crow.

Court. How do you know he put them there?—I do not know, there was another man confined there.

Court. Have you any other reaſon to tell us they were his?——No.

Did you find any thing elſe beſides theſe things?——No.

——— ATKINS ſworn.

I am a ſervant to Mr. Newport, I attend at the office in Bow-ſtreet, this man was brought to the Brown-bear, in the morning of the 28th by a conſtable, and ſome more people, he was very dirtily dreſſed, and I ſaw this watch hanging down, and I ſaid to the conſtable, what have not you ſearched the man? I took him, and ſearched him, and found this watch, five guineas, and ſix ſhillings and ſixpence; he behaved himſelf very indifferently before Sir Sampſon, and Sir Sampſon mentioned that he thought he had more money about him, and I ſearched him again, and found twelve guineas and an half in his ſtocking feet: I have delivered the priſoner four guineas of it, at leaſt to the woman, the remainder I have.

Mr. Garrow. And ſo you came here to tell us, that this man finding himſelf in the hands of the mirmidons that attend at the Brown-bear, put his money into his ſhoes?——He was not in thoſe hands then.

Priſoner. My Lord, I do not chuſe to ſpeak without having my property returned, I have a brother, and I got eighteen guineas of him to go into buſineſs, they took the remainder of my money and my watch.

The Priſoner called three Witneſſes who gave him a good character.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, this indictment charges the priſoner with burglary, and I need not tell you that to conſtitute that crime, it is neceſſary that the place broke open be a dwelling houſe, and alſo that it be broken in the night-time: if it reſted merely on the queſtion as to time, it ſeems to me that it is not ſo made out, that the offence whatever it may amount to in point of law, can conſtitute the crime of burglary; becauſe this woman left her houſe between one and two o'clock at noon, and there is no account of theſe rooms till nine at night: then the next queſtion will be, whether any offence has been proved to be committed in a dwelling houſe; as to the law upon this evidence whether this is or is not a dwelling houſe, I would on this occaſion as well as in every other, very readily refer to my learned brother, who has ſtated his reaſons for being of opinion that it is a dwelling houſe: there is one fact which perhaps will be material in this caſe, and that fact, if found one way, would ſo far diſpoſe of the caſe, as not to leave it open to the queſtion of law at all, and that is, as to the ſituation that ſhe has deſcribed the paſſage to be in: but I ſhall leave it as a queſtion for further conſideration, taking it at this moment to be a dwelling houſe, and if it was ſo, though it is not a burglary, and though there might be ſome doubt as to the breaking; yet there is another offence, of which the priſoner may be guilty, which I muſt ſtate to you more particularly; and that is, that though he did not break open theſe rooms, yet if he ſtole property to the amount of forty ſhillings, it is a capital offence; taking it at this moment, as I ſaid before, to be a dwelling houſe: therefore I will ſtate the caſe to you now, conſidering it in that light only: there might be ſome queſtion as to the breaking, becauſe it appears by the proſecutrix's evidence, that when ſhe came back the door was not at all hurt, the door was open, the lock was not hurt, the bolt of the lock was ſtanding out, and yet the ſtaple had not been at all forced; therefore if it was material, you might have queſtioned whether ſhe had actually left both the doors ſafe, or whether ſhe might not have turned the lock, and not let it go into the haſp: but here the material queſtion is, whether you are ſatisfied the priſoner did take property to the amount of forty ſhillings out of theſe rooms: the proſecutrix ſwears very poſitively to the property, and that ſhe is ſure it was in her rooms, and that the ſix guineas were wrapped up in the ſtockings: now the ſix guineas put the value out of the queſtion: then the next queſtion is whether you are, or are not ſatisfied, that the priſoner was the perſon that committed it; that turns on the evidence of Mary Matthews, Mary Laver, and Charles Jealous; the firſt ſays the priſoner did not take theſe lodgings, they were taken by a woman who has always paid the rent, but the priſoner came there backwards and forwards for his meals in the day, and lodged there at night; Mary Laver confirms this, and then Jealous ſays that the priſoner, when theſe things were produced, acknowledged them, and ſaid he found them: if theſe things were acknowledged by the priſoner, it certainly does bring the poſſeſſion home to him, and he has given no evidence how he got poſſeſſion of them.

Jury to Jealous. What was it he acknowledged to be his?—The woman picked the things out before his face, and he immediately ſaid, theſe things are my property, I found them.

NOT GUILTY, of breaking and entering in the night time, but if the Judges ſhould be of opinion that the place where the Proſecutrix inhabited, was a dwelling houſe, then GUILTY, of ſtealing to the value ſworn to out of the dwelling houſe, Death. And if the Judges ſhould be if opinion it is not a dwelling houſe, then GUILTY of ſtealing, but not in the dwelling houſe,

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

293. WILLIAM SMITH, otherwiſe BIRNHAM, was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 25th of February laſt, one cloth coat, value 30s. one cloth waiſtcoat, value 10s. one pair of cloth breeches, value 10s. one pair of ſtone knee buckles, value 10s. the property of Robert Blake; and one other cloth coat, value 20s. one other cloth waiſtcoat, value 10s. and one ſilk waiſtcoat, value 10s. the property of Peter Blake, in the dwelling houſe of the ſaid Robert Blake.

ROBERT BLAKE ſworn.

I was out on Wedneſday night laſt, the 25th of February, from about a quarter after ſix to a quarter after ſeven, and a meſſenger came to let me know I was robbed, and that they had taken the priſoner; then when I got into the houſe with much ado, as there was a mob of people, I found the priſoner in cuſtody of two men; then McDonald, a conſtable, and another man, happened to come in, and laid hold of the man; he ſearched the priſoner, and took out of his pocket three guineas and eleven ſhillings, and ſome halfpence.

HANNAH EDWARDS ſworn.

Laſt Wedneſday night, as I was ſerving a cuſtomer in our ſhop, my maſter is a baker, and he has no other perſon to look after the houſe when he is from home but me, I thought that the ſixpence the woman was giving me was not a good one, and as I was diſputing with her about the ſixpence, I ſaw a man ſtand at the outward door of the ſtreet, and as my maſter had been robbed before, I ſuſpected that very likely ſomebody was got into my maſter's room; I went into the little parlour, and fetched the candle and the key of my maſter's room, which is always in the parlour; I went up to the room door, and juſt as I got up the door was open, and two men came out, of which the priſoner at the bar was one; this room was on the ground floor, the two men came cloſe upon me, juſt as I got to the door; I ſaid, gentlemen, pray what buſineſs have you in that room; and the priſoner ſaid, in what room, pray? I caught hold of the ſkirts of his coat and cried murder! he threw me down in the paſſage, I held him faſt by the coat.

Did any aſſiſtance come to you?—Not directly; I held him faſt till we got to the ſtreet door, and he cut me with ſomething over my arm, but what he had in his hand I did not ſee.

Was it much cut?——It was not much cut, but it was very much bruiſed.

Court. It could not be with his hand?——My gown was cut through, and my arm bruiſed very much in ſeveral places beſides, but I do not know that he ſtruck me any more than once; I went to catch hold of his ſide, and he got from me; he went to give me another puſh, and I could not hold him any longer, and I ran out after him and cried out murder! and a man croſſed the ſtreet and took him; I ſaw him ſtopped, he was never out of my ſight; he carried nothing out with him; when I returned, there was a ſuit of clothes of my maſter's packed up in the priſoner's bag, and another ſuit put out of the cheſt ready to put up, they had been in the drawer of the bureau.

Was the drawer locked or open?——It was not locked, he left his hat behind him, he was without a hat when he was taken, and the hat was in the room when I returned back.

Mr. Chetwood, Priſoner's Council. Are not there ſome lodgers in your houſe?——Yes, the whole is let out to lodgers, but only five rooms, it is a very large houſe.

Were all your lodgers at home?——I do not know.

Was he acquainted with any of them?—I cannot ſay.

The lodgers come in and out when they pleaſe at all proper hours?—Yes, till twelve at night.

You ſaw nothing at all in his hand?—No.

You had a light in your other hand, had not you?——Yes.

If he had had a hanger, or any inſtrument of that ſort, you muſt have ſeen it, I ſhould think?——Yes.

You was certainly terrified?——Yes, I was.

Was you ſure in the ſtreet it was the ſame perſon that was ſtopped?——Yes, and the other got off.

Court. Are you ſure you ſaw him come out of your maſter's room?——Yes.

MOSES LAMBETH ſworn.

I live at the Three Crowns, in Bridgman-ſtreet, and as I got out of my apartments, I heard a woman cry, murder! three times; I turned myſelf round, and ſaw the priſoner running up the ſtreet, ſomebody hallooed ſtop thief! I thought I would ſtop the firſt I ſhould come at, and I ſtopped this man, he ſaid do not ſtop me, I am running after the thief; ſays I, where is your hat; ſays he, a man run againſt me and hit it off; then a man came up to me, ſays he, damn your blood, what buſineſs have you with him, has he robbed you; ſays I, I will not releaſe him; the woman drew back, and ſaid for God's ſake, do not let him come near me, that is the man that ſtruck me and nobody elſe; I went in and took charge of the things; this parcel was not in the bag; but the other was in the bag; when I firſt took him into the room, ſays I, here is your hat; yes, ſays he, that is my hat; afterwards he ſaid it was not his; the things have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

(The Things depoſed to.)

What may the value of thoſe be?—Forty ſhillings.

What are thoſe others worth?—Forty ſhillings.

PRI-

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming along when I heard the cry out; the man run out, right over me; I have witneſſes.

The Priſoner called three witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

294. JOHN BURNE, (aged 13) WILLIAM JOHNSON, (aged 13) and JOSEPH TOZO, (aged 14) were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting James Butler, on the King's highway, on the 14th of February laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one hat, value two ſhillings, his property.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoners.

JAMES BUTLER ſworn.

I am ſixteen the 10th of next September; I am but ſmall of my age.

Court. What have you to ſay againſt theſe three boys?—I live in Wells-ſtreet, Roſemary-lane; I had but juſt come out of my own door, on the 14th of February, between ſeven and eight in the evening; I was coming up Lemon-ſtreet, and theſe three lads were walking on, and I paſſed them, and they called out Jack, Tom. and Will. one ſaid to another, come here, I want to ſpeak to you; they overtook me, and Burne ſaid, you buggar, your life or your money, he laid hold of my collar, and I had no money, and Tozo laid hold of my coat that was over my arm, which I was carrying to my uncle, and they made a ſnatch at it, but I held it ſo faſt they did not get it: Johnſon took away my hat, and put this hat on my head; I cried out murder! and they let go the coat and run away; Burn held up a candleſtick, bottom upwards, to cut me down with.

Court. What are you?—I live in Wells-ſtreet, my father works at the chalk walk, he did ſerve ſeven years to the ſea.

How long was it before theſe boys were taken up?——I cried ſtop thief! and Burn was ſtopped; a fat luſty gentleman ſtopped him, I cannot tell his name; the other two got off; they were taken the next morning.

Did you know them before?—No.

Are you ſure of them now?——Yes.

Who directed you what to do in this proſecution, my boy?——Nobody.

Whoſe advice did you act under?—Nobody's.

What juſtice of the peace did you apply to?——Mr. Staples.

Which of his runners took theſe boys up?——Mr. Platt and Mr. Mathews.

Did not they tell you what you were to do, and what you were to ſay?——No, Sir, the ſame words I have told you now, I told Mr. Staples.

Court. Are there any depoſitions returned.

(The depoſitions handed up.)

Did you ſwear poſitively to the other two boys before the juſtice?——Yes.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

Recollect yourſelf; did you ſay ſo at firſt at the juſtice's?—No, Sir, I ſaid I believed they were the two boys.

Court. That is well recollected; then what makes you ſure ſince?——I do not know.

Who has made you ſure ſince?——Nobody.

How come you to be ſurer at this diſtance of time than you were a fortnight ago?——I am partly ſure they are the two boys by their faces and their clothes.

Do you know the conſequences if you ſwear falſly upon your oath?—Yes.

What is it?——I ſhould ſuffer in this world, and in the next the torment of hell fire.

After theſe two boys were taken up, did you ſee them before they were examined at the juſtices?——Yes.

The officer ſhewed them to you, did not he?—No.

Who then?——Nobody, I knew them as ſoon as I came in at the door.

Did the officer tell you what reward there would be in convicting theſe boys?——No.

Do not you know now?——No.

Take care what you ſay; do not you know now what reward will be paid if theſe three boys are convicted?——I do not.

Do not you know there is a reward?—I know there is a reward, but I do not know what reward.

Who told you of it?——I heard of it by the people that lives in our houſe; Burn's mother ſaid there would be money for them, and that was what I wanted to do them for, or elſe I did not know it; I heard Mr. Staples ſay, (it was read over in a paper while I was there) it was ſomething about forty pounds; I do not know whether it was for my father being bound over or not.

Did not Mathews tell you ſo, nor Platt, nor Dorman?——No, Sir.

What did they ſay when they firſt came up to you, and firſt overtook you?—Burn ſaid, you buggar, your life or your money, he laid hold of my collar with his right hand, and held up the candleſtick with his left hand, bottom upwards.

You have recollected that; you did not mention that before?—No, Sir, I did not.

Have not you ſaid, that if you did convict theſe boys, you would get ſome money by them?——No.

Did you never hear your mother ſay ſo?——Never.

Who pays the expences of this proſecution?——I have no money, nor my mother has no money.

Who pays the expences of this indictment; which of the officers paid for it?—Mr. Mathews paid for it.

JOHN PLATT ſworn.

I belong to Mr. Staples's Office; I know this, that the boy came in, and nominates as this, that he had been robbed of his hat; he came in to the Rotation about half after ſeven this day fortnight at night.

Did any body come in with him?—There was a luſty gentleman came in with him, and had hold of the priſoner Burn; ſays he, I am not a going to let you go, do not you think it; the boy went up and had a hearing, and when he came down, I ſpoke to one of the runners, ſays I, Charles, I know Bandy, that is Johnſon.

How came you to know any thing of him?—Becauſe he nominated in this, that Johnſon was one of them.

What account did the proſecutor give of this?——He never ſaid a word to me.

Then how did you know what the charge was?——By the hearing it read in the Rotation.

Who did you hear it from?——From Butler, in the outer box; I never went nigh him, he never ſaid any thing at all to me.

Why are you ſo afraid that he ſhould be ſuppoſed to have ſaid any thing to you, when you was not aſked it?—The meaning was as this, this Burn ſays, ſays he, I ſhall be admitted an evidence, ſays he, it is a boy in a black coat.

What account did the boy Butler give of the robbery when he firſt came in?—Only what I heard in the box, I heard him ſay as this here, that it was Burne, Tozo, and Johnſon; and that Burne was the perſon that took and ſtopped him.

Upon your oath?——Yes.

Did he give an account what they did to him?——I did not ſee the affair.

I am not aſking you that, you know I am not; I am aſking you whether Butler gave an account of what they had done to him?—No further than nominating that it was them three that ſtopped him.

Did you tell him how he was to conduct this proſecution?——I never mentioned a word to him.

Who pays the expence of this proſecution?—Not me.

Do not you know who does?——We agreed to pay it between us, me, and Mathews, and Dorman.

How much are you to receive, if, upon your evidence, theſe three boys are convicted?—I do not ſuppoſe I have paid above three ſhillings in all.

Sir, do you mean that as an anſwer to my queſtion; are you deaf?—No.

Then how dare you anſwer in that manner; I aſk you, what are you to receive, if, upon your evidence, theſe three boys are convicted?—I do not deſire one farthing, I do not know how much I am entitled to.

What are you?—I work at my buſineſs, I am a carpenter.

Have you never taken up any body for a highway robbery, or a footpad robbery?—Never in my life.

And do not you know what you are entitled to upon the conviction of the priſoners?——Indeed, rightly, I do not.

Rightly! Sir; upon your oath do not you know?——I have heard it is forty pounds, but not that I want it.

Then three forties is one hundred and twenty pounds, if theſe three boys are convicted.

I am one of the beadles of Whitechapel, when we have priſoners locked up we are obliged to attend the juſtice; on the 15th of February, the Sunday morning, Mr. Platt brought in Johnſon as a charge into the watch-houſe; I was not at the Office the evening before.

You was not?—No, I was not; Burne ſaid there were Johnſon, and he, and Tozo, in company together in Lemon-ſtreet; that they ſtopped the boy with a candleſtick, and ſaid, you bloody dog, your life or your money.

Did not Burne ſay he was to be admitted an evidence?—He never told me ſo; Mr. Platt told me that he was to be admitted an evidence.

Then I ſhall not hear what he ſaid; do you know any thing more of it?——No.

Who pays the expence of this proſecution?—When we went to prefer the bill, I ſaid to him, have you got the money to pay for the bill; Mr. Johnſon ſaid, you muſt pay for the bill, you will have it paid you again; I told him, ſays I, it is hard for me to pay it if the boy is not here, but I muſt prefer a bill to ſave my own recognizance.

And how much are you to receive if theſe boys are convicted?—I do not do it for that, I am bound.

Did Mr. Johnſon tell you that you was to pay for the indictment?—Yes, Sir, upon my oath.

I adviſe you to be careful in that, I do not want to entrap you?——He told me to pay it and I ſhould be paid it again.

Upon your oath, Sir, did not you carry the indictment to him with the money?—He ſaid two ſhillings, ſays I to the boy have you two ſhillings, he ſaid, no, he had not got a farthing; then Mr. Johnſon ſaid, you pay it, and it will be returned to you again.

I belong to Mr. Staples's Office, when the little boy came in, I did not take much notice of him, ſeeing a luſty man had hold of his arm, and he deſired me to take charge of the middle priſoner, becauſe he could not ſtay.

What did the proſecutor ſay in your hearing?—I cannot recollect; we go through a little place that is dark, and I thought I heard him ſay here is ſomething dropped, or a candleſtick dropped; I had then the boy in charge, it was this candleſtick, he gave it to a man that draws beer at our houſe, and he gave it to me; I did not ſee it picked up.

What did Butler accuſe the boys of?—Of robbing him, he ſaid they had ſtopped him, and put the candleſtick up to his head, and ſaid your life or your money; then he told me that two of them ran under a gateway, and one ran over the way, and he ſaid he thought it was beſt to purſue where there where two, and then he ſhould have the chance of catching one.

Where was Platt then, was he by?——He might be in the tap-room for what I know.

Did the boy tell you the names of the boys that had ſtopped him?——Not to my knowledge he never told me, I knew it from Burne; after Burne was committed for further examination, he begged me to go up to the juſtice and get him admitted an evidence; Mr. Staples ſaid, he did not think he could do it, becauſe the proſecutor ſwore ſo poſitively to him; after he had had a hearing he told me their names.

Where is this luſty gentleman?——He went away directly.

Where does Burne live?——I do not know.

Where does Johnſon live?——I do not know, I heard that Tozo was to be found in a public houſe in Salt-petre Bank, I went there at night to look for him, but I did not find him, I do not know where any of them live.

Who adviſed the boy to proſecute them?——I do not know that any body adviſed him, I have not.

Who paid for this proſecution?——I do not know, I have not paid any thing, nor I ſhall pay nothing at all to any body.

Have you agreed to pay any part of the expence?——No.

Then it is not true that Matthews, and Platt, and you, agreed to pay the expence between you?—I never told them I would pay any thing, when the bill was preferred I was not there.

PRISONER BURNE'S DEFENCE.

I was running along very faſt, with that candleſtick from my aunt's to my mother's, and ſome man ſtopped me, I do not know him from Adam, he carried me to a Juſtice, I know the proſecutor, I have played with him many times, and know his father and mother to be very poor, and I know he does this for the money; his father and mother were obliged to pawn their things to find the indictment, theſe runners told him he would have the money for us, and they would maintain him; I know nothing of theſe other two boys; my mother keeps a chandler's ſhop in Bell-yard, Whitechapel.

Court to James Butler. Did you know Burne before this?—I never ſaw him before in my life to my knowledge.

——— BOWEN ſworn.

Court. Who brought this indictment to Mr. Johnſon?—Matthews, he paid me for the indictment.

Matthews. I paid Mr. Johnſon.

Bowen. I am very clear from my memory that this man abſolutely paid me the money, and ſeemed very eager to have the indictment, and there was not a ſyllable mentioned by Mr. Johnſon, I am well convinced, of its being allowed him again, not a jota at the time.

Matthews. I will prove my innocence in this; the inſtructions were brought I believe by Mr. Platt to Mr. Staples's office, and were given to Mr. Johnſon to draw up the bill of indictment, when I went in, I aſked if it was ready, and he went, and ſtruck the thing that they cut it with, ſays I, I will give you a bit of lead; Mr. Johnſon received the money, and aſked the boy for the money, and the boy ſaid, I have none.

Court to Bowen. Is that true?—I never heard any ſuch converſation ſave as to the lad.

JOHN BURNE,
WM. JOHNSON,   } NOT GUILTY.
JOSEPH TOZO,

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

295. JOHN STEVENS was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Elizabeth, the wife of John Frederick Hutchins, on the King's highway, on the 15th day of February, and putting her in fear and danger of her life, and feloniouſly taking from her perſon and againſt her will, one piece of ſilver coin of this realm called a half-crown, value 2s. 6d. ſeven copper halfpence, value 3d½. and one piece of ſilver coin of this realm called a ſhilling, value 1s. and one linen handkerchief, value 6d. the property of the ſaid John Frederick.

ELIZABETH HUTCHINS ſworn.

I was robbed on Saturday night, the 15th of February, between nine and ten coming with a pot of beer from the Ben Johnſon's-head, to a place called the World's End; the priſoner at the bar met me, I was alone, he took the pot of beer out of my hand and ſet it down; he ſaid nothing at that time; he then held a piſtol in his right-hand to me, and ſaid, damn you, you bitch, ſtop! he put his hand in my pocket, and took out a red linen handkerchief, a half-crown, a ſhilling, and ſeven halfpence; that was exactly the money I had in my pocket, except five farthings, he went off directly, rather in haſte to the Ben Johnſon's Head.

How long was he with you?—I ſuppoſe about two minutes, not longer.

Was it dark or moon-light?——A ſtar-light night, and the ſnow laid thick on the ground; I went directly home, and told my huſband I had been robbed, and he aſked me who I thought it was, whether I ſhould know the man again, I ſaid it was that man that lives over the way, John Stevens; I knew the priſoner before, and he knew me, but I fancy he did not know me then, as I was wrapped up for the tooth ach, or elſe I imagine he would not have robbed me.

Were you certain at that time that it was Stevens?——I am poſitive in it, knowing him before.

You had but an indifferent light to ſee him by?—It was a very light night, I was going to ſpeak to him and call him by his name, but ſeeing the piſtol frightened me, he was taken up on the Monday morning, my huſband went to the office and gave information.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. How was you dreſt?—With a round-eared cap on, and a clout pinned over my head.

How far was it from the priſoner's own door?—About twenty or thirty yards.

You had the appearance of a perſon that lived in the neighbourhood, for you was without a hat or cloak, and a pot of beer in your hand?—Yes.

What hat had he on?—A round hat, I did not ſpeak to him, he ſaid to me, damn you, you bitch, ſtop!

Not give me your money?—No.

How long had you been with this thing over your face?—About a week.

Then your neighbours had ſeen your face wrapped up in that manner?——I do not know that he knew it, I had not ſeen him all the week.

Why you live oppoſite to one another?—Yes.

JOHN ORANGE ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner on the information of Mr. Hutchins; when I went to him in his mother's apartments oppoſite the proſecutor's, I ſaid, Stevens, I want you, he ſaid directly, I ſuppoſe it is about that woman laſt night, yes, ſays I, it is, ſays he, I heard ſomething about it.

Mr. Sylveſter. She had applied to the watch-houſe, and made it public?——I do not know.

He was at home at his own houſe?——Yes.

To Proſecutrix. You had given in the priſoner's name then?—My huſband had.

Court. What is your huſband?——A caulker.

What is the priſoner?—I do not know whether he is any trade or no.

How long have you lived there?——I came there at Michaelmas, I believe the priſoner lived there before, after I came to lodge there, I knew him by going to the houſe.

Was there no quarrel between you and the priſoner, or your huſband and the priſoner?—No; I told my huſband immediately that it was John Stevens, before he went to the watch-houſe; the watch-houſe is at the top of Mile-end Green, Mr. Sutherland and two more men came to me on the Sunday night, and aſked me if I was ſure of the priſoner.

RICHARD GLENTON ſworn.

I am conſtable of the night, I remember the woman coming to me that night, it was a tall man, that I believe is a relation of the proſecutor's, and two men, (ſailors) with cutlaſſes, they deſcribed the perſon to be a tall thin man in a white coat.

Court. We cannot receive this evidence.—They wanted me to go ſearch the houſe, whether Jack Stevens was at home, they ſaid, if he was at home it muſt be him, they did not ſay enough to juſtify me to go to take up a man.

MARY JOHNSON ſworn.

I am the priſoner's mother, married to a ſecond huſband, I live at the World's End, my ſon lives with me, he is in no calling.

Where was he on the Sunday night before he was taken up?—With me all day, he ſpent the evening with me till nine o'clock, then I have a little boy, a grand child and my daughter; we went to bed, and left him half undreſſed; if he had gone out, I could not be off hearing him, I left him in the room where he ſleeps, I never ſhut my eyes till paſt eleven, and I heard my ſon in the room divers of times, he kept coughing continually.

MARIA STEVENS ſworn.

I live with my mother, we went to bed juſt after the clock went nine, my brother had not been out that afternoon, not once.

Did you hear him after you went to bed?—Yes, till the watchman came ten and half paſt ten, there is not a window or door in the houſe, but makes ſuch a noiſe, he could not go out without being heard.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

296. RICHARD STEVENS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of James Gameſon, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 23d of February laſt, with intent the goods and chattles of the ſaid James, in the ſaid dwelling houſe, burglariouſly to ſteal.

ELIZABETH GAMESON ſworn.

I went out of my houſe on Monday afternoon laſt, about four o'clock, and double locked my parlour door, I left nobody at home, I ſhut to the ſtreet door, which has a ſpring lock, I am quite ſure that the lock of that ſtreet door catched, for I heard it catch, there is no other door to the houſe but the front door, the ſaſhes were all ſhut and faſtened, I returned about ſeven o'clock in the evening, and met my huſband taking the priſoner to Whitechapel.

Mr. Keys, Priſoner's Council. You went out about four?—Yes.

Have you any lodgers?—Yes, they went with me.

How many lodgers have you?—Only one family.

Did all that family go with you?—Yes, all but the lodger's huſband.

Where was he?—He was out.

How do you know that?—I am ſure of it, he is an exciſe-man, and goes upon duty at certain hours.

Court. What room does your lodgers lodge in?—Up one pair of ſtairs.

Were you up in that room ſhortly before you went out?—Yes.

Was he there?—No.

Mr. Keys. You did not puſh againſt the door to know whether it was locked?—No, I heard it latch.

That is you heard a noiſe?—I know the noiſe of the ſtaple of the door.

It might be the ſtaple ſtriking againſt the door?—By frequently ſhutting the door, I can tell partly when the lock catches.

Do you often pull that door after you?—Very often.

Sometimes you have been miſtaken?—No, Sir, never to my knowledge.

Have the lodgers of the houſe a key to the ſtreet door?—Yes.

JAMES GAMESON ſworn.

I went out after dinner to my duty, about a quarter before one o'clock, I left my wife at home, I returned at ſix, when I came home I knocked at the door, and waited ſometime, I knocked again very hard, nobody anſwered me, then I went to the window, I knocked ſeveral times, then I went over the way to the public houſe, and had a pint of beer, and I ſmoaked a pipe, in about a quarter of an hour, a little before ſeven, I ſaw a light in the houſe through the glaſs that is over the door, I went over, and as ſoon as I knocked at the door, out ruſhed two men, I heard them open the door, I thought it was my wife, as ſoon as it was opened, out comes a man in a light coloured coat, and he ſaid come along Jem; I was ſtagnated, and I looked at him, and ſaid, you raſcal, what do you want there; he made no anſwer, but immediately run away, I turned my head round, and ſaw another man coming out, and I catched at him, and catched hold of this bag, which he let go, and he run away, I called out, thieves! thieves! when I turned my head again, the other man was in dark coloured clothes, which I could not diſtinctly ſee; I purſued, I loſt him, and ſome of my neighbours had picked up an iron crow by the time I returned, and they had taken the priſoner; one Robinſon took him, who is here.

THOMAS ROBINSON ſworn.

I was coming down Chamber's-ſtreet, and juſt as I got to Mr. Gameſon's door, I heard him cry out ſeveral times, thieves! thieves! the priſoner came out of the door, and I followed him, and a man ſtopped him, and he fell down.

Did you ſee the priſoner come out of the door?—Yes, I did, another perſon came out with this man, and Mr. Gameſon run after him, it was all in a moment's time, I followed this man, he was never out of my ſight.

Mr. Keys. When Mr. Gameſon called out thieves you was walking along?——I was juſt going to croſs, the firſt thing I ſaw was the proſecutor at the door, I did not take any notice at all; next I ſaw a man come out in a light coat, and the other came out in a half a minute's time.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, my witneſſes are gone.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

297. MICHAEL PATERSON was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting Thomas Claridge on the King's highway, on the 10th of January laſt, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one half guinea, value 10s. 6d. and 6d. in money, his property.

THOMAS CLARRIDGE ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Peat, Council for the Proſecution.

On Thurſday the 13th of January laſt, I was robbed in Holywell-ſtreet, about twelve, I had another perſon with me, I met with a woman that had ſlipped; I ſtopped her from falling; I went to ſee her home to New Court, where ſhe lives; ſtopping there, there came up three fellows and uſed a great deal of abuſive language to the woman; ſhe ſaid to me, Sir, I wiſh you a good night, I am obliged to you; I ſaid, I will ſee you to your own door; I ſaw her in; when I came out of the court again, two fellows out of the three ſeized me by the collar, they caught faſt hold of me, and ſaid, damn your eyes, you will pay for this; I ſaid, you fools, do you think I do not know you; the one ſays to the other, Mich. hold him faſt, if he ſtirs a ſtep, or ſpeaks another word, cut his bloody liver out; then the priſoner ſaid, your money; I gave him half a guinea and ſixpence, they pulled me about very much.

Court. Did they demand the money of you before you parted with it?—Yes; as ſoon as I gave them the money, they let go my collar and bid me go to the bottom of the court, which they ſaid was my way out; now that was no way out, and they told me if I came up to the top of the court, they would cut my bloody head off, and another ſaid he would murder me.

Court. Was the priſoner one of thoſe that made uſe of theſe expreſſions?—Yes; there was no way out at the bottom of the court, and I came out to the top again; I did not ſee them at all; I went down Holywell-lane; I live in New Nicol-ſtreet, Shadwell; going down Holywell-lane, the two fellows were under King John's Court, the other was oppoſite the way; they ſtrove to catch me again, they did not catch me; after I had got paſt them, I knew one of them that went by the nick-name of Guinea-pig, that was the priſoner; I ſaid Guinea-pig, you ſhall pay for this to-morrow; I have known the priſoner this two years, he lodged next door to me part of the time; they then threw brick-bats at me as hard as they could, and I called watch! but none came; then I went home, and I ſaw no more of them that night; but the next day, abut two o'clock, I apprehended the priſoner; I then ſent a man to ſee for an officer, and he brought Mr. Wade; after he was at Mr. Wilmot's, he told me, if in caſe he was guilty of a fault the night before, he hoped I would forgive him; then he ſaid, conſider my wife and child.

Court. Had you made uſe of any promiſes to induce the man?—I never ſaid a word to the man.

Did you threaten him?——No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When I was locked up at Mr. Wilmot's, the proſecutor ſent two men to me, and they gave me three or four pints of purl, and aſked me after if I would have any gin, I ſaid I had had enough; then ſays one of them, are not you a fooliſh fellow to go to rob a man that knows you, and he ſaid to me tell the truth, I am a particular acquaintance of the proſecutor's, and I will perſuade him to make it up.

Court. The proſecutor ſays you ſaid at Wilmot's, that if you was guilty of a fault the night before, you hoped he would forgive you, and conſider your wife and child?

Priſoner. He has made that out of his own head.

JOHN WILKES ſworn.

I was at the Duke of Northumberland's arms, next door to Juſtice Wilmot's, on Saturday the 17th of January, about two in the afternoon; I went in and aſked what was the matter, ſome of the people in the houſe ſaid, a young man is going to be examined for robbing Mr. Clarridge; I went down to ſee him; I ſaid to him, if I was a dying man, ſays I, young man, you have been guilty of a very bad action, are you the man that robbed Mr. Clarridge? he ſaid, yes.

Court. Had you given him any liquor before this?—My Lord, as I am here alive, I never gave him a drop of liquor in the days of my life.

Was he ſober?——Yes; I ſaid I am acquainted with Mr. Clarridge, he is a very civil man; ſays he, do you know him; I ſaid, yes; he ſaid, then for God's ſake, and cried very much, ſpeak to him to make the matter up; I told him, I would let Mr. Clarridge know what he ſaid; ſays he, my mother is over the way, who will make up the eleven ſhillings; he ſaid, I had the ſixpence, but I never had the half guinea.

Had you made him any promiſe before this, to ſhew him any favour that he ſhould not be proſecuted?—None in the world.

Had you told him it would be better for him?—No, I never gave him any liquor, nor ſaw any go to him; I told Mr. Clarridge, and he told Juſtice Wilmot that he had ſpoke to ſomebody concerning the matter, who was at the Court, or near it, and he ſaid it was Mr. Wilkes the broker; I waited upon him, and I told him as I have related now; then he bound me over as an evidence; as for drinking with him, or ever ſeeing him drink, I never did all the days of my life.

Court. Do you poſitively take upon you, Sir, to ſay that this priſoner had not any liquor in your company?—Yes, I had given him none.

How came you to accoſt him at the outſet, with ſaying, you have done a very bad thing?——Becauſe I knew the proſecutor.

Court. He could not be guilty before any examination.

Priſoner. That man came out three or four times to me, and you know you ſaid I had better tell the truth, and you would make it up for me, without going to gaol at all; ſays you, you know very well you had ſixpence, tell the truth, and another man that was along with you at the ſame time, kept bringing me out a pint of purl, and had brought me purl, and wanted to force me to drink.

Court. Did ſuch a converſation paſs?—Not the leaſt in the world, if I was a dying man.

Court. It ſeems very unnatural that the priſoner, who knew nothing at all of you, ſhould expoſe himſelf; what reaſon was there for your informing the priſoner that you was an acquaintance of Mr. Clarridge's?—I never ſaid I would make it up for him, I ſaid I would tell Mr. Clarridge.

ELIZABETH WEBLEY ſworn.

Examined by Mrs. Peat.

Where do you live?——In New Court, Holywell-lane, Mr. Clarridge ſaw me home on the 13th of February laſt, to the end of the court, near twelve at night; at the end of the court three men came up, and gave me a deal of ill language; one of the men went up the paſſage with a pretence to call ſome name, but what name I cannot tell; I wiſhed the gentleman a good night, and thanked him for his civility; he ſaw me in doors, and I heard no more.

Priſoner. I am really innocent, he takes falſe oaths, I was in bed at the ſame time, about eleven that night.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any witneſſes to prove you was in bed at that hour?

Priſoner. No other than my wife, we live in a little apartment by ourſelves.

Have you any witneſſes to your character?——Yes.

SARAH SIMKINS ſworn.

I make childrens pumps; I have known the priſoner upwards of ſix years, I know him to work hard for his living, and know no otherwiſe.

EDMUND WADE ſworn.

I am an officer of juſtice, I have known him ten years, he goes about the ſtreets with greens; I never knew nor heard any harm of him before.

Jury to Mrs. Webley. Have you any knowledge of the priſoner being one of the perſons that inſulted you?—I do not know any one of them.

Did you know any thing of the priſoner before this time?——No.

Was there a perſon like him that was one of the three?—I do not know.

Court. It ſeems to me very extraordinary that they ſhould make that ſecond attack on him, after they had taken his property.

Jury to Clarridge. What buſineſs are you?—I am a ſhoemaker, I had been into the Borough with ſome ſhoes.

Was it a light night, or dark?—Rather light than dark.

Was there any lamps any way near?——Not far off, I could ſee the men perfectly well.

Jury. With which hand did he collar you?——I cannot be perfect.

Why he has but one hand?—He was on the right-hand ſide.

Priſoner. I am lame of one ſide.

Jury. There was time enough to call the watchman.

Court to Clarridge. It ſeems to me to be pretty extraordinary, that you ſhould, under ſuch circumſtances, diſcover that you knew any one of them; why, you might have been murdered?—I was left for dead about two years ago; I did not think they meant to meddle with me.

Jury to Mrs. Webley. Did Mr. Clarridge appear in liquor?——Quite ſober.

How near were the three men to you when they abuſed you?—They came quite cloſe to us.

If you had known the priſoner at the bar at any other time, you would have known him at that time?——I did not take any notice, I did not think they would offer to ſtop the gentleman.

Court. If the purpoſe of theſe three men was robbery, they would have had a much better booty, by attacking them both together.

Jury. The three men had an opportunity of robbing you both if they choſe it?——Yes.

There was nobody there to prevent it?—No.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

298. JOHN PENNY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th of February, four linen ſheets, value 10s. three linen pillow-caſes, value 3s. ten damaſk table cloths, value 5l. eight linen ſhirts, value 4l. ſix linen ſtocks, value 6s. four cotton waiſtcoats, value 40s. a pair of cotton drawers, value 1s. two linen caps, value 2s. a thread nightcap, value 1s. three linen handkerchiefs, value 7s. two ſilk handkerchiefs, value 4s. one dimity petticoat, value 5s. three ſhifts, value 15s. one pair of dimity pockets, value 2s. fifteen towels, value 12s. two muſlin aprons, value 7s. one muſlin cap, value 1s. four muſlin jams, value 4s. one muſlin frock, value 1s. two cotton petticoats, value 2s. one flannel petticoat, value 2s. three yards of flannel, value 3s. two yards and a half of cotton, value 2s. two pair of cotton ſtockings, value 2s. and 5 linen pin-cloths, value 2s. the property of Jenkin Jones, Eſq.

The Witneſſes examined apart, by deſire of Mr. Garrow, the Priſoner's Council, except Mr. Jones, the Proſecutor.

ELIZABETH MASON ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Proſecution.

I am ſervant to Mr. Jones, his houſe is in Old-ſtreet; I remember this box being packed up, containing the things mentioned in the indictment; the cheſt was locked, I have one key, and the laundry maid has another; I ſaw all theſe things put into the cheſt; it is a large ſquare box.

WILLIAM SHORTLING ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Jones, I drove his waggon the 9th of February; I took the cheſt of the ſervant, tied faſt with a rope, and put it into the waggon, and ſet off to Moulſey; going over Blackfriars-bridge, a man aſked me if I had not loſt ſomething; I looked at the waggon, and the box was gone; then we went back, this man and me.

Court. Is that man here?——I do not know, I do not know his name; we went back together to ſee after this box, but did not find it; then I went to look at the waggon again, and the rope was cut in two parts.

Mr. Garrow, Council for the Priſoner. This was a very large trunk?——Yes.

You never ſaw it ſince?—No.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Proſecution. Could one man carry it?——No.

What o'clock was it?—Between eight and nine in the evening.

Mr. Garrow. Then it was pretty dark, was not it?——Yes, and it ſnowed very faſt.

Continuation of the Trial of John Penny.

—— PEARCE ſworn.

I went with a ſearch warrant to ſearch this man's houſe on the 10th of February, between ſeven and eight that night, he lives in Long's-buildings, White-croſs-ſtreet; when I came there, we got entrance into the houſe, and the priſoner and his wife were at ſupper; we told them our buſineſs, their apartment conſiſts of one room, parted off for a bed-place; we found ſeveral things in the bed room, which were handed out to the high conſtable, from the officer who was in the bed room; I prevented the priſoner from going out; a child's frock was found, and the priſoner ſaid, do not take that, that is my child's frock, but it was taken and tied up in a handkerchief, and has been in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Boddington the high conſtable ever ſince; we took the priſoner and the things to Mr. Jones's houſe, and the firſt thing that caught his eye was this very frock; Mr. Jones owned it, and Mrs. Jones, and the houſekeeper; we took the priſoner to New Priſon.

Mr. Garrow. Where do you live?——Windmill-hill Moorfields.

That is not in the neighbourhood of Roſemary-lane?—No.

Is it not that what is called Rag-fair?—Yes.

What do people do there?——Buy and ſell all kinds of wearing apparel.

You ſaw the wife of this man?——Yes, ſhe was very big with child, and compaſſion led us not to take her on that ſcore.

—— BODDINGTON ſworn.

I am high conſtable of Finſbury diviſion, I went with this ſearch warrant to the priſoner's houſe; this is the property I found in the houſe where Penny was, it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; here is a child's frock, a ſhirt, a petticoat, and pockets, that were all ſworn to the next day, on examination at the Rotation Office.

Mr. Garrow. I ſuppoſe the apartments conſiſted of one room, with the bed parted off?—Yes.

Did you find any thing concealed in cupboards and cloſets?—No.

Did you find any trunk there?——No large trunk.

In the courſe of your office as high conſtable, perhaps you ſometimes viſit Rag-fair?—No, Sir, I do not belong to that diviſion.

JENKIN JONES, Eſq; ſworn.

I have a town houſe in Old-ſtreet, and I have a country houſe at Moulſey; this cheſt I underſtood contained a great quantity of wearing apparel.

To what amount ?—If new, I ſuppoſe ſeventy or eighty pounds, as it is in wear, I ſuppoſe about forty pounds; I ſelected this particularly from a great deal of other, it was confirmed by my wife and ſervant, the ſhirt I know by a ſingular circumſtance, it had a particular mark, which being diſcoloured, I deſired the high-conſtable to get it waſhed out.

Mr. Garrow. You could not then identify it by an initial of a name only that mark ?—No.

The Jury cannot judge of that mark, becauſe it is waſhed out: of courſe gentlemen of your figure have vaſt quantities of linen for yourſelf, and the reſt of your family, which, when they are worn, paſs into the hands of ſervants ?——Clearly ſo.

As to the frock you cannot identify it particularly ?——Not particularly.

Mr. Sylveſter. When had you ſeen that ſhirt before, Sir ?——I muſt have worn it in the courſe of that week, either on the Thurſday or the Friday, from that very circumſtance of that mark.

Look at that ſhirt and theſe things ?—There was an J. and a figure of twelve upon it, there is the J. to be ſeen, the twelve is out.

MARY WAKEFIELD ſworn.

I know the pockets to be Mrs. Jones's, there is an oilet hole to tye them by, and this petticoat has loops to tye it to the child's ſtays, and this frock is a very particular made one, it is gathered at the top, and the body is looſe and ties on.

Jury. But ſeveral jams are made in the ſame manner ?——Yes, but they are generally open at top, I am ſure they are Mrs. Jones's.

Mr. Sylveſter. Have you the leaſt doubt ?—No.

Mr. Garrow. Are the oilet holes in the pocket and the loops of the petticoat ſo particular that you can ſwear to them ?—To the beſt of my knowledge I believe them to be my work, and her property.

As to the loops on the petticoat, I fancy there is nothing ſo common ?—Moſt people ſew them to ſtays.

Yes, but many people wear loops beſides Mrs. Jones's family, as to the jam I ſhall truſt that obſervation to the Jury; can you venture to ſay that theſe identical things were put up in the trunk ?—Yes.

Why, there are in the family duplicates without number of all their things ?——I make one liſt and ſend with the clothes, and keep another by me.

So I thought, then you ſwear by your liſt, but whether theſe identical things or others of Mrs. Jones's, were in the box, you do not know; now do you affect to ſwear that theſe identical things were in the box ?—I firmly believe in my own mind that theſe are the things.

What is the ground of your belief, and by what do you diſtinguiſh them ?—From the make and the marks.

If Mr. Jones has ten dozen of ſhirts, how are you ſure that that indentical ſhirt was put up by you in the box; that you put up a number of ſhirts, I can eaſily conceive, but can you ſwear that you put up that identical ſhirt and theſe other identical pieces of linen ?—By the loops, and by the oilet holes, I firmly believe they are the things.

Court. This linen was ſent from Old-ſtreet down to Moulſey by water ?—Yes.

Did you ſend all your maſter's dirty ſhirts ?—Yes.

How often do you ſend ?—Every week.

Mr. Garrow. Can you take upon yourſelf to ſay that that is one of the ſhirts that were ſent that week ?—I firmly believe it to be one.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. She is ſure that it is Mr. Jones's ſhirt, whether it was in that box, or at any other time it is found in the poſſeſſion of the priſoner.

Mr. Sylveſter. Had your maſter loſt any linen the week before ?—No.

Mr. Garrow. How do you know what went to Moulſey ?—Becauſe they were returned ſafe to me clean.

——— ſworn.

I am nurſery-maid to Mrs. Jones.

Look at that jam ?—The greateſt part of it I made myſelf, this piece underneath that tuck I put to it, it has not been waſhed ſince, and there was new edging about it.

JOHN LUCY ſworn.

I am a conſtable of St. James's, Clerkenwell, I found ſome things in a bed room in Long's buildings, White-croſs-ſtreet, in a foul clothes bag at the head of the bed, I cannot ſay whether theſe are the things, they have been out of my cuſtody; Mr. Bodington was with me.

Mr. Garrow. Did you find any thing concealed ?——No.

To Mr. Bodington. To whom did you deliver that ſhirt to be waſhed ?—To my ſervant-maid in my own houſe, I was in the houſe on laſt Sunday when it was done, I ſaw it waſhed, becauſe it ſhould not go out of my cuſtody.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, I am very much incenſed againſt the Jury, in hopes they will not paſs any encomiums on my paſt conduct.

Court. What does he ſay.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, I believe he means that he has confidence in the clemency of the Jury.

MARY BURN ſworn.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know the priſoner ?—Yes.

You and he lived, I believe, in the ſame apartment at the time he was apprehended ?—Yes.

You was there when the officers came ?—Yes.

Did you ſee the linen they carried away with them ?—Yes.

Can you give the Court any account of that linen or any part of it ?—I bought a parcel of child-bed-linen, and along with it, I bought this muſlin frock, and a man's ſhirt, and a pair of dirty pockets.

Where did you buy them ?——In Monmouth-ſtreet, Rag-fair; I carried them home all wrapped up together, I told the conſtable then, that I bought them that ſame afternoon.

Croſs-examined by Mr. Silveſter.

When you get through Monmouth-ſtreet then Rag-fair begins ?—Rag-fair joins to the Minories; I thought it was Monmouth-ſtreet.

Who did you buy them of ?—A woman.

Then you heard Mr. Penny ſay that is my child's frock ?—No, I did not, I aſked for a few of the child-bed-linen for fear any thing ſhould happen to me, as I was ſo near my time.

Are you his wife ?—I live with him in that capacity.

Oh ! in that capacity, how long pray ?—Upwards of three years.

Mr. Garrow. He has ſome children, I believe ?—Yes, Sir, I have two.

JOSEPH DUNBAR ſworn.

I am a jeweller, I know the priſoner, he works for me.

How long ?—About nine or ten months, or rather better, ever ſince laſt March.

What character has he deſerved at your hands ?—A very good one, he has had it much in his power to rob me, and I have found him juſt and honeſt.

Do you remember being lately in his company, if you do, you will tell the Court where it was ?—He was with me from between five and ſix o'clock in the evening till near ten, we were at No. 3, Naked-boy-court, Ludgate-hill; that is my own houſe, I have a houſe alſo in Butcher-row, No. 11, which he worked at.

Mr. Sylveſter. What are you, Mr Dunbar ?—A jeweller, Mr. Sylveſter.

Where do you live ?——No. 3, Naked-boy-court, Ludgate-hill.

How long have known the priſoner ?—About nine, ten, or eleven months, ever ſince laſt March.

You did not know him before March ?——No.

You knew nothing at all of him before then ?—I never knew him intimately.

What you was not with him before March ?——No.

No where ?——No.

Do you know where he was ?—No, not particularly.

But I want to know particularly ?——Upon my word I do not know particularly.

You ſeem to be ſhuffling ?——I do not know.

Upon your oath you never heard where he was ?——That is a different thing, I have heard he was fined for a miſdemeanor, that I do not know upon my oath.

Do not you know any thing more of him? —I do not know any thing elſe upon my oath.

Then your acquaintance only commenced in March ?—He worked for me in March.

But where he was before you do not know, where did he come from ?——I do not know otherwiſe than I have heard, I declare it to you as an honeſt man, however you ſuſpect it otherwiſe.

You yourſelf I underſtand have been in diſagreeable circumſtances ?——Yes, and you know I was innocent, and I call ſomebody to witneſs, ſuperior to you and me, that is, my God, that I was innocent.

But ſince that look round, and ſee if you do not ſee any gentleman that you know, do you know that worthy Alderman ?——Yes.

Was you ever before this gentleman ?—This is the gentleman that you alluded to.

No, that is another buſineſs, now as the Court are diſpoſed to laugh, I ſhall be glad if you would explain it ?—The charge that was before that gentleman you know, becauſe I gave you a fee for your kind aſſiſtance, which you received for your honeſt ingenuity.

Court to Dunbar. You ſay Sir, you have heard of this man being fined for a miſdemeanor ?——Yes.

What was the fine ?—Something about a twelvemonth.

The queſtion is, whether you have not heard of ſomewhat happening to the priſoner beſides the fine ?——Nothing upon my oath.

Did you never hear that he was in priſon? ——Fined, and confined, that was what I meant by the word fined.

Mr. Sylveſter. It was from this Court? ——That I do not know.

Court. Had you heard he was in priſon at the time you employed him in buſineſs or after ?——Sometime after.

Did you after you had heard that, make any enquiry into the truth of it ?——No, only I have very carefully watched over him, and found him very faithful, I enquired no further than from the general report of people; I found him very faithful in his buſineſs to me.

What was the general report ?——That he had been fined and confined here for ſome offence, but I did not hear what.

Mr. Sylveſter. Not for ſtealing nutmegs? ——I never heard of it till now.

Do you know the hulks ?——Yes.

Was the priſoner never there ?—I never heard of it in my life.

DAVID MOFFATT ſworn.

I have known the priſoner about ten months.

What has been his general character during ten months ?——I am a carpenter myſelf, I have done ſome jobs for him.

As far as his general reputation reached you, was he an honeſt man ?——I heard no report of his character before this, I never knew him before, I was recommended to him.

John Lucy. I ſpeak in juſtice to the priſoner, he never owned the jam, but the woman downed on her knees, and begged to have the jam out of the bundle, ſhe ſaid, ſhe bought it in Rag-fair that morning, and the man never acknowledged a word of it at that time upon my oath; I think it no more than juſtice to mention.

——— PEARCE ſworn.

I am upon my oath as well as that officer, he was buſily employed in taking the things out of the inner room, and could hear every word, I whiſpered to Mr. Bodington at the ſame time, and ſaid, I inſiſt on that jam being taken, the priſoner ſaid do not take that, that is my child's frock, theſe were the very words.

Court to Pearce. Did you ſee the woman fall on her knees?——The priſoner at the bar begged once or twice not to take the frock, becauſe it was the child's, and Mr. Bodington I belive, made anſwer to the woman, good woman, be eaſy.

Court to Bodington. How was this?——I do not know that the man did aſk for the frock, or ſay it was his frock, the woman begged I would deliver the frock to her.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the Firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr Juſtice GOULD.

299. JOHN POND was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 22d day of March, 1783, two deal planks, value 6s. three wooden putlocks, value 1s. and part of the ſhaft of a cart, value 4d. the property of William Beresford.

Mr. Scott of Council for the Proſecution, thus opened the caſe.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, to favour me in ſupport of this proſecution. The original proſecutor in this indictment, which was preferred ever ſince July ſeſſions laſt, is lately dead, but whilſt living, he had retired from trade, and had a houſe at Paddington; he had occaſion it ſeems to repair a wall, that was in his garden, and upon that account, as he had at ſundry other times, both in the ſummer and winter; he employed this man, John Pond, in repairing the wall; all the ſcaffold and the ſcaffolding boards, and every thing elſe that belonged to this buſineſs, were the property of Mr. Beresford, the proſecutor, he provided all theſe things: the work however, was no ſooner compleated but he miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment; indeed Mr. Beresford had from time to time miſſed many things; but Mr. J. Pond was one of the laſt men in the world that he had any ſuſpicion of: after this work was finiſhed, it ſeemed that there was a part of the paling of Mr. Beresford's garden, that was not repaired, and the premiſes of the priſoner immediately joining to thoſe of the proſecutor, when the carpenter came to open the paling, he immediately opened into a ſhed of the priſoner's, and in that ſhed all theſe things were found. Mr. Beresford was informed of it, and was a good deal ſurprized, but being a man of a very humane diſpoſition, I take it for granted, no proſecution would have been heard of, as the things were returned to Mr. Beresford, there being no doubt of the property: but Mr. Pond a little time after, had the aſſurance to bring an action againſt Mr. Beresford and his ſon, and a carpenter, for the ſeveral things ſtated in the firſt indictment; a great ſpace of time has elapſed between that indictment and the preſent time, and the conduct of Mr. Pond has been putting off this matter from time to time; and with reſpect to this action, which was the very reaſon, why the Court did not try this cauſe before, you will find that action has never been taken the leaſt notice of whatever.

Mr. Chetwood, Priſoner's Council. The man had not money enough to go on with the action, and it was non-proſſed, and he is now a priſoner for coſts; it is a moſt wicked proſecution.

Mr. Scott. I opened the matter ſome ſeſſions ago before your Lordſhip, and you was then againſt our going into the buſineſs till the action was tried.

Mr. Chetwood. They never took him before a magiſtrate, nor never got a warrant againſt him.

WILLIAM BERESFORD ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Scott.

You are the ſon of William Beresford, deceaſed?—I am.

Do you know any thing of your father having loſt the things mentioned in the indictment?——Yes, the priſoner follows the trade of a bricklayer; my father had employed him a number of times; about the 22d of March laſt, the laſt piece of buſineſs the priſoner did, was repairing a houſe, and the garden wall of that houſe was found to be in a very ruinous ſtate, it was taken down ſeveral courſes, and to repair it compleatly, a ſcaffold was neceſſary, which was erected; after the wall was repaired the ſcaffold was taken away; there had been a number of things taken off the premiſes, and we could not diſcover who the thief was; a fence in my father's garden was in a ruinous ſtate, which was taken down, in order to ſet up a new one; this fence adjoined to a little cottage that was occupied by the priſoner, and when the fence was taken down, my father ſent for me; I went over a plank from my father's garden to the priſoner's premiſes, and in the apartment I mentioned before, which was a room in the cottage which the priſoner occupied, I diſcovered two fourteen feet two inch yellow deals; going a little farther on the priſoner's premiſes, in a ſhed belonging to the priſoner, I there diſcovered a number of putlocks, they are a kind of flooring joiſts, there were three that I was very particular in, in which there had been burnt marks, they were bought of Mr. Richard, or Robert Brittain, of Chelſea, I believe he was a bricklayer; the priſoner took down the ſcaffolding that I purchaſed there; the burnt mark was endeavoured to be eraſed out, but was not done ſo effectually but that it is poſſible to be ſeen now; I put a private mark on them, and they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

Can you identify at all the deals?——I think there is not a doubt, I can tell them by the wood, the grain of theſe planks was ſo exceedingly hard, that the ſaw jagged every time it cut, and would not make a clear cut; there was alſo found in the ſame ſhed with the putlocks, a ſhaft of a cart, piled up, ready for buſineſs, as if it was the priſoner's property; I knew we had the fellow to it on my father's premiſes, and it is here to produce.

Court. Was it a broken ſhaft?—No, it was ſawed off.

Mr. Chetwood, Priſoner's Council. What kind of a ſhed was this, was it an open ſhed?——It was very near incloſed.

The man lived next door?——Yes.

This was his ſhed?——Yes.

The ſhed was in the garden?——Yes.

The garden was not fenced in, otherwiſe than by paling?—No.

Was you there when the boards were taken away from this man's premiſes?—I was.

Did not he claim them?—No, his wife did, ſhe ſaid you take them away without any authority.

You carried them away?——They were taken away, I did not carry them.

By your order?——By my father's order.

Did you go before any magiſtrate?—No.

How long was it afterwards before you, your father, and the carpenter, were ſerved with copies of writs?——On the 31ſt of March, the priſoner at the bar brought a letter to my father, and the contents of that letter was this, to the beſt of my recollection————

Court. Was you preſent when he brought it?——No.

Court. Then do not be ſo forward to relate it.—I am not forward, my Lord.

Mr. Chetwood. Hear me, Sir; what day of the month was it when theſe boards were taken away from the priſoner?——I apprehend about the 22d, or 23d.

Who was the letter wrote by?——Mr. Fowler.

He is an attorney?—Yes.

(The Letter read, dated March 31, 1783.)

"Sir,

"Mr. Pond, the bricklayer, has been
"with me, complaining of your behaviour
"in taking away his property; if there-
"fore you do not make him immediate
"reſtitution, and ſatisfaction for the in"jury done to him, I ſhall be under the "neceſſity

" neceſſity of taking diſagreeable mea-
" ſures."

When was the action brought?—I think on the 3d of April.

Court. How far was this cottage where the priſoner lived from the houſe in which you father lived?—About forty or fifty feet from my father's houſe.

Whether between the 22d of March and this 31ſt of March, the date of the attorney's letter, the priſoner was at home as uſual?—There is not a doubt about that.

Did you or your father accuſe this man of felony from the 22d of March till after the time that letter was ſent?——At the time the things were taken away, it was looked upon as a baſe thing; his wife was told, if he did not quit the town he would certainly be proſecuted.

Did you hear that?—I am clear in it.

What did your hear ſaid to the wife?—I ſaid it myſelf.

When?—The time when the deals were taken away, I would not ſay an ill-natured thing on any account whatſoever.

Mr. Chetwood. Then from the 22d to the 31ſt, you ſay he was public at his own houſe?——There is not a doubt of it, I ſhould imagine ſo; I took the letter to Sir Sampſon Wright, and he bid me go and tell Mr. Fowler, you may do what you pleaſe, for we will indict him; I told Mr. Fowler I was ſorry he was concerned in ſuch a dirty piece of buſineſs.

Mr. Chetwood. You only told your own ſtory to Sir Sampſon; but now, if this man had committed a felony, and you was ſo great with Sir Sampſon, how came you not to have warrant?—My father being a man in an advanced ſtate of life, he did not like any kind of trouble, he knew he was juſtified in taking his property.

Was not there a bill preferred for petty larceny?——Yes.

What was the conſequence of the bill?—The parties were not examined, I was not, nor the carpenter; my father went in and nobody elſe, but he could not ſpeak to the whole of the buſineſs, and the bill of indictment was thrown out.

Then you never applied to the magiſtrate?—No.

And the action went on?—It did.

How long was it before you mended the evidence, and attempted the ſecond time?—The next quarter ſeſſions.

During all that time the man was public?—He was, I believe.

In July this bill was preferred by your father?—Yes.

Then he never was carried before a magiſtrate?—No.

As to the putlocks, you know they were your father's property?——Not a doubt of it.

Might there have been no others with that mark on them, when that man's goods were ſold at Chelſea?——I am very clear I bought them all.

Court. How many might you buy there?——I ſuppoſe in the lot about one hundred and ten.

Mr. Chetwood. As to the bolts, do you know them?—I have no doubt.

Do you ſwear the bolts you have in the yard, are the very bolts you took out of this man's premiſes?—I do, moſt undoubtedly.

You ſay ſo?——There is not a doubt of it.

(The three putlocks, the boards, and the ſhaft of the cart produced and depoſed to.)

JOHN MEETS ſworn.

I am a carpenter, I was employed by Mr. William Beresford, deceaſed, in repairing a garden fence, and the priſoner was whitewaſhing and ſtopping the houſe, when I went he had almoſt done, and theſe deals were in the place where I was at work, by the ſide of my bench, and he took them for ſcaffolding; when he ſtruck the ſcaffold I never ſaw them any more; I found them in his poſſeſſion.

Court. How did you find them?—After I had done this houſe, there is a garden-fence belonging to the houſe that Mr. Beresford lives in, and he ordered me to put up a new fence; he aſked me what were become of the deals, he thought they went off too faſt; I told him I could not tell; one end of the fence was againſt the houſe that the priſoner lived in; old Mr. Beresford told me to knock the fence down; within about a yard, or very nigh to this fence, there was a door-way into a room, and I ſaw theſe deals in that room; they are a kind of ſtuff I never ſaw before, though I have been in that branch thirty years, and one of them has a very particular mark upon it, it is cracked almoſt from end to end; I went up directly and told Mr. Beresford of it, he came and went into the ſhed, and when he returned, he ſaid, if every one had their right, John, there are more things of mine in that ſhed; we then found the putlocks, and ſome of the marks were freſh cut out, but not cut deep enough, and there was a ſhaft of a cart found, I had the fellow to it, which exactly anſwered, for a poſt.

Did you meaſure it?—Yes, I put them both together, I paired them.

Mr. Chetwood. What ſort of a room was this?——The room where he lodged, there was no door it.

It was open and joined to his garden?—Yes.

Court. How far was the ſhed from the priſoner's houſe?—It joined.

Court. Have you looked on theſe boards?——Yes, I ſwear to the narrow one in particular, I am quite clear and ſatisfied that that board belonged to Mr. Beresford; I cannot ſpeak to the putlocks.

What do you ſay to the other boards?—I cannot be ſo particular to them.

Mr. Chetwood. At the time that theſe boards were taken away, were they marked?——No.

Where were they put afterwards?—They were put in a place by themſelves.

Mr. Scott to Proſecutor. Have you looked on theſe putlocks?—I have.

Have you any doubt upon them?—Not a doubt.

Mr. Chetwood. Were theſe boards ever carried to Bow-ſtreet?——They were not.

Nor to any juſtice's?——No.

THOMAS POWTON ſworn.

I lived ſervant with the late Mr. Beresford.

Was you preſent when there was any thing found at the houſe of John Pond?—Yes, there were two deals and three putlocks.

Should you know them again if you was to ſee them?—Yes, one was narrower than the other, I knew it particularly, I often ſaw it, I brought it in the cart from Weſtminſter-bridge, and there was never ſuch another deal in the cart. (The deals depoſed to by this witneſs.) I can ſafely ſwear to the narrow one.

Court. What led you to take notice of theſe deals?——I took notice one was narrower than the other, I never minded them ſo particularly before, I can ſwear to the deals.

You can be ſure that theſe were the deals that were found on the man's premiſes, but do you know they were the deals that belonged to Mr. Beresford; had you taken particular notice of both, or either of thoſe deals, before they were found on the priſoner?——I had not taken very particular notice.

Then you brought ſuch ſort of deals as thoſe for your maſter from Lambeth?——Yes.

Mr. Scott. Was there any mark on that narrow deal?—There is a piece ſlit off of [illegible].

Court. Had you obſerved that piece ſlit off of it before you ſaw them at the priſoner's houſe?——No, Sir, I had not.

Mr. Chetwood. How many did you bring from Lambeth in the cart?—Twenty-four or twenty-five, I am not ſure which.

Did you load them yourſelf?——Me and another man.

Are you a carpenter by buſineſs?—No.

And do you ſay now upon your oath, that you took ſo much notice of any particular deal that you could know it at this diſtance of time?——Yes, becauſe he had them to build the ſcaffold, and they were new new, and we had no other that were, and when he ſtruck the ſcaffold he took them away.

At the time when you loaded the cart, did you take notice of this deal any more than the other?——No, Sir.

SUSANNAH LUDLOW ſworn.

I live the next door to Mr. Pond, at Paddington.

Do you recollect ſeeing the priſoner at any time carrying any things from Mr. Beresford's houſe to his own premiſes?—I ſaw him bring three putlocks, he put them over Mr. Beresford's pales.

Did you acquaint him that you took notice of it?——I did not.

Court. When was it that you ſaw this?——The 14th of February was a twelvemonth.

Which way did he get out of the garden?——He got over the pales, and he ſlipped over the pales, and a nail of Mr. Beresford's ſide, caught hold of his coat, and he recovered himſelf, and he took them under his right-arm, and put them in his own ſhed; he went back and knocked at Mr. Beresford's ſhutter for the boy to get up.

Mr. Chetwood. Did you ever mention any thing of this between that time and the 30th of March?—No.

How come you to recollect the day of the month ſo particularly?—I ſhould not have recollected the day, if it had not been Valentine's-day.

Had not he putlocks before?—I do not know.

Court. What time of the morning was this.—It was a little after ſix.

Why it was hardly light?—No, it was not very light.

Did the boy come out afterwards?——I did not ſee him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, the firſt of this affair, I was going to do a job in Padddington Church-yard, and Mr. Beresford ſent John Meets to call me, I came back immediately, and ſaw Meſſ. Beresford's elder and younger, and John Meets the carpenter, and the boy and this Mrs. Ludlow; they all ſtood in the garden, and Mr. Beresford aſked me how I came by thoſe two deals; I told him, I bought and paid for them; and then he collared me and ſaid, Paddington ſhould be rid of ſuch fellows as me; I told him to be ſure, and look at them again; then he aſked Mr. Meets, are you ſure theſe are the deals; I do not know, Sir, ſays he, they look like them, I cannot ſay; I turned them over myſelf ſeveral times, they ſaid they knew nothing about any particular mark; then they went into my other ſhed, where I put my putlocks in, ſays he, this looks like mine, this looks like mine, and the other looks like mine; ſays I, you had better own them all; he wanted to take them away then; ſays I, no, get an officer; ſays Mr. Beresford, you ſtay at home, and I will go and get a warrant to take you up; I went to the public houſe, the Running-horſe, till eleven at night; then I went to bed; the next morning I went to my work, then they came again, and abuſed my wife, and took them from her; then I went to Mr. Fowler, and took his advice; I firſt went to the Rotation Office in Litchfield-ſtreet, they ſaid Mr. Beresford could not hurt me, nor I him; then I went to Juſtice Hyde, in Little St. Martin's-lane; ſays he, I cannot grant a warrant againſt him, he is a great man in our pariſh; then I went to Mr. Fowler, he ſent me with a letter to Mr. Hyde, that if he would not take him in hand he would; then I took a lawyer's letter for a demand of my property back, or elſe I ſhould ſue for damages; then, after that, Mr. Beresford ſent for my wife to his own houſe, and offered her, that ſhe ſhould never want for any thing ſo long as ſhe lived, if ſhe would ſay that this property was there; and I have plenty of people to juſtify it here, that theſe deals never were in my poſſeſſion, nor them putlocks; for my deals that were taken from me were two inches and three-quarters thick, and thirteen feet and one inch long: I have proof of the buying of the deals, and carrying them home and unloading them. The reaſon why I could not follow the cauſe in the King's Bench was, I was at the bar here before, and was ſick a matter of ten weeks with the gaol diſtemper, and my wife and I were ſo ill, that nobody would come near us.

THOMAS HICKMAN ſworn.

I know the boards, I meaſured them over and over, they are not the boards, I knew them ſo long ago as laſt Michaelmas was twelvemonth, they were two inches and three quarters thick, and thirteen feet and one inch long.

Why did you meaſure them?—He bought them on purpoſe to make ſome rafters for a ſhed, and having a job to dig a well he intended to uſe them for that, and I perſuaded him they were too thin; I meaſured them ſeveral times over; I thought them not ſtout enough.

Have you ſeen theſe boards?—Yes.

Is that one of the boards?—No, Sir, that is not the board.

Proſecutor. They are, upon the oath I have taken, the boards that were taken away.

Court to Proſecutor. But I ſuppoſe there were other boards in the ſhed, that were not taken away?—Yes, there were a great many more.

Priſoner. I had a dozen of other ſcaffolding boards which were thinner.

Court to Hickman. When did you ſee theſe boards on his premiſes?——Between New and Old Michaelmas was a twelvemonth.

Did you ſee them there in February?—No.

Was you there when they were taken away by the proſecutor?—No.

JOSEPH MIDDLEBURGH ſworn.

I ſaw two boards that Pond bought, and brought them up by the cart, and I ſaw them in his ſhed afterwards, but I cannot ſay to the time.

ROGER DOBBS ſworn.

I remember ſeeing two boards in his yard about laſt Chriſtmas was a twelvemonth; I meaſured them; theſe are not the boards I meaſured in his yard; he had ſeveral other boards, and ſcaffolding things, and putlocks, that lay promiſcuouſly, but theſe two we ſingled out and meaſured; I have known the priſoner five or ſix years, his character is extraordinary good, I never knew any thing againſt him, his word was always his bond.

The Priſoner called two other witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

GUILTY.

To be confined to hard labour on the River Thames for two years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

300. JAMES DORREN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th of January laſt, one pair of linen ſheets, value 14s. and one pair of linen pillow caſes, value 4s. the property of Elizabeth Lanſden, ſpinſter.

ELIZABETH LANSDEN ſworn.

I loſt a pair of ſheets and a pair of pillow caſes on the 20th of January, in Cannon-ſtreet, the priſoner came behind me and pulled the end of my bundle, and could not get it away, and I turned round to ſee who it was, and he wrenched it away with all his ſtrength, and run away up Nicholas-lane; I ſaw him by the light of the window when he took the bundle from me; I never ſaw him before; he was immediately apprehended; I ran after him as faſt as poſſible, and he was taken about a hundred yards off, I cannot exactly ſay, he was never out of my ſight; juſt as he was taken, he dropped the bundle, I did not ſee him drop it; nothing was found upon him.

Priſoner. I was taken at one end of the ſtreet that the woman ſpeaks of, and I was carried to her, I never ſaw her before.

HENRY GEORGE ſworn.

I was ſtanding at my maſter's door; I ſaw the priſoner run by me with a bundle under his arm, wrapped up in a white ſheet, I puſhed him up againſt a cart wheel.

What became of the bundle which he had?—I did not ſee him drop it.

Are you ſure the perſon that was taken was the ſame perſon that run by you with that bundle under his arm?—Yes.

JOHN FANNER ſworn.

I am a conſtable, I only produce the property, I received theſe things from the proſecutrix at the Compter, the day after he was taken.

(The things depoſed to by the Proſecutrix.)

Proſecutrix. I picked the things up where the priſoner dropped them in Nicholas-lane.

Court. Why did you keep them in your cuſtody till the next day?—There was no conſtable to be got that night, and I was ordered to bring the bundle back the next day.

The priſoner called one witneſs to his character.

GUILTY

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

---

301. JOHN LEE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th of January laſt, one wooden trunk, covered with hair ſkin, value 5s. the property of Thomas Kempton.

THOMAS KEMPTON ſworn.

I am a ſtage coach maſter, I keep a Tottenham and Edmonton ſtage coach, I live at Tottenham High-croſs, I loſt this trunk out of the ſtage boot, it was delivered to my book-keeper, and from there to the coachman; when it was loſt I do not know.

Did you ever ſee it before the man was taken?—No.

Then you do not know that ſuch a trunk was in the coach at all?—No.

WILLIAM MILLER ſworn.

I am the coachman, I had this trunk to carry down as a parcel to Edmonton; I took it of the book-keeper, and put it into the boot of the coach; a man came and tried to take the trunk off; he dropped it down, and I caught him myſelf, the trunk is here; the priſoner is the man, I ſaw him come and take it, I ſtood by the fire while I ſaw him take it, it was about a quarter before five, the 24th of January.

Was he in the yard, or where?—Standing by the Bull gateway, the coach always ſtands out in the ſtreet; he was never out of my ſight, he did not run twenty yards; I ſaid nothing to him, he dropped it, I puſhed after him, and he threw it down, and I took him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never ſaw the box at all, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

To be twice publicly whipped, and impriſoned one week in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Juſtice BULLER.

---

302. DOROTHY MOXEY and ELEANOR HYDE were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 19th of February laſt, ſix yards three quarters of printed cotton, value 10s. the goods of Edward Broome, privily in his ſhop.

EDWARD BROOME ſworn.

I keep a linen draper's ſhop in the Haymarket, on the 19th of February, I loſt ſix yards three quarters of printed cotton, I had been abſent from my ſhop, I returned about half paſt 3 or near 4; when I came into the ſhop, the priſoners were there, my ſervant was ſhewing them ſome cottons, there was another in near the door, and when I came in, ſhe went out.

Was that woman in their company?—Yes, my young man was ſerving them, Hyde ſays to the other, ſtay here till I come back, I am going a little way, after this I ſaw my young man looking over theſe cottons, and turning them as if he had miſſed one, then he went out, he had been gone out about three minutes, not more, then he returned again and called me.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. Do not tell us what he ſaid, I beg that the other witneſſes may go out of Court.—Hyde came in again, and when ſhe came in again, we challenged her with ſtealing this piece of cotton, my young man ſaid, I will take my oath on it, that you have ſtole the cotton; I then ſaid, do not make any piece of work about it, if you will give me the cotton, I ſhall make no more piece of work about it.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, he has ſaid that he had firſt promiſed her, and afterwards threatened her, any thing ſhe ſaid under that impreſſion cannot be taken.

Court to Proſecutor. Did you find any thing in her cuſtody?—No, when my lad was gone for a conſtable, then ſhe ſaid, ſhe believed———

Mr. Garrow. Your Lordſhip will not hear that, I object to any thing that ſhe ſaid being now given in evidence, becauſe it is under that impreſſion of the two things that the law ſays perfectly invalidates the evidence.

Court. Was you preſent when the things were found?—No.

Mr. Garrow. Hyde told the other to ſtay there till ſhe came back?—Yes.

And ſhe went out not followed by any body, and with perfect liberty to have gone anywhere ſhe pleaſed?—My young man followed her.

He did not at all interupt her?—No.

And ſhe came back voluntarily?—Yes.

You ſaid there was another woman in the ſhop, and that ſhe was in their company; how did you happen to know that, as ſhe went out when you came in?—My ſervant told me ſo, I could not ſee it if I was not there.

No, but you ſhould have told the Court ſo then, that your opinion was formed on conjecture and hearſay.

Court. I do not know whether this converſation that paſſed between the proſecutor and her, after the conſtable had been ſent for, was in conſequence of his promiſe, for ſhe had abſolutely rejected the benefit that he would have given her from that propoſition.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, it is very far from being my wiſh to trouble the Court, but I ſubmit this is a continuation of the converſation.

Court. It is not my wiſh to preſs any thing againſt the priſoner.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, it is firſt I will coax you, then I will threaten you, it is the common way.

JOHN BARBER ſworn.

I am ſhopman to the proſecutor, I know both the priſoners, on Thurſday laſt they both came into my maſter's ſhop to purchaſe ſome linen, it was about four o'clock, I ſhewed them ſeveral linens, they enquired for cottons for a gown, at laſt Hyde ſaid ſhe wanted to buy a gown for the ſhorteſt, I ſhewed her ſeveral pieces, there was another woman in the ſhop at the time they came in, which they knew, the other woman was there before they came in, they ſpoke to each other as acquaintance, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was come to buy a gown for the ſhort one who was going to place that night, the other woman had purchaſed ſame goods, I ſhewed them ſeveral; I thought I ſaw the talleſt of them endeavouring to take a piece from the bottom, I looked over, ſhe then deſiſted and pulled a piece nearer to her, that I could not ſee what ſhe was doing underneath, they then both turned away from the counter, and one aſked the other for a handkerchief, ſhe had bought one piece, they both bargained for that, they did not pay for it then; I then thought they had taken the piece that I ſaw her endeavouring to take.

How many might there be in the parcel you ſhewed them?——Twenty or thirty, ſhe went out, and I followed her, I did not ſtop to ſee whether ſhe had taken the cotton or not, ſhe went into the ſilk-dyer's, I ran back immediately, it was about four doors from us, I went after her again, ſhe was gone from the ſilk-dyer's, and when I came back to our ſhop, I found her juſt returned, and buying ſome muſlin, ſhe wanted to pay for it, and ſeemed rather confuſed, as I thought thought at leaſt; I then looked the cottons over again and examined them, and was quite poſitive that it was gone, ſhe wanted to pay for that piece that ſhe had fixed on, I told Mr. Broome what I had ſuſpected, ſhe paid for the muſlin, and as ſhe went out I ſtopped her, ſhe ſaid, ſhe knew nothing of it nor of the other woman, only as a ſlight acquaintance, we told her then, if ſhe would confeſs and tell us where it was, ſo that we might have our linen again, we ſhould trouble ourſelves nothing about it, we repeated it ſeveral times, ſhe offered to be ſearched, ſhe poſitively denied it, we then ſent for a conſtable, it was near half an hour before we could fine one; ſhe then ſaid———

Mr. Garrow. I am again obliged to trouble your Lordſhip, whether you would hear what the woman ſaid, this evidence confirms his maſter, that firſt of all there was an attempt to get at ſome confeſſion from her, by promiſing her, that if ſhe would tell where the goods were, ſhe ſhould not be hurt, then upon her ſtill perſiſting, they have recourſe to the other implement by which confeſſions are extorted, namely threats; now I ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that upon either of theſe grounds the evidence is not admiſſible: In a very late caſe I took this objection, and the Court held without a doubt, that the evidence under theſe circumſtances was not admiſſible, the man was tried for robbing Meſſrs. Preſcot and Grotes of a Bank poſt-bill, the defendant told a ſtory, to which the witneſs ſaid, that is very unſatisfactory; And unleſs you tell me a more ſatisfactory ſtory, I ſhall ſend for a conſtable; under thoſe circumſtances, and under the terror of that threat, the priſoner made a very ample confeſſion, the witneſs was going to diſcloſe that confeſſion, I took the objection, and the Court held moſt clearly without the ſmalleſt doubt, that it could not be received, for that, that engine had been employed, as in this caſe, with this addition in this caſe, that this woman was acting under the ſame impreſſion from the beginning, and therefore I ſubmit with the greateſt deference to the Court, (as I cannot in my mind ſeparate the two impreſſions that were made on the mind of that woman,) that the Court, in a caſe of life, will not ſuffer this confeſſion to be received.

Court. I think we cannot receive this confeſſion, but any acts that were done afterwards may be received in evidence.

Mr. Juſtice Buller. Whatever acts are done are evidence, but if thoſe acts are not ſufficient to make out the caſe againſt the priſoner; you are not to hear her converſation or confeſſion, ſo as to couple it with thoſe acts. I tried a priſoner where the evidence was juſt as it is here, and I ſtopped all the witneſſes when they came to the confeſſion: the priſoner was acquitted; there were two learned Judges on the bench, who told me that though what the priſoner ſaid was not evidence, any facts that aroſe afterwards muſt be received; and tho' that did not affect the caſe of the priſoner then at the bar, it was ſtated afterwards to all the Judges, and that was the line drawn; though you will not receive the confeſſion or declarations of priſoners made under ſuch impreſſions, yet the acts done afterwards may be received.

Court to Barber. Was any thing done ſubſequent to this? did you go and find this printed cotton any where?—Yes, I found it at the chandler's ſhop in James-ſtreet, Hay-market.

(The cotton produced and depoſed to by the ſhop mark.

Court. Was that linen amongſt the parcel of linen you ſhewed the priſoner?—Yes.

You are ſure of it?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. There was a woman in the ſhop before theſe women came in?—Yes.

How long had the firſt woman been gone before Hyde went out of the ſhop?—About ten minutes.

Had you after that woman went away, obſerved that identical piece of linen there?—Yes.

Why you have told my Lord that there were thirty pieces of linen ?—This was at the bottom, I can ſwear it poſitively, they were dark linens I ſhewed her, and this was a very light one.

Did you obſerve that identical piece of linen ?—Yes.

You mean to ſwear that ?—Yes.

Were theſe 30 whole pieces or remnants ?—Some whole pieces, and ſome remnants.

What is the diſtance of this chandler's ſhop ?——About two hundred yards.

The firſt woman might have carried it to the chandler's ſhop herſelf ?——This piece was not taken down till after the other woman went out of the ſhop.

Why, they were laying on the compter ?—No, that I remember.

I wiſh you would remember this, that this is a caſe that affects the lives of two priſoners by your evidence, Mr. Barber ?—There were ſeveral things laying on the counter.

Aye, ſo many things that you could not then diſtinguiſh the one from the other, though you now affect to ſay that you could diſtinguiſh.—I can take my oath that I ſaw her hand on it, taking it from the reſt; I am ſure I ſaw her hand on it.

And on that identical piece ?——Yes, I can ſwear that the others were all dark.

You did not follow this woman into the chandler's ſhop ?—No.

You did not interrupt her in her walk to the ſilk dyer's ?—No.

You took a traverſe through a number of other ſtreets, and then found the woman in the ſhop ?—Yes.

And ſhe told the other woman to ſtay there ?——Yes, I told her that I ſuppoſed ſhe muſt have given it to the other woman.

ELIZABETH LINDSEY ſworn.

I live in James-ſtreet, Hay-market, I keep a chandler's ſhop; on the 19th, the priſoner Hyde came into our ſhop for a quartern of ſtarch, and aſked to leave that bundle, and ſhe would call for it; I let her leave the bundle; I do not know what it contained.

Court. Was it the ſame bundle that you fterwards delivered to the young man, Barber ?——Yes, I believe it was.

Did you give it to Barber ?——I gave it to the priſoner again.

Mr. Garrow. You never had ſeen her before ?——No.

She was not a minute in your ſhop ?—No.

Court. Are you ſure it was the priſoner at the bar ?—I believe it to be the ſame, I took my oath ſo.

Had you any converſation with the priſoner at all ?——No, I know ſhe was the ſame that delivered the bundle to me.

For the Priſoner Hyde.

——— SELBY, Eſq; ſworn.

I am Clerk of the Peace for the County of Middleſex; I know the priſoner Eleanor Hyde, I have known her ever ſince ſhe was a girl; ſhe was born at Alnwick, I knew her family very well, I never heard any thing againſt her, I always looked upon her as an honeſt woman, ſhe has been in town ſomething about a year; I have never ſeen her ſince ſhe was in London; I underſtood ſhe was lately married, I have ſeen her huſband, and was very much ſurprized when I heard of this matter.

Court. What way of life was her huſband in ?—A ſervant, I believe.

Court. Has the priſoner any other witneſſes to her character ?

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, after Mr. Selby's evidence, I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with any more witneſſes to her character.

Jury. My Lord, the Jury wiſh to be informed, whether a ſuſpicion of the witneſs, that ſhe took the cotton at that time, takes off the private ſtealing ?

Court. He did not ſee her take it, but he ſaw her attempting to take it, and in all probability it was taken at that time; there is ſufficient foundation on the evidence to think that it was.

Mr. Juſtice Buller. He immediately afterwards ſaw her apply to the other for a handkerchief; kerchief; if ſhe took it at that time, it was not a ſtealing privately; if you could ſuppoſe ſhe did not take it then, but took it afterwards when his back was turned, that would be a ſtealing privately.

Mr. Baron Perryn. He was put on his guard, and wherever there is a doubt of that kind, one would always incline to the milder part of the caſe.

DOROTHY MOXEY, NOT GUILTY.

ELEANOR HYDE, GUILTY
Of ſtealing but not privately.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

303. BENJAMIN SMITH alias JAMES JOHNSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 26th day of January laſt, one ſilver table ſpoon, value 5s. the property of Thomas Price.

ANN PRICE ſworn.

I live at the Oxford coffee-houſe, in the Strand, my brother Thomas Price, keeps it, he loſt on the 26th of January laſt, a ſilver table ſpoon, I firſt miſſed it about two in the afternoon, I act as miſtreſs there, the priſoner came for a glaſs of brandy and water.

Court. Are you very ſure it is the priſoner that came in; look at him?—Yes.

Did you ever ſee him before?—I have, I ſerved him with the brandy and water at the bar, and he ſtaid in the coffee room juſt by the bar, and about half an hour after he had the brandy and water, he looked a good deal about the coffee room, I had ſome reaſon to ſuſpect him, and I had all the ſpoons collected together, and put out of the way, he walked round the coffee room, and at the fartheſt table from the bar, called No. 5, there was a ſilver ſpoon ſtanding in a baſon.

Did you ſee him converſe with any body in the coffee room?—I never ſaw him converſe with any body in my life.

Are you very ſure that ſpoon was there?—I am very ſure it was there, and I ſaw him take it out of the baſon.

You are ſure he is the man?—I am.

Did you get the ſpoon back at any time?—I got it back before he left the coffee room.

What did you charge him with it immediately?—I ſtopped him as he was going out of doors.

Did you find it upon him?—I did.

The ſpoon that you found on him, do you know whoſe property it is?—It is the property of Thomas Price my brother.

Had it any marks about it?——Yes, T. M. P. marked in a cypher.

Had it any other marks about it that you know it by?—No other.

Are the other ſpoons in the coffee room marked in that way?—Yes, we have a great many.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. Your coffee houſe is very much reſorted to?—Yes.

There are many perſons that are waiters who ſerve in the room beſides you and Mr. Price?—Yes, but Mr. Price was gone out that day.

Had the priſoner been to the coffee houſe before that day?——No, not that day.

Can you of your own knowledge ſay whether he had any ſoup?—He had not.

How long was he in the houſe?——Rather better than half an hour.

Was you in the bar all that time?—Yes, there were ſeveral waiters in the coffee room backwards and forwards, but when he took the ſpoon there was only one.

Had the priſoner been out of your houſe at all.

VALENTINE SAUNDERS ſworn.

About half paſt one, the priſoner came in, and he called for a glaſs of brandy and water and a cruſt of bread, which I gave him, there is a fire place near the bar at which he ſtood for ſome time, very near half an hour, during the time he was ſtanding there, he was aſking a few queſtions which I did not obſerve.

Did he converſe with any body in the coffee room?—Not any gentleman, Sir, he ſpoke to me and my miſtreſs; as we had had ſome ſuſpicion of him I went upon the ſtairs, to give him an opportunity in caſe there was any thing in his way to take, there is a glaſs door to the ſtairs, and I could ſee into the coffee room, and I ſaw him walk up to the table called No. 5, at the far corner of the room from the bar, there were ſome newſpapers laying on the table, that I ſaw him turn over, and there was a baſon ſtanding there that a gentleman had been having ſome ſoup, and a ſpoon in the baſon.

Could you ſee the ſpoon in the baſon from where he was?—Yes, I ſaw him take the ſpoon from the table, and he walked away towards the ſtreet door, I went that way intending to ſtop him, and my miſtreſs caught hold of his coat-ſleeves, and the ſpoon was taken from him; I am ſure the priſoner is the man.

The ſpoon produced and depoſed to, marked T. M. P.

Mr. Sylveſter. He went to the table for theſe newſpapers and turned them over?—Yes.

Had you been in the room all the time?—I had.

Much company in the room?——No.

Do you remember his going out after he had the brandy and water?—No, I am ſure he did not go out.

Had he any ſoup that day?—No.

Court. Why is it marked T. M. P.

Mrs. Price. The M. is for the name of my brother's wife, who is dead.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

That very morning that this unfortunate thing happened, I had been to Lord Grantley's whom I had an appointment to meet, I did not happen to ſee him; I had been there once before, I went to aſk for a Captain of a man of war, and had a glaſs of brandy and water, and I ſtaid in the coffee houſe ten minutes, I went out to the Hungerford coffee houſe to aſk for the ſame gentleman, and I came back directly, and had a baſon of peaſe ſoup (which they now deny), and whilſt I was eating that peaſe ſoup a gentleman laid down a newſpaper; I got up with the ſpoon in my hand, never concealed any more than my glove is, and the woman ran to me, and ſaid, I was going to carry away her ſpoon, I gave it to her, and ſaid, woman, I was not going away with your ſpoon, ſays ſhe, we have loſt a great many things, and you ſhall pay for them all.

Court to Mrs. Price. What is the value of this ſpoon?—I ſhould ſuppoſe about five ſhillings.

From what part of the priſoner did you take the ſpoon?—I cannot tell, it was not in his hand, but from where he took it, I cannot ſay.

You ſwear that you took it from him?—He gave it to me with his hand.

Priſoner. I have been Captain of a ſhip theſe twenty-ſix years, and I have lived thirty years in one pariſh.

Court to Jury. I take the law to be clearly this, that if this man took away the ſpoon from the place where it was, not making uſe of it as a cuſtomer and viſitor, but with intention to ſteal it, that is clearly a felony.

Guilty.

Mrs. Price. My Lord, this poor man has declared that it was diſtreſs made him do it, and as he is an old man, I hope you will give him as little puniſhment as the law will allow him.

The Rev. Thomas Cokayne, D. D. My Lord, I came to ſpeak on the behalf of the priſoner, I ſhould have ſpoken before, but I am unacquainted with theſe things.

Court. You muſt be ſworn, Sir.

Rev. Thomas Cokayne, D. D. ſworn.

My name is Thomas Cokayne, I am the Rector of Rotherhithe, I know the priſoner and his family, he was Maſter of a Weſt-India ſhip, and of courſe ſometimes home with his family, and ſometimes abſent, but the family were conſtantly reſident near the church for three or four years, in a houſe that I have ſome concern with, till about a year ago; I have many times ſeen the priſoner, and I never heard any reflection on his moral character in any reſpect; but I have often heard he was in very diſtreſſed circumſtances: during the courſe of laſt ſummer he wrote to me, a ſtrong letter about his indigent and diſtreſſed circumſtances, and deſired me to do what I could to ſerve him, to make ſome collection for him, and to apply to his friends, which I did; and the worſt I heard of him at that time was, that his diſtreſs was very great.

Court to Priſoner. You have been tried and found guilty of the offence charged againſt you in the indictment; the firſt witneſs has recommended you to the mercy of the Court; there is likewiſe a clergyman of reſpectable character, who has ſpoken in your behalf: in conſideration of theſe circumſtances, and in hopes that you will be more cautious for the future; this ſentence is impoſed upon you, that you pay the fine of one ſhilling, and that you be diſcharged.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

304. SARAH PEAKE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th day of January laſt, one linen ſheet, value 2s. one wooden pail, value 1s. and one hair broom, value 2d. the property of William Maſon, the ſaid things being in a lodging room, let by contract to the ſaid Sarah, by the ſaid William Maſon, to be uſed by her as a lodging room, contrary to the ſtatute.

WILLIAM MASON ſworn.

I live in White's Row, Whitechapel Road, I let a lodging to William and Sarah Peake about nine months ago, furniſhed; they ſtaid with me till the 18th of January laſt, but I never ſaw William Peake, her huſband, ſince the 4th of January.

Court to Jury. The priſoner is a married woman, the wife of William Peake, therefore the indictment ſhould have been, "let by contract to the ſaid William and "Sarah;" conſequently this indictment cannot be ſuſtained, and the priſoner muſt be acquitted.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

---

305. THOMAS RILEY and JOHN RYAN were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th day of February laſt, two pieces of ſheet lead, containing 90lb. weight, value 10s. the property of a certain perſon unknown.

WILLIAM PALMER ſworn.

I ſaw the two priſoners carry ſome lead into a ſhop where they buy iron, it was about eight o'clock on Sunday night laſt was three weeks.

Court. Do you know where they got this lead?——No, I do not, there were eight different people came to ſee after it, and neither of them knew it.

You do not know of any perſon that had loſt any lead?——No, I do not know any thing of it.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an indictment for ſtealing lead, the property of a perſon unknown; now I take it clearly, that to ſupport ſuch an indictment as that, though you cannot identify the lead, yet you muſt prove that ſome perſon has loſt lead; there has been a felony committed in ſtealing the lead, but then it cannot be proved that it is the ſame lead that was found on the priſoner; and I take it to be clear law, that you muſt lay a foundation that ſome one has had lead ſtolen from them, but as there is no evidence of that kind, there is no foundation for this indictment.

THOMAS RILEY, } NOT GUILTY.
JOHN RYAN, }

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

306. JOHN ABBOTT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th of February, one woollen great coat, value 12s. the property of Robert Bryant.

ROBERT BRYANT ſworn.

On the 7th of February, between eight and nine at night, the priſoner came to my warehouſe in Chiſwell ſtreet, I ſell various articles, and amongſt the reſt great coats, he ſaid he wanted to buy a great coat.

Court. Look at the priſoner, be ſure he is the man?—I am very clear of the man, he was fitted with a great coat, the price agreed for was twelve ſhillings; he told me he had not caſh enough in his pocket to pay for it, if I would ſend one of my men to his houſe with him, he would give him the money.

Did you know him at all, did he live in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

You knew his perſon, then?——Yes, I ſent my young man with him, in order to bring the money back; I delivered the great coat to the priſoner, and I ſent my young man to take the money.

SAMUEL BLACKMAN ſworn.

Was you preſent when the priſoner came to Mr. Bryant's warehouſe?—Yes.

What are you?—A ſervant.

In what capacity?—In the warehouſe; the priſoner came in and told my maſter he wanted a great coat, he was fitted with one; he put his hand in his pocket, he had not money enough to pay for it, he deſired my maſter to let one of his men ſtep with him for the money, the price agreed for was twelve ſhillings; he ſaid he lived in Salmon and Ball Court, Bunhill-row; when he came up that court, he deſired me to ſtop while he ſtepped to the public houſe for the key, their people were all out, he ſaid; I did not think proper to ſtop, I walked after him.

Court. When the coat was fitted on, who carried it?——He carried it under his arm, he went into the public houſe at one door, and out at another.

You did not follow him in?——No, I ſaw him about a week after, the great coat was found at the pawnbroker's, I was to bring back the money.

Did any thing more paſs about the payment?—No.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Was you preſent at the time that the priſoner bargained for the coat?——Yes.

Tell us the agreement as near as you can recollect?—As near as I can recollect, my maſter ſaid twelve ſhillings was the price of the coat, and he agreed to give twelve ſhillings for it; and my maſter folded it up.

Did he put his hand into his pocket?—He did, and ſaid he had not money enough to pay for it, but if my maſter would let one of his men ſtep with it, he would ſend the money back.

Jury. Did he offer to pay any part of the money?—No.

JOHN PARKER ſworn.

I am a pawnbroker, I never ſaw the priſoner before he brought the coat, he was in a different plight then.

Court. Have you the coat here?—It has been brought to Hicks's Hall.

Court to Jury. You will be under the neceſſity, in this caſe, of acquitting the priſoner on a point of law, becauſe it turns out on the evidence of the two firſt witneſſes, that the man came in for this great coat, was fitted with it, and that the proſecutor gave the poſſeſſion of this coat to the priſoner; the priſoner took it away and not the ſervant, the priſoner promiſing to pay for it; the proſecutor gave the priſoner compleatly in law a poſſeſſion of the great coat, upon the uſual promiſe of paying for it; however, being once in legal poſſeſſion of it, though he did not pay for it, there is a legal remedy which muſt be againſt the priſoner by action, but certainly this indictment cannot be maintained on account of the property being veſted in the priſoner by that bargain, and there being no property in the proſecutor: you will therefore be under the neceſſity of acquitting the priſoner.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

307. ELIZABETH STEWARD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of February, two linen ſhifts, value 10s. the property of Thomas Thorby.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

308. THOMAS SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 24th day of January laſt, one pair of linen ſheets, value 10s. the property of Thomas Lane, John Lane, and Thomas Frazier; and one trunk covered with hair, value 5s. the property of John Monday.

GUILTY.

To be twice publicly whipped, and impriſoned one week in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

309. JAMES BARNES was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Richard Aſton, at the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 7th of February, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein four pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 20s. the property of the ſaid Richard Aſton and Joſeph Baſing.

RICHARD ASTON ſworn.

On Saturday night the 7th of February, I was ſitting in my parlour, about ſeven o'clock, and I heard a ſmaſh of my windows, in the parlour adjoining to my ſhop, and I jumped up, and leaped over the table, I knew the door was tied, and by main ſtrength I broke the cords which tied it, one was tied round the door, and one was tied round the iron rails; as I have been at ſea myſelf, I knew it muſt be a ſailor that tied it; I flew out into the ſtreet, and run up the ſtreet; there were numbers of people that cried, there he is; I heard his footſteps, but there were ſeveral people between him and me; when I came to the corner, the back of Burlington Gardens, it being then quite open and light from the ſnow underneath, I ſaw the priſoner at the bar running, at the corner of Lady Groſvenor's houſe, turning from Bond-ſtreet towards Saville-row.

Court. How far had you gone from your own door when you ſaw him?——I ſuppoſe it is one hundred yards.

The man you ſaw running you purſued?——Yes, one of the witneſſes, a little boy, endeavoured to throw him down, inſtead of falling down, he threw the ſtockings down under his knees; he turned clear of him, and run into my arms; I ſaw him throw ſomething down, a chairman that was coming by caught hold of him; at the ſame time a pair of ſtockings were picked up by the boy, and two pair more were picked up by other people.

What did he ſay to you?—He uſed very abuſive language.

Was any body running by him?—No.

Have you a partner?——Yes, I am in partnerſhip with Mr. Baſing, I keep houſe by myſelf.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the City of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of James Barnes.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

Court. How old are you?——Juſt turned of fifteen; on the 7th of January I heard ſome people cry out, ſtop thief! I turned round, and ſaw the priſoner come running along, I ſtooped down, he whipped of one ſide of me, and threw the ſtockings down on one ſide of me.

Did you ſee him throw the ſtockings down?——Yes, he ſlipped on one ſide of me juſt as I went to fall down.

How many pair of ſtockings did you ſee him throw down?—I did not take notice, I ran to the gentleman and ſhewed him where they lay.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

As I was coming from Charles Court, in the Strand, to go to High-ſtreet, Marybone, coming through this place, I ſaw a great mob, and the people were argufying about ſomething, I do not know what it was; I have nobody to my character, I am tried too ſoon!

(The ſtockings depoſed to.)

Court to Proſecutor. Where had the ſtockings been laying before they were loſt?——They were laying upon the ſhew-board in the window, folded up, it is a bow window with a ſhew-board within ſide.

What glaſs was it that was broke?——It was a large ſquare.

How did it lay?——It was a ſquare of the ſaſh that was broke.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

310. JEREMIAH ROSE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th day of January laſt, one linen handkerchief, value 12d. the property of James Chriſtie.

JAMES CHRISTIE ſworn.

Paſſing through the narrow paſſage that leads from Cock-lane to Smithfield, I heard a perſon in great haſte behind me; I had a child, and made way for him; I felt in my pocket, and my handkerchief was gone, I ſtepped haſtily after him, he looked at me, I followed him, he turned down Hoſier-lane, I ſaid I am after you, then he began to run, I ran after him and overtook him, I immediately ſaw him drop that handkerchief at his left foot.

(The handkerchief depoſed to.)

RICHARD COTTRELL ſworn.

The proſecutor brought the priſoner up himſelf to my door, and gave charge of him, and gave me the handkerchief, and I have had it ever ſince.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY.

To be twice publicly whipped, and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Court. Where do you belong to?—St. Bride's, Fleet-ſtreet.

Have you any father or mother?—No.

How have you got your living?—I have worked at portering with Mr. Hemings, a fruiterer.

How comes it he is not here to give you a character?—I would not wiſh to trouble him.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

311. WILLIAM CUMMINGS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th day of January laſt, one pair of linen ſheets, value 8s. the property of Charles Cowling; and one linen ſhirt, value 1s. and one linen handkerchief, value 4d. the property of Stephen Kent.

CHARLES COWLING ſworn.

I heard a noiſe in my paſſage, and I looked and ſaw the priſoner going out with a bundle under his arm, he ſhut the door after him; he turned into a court, I knew there was no thoroughfare, and I waited for his coming out, I looked up the court, and I ſaw him knock at a gentleman's door; when he came out he had the bundle then, he ſaid he had not been in my houſe, I ſaid I was ſure I ſaw him come out, I did not know I had loſt any thing then; he then told me he wanted one Mrs. Thomſon, a waſherwoman; he ſaid he was going over to the White Lion, I did not think of the garret, and he went away with the bundle, it ſtruck in my memory to ſee if the garret was ſafe; my wife went up immediately, and hallooed out, the ſheets are gone; I immediately went after him, and he took through a ſtable yard, he was walking on gently in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, I caught him with the bundle under his arm, I brought him back and ſent for a conſtable, and gave charge of him; we ſearched him, and in his great coat pocket there was a ſhirt and handkerchief of my apprentice's, this is the bundle.

—— WHEELHOUSE ſworn.

I have had the things ever ſince, I am the conſtable.

Court to Proſecutor. What did he ſay for himſelf when you brought him back?—He ſaid he found them.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I came acroſs the water, a man came with me, and ſaid he was going to call at a houſe for a bundle, and ſaid if you will go and call at ſuch a houſe I will come to you, and I was going to the White Lion to ſee for him. I came out of the hoſpital three weeks ago with a broken leg.

GUILTY.

To be twice publicly whipped, and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

312. JOHN HARROW was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 19th day of February, one hempen ſack, value 1s. and 56lb. weight of onion ſeed, value 10l. the property of John Field, the elder, John Field, the younger, and Richard Labram.

JOSHUA

JOSHUA MITCHELL ſworn.

I never ſaw the priſoner before laſt Monday night in my life, I took ſome ſeed from Mr. David Lewis, in Cornhill, and put it into my cart to carry it to Mr. John Field, ſeedſman, in Lower Thames-ſtreet; the ſeed was bought by my maſter, and I was carrying it to him; I loſt it out of my cart, I miſſed it in Pudding-lane; I ſaw the priſoner firſt at the Rotation Office, and the ſeed was at Mr. White's, in Whitechapel, I loſt it the 19th, and he was taken up the 20th, the next day.

Court. Did you know the ſeed?—I know it was onion ſeed.

Jury. Could you ſwear to the ſack?—Yes.

JOHN LEE ſworn.

The ſeed was brought into my maſter's, Mr. James White's ſhop, by the priſoner, on the 19th of February, between ſeven and eight, I never ſaw him before in my life, to my knowledge.

Court to Mitchell. What time was it you loſt it?——Within ten minutes of ſix.

Lee. I was in the parlour when he came into the ſhop, I aſked him what he wanted, he aſked me whether I wanted to buy ſome onion ſeed, I aſked him how much he had, he ſaid it was there, he bought it for ſix ſhillings, it was a ſack; then I looked at it, and bought it, I did not know whether it was onion ſeed or leek ſeed; I aſked him what he muſt have for it; he ſaid, he gave ſix ſhillings for it; I ſaid, will ſeven ſhillings ſatiſfy you, I ſaid I do not know any thing about it, you muſt leave it till morning; he ſaid, he wanted a little money, I told him I could give him a little trifle of money if he wanted, but he muſt leave it till morning; I gave him four ſhillings, as my maſter was not at home; he called in the morning before my maſter was up, and I gave him three ſhillings more, and told him he muſt call again, for my maſter had not looked at it, and I did not know any thing about it, nor what it was worth; as ſoon as my maſter got up, I gave him ſome of the ſeed to look at, he immediately told me it was ſtolen; I then ſhewed him the ſack, he ſaid the ſack was Mr. Field's ſack, or had been ſo; the priſoner called again at night, and before that a hand bill came in; when he came again I ſtopped him; he ſaid he bought it of a man, but he did not know him; my maſter told me it was worth ten or eleven pounds; in the morning I carried down the ſack to Mr. Field's, I delivered it to one of the gentlemen.

Who ſaw you deliver it?——I cannot tell.

Court to Proſecutor. What evidence have you to prove the identity of the ſeed?——We can only ſwear to the ſack.

(The ſack depoſed to.)

DAVID FIELD ſworn.

We publiſhed ſome hand-bills, and diſperſed them about, and in about half an hour after, Mr. White ſent to inform us that his man had taken in ſuch a quantity of onion ſeed, my partner brought it down to our houſe, there it was put by; about ſeven in the evening a meſſage came from Mr. White, informing us that the man had called for the ſack and they had detained him, then the ſack was taken before Juſtice Staples and depoſed to.

Court. Is there any body here that was preſent when the ſack was brought to your houſe?——No.

Court to Lee. Did you mark the ſack?—I took notice of it, that I can ſwear to it; there is a little f on it.

Should you know it from another ſack of Mr. Field's?——I never ſaw another.

Mitchell. I can ſwear to the ſack.

——— LEWIS ſworn.

I delivered 56lb. weight of onion ſeed to Mr. Field's ſervant, on the 19th of February; it was in a hempen ſack, marked with a ſmall f about the middle of the ſack; it is impoſſible to know the ſeed from other onion ſeed.

Jury. Could you know that ſack from any other?——I do not know that I could.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I bought it this very day week, and gave ſix ſhillings for it in Red Lion-ſtreet, of a countryman in a brown frock, I took it to Mr. White's, and he untied the ſack and chewed ſome of it; ſays he, it is not good for much, but I will give you ſeven ſhillings for it, he gave me four ſhillings for it in part of payment; he told me to come in the morning for three ſhillings more, and he told me to call on the Friday evening, between ſix and ſeven, and I ſhould have another ſack in the ſtead of it; I called and he ſtopped me.

GUILTY.

To be twice publicly whipped, and impriſoned one month in Newgate.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

313. JOSEPH HEWITT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of January laſt, ſeven quartern loaves of wheaten bread, value 3s. 6d. and one other loaf of wheaten bread, value 3d. the property of Ann Wright.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

314. ELIZABETH ELLIS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th day of January laſt, twelve linen handkerchiefs, value 12s. the property of Daniel Turner.

JOHN BADGER ſworn.

I ſold four dozen of handkerchiefs to Mr. Turner, in Newgate-ſtreet, parcel of them that were taken.

—— CATCHPOLE ſworn.

Here is one dozen of handkerchiefs; going down Ludgate-hill, between three and five in the afternoon, I ſaw the priſoner ſtanding, I ſaid, what have you got here; ſhe ſaid, nothing; and, upon looking, ſhe had theſe handkerchiefs; (Produced) I ſaid, where did you get them; ſhe ſaid, ſhe bought them; I ſaid, where; ſhe ſaid, in Cheapſide; I aſked her what ſhop; ſhe ſaid, ſhe ſhould not tell me; I ſaid, if you do not I ſhall take the handkerchiefs and you into cuſtody; ſhe ſaid, if you do, I will ſwear a robbery againſt you; after much altercation ſhe went with me a little way up the hill, and I called a coach.

NATHANIEL LIVING ſworn.

Theſe are our handkerchiefs, they have our mark, they belong to Mr. Badger.

—— RICHARDSON ſworn.

I only know that we loſt this quantity of handkerchiefs, on the 27th of January, they came in the 22d, I have the bill of parcels from Meſſ. Aſhmore, Badger, and Keelings, Cheapſide.

Do you know, of your own knowledge, how many the parcel contained?——No, only by the bill of parcels.

Had any been ſold of that parcel?——None had been ſold.

How do you know that?——Becauſe in looking them over we found them all there, we keep a till book, I in general keep it, ſometimes Mr. Turner keeps it.

Does not he ſell in your abſence?—He did not ſell any.

How do you know that?—Becauſe there is none in the book, we miſſed them the 28th, we miſſed eleven, we never miſſed them nor examined them till theſe handkerchiefs were brought to us by Catchpole, the parcel had been opened, and they were all put at the end of the counter, there were none ſold becauſe none were entered in the book.

What number remained?—I cannot recollect, now all the others were there.

How many are there?——I cannot recollect, it is here in the bill of parcels, what are there we had, I compared them the 28th, when the others were brought.

Is that the bill of parcels you examined them by?—No.

Where is that bill of parcels?—That is deſtroyed.

Who deſtroyed it?—Mr. Badger's people, it was returned there with fourteen handkerchiefs that we did not like, then we had a freſh bill of parcels of the remainder.

Were theſe handkerchiefs ſtolen before you returned the fourteen or after?——Before.

Therefore you parted with the original bill of parcels ſince theſe handkerchiefs came back?—Yes.

Court to Badger. What did you do with the bill of parcels that you got back?–I cannot ſay, I did not receive the handkerchiefs back myſelf, ſome people belonging to our houſe did, but who I cannot ſay.

Can you ſpeak to the number you ſold to Mr. Turner?—Yes, it was four dozen and ten of that number and mark; and two dozen of that number and mark were returned according to our book.

How many are there?—There are twelve of them, but they are marked for eleven.

Court. Theſe are them that you ſold to Mr. Turner?—On the 22d, I ſold him four dozen and ten, they had this mark and number; as to being the identical handkerchiefs, I cannot ſay, two dozen of them were returned.

Court to Richardſon. Have you brought your books here?——I have brought the till-book of what we ſell in the courſe of the day.

But you cannot tell the number that remained?—No.

Jury. Did you examine the goods when they came in?——No.

Court to Jury. If the evidence amounted to this, that a certain number had been ſold by Mr. Badger to Mr. Turner, and that all that number remained except theſe, and that no ſuch parcel appeared to have been ſold, that would be evidence to be left to your conſideration, but there is no evidence that all the reſt remained.

Jury. You are not ſure you ever had ſuch a quantity, you never examined them when they came into your houſe?——No, not till the 28th.

Court. We cannot ſupply the defects of evidence, it is the proſecutor's buſineſs to lay evidence before the Court.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

315. ELIZABETH SUMMERS and SARAH GOLDSMITH were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th day of February, one cloth coat, value 3l. one cloth waiſtcoat, value 20s. one ſilk waiſtcoat, value 1s. one ſilver watch, value 40s. one ſteel chain, value 2d. two ſtone ſeals ſet in baſe metal, value 2d. one pair of worſted gloves, value 2d. and one ſteel ſtock buckle, value 2d. the property of Michael Bottomley, in the dwelling houſe of Luke Dunn.

The Proſecutor called on his recognizance, and not appearing, the Priſoners were ACQUITTED.

---

316. JOHN SEAS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 16th day of January laſt, one cloth coat, called a box coat, value 3l. the property of Samuel Hayes, Eſq; privily in his ſtable.

EDWARD JOFF ſworn.

On the 16th of January I hung this coat in the ſtable of Mr. Hayes, I was then his coachman, and I went into the houſe to receive my wages, and when I went into the ſtable again, my coat was gone.

Court. Was the ſtable door locked?—It was faſt, but there was a ſmall door that came from the coach-houſe into the ſtable; this was between ten and twelve.

JOHN FINDLEY ſworn.

I am a ſaleſman, this priſoner came to my houſe with the coat on his back, on the 16th of January between one and two, and he aſked me to buy it, I aſked the price, he ſaid fourteen ſhillings, I bid him ten ſhillings, the Monday following he came to my houſe with another coat on his back, I detained him: there were hand bills given out about the other coat, and I took it up to the Juſtice's; I am ſure it was the priſoner.

(The coat depoſed to.)

Court to Findley. How came you to buy ſuch a coat as that for ten ſhillings?—Becauſe he told me he bought it of one of his fellow-ſervants, I have not been in buſineſs above three months.

Court. I adviſe you to be careful how you buy things in that way?—My Lord, as ſoon as I received that hand-bill, I carried up the coat.

DAVID LEWIS ſworn.

My coal-ſhed is by the ſtable; it rained very hard, and the priſoner aſked me to let him ſit in my coal-ſhed: I could not ſee him take any thing, I am ſure it is the priſoner.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I ſaw it lay by the ſide of the wall, and I picked it up, I ſaw nobody thereabouts.

Court to Jury. I think it is very doubtful whether the box coat, or any part of the clothes of the coachman, can be conſidered as any part of the proper furniture of the ſtable; which the Judges have generally held to be neceſſary, ſo as to have the protection of the ſtrict law: now the bridles, ſaddles, horſecloths, boxcloths, &c. are the proper furniture; therefore I think you will be very well juſtified in acquitting the priſoner of that particular penal clauſe, which makes it a capital offence, that is, its being ſtolen privately in the ſtable.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing, but not privily.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

317. ELIZABETH WARREN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 15th day of January laſt, one muſlin apron, value 3s. one piece of muſlin containing one yard and a quarter, value 6s. two linen frocks, value 3s. one ſilver tea ſpoon, value 1s. 6d. one linen handkerchief, value 1s. one other linen handkerchief, value 6d. and two linen caps, value 1s. the property of James Dunbar.

The priſoner lived ſervant with me about three weeks, ſhe went off on the 25th of January, ſhe left me without any notice; the things mentioned in the indictment were miſſed, at different times, before and after ſhe went, the ſilver tea ſpoon was miſſed the day ſhe went off, on the next day ſhe was taken up and brought to my houſe by a friend of mine, and ſhe confeſſed where the things were pawned.

Did you make her any promiſe of favor if ſhe would confeſs?—Not on my own part; reſpecting the handkerchiefs, which ſhe had taken up in my name, I told her, I ſhould not hurt her for them, but I poſitively told her I would proſecute her for my own; this was before ſhe told me any thing at all about it, and after that ſhe told me where they were, ſhe told me they were at Mr. Parker's the pawnbroker in Wood-ſtreet, he was bound over to appear, but he did not think fit to appear; ſhe told me ſhe had pledged the two child's caps there, one frock, and two handkerchiefs, and a piece of muſlin, and the tea ſpoon we found in her hand, we went to Mr. Parker's, and found all the things there that ſhe had mentioned.

RICHARD FINCH ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I have had theſe things ever ſince, I ſaw theſe things at Mr. Parker's, he ſent them to Guildhall.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I ſhould not have done it, but I fell down, and a woman helped me up, and ſhe aſked me where I was going, and ſhe told me if I would help her with any thing while I was in place, ſhe would take care of me when I was out of place, and I pawned the things, and gave her the money.

GUILTY.

She was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury and the Proſecutor, being only fourteen years of age.

To be privately whipped and confined to hard labour ſix months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

318. HANNAH SNOW otherwiſe FRANKLIN was indicted for felonioufly ſtealing, on the 10th day of February, in the dwelling houſe of Martha Sanders, widow, one pair of linen ſheets, value 10s. one linen handkerchief, value 1s. eight guineas, value 8l. 8s. the property of the ſaid Martha, and one promiſory note commonly called a bank note, value 10l. one other bank note, value 10l. the ſaid notes being the property of the ſaid Martha, and the ſeveral ſums of 10l. and 10l. reſpectively due and payable thereon, being then due and unſatiſfied to the ſaid Martha, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner.

MARTHA SANDERS ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Keys, Council for the Proſecution.

I live in Mortimer-ſtreet, Cavendiſh-ſquare, the priſoner was my ſervant, ſhe left me the 3d of February, after ſhe had left my ſervice, I miſſed on the 10th of February ſome money and bank notes.

How much money did you miſs ?—Two ten pound bank notes, and eight guineas in money, they were kept in my cheſt in the front parlour, I kept my bank notes in this box, (which I kept in my cheſt,) and in that box I kept my money, I took up the priſoner, I went to Litchfield-ſtreet office.

Court. When was the priſoner taken up? —The 10th of February.

Was there any thing found upon her ? —Nothing at all.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. The priſoner left your ſervice on the 3d of February ?—Yes.

You did not not miſs any thing till the 10th ?—No.

Who had been in your ſervice from the 2d to the 10th ?—The ſervant that I have now.

So this was in a cheſt, the key of which you kept ?—Kept it ! No, Sir, it was in my drawers, and the key was left in my drawers, and ſhe went and opened the drawers.

No, do not tell us what ſhe did, you do not know any thing of that ; can you venture to ſwear that from the 3d to the 10th, you never left the key of thoſe drawers in the drawers, in the reach of your preſent ſervant ?—The key was in the drawers.

Court. The key of your cheſt was kept in your drawers ?—Yes.

Where was the key of the drawers kept? —In the drawers, I locked the front parlour, and left the key in the back parlour, till I miſſed the money.

WILLIAM BLACKETER ſworn.

Mr. Keys. I believe you was employed on this occaſion, to ſerve a warrant on the priſoner at the bar ?—Yes, Mrs. Sanders came to the office to inform the people that ſhe was robbed, that was the 10th of February, when ſhe mentioned the name of the priſoner, Hannah Snow, I ſaw the priſoner at the office a day or two before.

What was ſhe doing at the office ?—She lodged a complaint againſt a man that lived with her, and ſaid he had robbed her, and I told Mrs Sanders I knew the woman, and I knew where ſhe lived ; I went and took her up, and told her, ſhe had robbed her miſtreſs, ſhe ſaid, ſhe had not, I ſearched her, and found nothing on her, but two or three ſhillings, I ſearched her lodgings and found a guinea and a half there, I found no bank notes there.

Did you find any thing that was claimed by Mrs. Sanders ?—Nothing at all, ſo ſhe told me, that ſhe had ten pounds in her brother's hands, and ſhe would give me that.

Mr. Garrow. What did you ſay to her before ſhe told you that?——I told her, ſhe had better tell where the notes were.

Then do not tell us any thing about it.

Court. Did you know any thing more, except what the priſoner and her brother told you?—No.

Mr. Keys. Did you go back to the proſecutor's houſe with the priſoner?——Yes.

Mr. Garrow. What if he did after this?

HENRY SNOW ſworn.

Did you receive any money from the priſoner at the bar?—Yes, a fortnight laſt Tueſday or Wedneſday, I believe, I am not ſure which.

Court. Fix the time as near as you can?——I believe it was laſt Wedneſday ſe'ennight.

Do you know when the young woman was taken up?——It was on the 10th.

Was it before or after that, that you received the money of her?——The Wedneſday before, the money was fifteen guineas.

Where is the money now?——The conſtable has it.

It was given by you, I believe, to the conſtable, in the preſence of the priſoner?——Yes.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, if this was after what the conſtable has told us, your Lordſhip will not hear it.

When you gave this money to the conſtable, who was by at the time?—My wife and the priſoner were by.

Mr. Keys. The priſoner heard you ſay—

Mr. Garrow. No, no, do not let us hear any thing about what the priſoner heard him ſay.

Court. Let him give an account.

Mr. Keys. Give the Court a full account of what paſſed between the priſoner and you when ſhe gave you the fifteen guineas?—The conſtable came and demanded it of me, the priſoner had given it me before.

At that time, what paſſed between you and her?——She informed me that ſhe was going to be married, and ſhe had got ſome money that ſhe would put in my care, which was fifteen guineas.

Where did ſhe get it, did ſhe tell you?—No.

Did you aſk her whether ſhe had got any more?—No.

What more paſſed between you and her at the time ſhe gave you the money?——There was nothing that I remember.

Nor nothing more paſſed between you and her at any time before ſhe was taken up?——No; ſhe had a relation that died in the country, which had a will lodged in Doctor's Commons, in the firſt place, I went down to ſee her, I went down to Chatham, I believe it is two years and a half ago, and John Franklin had ſome relations that had uſed him very ill; my ſiſter, the priſoner at the bar, was afraid of loſing ſome of her property, and ſhe gave me twenty pounds, four ſhillings, and ſixpence, which I brought away to London, and ſhe had a miſfortune by this ſaid John Franklin, and he was coming up to town to be married to the priſoner, but before that he left ſix guineas in the priſoner's poſſeſſion; that is about two years and a half ago.

Court. How did ſhe come by theſe fifteen guineas?——Here is the will, which is proof.

Mr. Garrow. He means to tell you, that this woman has had a child by Franklin.

DORCAS TUTHILL ſworn.

I received that bundle from one Browning, he brought it to me, his ſiſter lodges with me, her name is Straffer.

Mr. Keys. For what purpoſe was it brought to you?

Mr. Garrow. I muſt object to that.

Court You cannot aſk that.

Mr. Keys. I will tell your Lordſhip.

Mr. Garrow. Now the evidence is to be given by Mr. Keys himſelf, to which I object.

Court. Who did you give it to?—I gave it to Suſannah Straffer.

Was that bundle opened in your preſence?—Yes.

What did it contain?——It contained a callico ſheet, and a half of one, and a piece, and this handkerchief, and a waiſtcoat.

Do you know them to be the ſame that you received?—Yes.

Court. You gave that bundle to Suſannah Straffer?—Yes.

How did it come into your hands again?—The conſtable gave it to me, he had it when he was at the juſtice's.

How long after you had given it to Straffer, was it before you ſaw it again?—Immediately, it was never out of my cuſtody.

Are the things that are in it now, the ſame that were in it then?——Yes, I was with it at the juſtice's; it was out of my ſight when the conſtable had it; I ſaw it given to Blacketer.

Blacketer. I have had it from that time to this.

When you gave that to Blacketer it contained the ſame things that it had when Browning gave it to you?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow to Mrs. Tuthill. I believe you have known the priſoner ſome time?—She lodged at my houſe.

There is ſome little money matter to be ſettled between you?—She lent me ſome money about two years ago.

Which is ſtill unpaid?—Yes.

I believe ſhe took the name of Franklin by your advice?—No.

She conſulted you about it?—No.

Mr. Garrow to Snow. Did you know John Franklin?——Yes.

He is dead?—Yes.

Did he make any will?—He did, I have ſeen the probate of it.

Do you know that ſhe received any money, as the produce of the effects of Franklin from any body?——Yes, upwards of forty or fifty pounds.

When did Franklin die?——Two years and a half ago, about September.

Your ſiſter had been in ſervice at that time?——Yes, ſhe was a year at this Mrs. Tuthill's houſe; I expected ſhe had more money than that by her conſiderably.

Court to Snow. How much in fact do you know, of your own knowledge, the priſoner was ever poſſeſſed of?—She had forty pounds and upwards when ſhe came away from Chatham, I know that myſelf, I ſold all the things off myſelf, and I know ſhe received the money; beſides ſhe received intereſt money at the Bank, and there is a houſe let for four guineas a year, and here is her wages ſtill increaſing, which ſhe muſt in the whole have upwards of ſixty pounds.

Court to Proſecutor. How long did this young woman live with you?——Four months?

At what wages?——Seven pounds a year.

Did you pay her her wages?——Yes, I paid her three months, and then a month that ſhe gave me warning.

Court to Snow. This forty pounds that you ſpeak of is two years ago?—Yes.

Perhaps you know the ſpending of that money as well as the taking of it?—I cannot tell what became of it.

Where has ſhe lived from that time to this?—She was a twelvemonth with Mrs. Tuthill, in town all the time.

How long was it after ſhe received the forty pounds, that ſhe came to London?—In the courſe of three or four days, ſhe had then her own private property of twenty pounds, or upwards; ſhe remained at this Mrs. Tuthill's houſe, where I was a lodger, I believe ſhe lodged there near a twelvemonth; I do not ſuppoſe it coſt her one ſhilling a week, I found her every thing myſelf, except bread and lodging, then you may judge; two ſhillings a week at moſt.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

319. ELIZABETH BECKFORD was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 19th day of January laſt, one quart pewter pot, value 1s. and one pint pewter pot, value 6d. the property of Thomas Alexander; and MARY POWELL was indicted for feloniouſly receiving, on the ſame day and year, the ſame goods, knowing them to have been ſtolen.

THOMAS ALEXANDER ſworn.

On the 19th of January, Elizabeth Briggs, who buys her beer of me, and is one of the witneſſes, came in with Elizabeth Beckford into my tap-room, about ten in the morning, and charged the priſoner Beckford with ſtealing a quart and a pint pot from her houſe, which were my property; the priſoner acknowledged to have taken a pint pot, and offered to leave her apron till ſhe fetched it; ſhe left it and went out, and I afterwards went to ſearch a cellar occupied by the priſoner Powell, and there I found a good deal of pewter, about twelve pounds, melted down; I found no pots.

ELIZABETH BRIGGS ſworn.

On the Saturday night, the 18th of January, Elizabeth Beckford came for a lodging to my houſe, a little before ten at night, and we were at ſupper, and had three pints of beer, and ſhe ſat near the table, and there was a quart pot and a pint pot on the table, and the quart pot was gone while I turned my head; the priſoner was gone into the yard; ſhe had agreed for a lodging at my houſe that night, and when ſhe went out I miſſed the quart pot; ſhe returned in half an hour, contrary to my expectations; there were my brother, and a child, and a maid in the room; ſhe took the pint, and went into the yard, and drew ſome water, and carried it up ſtairs. I ſaid nothing to her that night, but the next morning I watched her, and about eight o'clock I ſaw her come down with the pint pot in her hand; I went to the houſe where I had heard her talk of diſpoſing of theſe things.

And had you heard her talk of this?—Yes, they make a common talk of their buſineſs, they never make any ſecret.

And do you harbour ſuch people?—She told me ſhe had come out of gaol, and never intended to do any thing of the kind again; ſhe had been a fine in Tothill-fields; I followed and miſſed of her; I went into Short's Gardens, and ſhe was not there, and ſhe turned down an alley, and I ſtood in the ſtreet till I ſaw her; I ſaw her at the further end of the ſtreet, and when ſhe ſaw me, ſhe ran away, and we took her to the publican's houſe, and we went to that cellar, and there we found this pewter, and this ſkellet, but no pots.

Where do you live?——Cloſe by St. Giles's workhouſe.

You keep a common lodging houſe?—Yes.

Do you know the criminality and danger of the conduct you have deſcribed in yourſelf, in receiving and harbouring in your houſe, people that make a habit of ſtealing?——She never had laid in my houſe before, I have had ſeveral of them taken up in the neighbourhood, ſince I have lived there; I never would encourage ſuch a thing.

Do you know that you are liable to be indicted as an acceſſary, for harbouring and receiving a felon?——We cannot be anſwerable for ſtrangers that we do not know.

No, but you can for people that you do know; now, by your own account, you knew this woman to be a thief before?——Yes.

Only let me warn you, that the very account you have given yourſelf now, if it had been given by another witneſs, would have made you liable to have been convicted as an acceſſary, therefore, take warning.——My Lord, I deteſt them, I will take warning.

Whoſe pots were thoſe you had?—Mr. Alexander's.

——— ——— ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Alexander, Mrs. Briggs brought a woman to my maſter, and my maſter ſent me to watch where the woman went to, this was after ſhe had left the apron; I watched her up one ſtreet, and down another ſtreet, till ſhe went into a cellar in Bowl-yard, that was Mary Powell's cellar; I followed her down the cellar, and the other gentlewoman, the miſtreſs of the cellar, ſat up in the bed, and ſhe ſaid ſhe believed we were after them, but ſhe thought ſhe had loſt us; they did not ſee me, the door was half ſhut; Powell ſaid, if any body came after her, ſhe would ſay, ſhe only came down there by chance.

Did any converſation paſs about the pots between them?—I heard none; I fetched my maſter.

PRISONER BECKFORD's DEFENCE.

I was at Tothill-fields for a little thing that happend in Covent-garden, I came out that day, I heard my boy was come from ſea, and I came to the Miniſter at St. Giles's to get his regiſter, and I came to this woman's about eight at night for a lodging; ſhe never charged me with any pots; I aſked her for ſomething to carry up a drop of water in, and ſhe gave me this pint pot; I left the pot where I found it, under the bedſide, and the girl aſked me for a drop of water out of it, and they went in and out of the room all night; there were nothing but poor creatures in the room, that were laying there, ſome of them naked; my witneſſes were here on the Saturday; ſhe never ſpoke of the quart pot at the juſtice's, only the pint pot.

Court to Jury. With reſpect to Mary Powell, though her offence, if there were circumſtances to prove it, is by far the moſt aggravated of the two, and this metal, and this priſoner Beckford being found in her cellar, are ſtrong circumſtances that ſhe is concerned in this unlawful buſineſs, yet there is certainly no evidence before us of theſe two pots being found in this cellar.

ELIZABETH BECKFORD,
MARY POWELL, } NOT GUILTY.

Court to Mary Powell. With reſpect to you, I think it right to apprize you of the conſequences of this buſineſs, which you plainly appear to carry on; and however ſmall it may ſeem to you, it is of ſuch a nature in the eye of the law, that if you had been convicted, you would have been tranſported for fourteen years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

320. DAVID BARTLET was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th day of November laſt, one cotton counterpane, value 5s. one woollen blanket, value 4s. and one bolſter, value 2s. the property of Ann Watſon, the ſame things being in a certain lodging room, in the dwelling houſe of the ſaid Ann, let by contract by her to him, to be uſed with the ſaid lodging, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

ANN WATSON ſworn.

I am a ſingle woman, I keep a houſe in Archer-ſtreet, at the top of the Haymarket, and did ſo on the 27th of November laſt; I know the priſoner, he lodged in my houſe in a ready-furniſhed lodging, he had lodged a year and a half in my houſe; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment, I ſaw them before the magiſtrate.

(The things produced and depoſed to.)

I am ſon to the proſecutrix, my wife and me lodged in this room before the priſoner took it; I was preſent when he took it; thoſe things were there then; the priſoner was to pay 3s. 6d. a week, and paid very well till the latter part of the time, and he ſaid when he could pay and get into work he would; I know all theſe things.

Court. Do you know the priſoner?—Yes, I always reckoned him a very honeſt man.

JOHN LIGHTFOOT ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Payne, a pawnbroker, in Wardour-ſtreet; the priſoner brought a white cotton counterpane for nine ſhillings, there is a mark of my own making on it; on the 5th of November he brought me a blanket for two ſhillings, and the 27th of November, a bolſter for two ſhillings, I marked them both, I have often ſeen the man.

Court. You have vaſt numbers of people come to your ſhop?—Yes.

Can you ſafely ſwear it was the priſoner that brought theſe things?—That I can ſafely do, I have ſeen him very often; the things have been in poſſeſſion of the proſecutrix for a week paſt; Mrs. Watſon's ſon fetched them from our ſhop.

Watſon. They have been in my cuſtody till laſt night, the ſheriffs porter locked them up laſt night in the room.

JOHN HARPER ſworn.

Court. Did Watſon give you any thing to take care of ?—Yes, ſomething of a blanket and a counterpane.

Was there any thing elſe ?—I did not ſee the inſide.

Did you lock it up immediately ?—Yes.

Is that the ſame bundle ?—Yes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I did it through neceſſity.

GUILTY.

Mr. Watſon. I hope you will not paſs a heavy ſentence upon him, he has a wife and three ſmall children.

Jury. My Lord, we wiſh to recommend him too, he appears to have been in diſtreſs.

Court to Priſoner. In conſideration of your diſtreſſed condition, and as the Court are informed that you are in a very bad ſtate of health, and have been ſome time in gaol, the ſentence of the Court is, "That you be privately whipped and diſcharged."

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

321. JOHN STEVENS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th day of January laſt, one cloth coat, value 20s. and one ſilk waiſtcoat, value 10s. the property of John Law.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of Mr. Garrow, the priſoner's Council.

JOHN LAW ſworn.

On the 27th of January, I loſt a coat and a waiſtcoat, I left the coat in care of Mrs. Underhill, I have ſeen it ſince and the waiſtcoat; I know the priſoner, I ſaw him at his mother's houſe at Stepney.

(Produced.)

Mr. Garrow. I believe Mr. Stevens lives at the World's-end ?—Yes.

What World's-end ?—At Stepney.

Does he lodge in the houſe of Mrs. Underhill ?—No, he lodges along with his mother.

Has not Mrs. Underhill an apartment there ?—Yes.

Do you owe the priſoner any money ?—No.

Never did ?—No.

Court. Where do you live ?—About thirty yards from the ſame houſe, I am a ſhipwright.

SARAH UNDERHILL ſworn.

I have lived at Stepney ever ſince laſt June, in the houſe where the priſoner lives, this coat and waiſtcoat were left in my charge by Mr. Law, on Chriſtmas day, or the day after; it was a light coloured coat, and a purple ſilk waiſtcoat, and the coat was lined in the fore part with ſilk of another colour; I never miſſed them till the man was taken up, the proſecutor never applied to me for them.

Mr. Garrow. Mrs. Underhill, pray what may you be ?—Why a woman, I believe.

You are no trade ?—No.

You carry on no buſineſs ?—No.

Are you a married woman, or a ſingle woman ?—Married.

Then your huſband perhaps is ſomething elſe beſides a man, what is he ?——A caulker.

What is Mr. Law ?—He is a carpenter, and goes to ſea.

Is not he a ſailor ?—A carpenter.

Are not theſe very fine clothes for a carpenter, very fine things with ſilk linings ?——I do not know, they were given to me to put by.

You are quite ſure as to them ?—Quite ſure.

How lately had you ſeen them before the priſoner was taken up ?——I had not ſeen them a great while before, I put them in the cheſt, not locked, but my door was always locked, and I always found it locked.

You lodge in the houſe of the priſoner's mother ?—Yes.

Some little money matters between yu and them?——No; I was always in the room.

What always ſitting watching this coat and waiſtcoat?—No.

Court. Does your huſband live with you now?—To be ſure, he never lived from me.

Have you two keys?—Only one key between us; I have ſix rooms, I have no ſervant, the priſoner, his mother, ſiſter, and me, live in the houſe, his mother keeps no lodging houſe.

Mr. Garrow. You have by much the largeſt part of this houſe?——I have ſix rooms.

Do you occupy ſix rooms;——Yes, I could not get a licence, becauſe it was reported it was ſuch a bad houſe; it is not a public houſe now.

Was it licenſed before?—Yes, for many years.

But when you and your huſband, people of the firſt morality and virtue, went there, you could not get a licence?——Upon the account of the people that lives in it, the juſtices would not licence it.

WILLIAM ELLEY ſworn.

I am headborough of St. Paul's, Shadwell, I apprehended the priſoner, and found a duplicate on him that he ſadly wanted to keep from me, it is a duplicate of a coat and waiſtcoat; I went with the proſecutor to the pawnbroker's, the priſoner ſaid the coat and waiſtcoat were his own, and deſired me to give him the duplicate back again; I ſaw at the pawnbroker's a light coloured coat, with a ſilk lining, or ſomething of that ſort, I believe it was ſilk; the things were produced before Juſtice Green, and the proſecutor ſwore to them.

Mr. Garrow. Where did you apprehend the priſoner?—At his mother's, at his lodgings, where theſe things were taken out.

Why, you are a very ready witneſs, how do you know where they were taken out; why it was only laſt Tueſday you was informed of this?—I do not know what you want me to ſay.

I aſked you a plain queſtion, I only wanted an anſwer to it; you went to the pawnbroker's?——I found the duplicate in the priſoner's purſe.

Yes, and you took the purſe?—Yes.

When you took the purſe out, the man wanted his duplicate back again?—Yes.

He liked it a good deal better in his own hands than in your's?—Yes.

How far is it to the juſtice's?—A mile.

How did you go there?—Upon my legs.

What is Law?—I have ſeen him two or three times this ſeſſion.

WILLIAM HARPER ſworn.

I live at Mr. Birne's a pawnbroker, that duplicate is my hand writing, on the 27th of January, the priſoner brought the clothes to me.

Court. Had you ever ſeen the man before that brought them?——Not to my knowledge.

You have a great many people I dare ſay come to you in the courſe of buſineſs?—Yes.

I wiſh you would look at the priſoner, and tell the Jury whether you are ſatisfied that he is the man?—I am quite clear, I have no doubt about it, I ſaw him ſince at the Juſtice's.

(The coat and waiſtcoat produced.)

Mr. Garrow. How many more gentlemen of your deſcription does Mr. Birne retain?—His ſon and a boy.

After you had this coat and waiſtcoat in, what did you do with it?—It was put in the warehouſe, I billed it and booked it.

Will you ſwear you put it into the warehouſe?—I will not.

Then I am right in ſuppoſing that for ought you know you left it on the counter?—Perhaps I might.

Perhaps then it might have been removed by ſomebody in the houſe?—Yes.

The duplicate itſelf contains no deſcription of the coat or waiſtcoat?—It does not.

By what do you affect to identify the priſoner?—When he came I objected to taking them, I thought the coat too fine with a ſilk lining, I aſked him whoſe coat and waiſtcoat it was, he ſaid it was his own, he ſaid, he was a bricklayer by trade, and had been out of work ſome time, and if I doubted it, he would try them on, but they appeared to be his ſize; and I knew him again at the Juſtice's.

My queſtion is, by what do you pretend to ſwear that that is the man that gave you the coat and waiſtcoat?—By his being ſome time in the ſhop, and my ſaying theſe things to him; we have a vaſt number of people.

What ſize is your ſhop?—Rather a large ſhop and a pretty large window.

And ſomething hung up in it that obſcures it a little?—Yes.

Is your ſhop cupboarded off in the old ſtyle?—You mean thoſe places that people come in that do not chuſe to be expoſed.

Yes, how many of thoſe places have you?——Three.

Did the priſoner come into one of thoſe places?—Yes, but there was light enough, I ſuppoſe he was in the ſhop ten minutes.

Do not ſuppoſe, but ſwear ſomething about it, will you ſwear he was there five minutes?—Yes.

Will you ſwear to ten?—No.

You never ſaw the man before in the whole courſe of your life?——Not to my knowledge.

And you firſt ſaw him afterwards at the Juſtice's in the character of a felon, charged with this offence, and were told a duplicate had been found upon him?—I immediately recollected the priſoner.

If you had met that man in Fleet-market on the day you ſaw him at the Juſtice's, ſhould you have known him?—I ſhould have recollected he was one of my cuſtomers.

Court. The moment they applied for theſe things did you immediately fetch this coat and waiſtcoat?——I ſent the boy for them.

Did you at that time recollect that theſe were the things that were pawned by the priſoner?—I did not then immediately.

Mr. Garrow. You do not univerſally give duplicates?—No.

They pay you for them?—Yes.

Do people that pledge things that are ſtolen take duplicates?—Sometimes.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Yeſterday was eight weeks, I was coming from Wapping New-ſtairs, and coming through Sun Tavern Fields, about ſeven o'clock acroſs Farmer Cole's Fields, the cow-keeper, there was a man and a woman together, and they had each of them a heavy bundle, they walked forward, and juſt as I got through the poſt, I kicked my foot againſt this bundle, there was a large blanket, a coat and waiſtcoat, and a pair of ſtockings in it, which I brought home with me, my witneſſes did not expect my trial being on.

323. JAMES BIGNELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th of January laſt, one wicker baſket, value 5s. five quartern loaves of wheaten bread, value 3s. three threepenny loaves, value 9d. and two twopenny loaves, value 4d. the property of Alexander Dawer.

SAMUEL REEVES ſworn.

I am a victualler, I keep the King's Arms in Caſtle-ſtreet, Long Acre, on January the 16th, in the morning about eleven o'clock, the priſoner came in my houſe, I never

I never ſaw him before, but I am ſure he is the man, he had in his arms, three quartern loaves, three threepenny, and two twopenny; he called for a penny-worth of purl, and paid for it, and he aſked me if I would be kind enough to take care of that bread, till he fetched his baſket, and I told him I would; in about an hour after, the proſecutor came in, and I heard him ſay to my wife, my man has loſt his baſket and all his bread, ſhe told him a man had left ſome bread there, and he looked at it, and ſaid, it was all his, I ſaw his name on one of the loaves; in the evening the priſoner came again, he ſaid, he came honeſtly by it, a man gave it him; the proſecutor being a conſtable took him in poſſeſſion.

Proſecutor. I took the bread, and brought it before a Magiſtrate, and he told me to ſave a loaf, I did ſo, but it all went to pieces in the handkerchief.

Court. At the time you went back to this publican, you examined the loaves?—I did, and they were all my property.

THOMAS DUNCOMB ſworn.

I am a baker, and was ſervant to the proſecutor in January laſt, I pitched my baſket in Middle-row, and went to a cuſtomer's, and when I returned it was gone, there were five quartern loaves, three threepenny, and two twopenny; this was a little before eleven o'clock, I ſaw them at night at Mr. Reeves's, my maſter's mark was on the loaves, I found the baſket empty, within ſix doors of Mr. Reeves's, at half paſt eleven.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I lodge at the Brown Bear in Grafton-ſtreet, a young man came by my door with a baſket of bread, I aſked him for a place, and he bid me lend him a hand, he pitched his baſket at the top of Grafton-ſtreet, under the cheeſemonger's ſhop; he gave me five quartern, three threepenny, and two twopenny loaves into my arms, and came down Great Earl-ſtreet, and he bad me go into a houſe and leave them, and get a penny-worth of purl, I did ſo, and I went into Covent Garden with him, and came back again, I went to five or ſix houſes, and he ſent me to the Brown Bear again, and he ſaid, he would come to me, I went there, and I thought he would fetch the bread himſelf.

325. JOHN BAYLIS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 29th of January laſt, three ſilver bridges for ſhoe buckles, value 1s. and half an ounce of ſilver, value 2s. the property of Thomas Lowndes and Edward Lycett.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner.

EDWARD LYCETT ſworn.

On the 24th of January, me and my partner counted over our ſtock, and we found a conſiderable deficiency in our ſilver ſtock; I believe it was to the amount of forty or fifty pounds, it was in ſilver filing and bridges, it was unwrought ſilver, and I knew it was impoſſible to ſwear to it, unleſs it was marked; I aſked the caſter if he could make an inciſion in the ſand, ſo that the bridges ſhould come out with a particular mark, that we could ſwear to it; on the Wedneſday evening I fetched home 21 bridges marked, and four which we had already in the ſhop, I marked them myſelf with a vice, ſqueezed them in a vice, this was after the men had left work, and I took a board off the ſtairs, that I could look into the ſhop undiſcovered by them; the next morning, I was watching on the ſtairs, I was about three yards from the priſoner, he had worked for me about three months, I had the evening before taken the work down into the kitchen, for the firſt man that came to work, and about half paſt ſix in the morning, I was looking through this place, and I ſaw the priſoner forging down the bridges, in order to make two out of one, I then ſaw him put ſomething into his pocket, and take notice that the other men did not ſee him, and then he began to work again; that furniſhed me with ſuſpicion that he had ſomething more than he ought to have, I ſtopped there till a little after ſeven, and came up into the ſhop, the priſoner ſaid there are not bridges enough for the buckles, and I have forged them down to make them do; I found there were ſix bridges forged in order to make twelve of, and he told me ſo; I examined the buckles that had bridges gone, to know how many bridges there really were in the ſhop, and I found four bridges upon two buckles, and there were two other bridges more forged down but not cut through, and there were eleven others; then I found there were two miſſing out of the twenty-five, I reckoned the bridges in their orginal ſtate, I then counted them over and over myſelf, I wiſhed to ring the men down one by one, when the priſoner came down, he put on his hat and was going ſtrait to the door, I run out of the parlour to him, and ſtopped him at the door, and told him I wanted to ſpeak to him, he ſeemed a good deal confuſed, and told me he was going over to the Horſe-ſhoe, a public-houſe, and ſaid he would come back directly; I brought him from the door to the kitchen, and he came with very much reluctance, I told him we had been robbed, and I was determined to ſearch them all, he ſaid I was in the right of it, he then run up ſtairs, I followed him up eight or nine ſtairs, I caught hold of him by the coat, and inſiſted upon his coming down ſtairs, and he came down with me after ſome heſitation, he attempted to go towards the door, I put my hand into his pocket, and he put his own hand in and pulled out two bridges, and ſix pieces of ſilver bridges, which are of no uſe but to the melting-pot; I then gave charge of him, he ſeemed very deſirous that morning of going out, and I inſiſted on all the men going into the ſhop, after we went to the Juſtices, Baylis went out of the ſhop againſt my deſire, a perſon who lived in the houſe went to Baylis's houſe, and found ſome ſilver, which I could not ſwear to.

What quantity?—I have the quantity with me, I have not weighed it, it may be ſeven or eight ounces.

Mr. Garrow, Council for the Priſoner. It was a part of the buſineſs of the man at the bar to put on the bridges of the buckles?—Certainly, among the reſt.

There were ſeveral other men who worked in the ſame place with him?—Yes.

Now is it by any means unuſual to put them in their pockets?——They have no buſineſs to put them in their pockets.

This man was going to get his breakfaſt?—Yes, he ſaid he was, it was not nine o'clock, he had his coat on, and his hat on, his great coat was in the ſhop.

You cannot ſwear to the ſmall pieces of ſilver?—No.

Did you find any plate at his apartments?—No.

Deſcribe the ſituation in which this peep-hole was, that you watched the priſoner through?—At the top of the ſtairs, there had been a door, there was only a wainſcot that parted the ſhop from the ſtairs, I took down a board.

I ſhould ſuppoſe that the window of the work-ſhop faced the peep-hole?—Yes.

The man was between you and the window?—Yes.

I ſuppoſe the men worked with their faces to the light?—Yes.

Conſequently the men were between you and the window, now I want to know whether you can ſee through a man, that is my ſhort queſtion, becauſe this man was ſtanding with his back to you ?—He did, but not when he put the bridges in his pocket.

When he was forging them down he ſtood with his back to you ?—Yes.

He told you after, that for the purpoſe of multiplying bridges he had forged them down ?—He did.

Then he would be to account for ſo many as he had multiplyed them into ?——Certainly, but no man does account.

You had no reaſon before to doubt of his being an honeſt man ?—No, only my general ſuſpicion of all my ſhop.

You ſaid your defect conſiſted chiefly of filings ?—Of filings and bridges.

JAMES TERRY ſworn.

I know nothing more of this matter than making the bridges.

ROBERT MULCASTER ſworn.

I ſearched the left-hand breeches pocket of the priſoner, and found nothing but money, I felt his waiſtcoat pockets, and found they were worn out, and could hold nothing, I came to his right-hand breeches pocket, and was going to put my hand in, he puſhed my hand away, ſtop ſays he, and he put his hand into his pocket, and pulled out the ſilver, and gave it into my hands.

How many bridges are there ?—There is two bridges no way deficient, there is another bridge that is hammered and doubled to.

Did he ſay any thing ?—I ſearched him in every other pocket, and Mr. Lycett then ſaid, give them into my charge, and the man ſaid, he did not intend to take them away.

Did you ſearch his lodgings ?—No.

Court. Of what uſe are the other pieces of ſilver ?—Of no uſe but to work.

Proſecutor. The priſoner aſked to ſpeak with me in the parlour and he told me.

Court. Did you ſay any thing to him before he ſpoke to you ?—No. I had given charge of him, and was going up ſtairs.

When you went into the parlour, did you ſpeak to him firſt ?—No, he ſpoke to me, he ſaid it was the firſt time, and he hoped I would have mercy on him, I turned away from him.

Mr. Garrow. I believe you attended afterwards at the Rotation Office in Clerkenwell Green ?—Yes.

Did you tell the juſtice there what had paſſed in the parlour ?—I believe I did; this bridge is one of them that Mr. Terry marked; this is one that I marked. (The bridge depoſed to).

Recollect a little, becauſe it is of ſome conſequence to the defendant, whether you told the juſtice what had paſſed in the parlour ?—I cannot be ſure whether I did or not.

Aye, but you muſt endeavour to recollect yourſelf, becauſe you know it is a ſubſequent fact to that ?—I cannot charge my memory whether I did or did not; I mentioned it before Sir Sampſon Wright at Bow-ſtreet.

Did you mention it at Clerkenwell-green ?—If I did not, my partner did.

What he was ſpokeſman ?—Any body was ſpokeſman, we were inſulted in the face of the Court.

Cannot you tell me, yea or no, that you did ſay ſo ?—I cannnot charge my memory.

Will you ſwear you did not ?—No, by no means, nor I cannot ſwear that I did.

In conſequence of the examination that took place at the Rotation Office, this man was diſcharged ?—He was.

And afterwards he was taken up by a new warrant and carried to Bow-ſtreet ?—Yes.

There you told the ſtory of the parlour ?—Yes.

Be ſo good to recollect exactly, and ſtate it in words, what paſſed between him and you in the parlour ?—He ſaid, I wiſh to ſpeak to my maſter; I came down ſtairs, and went with him to the parlour, and he ſaid it is the firſt time, I hope you will have compaſſion or mercy; I turned round from him.

Had not you at that time ſaid, compaſſion! why you have ſtole my plate ?—I need not tell him that.

Had you told him that he had ſtole it ?—No.

Then this expreſſion might mean this, have compaſſion on my character, perhaps he meant that ?—I told the men that we had been robbed to a very conſiderable amount, and that it muſt be ſome men in the ſhop; he did not tell me then that he had any ſilver in his pocket.

The priſoner called three witneſſes, who gave him a very good character.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

326. WILLIAM WADE was indicted for that he, on the 15th day of January laſt, and continually afterwards to the 24th of the ſaid month, at the pariſh of St. John the Evangeliſt, Weſtminſter, having, during all the time aforeſaid there, the cuſtody, care and management of one Conſtance Froſt his apprentice, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did neglect and refuſe to allow and give, or permit and ſuffer to be allowed and given to the ſaid Conſtance, ſufficient food, drink and neceſſaries to ſupport her life, he having her care, cuſtody and management as his apprentice as aforeſaid, and alſo that he the ſaid William on the ſaid 20th day of January, and to the 24th of the ſaid month, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did neglect and refuſe to provide, allow, and give or permit, and ſuffer to be provided, allowed, and given proper wholeſome and convenient lodging for the ſaid Conſtance Froſt, but that he on the night of the ſaid 20th of January, and to the 24th of the ſaid month, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did force and compel the ſaid Conſtance Froſt, to be and remain in a damp and wet cellar belonging to his dwelling houſe, without neceſſary and convenient bed, bedding, cloathing and covering, and without allowing her the ſaid Conſtance, ſufficient food and neceſſaries as aforeſaid; and that ſhe the ſaid Conſtance being ſo compelled by the ſaid William Wade to be and remain in ſuch damp and wet cellar as aforeſaid, on the ſaid 20th of January, became mortally ſick and diſeaſed in her body, and ſhe the ſaid Conſtance, from the ſaid 20th of January to the 24th of the ſaid month, did languiſh, and languiſhing did live, and on the ſaid 24th day of January, ſhe the ſaid Conſtance Froſt, by ſuch neglect and refuſal of the ſaid William Wade, to allow and give her ſufficient maintenance to ſupport her life, and alſo by being forced and compelled by the ſaid William Wade to be and remain in the ſaid damp and wet cellar without proper and neceſſary bed, bedding, cloathing and covering as aforeſaid, did miſerably periſh and die; and that he the ſaid William Wade, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, her the ſaid Conſtance Froſt did kill and murder.

The ſaid William Wade was alſo charged on the coroner's inquiſition, with the wilful murder of the ſaid Conſtance Froſt.

THOMAS LAMBERT ſworn.

I only attend as an officer of the pariſh. I was bound over by the coroner.

JOHN VAUGHAN ſworn.

I am a lodger in the priſoner's houſe.

Court. Did you lodge there in the month of January laſt ?——Yes.

Did you know the priſoner's apprentice girl, Conſtance Froſt ?——Very well.

When did ſhe die ?——On Saturday the 24th of January.

When did you know of her death ?——I knew that morning, I was the perſon that firſt ſaw her.

Where did you ſee her ?—— I ſaw her in the cellar, ſhe had tumbled out of the bed in a fit I imagine.

Do not tell us what you imagine, but deſcribe the ſituation in which you firſt ſaw her ?—When I firſt ſaw her ſhe was on her knees, ſeemingly as if ſhe had tumbled out of bed, with her under petticoat on.

What time of the morning was it?——About ten.

Was ſhe leaning againſt any thing?——Her head might be againſt the wall, for ought I know; ſhe was almoſt upon her face, her head either reſted againſt the wall, or againſt ſomething that was near the wall.

How came you to go into the cellar?—Her miſtreſs deſired me to go down, ſhe had called her, and ſhe did not anſwer, only ſaid, Hah!

Do you know whether Mrs. Wade had been down or not?—I do not know, I rather believe not.

You do not know with certainty?——I do not.

Was the priſoner at home?—No.

When you ſaw her in that poſture, did you ſpeak to her, or go up to her?—I called to her, but ſhe did not anſwer, and I lifted her upon the bed, and put a blanket over her.

In what ſituation did ſhe appear to you to be in when you lifted her upon the bed?—When I lifted her upon the bed, I thought ſhe had been quite dead, but as ſoon as I lifted her up, ſhe fetched a ſigh; I put a blanket over her.

Go on, and relate what you ſaw and what paſſed?——Then I was ſent immediately for a doctor.

Who ſent you?—Mr. Gaunt, the pariſh officer.

How came he there?—He came in juſt at the time, I had not been in I ſuppoſe a minute before he came.

Did you bring a doctor?—I went to the doctor's houſe, and he ſaid he would come immediately, and he did come in a few minutes.

What was his name?——I think his name was Davis; I do not recollect his name.

Where does he live?—In Parliament-ſtreet, I think it is; he came, as I was informed, I do not recollect ſeeing him.

What ſort of a cellar was this?—A brick cellar, the bottom was done with bricks, it is a brick floor.

What doors or windows has it?—One window and a door.

What ſort of a window?—A window fronting the ſtreet.

But what ſort of a window is it?—I believe it is a kind of flap to put down.

Not a glazed window?——No, not a glazed window, it ſhuts down cloſe with a flap.

Have you obſerved it?——Yes, I have obſerved it.

Was the floor of the cellar wet or dry?——It was wet, there was water in the cellar, which came in, I believe, at the ſpring tide.

Where is Mr. Wade's houſe?—In Tufton-ſtreet, Weſtminſter, there was water in the cellar then, and there was water on the far ſide, there was a very little water near the bed.

Was there a bed in the cellar?——There was a bed in the cellar that ſhe laid on.

How long had you lodged in this houſe?—About four or five days, I believe.

Had the deceaſed laid in the cellar during that time?——I believe ſhe did, I do not know perfectly.

Was that bed laid on the floor, or on any bedſtead?——It was laid on two rabbit hutches.

What ſort of things are thoſe, deſcribe them?—They are ſquare things, like packing caſes or boxes.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

THE WHOLE
PROCEEDINGS
UPON THE
KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of William Wade.

How far was it raiſed from the floor?—Between two and three feet.

What bedding was there on the bed?—There were two blankets, and I believe a ſheet or coverlid, it was ſomething white, I believe it was a quilt.

You ſay you put a blanket over her when you laid her on the bed?—I did.

Did you obſerve whether that blanket was wet or dry?—No, I did not at all obſerve that in my fright, I cannot pretend to ſay whether it was wet or dry.

You had been four or five days in this houſe before?—Yes.

Did you obſerve in what manner the priſoner behaved to this girl, or how ſhe was treated in the family?——I never ſaw him treat her ill, the priſoner lodged at my houſe three months before he came to that houſe, and he had the apprentice then; he had left his ſhop that he lived in, and came to my houſe till he got another houſe.

In what manner was the deceaſed treated in the family?—I never obſerved but what ſhe was treated very well, during the time ſhe was at my houſe.

But during the time preceding her death, that you lived in the priſoner's houſe, in what manner was ſhe treated in the family?——I did not ſee any alteration, ſhe ſeemed as uſual.

Speak at once, Sir.—I do not know that ſhe was treated ill at all, ſhe was treated very well for ought I know.

You never obſerved any ill treatment?—I never obſerved any ill treatment; I met her the evening before in the paſſage, in the duſk of the evening, carrying a pail of water, but I do not know that I ſaw her after that evening.

Did you obſerve any thing particular then?—No, nothing particular, ſhe ſeemed to me as uſual.

In what manner was ſhe fed in the family?—That I cannot pretend to ſay.

Did you board in the houſe?—No, I did not, I had a wife and family who lodged there too.

Were you uſually at home at meal times? Yes.

Do you know whether this girl lived with the family, with Wade and his wife, or how ſhe was victualled?——Why with Wade and his wife.

Have you ever ſeen her victualled with them ?——Yes, at the other houſe I have.

During the time ſhe was with Wade this laſt four or five days, I confine myſelf to ?—I do not recollect whether I did or no.

Where you at home at meal times ?——Yes, at home I was, but I had no buſineſs in their apartments.

Did you happen to obſerve them during theſe few days or not ?—I do not recollect I did.

What appearance had this girl for three or four days preceding the time of her death ?——I did not ſee any thing particular the matter with her, ſhe looked freſh and well in the face as ſhe always did.

Did ſhe look reduced in fleſh ?—I did not obſerve ſhe did.

Did ſhe then look freſh and well in the face ?——She did.

Now you ſaw the cellar, and the bed and bedding, as you have deſcribed it to us, from the appearance of it to you, taking all together, the cellar, the bed and bedding, did it ſeem to you as a fit place for any body to ſleep in ?—The bed was fit enough, but I do not ſay the cellar was a fit place for any body to ſleep in, becauſe of the water coming in.

Did you ever hear the deceaſed complain of any ill treatment, or of any want of neceſſaries ?—No, never.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. This bed where ſhe lay was three feet from the floor ?—Yes.

If I underſtand right, this is a brick floor, and uneven ?——I do not think it is even.

Were theſe hutches where the floor was dry ?——I do not know, but there was not much water there.

Was that the drieſt part of the cellar ?—Of the cellar it was.

And this girl had never complained ?—No.

After the officers had been there, you, I believe, told the priſoner that you had heard them ſay, that he would be taken up for it, what did he ſay ?——I told him of it.

Did he go off ?—He went off about his buſineſs, but he ſaid he ſhould not run away, for he had done nothing.

Did you ſee the body afterwards ?——Yes.

Was there any marks of violence?

Court. There are no marks of violence charged in this indictment at all, the marks of violence are wholly out of the queſtion; it is charged in the indictment, that intending to ſtarve and kill the deceaſed, the priſoner did feloniouſly, and ſo on, neglect and refuſe to allow and give, or permit and ſuffer to be allowed and given, to the ſaid Conſtance, ſufficient food, drink, and neceſſaries, to ſupport her life; and did alſo neglect to provide and furniſh, or permit and ſuffer to be provided and furniſhed, proper and wholeſome lodging for the ſaid Conſtance, but did force and compel her to be and remain in a damp and wet cellar, belonging to his ſaid dwelling houſe, without proper and neceſſary bed and bedding, by means of which ſhe languiſhed and died.

Mr. Sylveſter. Had ſhe at all the appearance of a perſon being ſtarved ?——Not in the leaſt in her face.

Now, as to the bed, there was ſufficient bed and bedding ?—There was for any perſon to lay in.

The evening before, you ſaw her with a pail of water ?——Yes, in the duſk of the evening, I met her in the paſſage.

Did you obſerve any weakneſs then, particularly ?—No, I did not obſerve any thing, ſhe was about her work as uſual.

Jury. As you had a family in the houſe, what part of the houſe had you ?——The one pair of ſtairs only.

No part of the kitchen ?—No, I had nothing to do with it.

Court. What family had Wade ?——A wife and two children.

Had he any lodgers but you ?—Yes, a man and his wife lodged in the garret.

What rooms did the houſe conſiſt of ?—Only one room on each floor, two ſtories high; the ground floor conſiſted of the kitchen, then the parlour, then the one pair of ſtairs, then the two pair of ſtairs; the one pair of ſtairs conſiſted of one room and a cloſet.

Where did Wade and his family ſleep?—In the parlour.

Who ſlept in the two pair of ſtairs?—The other lodgers, a man and his wife, that was the garret.

Mr. Sylveſter. You mean by the ground floor, the bottom floor where the girl lay?—Yes.

The next floor is where Wade and his wife lay?—Yes.

Court. Is not the kitchen and the parlour level with the ſtreet?—The kitchen is not level with the ſtreet, the parlour is level with the ſtreet, it is under that.

Where is the cellar?—It is the ſame.

Do they cook their victuals in the cellar?—They do not cook their victuals there, it is a cellar or kitchen.

What was there on the ground floor?—That cellar was on the ground floor.

Is not it under ground?—Yes.

Then why do you ſay it is upon the ground?——There muſt be ground below it.

Do you think that a proper anſwer to give in a Court of Juſtice; do not you underſtand that that floor which is level with the ground, is called the ground floor, and that which is under ground is called the under ground floor.—The parlour is what I call the ground floor.

Did Wade and his wife lay, and cook their victuals in the parlour?—Yes.

JOHN GAUNT ſworn.

I am the ordinary overſeer of the pariſh of St. Margaret's and St. John's, they are united pariſhes.

Court. Do you know any fact that has any connection with the ſubject of this charge, previous to the Saturday morning when you went to the houſe of Mr. Wade?——On the Thurſday before, which is the 22d of January I was at the workhouſe board, which we have in the pariſh every Thurſday, and William Wade came to the board with a complaint, that Conſtance Froſt had ſpoiled two beds, and requeſted we would take the girl back, and exchange her for another; the board thought it rather an extraordinary requeſt as well as myſelf, and they deſired me to call and ſee the girl, in conſequence of which, I called on the Saturday morning following.

Was Wade himſelf at home?——No.

Who did you ſee when you came there?——Mrs. Wade; I went, as it is a cuſtom with me, generally of a Saturday, to go amongſt the poor of the pariſh; accordingly, I appointed that morning to call, as the board deſired me to call any morning between that and the Thurſday following to report it; I knocked at the door, and Mrs. Wade came to the door; I aſked if Mr. Wade was at home; ſhe replied, no; ſays I, have not you a girl of the name of Conſtance Froſt, your apprentice; yes, ſhe ſaid; ſays I, can I ſee her, where is ſhe; in the cellar ſays ſhe; ſays I, will you be ſo good to call her up and let me ſee her; yes, ſays ſhe, but I believe ſhe is not well.

Court. The priſoner not being at home, we cannot take what his wife ſaid as evidence; but in conſequence of this converſation, did you go down into the cellar?—I did.

Who did you find there?—Before I got down to the bottom of the cellar, I ſaw a perſon, which was Vaughan, with a candle in his hand, looking at the girl.

In what ſituation was the girl at that time?—She was upon theſe rabbet hutches, I believe, but I am not ſure.

What ſort of things are the rabbet hutches?——I do not exactly know, they have been two old package boxes, or ſomething of that kind; when I got down to the bottom of the ſtairs, Mr. Vaughan ſaid, I believe the girl is dead; then I went to the bottom of the ſtairs, and I looked at her, ſays I, Good God! ſurely not; I ſuppoſe he and I ſtood about a minute, he with the candle in his hand, and the girl fetched a ſigh; I ſaid to Mr. Vaughan, go up ſtairs, and go for a doctor immediately; I wrote a note to Mr. Churchill, who is our apothecary, "Mr. Churchill, pleaſe to ſend Mr. "Jones, to No. 20, Tufton-ſtreet, immediately, « mediately, for there is a child dying." I went out of the houſe to ſee for Wade, I ſent Vaughan off as I could, and aſked Mrs. Wade where Wade was, if I could ſee him; ſhe told me he was then in Tothill-ſtreet, baking his gingerbread; I called and aſked if there was no woman to be got to take this girl up ſtairs; I deſired her to take a dry blanket off the bed that was in the parlour, and carry it down ſtairs.

What convenience was there for the girl to lay on?—I believe there was a bed and two blankets; theſe blankets were very damp and wet, I apprehend either from the girl herſelf, or from laying ſome part of them on the ground.

Were they all damp and wet?—I felt the part that was juſt by the bedſide, and that I ſuppoſe had got wet from the ground.

Did you obſerve whether there was any ſheet or coverlid, or any thing of that ſort?—Upon my word, I did not.

Did any phyſical man come?—This was all in I ſuppoſe two minutes; I aſked, have you got no lodger to aſſiſt to get the girl up ſtairs to bed, that was in the floor they ſlept in, I called out, and at laſt a woman came down, and I told her to get ſome aſſiſtance and get the girl up ſtairs, which ſhe did, in the mean time I went to ſee for Wade where I heard he was baking, I came there, he was not in the place, I ran immediately to the churchwarden, and deſired him to come and look at the girl, before I returned they had got the girl up.

The girl did not recover?—No; before I returned Mr. Jones had been there, and ſhe was dead.

When did you firſt ſee Wade?—He came home in the mean time, when I came back with the churchwarden, there was an inquiſition called, and he remained at home, he was taken up in the evening.

Did you obſerve the cellar in which this girl lay?—I did.

From the obſervation that you made of it, and your own view of it, and the ſituation in which you found it, did it appear a proper place for any body to lay in?—I did not think ſo.

Mr. Peate, another of Priſoner's Council. You found no obſtruction in going down?—No.

Not in the leaſt?—No.

Did you take any obſervation of the bed?—The bed ſeemed very wet.

Was it a tolerable one of the kind?——Had it been in a proper place I preſume the bed was pretty well for an apprentice.

Wade remained at home all day?—I do not know, he was found at home.

Had you received any complaint from the child in any part of the time of her having been with the priſoner?——No, Sir.

Not at any time?——No.

How long had ſhe been diſpoſed of by the pariſh to the priſoner?——From the 20th of June.

Are her parents alive?——I do not know.

You never received any complaint from her, or from any perſon on her behalf?—No.

THOMAS CHILD ſworn.

Do you know any thing reſpecting this matter?—I have ſeen this child crying very much in the back yard, and Mr. Wade has been with her in the yard at the ſame time, and at different times.

What did ſhe cry for?—I do not know.

Did you hear any complaint of want, or proper neceſſaries?—No, I have heard him tell her in this bitter ſevere weather, when he has been in the yard with her, that ſhe ſhould not come to the fire all the day.

You have heard Wade ſay ſo?—Yes, I have.

What during all that ſevere weather?—Yes.

Mr. Sylveſter. You lodge in the garret?—Yes.

You did not board with the family?—No.

How long did you lodge in the houſe?—Between five and ſix days I believe.

How long has Wade been there?——About three weeks or a month.

During the time that he was there, did you ever obſerve at meal times, whether the apprentice dined with the family, or how ſhe was victualled ?—No, I generally went out about my buſineſs in the morning.

SARAH MATHEWS ſworn.

I went to the chandler's ſhop, and a woman came in, and aſked for ſomebody to help her to move the child, and I went in, and ſhe lighted a candle, and I ſaid what is that for, and ſhe lifted up the things, and the child lay dead, with her head back, and her eyes open, and her mouth open. I immediately went up to Mrs. Wade, and told her I thought ſhe was a brute, to put any creature there, I thought it was not a fit place for any body to lay in.

Court to Vaughan. How long had the poor child laid in the cellar ?—I do not know how many days, three or four days, not above four or five nights.

Jury. The Jury wiſh to know, as ſhe had laid but a few nights in the cellar, where ſhe had laid before ?—I was told ſhe lay in the room I had before.

Who were you told ſo by ?—By Wade.

How long had you been in the lodging ? —About four or five days.

CAROLINE DRAKE ſworn.

What do you know of this matter ?—I live next door to the priſoner, I keep a ſhop there.

Did you know the deceaſed ?—By frequent coming in and out of errands to my ſhop, ſhe has more than once or twice aſked me for bread.

How long before ſhe died ?——Within the ſpace of two or three days, as near as I can remember.

What reaſon did ſhe give you for aſking for bread ?—She ſaid, ſhe was hungry.

How did ſhe look ?—She looked rather bloated in the face, freſh, but ſo very dirty that it was almoſt impoſſible to gueſs how ſhe looked.

Did you ſee her the day before ſhe died ? —I did, ſhe was in my ſhop two or three times before, and I obſerved of her that ſhe ſhook very much, particularly her head, as if ſhe had a palſy, which I thought proceeded from the violence of the cold weather.

Did ſhe make any complaint on that day of hunger or of cold ?—Not to my knowledge, ſhe did not complain to me, Mr. Wade had alledged ſo many complaints againſt the girl to me, that I ſpoke rather harſh to the girl, when ſhe complained to me.

Mr. Sylveſter. I believe you once adviſed him to beat her.

Court. Surely that is not evidence, I have not queſtioned her as to the particular of what the girl ſaid, for if ſhe had given any account, or any relation to her of any thing done by her maſter, being at a time when ſhe was in no apparent apprehenſion of death or danger of life, I ſhould not think it admiſſible evidence, but I take the general fact that ſhe complained of hunger, without relating from whence that proceeded, and the general fact of her maſter complaining againſt her to be evidence, but not the particular converſation from which that proceeded.

Mr. Sylveſter. What was his conduct towards the girl ?——As to that I do not know, I never trouble my head with the neighbours, he had not been there above three weeks or a month, I do not know of my own knowledge, he told me he never ſtruck her.

DIANA CROOK ſworn.

I live in Tufton-ſtreet, I remember when this girl of Mrs. Wade's died, it was on a Saturday.

Court. Do you remember ſeeing her during that week or at any time for a few days, before her death ?——I do not know that I had ſeen her for a week or ſuch a time before ſhe died.

Court. Then I do not think any evidence ſhe can give can be admiſſible ; do you happen to know of your own knowledge in what manner this girl was treated by her maſter ?—All that I know about it, my Lord, is this, ſhe came to me one day for two pounds of potatoes, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, after I had ſerved her, I was dreſſing victuals, and ſhe aſked me for a bit of bread, and ſhe ſaid——

Court. No, do not tell us what ſhe ſaid. —She eat the bread.

Did you obſerve any thing particular ? —Nothing particular.

Did ſhe ever aſk you for bread more then once ?—No, my Lord, that was a week or nine days before ſhe died.

Did ſhe complain of hunger ?——— Yes.

MARY CHILD ſworn.

I lodge in the houſe.

Did you frequently ſee the deceaſed, the apprentice girl ?—I ſaw her once a day, I was out at work all the week, I ſaw her catching water on Friday night about ſix o'clock, there is a cock at the ſtreet door, and ſhe had a pail under it, I aſked her if the water was coming in, and ſhe told me it was coming in, and ſhe had filled every thing in the yard, I then went in and aſked Mrs. Smith to give me a light, and ſhe came in after me, and the child came in and ſhook vaſtly, I thought it was the coldneſs of the weather, with ſtanding ſo long at the water cock.

Was Wade himſelf at home ?—No, he was not, ſhe appeared not well, ſhe ſhook as though ſhe had the ague, I ſays to Mrs. Wade, ſays I, Madam, you ought to get her ſomething hot, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would, but whether ſhe did or not, I do not know, I ſaw no more that night, on the Saturday morning, there was a little girl came up to me, I was tired, and was in bed rather late, it was Mr. Vaughan's little girl, but I did know her, and ſhe ſaid there was a gentleman wanted me, I went down, and it was Mr. Gaunt, he aſked me whether I lived in the houſe, and I told him, yes, and he deſired me to do what I could for the child, for the child was very ill in the cellar; I went down, and he left two ſhillings, to get ſomething hot to comfort her, the girl was not dead, ſhe fetched breath, but her jaw fell as I ſtroked her, and her eyes flew open, I was ſo ſhocked I went to the chandler's ſhop, and got Mrs. Matthews to come and help me out of the cellar with the girl; ſhe died immediately as I ſtroked her face with my hand, ſhe juſt gave a gaſp.

Did you obſerve what ſort of a place this was that ſhe lay in ?—I thought it was not a place fit for a Chriſtian to lay in, it was a very cold damp place with water in it.

Mr. Sylveſter. You came up almoſt immediately from the cellar ?—Yes, directly.

WILLIAM ROLLS ſworn.

I live in Maſham-ſtreet, No. 15, I know the deceaſed the beſt part of the month of December.

Did you know her in the month of January ?—No, Sir, I ſaw her the Sunday before ſhe loſt her life in Vine-ſtreet, all the particulars I know of her was in the month of December, ſhe uſed to come three or four times a day to fetch water.

Did you obſerve any thing particular about her, when ſhe did come ?—I thought every time ſhe came ſhe looked more miſerable, and more like an object of pity.

On what account did ſhe appear ſo ?——— She was without ſhoes and ſtockings to her feet as you may call them, for there was neither ſole to her ſhoe or foot to her ſtocking, I took notice of her one day particularly, I ſays to her, little girl, what makes you go in that way ? one day ſhe came in for a kettle of water, about three in the afternoon, the later end of December, I thought ſhe had put the kettle into the hot liquor, and I told her not to do that, ſhe ſaid to me as this———

Do not tell us what ſhe ſaid, only what ſhe did ;—She put her hands into the hot liquor.

Did ſhe appear very cold ?—Vaſtly cold, and all her clothes were worn off her back almoſt, and appeared to be very cold, and very dirty and naſty, ſhe almoſt put her head into the water.

Did ſhe complain of cold ?—Yes.

Did ſhe complain of any thing elſe but cold ?—No, Sir, no more than that.

Mr. Sylveſter. It was pretty cold weather in December ?—Yes, it was almoſt the latter end.

You was not very hot I take it ?—No, Sir.

Court. Did ſhe complain of any thing elſe but cold ?——Yes, of hunger.

Mr. Peate. Was it a froſt that day ?—I cannot tell, it was very cold.

ANN CHILD ſworn.

Did you know the deceaſed ?—I have ſeen her.

Did you ſee her before her death ?—Not for above a week.

When you did ſee her did you obſerve any thing particular about her ?——I ſell greens, and ſhe came for ſome potatoes, and we were at dinner, and ſhe aſked me for a bit of victuals.

Did ſhe complain of any thing ?——No, ſhe did not, I did not aſk her any queſtions.

How often did ſhe aſk you for victuals ? About three times.

How long before her death might that be ?—About a fortnight or three weeks.

ARCHDALE HARRIS ſworn.

I am a ſurgeon.

Court. Were you called on in February to view the body of the child, and when ?—On the Saturday in the afternoon, the officers of the pariſh with ſome other gentlemen called upon me to deſire me to go and view the body of the deceaſed, I did ſo.

Did you take ſufficient notice to form a competent judgment of the probable cauſe of her death ?—My Lord, the body looked ſo well that I could ſee no reaſon to ſuſpect any thing.

That is to ſuſpect any violence you mean ?—Yes.

What was the general ſtate of the body ?—It ſeemed to be in a very good ſtate : what you may ſay died in a healthy ſtate.

Was it much emaciated ?——Not at all.

As much in fleſh as might reaſonably be expected ?——Yes.

Did you open the body at all ?——No, there was not the leaſt reaſon for it, neither do I apprehend I ſhould have got any additional information from opening it, it did not appear ſo to me.

What appeared to you then from the inſpection of the body, to have been the probable cauſe of her death ?——I cannot ſay; if I had not heard of the circumſtances, I ſhould have thought ſhe died a natural death, from the inſpection of the body alone.

Did it ever happen to you to examine the body of any perſon who died from the ſeverity of the weather at any time ?—Yes.

Is that kind of death attended with any particular appearances ?—Very often upon the extremities.

What are thoſe appearances ?—Very often a tendency of mortification in the extremities, frequently of the feet and the legs.

Do you apprehend that tendency of mortification to be always viſible, where the death has ariſen from that cauſe ?——I think ſo where it has ſeized on the extremities.

Now was any ſuch appearance viſible on the body of this girl ?—No ſuch appearance.

You have been in Court all the time? ——Yes.

You have heard the evidence of all the other witneſſes, with reſpect to the place where this girl lay ?——I ſaw the place.

I wiſh you to deſcribe the place ?——It was a very bad place certainly, a damp cellar.

From the appearance of that place, joined with the account you have heard of it from the other witneſſes, do you think it likely that the laying in that place for four or five nights during the late ſevere weather, and preceeding the 23d of January, conſiſtent with the appearance of the body, could be the cauſe of the death of the deceaſed ?——There was no ſign of it, therefore I cannot upon my oath ſay that it was the cauſe.

Therefore I find you rather conceive that if the death of the deceaſed had proceeded from the damp and cold of that cellar, that it would have been likely to have produced ſome appearances that would have led to that ſuſpicion ?—I ſhould think ſo my Lord, I ſhould have expected ſome appearances.

As a profeſſional man, I would aſk you, if you think that the death ariſe from the immediate effect of the cold and damp ?——I ſhould have expected to have ſeen ſome marks of it upon her extremities.

Now if a death is occaſioned, and ariſes from any diſeaſe brought on by a damp and unwholeſome place, will not that diſeaſe generally manifeſt itſelf for ſome time before the death ?—I ſhould think ſhe would have had ſome apparent complaints before the death ; I will explain myſelf a little more fully ; it ſeems to me that where the cauſe of the death is the immediate effect of damp and cold, and it is a violent death by the ſeverity of the weather, it is uſually attended with ſuch appearances as I have ſpoken of ; but when the diſeaſe ariſes from the cold and damp, I ſhould have expected it for ſome days preceding the death.

Mr. Sylveſter. If the death of the party is occaſioned by any ſudden fit, is it ever unattended with diſtortion of features ?—Sudden death is frequently without diſtortion, in regard to convulſions it very often leaves a ſettlement in ſome parts of it.

You did not open any part ?—I did not perceive any purpoſe it would have anſwered, I do not apprehend it would have anſwered any ; I did not think there was any cauſe at all that required it by the appearance of the body.

Court to Vaughan. I think you ſaid that the deceaſed had on an under petticoat ?—Yes.

Did you obſerve where the reſt of the clothes were ?—I ſaw her gown hanging up juſt by.

Mr. Sylveſter to Mr. Harris. Did not you obſerve the bed was wet within ſide ?—Yes, in ſeveral places, it looked as if it had been wetted by a perſon's laying on it, it was in a circular manner in ſeveral places.

Court to Vaughan. How far was ſhe from the bed when you found her that morning ?—Tumbled down cloſe to the feet of the bed, her head was the other way.

Court. It does not appear to me in this caſe, that there is ſufficient evidence that this was the cauſe of her death.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, unleſs there is, it is no matter for the jury to judge upon.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, I do not wiſh to take up your time more than is neceſſary for the due and proper adminiſtration of juſtice on the one hand and on the other ; I will therefore ſtate to you now, how far this ſtrikes me upon the evidence, and if you after that entertain any doubt in your minds, I will hear the priſoner's defence, and his witneſſes, if he has any : the charge againſt the priſoner, is that of occaſioning the death of the deceaſed by two means ſpecified in the indictment, the firſt by refuſing her the neceſſary aſſiſtance for the ſupport of her life, and the ſecond by neglecting to provide her with other proper accommodations, and forcing her to lay in a damp, wet, and unwholeſome cellar, without proper and neceſſary bed, bedding, clothing and covering, which together are ſtated to be the cauſe of her death : Now, in point of law, I think the charge againſt the priſoner, though it contains no charge of actual perſonal violence, might clearly be ſupported by evidence that came up to the charge ; and I think it right for the ſake of the public, and the numerous perſons that are attending here, to declare very fully and clearly that opinion ; for if a perſon intruſted with the care of a young perſon, or any other, does by the refuſal either of neceſſary aſſiſtance, or by any other ſeverity, though not of a nature to produce immediate death, or by the putting them in ſuch a ſituation as may be dangerous to their life and health, actually and clearly occaſion the death of that party, I think in point of law it is murder ; and I think further, that it is a murder of a worſe kind, than many of thoſe that are attended with greater perſonal violence, for this reaſon, that there is greater time in ſuch a caſe, for deliberation and reflection, and it is never in a ſituation to be reduced to manſlaughter, becauſe it never can ariſe from any miſconduct that can mitigate it : that being the nature of the charge and the law, it is for you to conſider how far that is ſupported in point of evidence, for in proportion to the malignity of the charge, ought to be the clearneſs of the evidence by which it is ſupported: now though I think it right to ſay for the ſame reaſon that I have declared my former opinion, that the conduct of the priſoner at the bar has been extremely reprehenſible, and in my opinion highly criminal, in placing this unfortunate girl in ſuch a ſituation, which certainly might have been the cauſe of her death; yet it is neceſſary in an indictment of this kind, in which the conſequences are ſo extremely penal, not to throw it upon Courts and Juries, to preſume away the life of the priſoner, but that the fact ſhould be proved: and the firſt fact indiſpenſably neceſſary to be proved is, that the fact imputed to the priſoner was the cauſe of the death of the party; that is the very foundation, for unleſs it is clearly proved that the fact, either of omiſſion or commiſſion was the actual, efficient and immediate cauſe of the death, it is to no purpoſe to enquire into the circumſtances of it; and I ſhall, in the preſent ſtate of the evidence, obſerve only, that though this conduct has been highly reprehenſible, yet you ought, and certainly will diveſt your minds wholly of all prejudice, ariſing from your diſapprobation of the priſoner's conduct, becauſe you are to try coolly the evidence of the fact, and not to be ſatisfied with ſlighter evidence of that which is indiſpenſably in point of law neceſſary to be proved; although the priſoner has conducted himſelf criminally, in a leſs degree, or although fortunately perhaps for him, that criminal conduct is not clearly proved to be the cauſe of the death: and you have the opinion of Mr. Harris, who is ſent for, a man of character in his profeſſion, ſelected by the pariſh officers, who in this caſe ſeem to have acted with great attention and propriety, for the purpoſe of making ſuch an inſpection as ſhould enable him to form an opinion of the cauſe of the death of the deceaſed. Now the two circumſtances imputed to the priſoner, are ſtarving her, and compelling her to be in a wet and damp place, coupled with the ſeverity of the weather; and as to the firſt of theſe, the evidence of Mr. Harris ſeems to put it out of all doubt; for whatever complaints the girl may from time to time have made of hunger (and it is not unlikely that ſhe may have been hungry), ſhe was not ſtarved to death, and I think the ſtate of her body, which he has told you, ſeems to exclude all poſſibility of that: therefore there is a clearing away of one of the cauſes aſſigned in this indictment for the death: the next is, that her death was occaſioned by the place where ſhe lay; and upon that alſo you have the opinion of Mr. Harris; now there are but two ways in which the damp and cold of a place of this kind, can occaſion the death of a perſon; the one is by the unwholſomeneſs of that damp and cold producing ſome diſeaſe in the party, which in its event may be mortal, in which caſe the damp and unwholſomeneſs is the primary cauſe, and the diſeaſe produced by it, is the immediate and efficient cauſe of the death; the other way is, where the damp and cold operates ſo much on the party, and produces a chillneſs and a numbneſs, attended with a ſubſequent mortification; and Mr. Harris ſays it would have produced thoſe appearances which uſually attend a violent death of that kind, namely the appearances of a tendency to a mortification viſible at the extremities: now although the priſoner's conduct not being the cauſe of the death, may rather be conſidered as good fortune, than innocence, yet there were no ſuch appearances on the body; therefore it is Mr. Harris's opinion, that there was nothing on the body that would warrant him to pronounce, that the damp and cold were the immediate cauſe of the death; if indeed, the damp and cold were the primary cauſe, and brought on diſeaſes, ſuch as a fever, an ague, or other diſeaſes, there would then be a viſible diſeaſe for ſome time preceding the death of the party; now there is no ſuch evidence of any viſible diſeaſe, except the circumſtance of the girl ſhivering with cold, which is a very likely fact, if there had not been thoſe extraordinary circumſtances of miſconduct; but there is no evidence before us of the actual exiſtence of any ſuch preceding diſeaſe: thus it ſtands on the evidence of Mr. Harris; but there is a circumſtance which ſtruck me at the time of the firſt examination of Vaughan, and which induced me to call him again, which was the circumſtance of the ſituation in which the deceaſed was found; ſhe was found upon her knees, and almoſt on her face leaning againſt the wall, as if ſhe had fallen forward with her under petticoat on; I therefore called Mr. Vaughan, to aſk him where the reſt of her clothes were, and he ſtated that he did not recollect all, but he recollected that her gown was hanging up: now that ſeems to me to be a ſtrong circumſtance, for if ſhe had periſhed either through the cold, or diſeaſe attended by the damp, ſhe would moſt probably have periſhed in her bed; the effects of cold are to benumb, and if ſhe had ſtrength and exertion to get out of her bed and put on her clothes, that exertion would have been ſufficient to have prevented her death from cold; but it ſeems ſhe had got out of her bed and was proceeding to dreſs herſelf, and in that ſtate ſhe had fallen forwards: from the circumſtance too of her being not quite dead, coupled with the time of the morning, it appears very probable that ſhe could not have been very long in the ſituation in which ſhe was found; it was then ten in the morning, therefore to be ſure, the probability appears that this girl had been getting up in the morning, and beginning to dreſs herſelf; ſo that upon the whole, there does not appear to me to be any evidence before you, to warrant you upon your oaths to pronounce that which you muſt pronounce before you can go to the other facts; which is, that the facts imputed to the priſoner in this indictment were the cauſe of the death; if you have any doubt, and do not think the evidence you have heard ſufficient to remove it, I will call on the priſoner for his defence.

Jury. There is no occaſion my Lord.

NOT GUILTY.

Court to Priſoner. William Wade: You have in this caſe had the good fortune, that your ill conduct, as I muſt call it, with reſpect to this unfortunate girl, has either not in fact been the cauſe of her death, or that there has not been ſufficient evidence to prove it to be ſo; the effect is the ſame as to your acquittal here, for of that, of which there is no evidence, and of that which does not exiſt, the Court muſt form the ſame judgment; but it is my duty to repeat to you, what I have before ſtated to the Gentlemen of the Jury: that placing this young woman to ſleep in that cellar, with but ſcanty proviſion in ſuch a place where it was not fit for any perſon to ſleep, and in ſuch ſevere weather, was a conduct of great cruelty and criminality, and extremely likely to produce the death of this young woman, whether it actually did ſo or not: and therefore the feelings of your own mind on this occaſion ſhould not be thoſe of a man acquitted from a full perſuaſion of the innocence and rectitude of his conduct, but of a man acquitted for want of ſufficient evidence againſt him: I thought it proper to ſay thus much to you, and I hope it will make a proper impreſſion on the future conduct of your life.

332. SUSANNAH BIRNE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th of January laſt, two linen ſheets, value 4s. two pillows, value 18d. and one flat iron, value 6d. the property of Grace Norris; the ſame being in a certain lodging room, let by the ſaid Grace, to the ſaid Suſannah, to be uſed by her as a lodging room, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

GRACE NORRIS ſworn.

The priſoner lodged with me about eleven weeke, ſhe left my lodging ſix weeks next Wedneſday, I gave her warning, and after ſhe was gone, I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment, I never ſaw them while ſhe had the room, but I ſaw them when ſhe took the room, I never found any of my things again, I took the priſoner to the conſtable, and ſhe directed me to the pawnbroker.

Court. Did you make her any promiſe in caſe ſhe would enable you to recover your things?——No, Sir.

Did not you tell her that you would be favorable to her?——I cannot ſay whether any ſuch thing paſſed, I was in a flurry, nothing in particular paſſed to the beſt of my knowledge.

JOHN TYLER ſworn.

I am ſhopman to Mr. Evans, I had thoſe things of the priſoner, ſhe pawned them at different times, in November, December, and January; I am ſure ſhe brought them; they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

Proſecutrix. Theſe are like ſome of mine, I cannot ſwear to them.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

When I carried them it was through great neceſſity, and I intended to have got them again, and my ſon has paid part towards them, has not he Mrs. Norris?

Proſecutrix. He gave four ſhillings.

Court. You ſhould not have received money, how came you to take theſe four ſhillings?——Her ſon paſſed his word for three weeks rent, and I thought as I was in diſtreſs, I had better take a little than loſe all, and I fetched out two things.

Tyler. My Lord, they would have ſettled it before they could have been taken before a magiſtrate, if they had had time, I belive it was the intention of the priſoner to get them again.

NOT GUILTY.

333. MARGARET WALDEN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 17th day of January, one wooden ſcrew box, value one half penny, and one half-guinea, value 10s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. in monies numbered, the property of Mary Coates.

MARY COATES ſworn.

On the 17th of January, I met with this young woman in Red Lyon-ſtreet, Spitalfields, between twelve and one o'clock in the afternoon, I aſked her to go to drink a pint or a pot of purl, at a porter houſe, as I had worked with her two months; after that, I ſaid my ſtomach ached being cold weather, and I would have ſome mutton ſtakes for dinner, and we had a pound and a half for dinner, and a twopenny loaf, we had another pot of porter, and then another pint of porter, I came out and I ſaid, Peggy, do you know where there is a tin ſhop, ſhe replied I will find you one, accordingly ſhe ſaid, ſhe would go; I unſcrewed my box and took out one ſhilling; the half-guinea lay at the top, and the ſilver at the bottom; I ſcrewed the box up again, and took the ſhilling out to give the priſoner to buy a tin box, and I loſt the ſcrew box, money and all in an inſtant; ſays I, Peggy, you have got my box.

Court. Was you ſober?——I was not ſo ſober as I am now indeed: I came home, I had not a farthing in the world.

Court. You ſee the conſequence of drinking ſo much?——There was nobody in company but her and I; I have had nothing to day but my tea and a pint of beer to my dinner; I loſt nineteen ſhillings in all, but it was put down ſixpence lower at the Juſtice's; I do not know the meaning of a warrant, God knows I do not, I have loſt all my good time, I do not mean to hurt a hair of the priſoner's head.

ANN PINNEY ſworn.

Court. What do you know of this matter, good woman?——No more than your Lordſhip: the Juſtice would bind me over by what the proſecutrix told me when ſhe came home.

NOT GUILTY.

ACQUITTED.

---

341. LYON LEVY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th day of February, one piece of gold coin called a guinea, value 1l. 1s. the monies of John Tobin.

JOHN TOBIN ſworn.

When I am at home, I live in Ireland, I am a ſeafaring man: on the 18th of February, I had twenty-three dollars, that I received in America, they were in my pocket, in a bit of a green worſted purſe, I carried them on ſhore to ſell them; I had not a farthing, gold, ſilver, nor braſs, but them: I ſold the twenty-three dollars at four ſhillings and ſixpence each, for five pounds three ſhillings and ſixpence, the man I ſold them to gave me four guineas and a half, which I had in my pocket, and half-a-crown and one ſhilling: I miſtruſted that the money was not good, I thought to have gone into a houſe to have them weighed, but I did not like to go into a ſhop, and I was coming along the ſtreet, and this man had a bulk with buckles, and knives, and things, in Whitechapel Road, and I aſked him if he had a pair of gold ſcales, and if he would be kind enough to weigh them four guineas, I ſaid, I will pay you for your trouble, ſays he, is there any thing here to ſuit you, that will lay in your way, ſays I, not at preſent, if there were I would buy them of the man that I ſold my things to: I then took out my purſe at the ſtall, and took out the four guineas, and put them in his hand, and kept the half-guinea, and half-crown, and the ſhilling, while he weighed the guineas; the firſt guinea he weighed it was rather heavy, and he looked at the weight, and he weighed the other two; he weighed only three, he put them out of his fiſt, he kept his fiſt ſhut in this manner, and he put the three guineas on the glaſs that lay over his goods, I aſked him where was the other guinea, ſays he, you gave me no more than three; My God, ſays I! how can you have the aſſurance to look in my face; (I did not take him to be a Jew then, but I was told ſo afterwards), ſays I, you give me the four guineas.

Court. Then the only money he had were theſe four guineas that you put into his hand?—Yes, he was ſearched, and he put it down, he picked it up again, ſays I, you have put that in your pocket, which I have worked very hard for, he denied it.

Court. Was any guinea found upon him?——He was over-hauled before the Juſtice and a guinea and ſixpence were found in his pocket.

You had no marks about the four guineas that you had?——No, there was a bit of dirt on one.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, it is not neceſſary to take up your time by going on with this buſineſs, for if the priſoner has taken this money, ſtill I think the indictment cannot be maintained, becauſe there was no felonious taking whatever; for he tells you that he gave him the money, and gave him a compleat poſſeſſion of it for weighing; but likewiſe he cannot identify the guinea other than by a bit of dirt, which is not ſufficient, and it is very probable the priſoner might have another guinea in his pocket; but however that may be, I am clearly of opinion that there is no felonious taking whatever, and therefore you muſt acquit the defendant.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

342. JOHN COCHRAN was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Dick, about the hour of ten in the night, on the 25th day of February, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, four woollen blankets, value 20s. one white linen quilt, value 6s. the property of the ſaid William Dick.

A Second Count, for that being in the ſaid houſe, and having feloniouſly ſtolen the ſaid goods, he did afterwards burglariouſly break to get out of the ſame.

WILLIAM DICK ſworn.

I keep a public houſe in Nightingale Lane, the watchman informed me about ten o'clock, on the evening of the 25th of February, that the window was open, and I found it ſo, and the ſaſh quite thrown up to the top, I had ſhut both the windows myſelf, the ſhutters were bolted within-ſide with three bolts; while I was bolting the window again, I ſaw a many things were gone, but the things in the indictment lay on a chair in the parlour, and there were alſo ſtockings, and a cloak, and a parcel of things, which I had bought that day: I went up to the watch-houſe, and there I ſaw one of the blankets with ſome thing tied in it, and I ſaw the corner of the quilt too at the watch-houſe, and I ſaid they were what I had bought.

Had there been any body in the parlour that you knew of after the time you ſhut the windows, and before this time?——There might, I do not know, and no doubt but there was.

Did you go into the parlour after you ſhut the windows, and before you was alarmed?——O yes! ſeveral times.

Were the windows as you had left them?——Yes.

What is the lateſt time that you can recollect ſeeing the windows ſhut?——I am ſure they were faſt at nine.

Have you any recollection who were in the room?——I cannot ſay.

Had you ſeen the priſoner at all at your houſe that evening?—I cannot ſwear that I ſaw him, for I never knew the man before in my life.

RICHARD

RICHARD FARMER ſworn.

I was going round my beat, and I found the windows open, I called to Mr. Dick, I told him, he ſaid he ſhut them, it was almoſt eleven, I ſaw no ſuſpicious perſon near the houſe that evening.

JOHN SERJEANT ſworn.

I was walking upon my beat, between ten and eleven, I ſaw the priſoner coming along by the corner of the paſſage in Upper Eaſt Smithfield; he had theſe things in a looſe manner thrown over his head, he entered the paſſage, I ſaw him ſtand there, I ran and fetched my lanthorn, and met him coming out againwith the things, and I ſtopped him, I carried him and the things to the watch-houſe, they have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, they are the ſame I took from the priſoner.

(The quilt and the Scotch blanket depoſed to by the Proſecutor, and by Hannah Somerville.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was drinking in the proſecutor's houſe that evening, and I ſaw four men and two women drinking in his parlour all that evening; about half after ten I was going home, and at the corner of Nightingale Lane I found theſe things, they were in canvaſs, which was dirty, and I hove it away, and put the things over my ſhoulder to carry them home.

Jury. Are you ſure of the quilt and blanket.

Mrs. Somerville. I have no doubt, I darned the blanket, and joined the quilt.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not of breaking.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

343. TIMOTHY HURST was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting William Koe, on the King's highway, on the 2d of February, and putting him in fear, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will, one man's hat, value 5s. his property.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

WILLIAM KOE ſworn.

I was robbed this day three weeks in Cow Croſs, between ſix and ſeven in the evening, I had been on my maſter's buſineſs, and I was going home, and the priſoner came behind me and took my hat off, I know the priſoner, I am ſure it was him, I ſaw him before he came up to me, he ſaid nothing to me, he ran away as ſoon as had taken off my hat, and I ran after him, I ſaw him throw it away, and another man picked it up, he ſtopped, and I came up to him, I cried ſtop thief! and Mr. Palmer took him.

Was he ever out of your ſight after he took your hat?——No.

On the 2d of February, between ſeven and eight, I heard the cry ſtop him, he has ſtole my hat, I ſaw the priſoner paſs by, I ſtopped him, and the boy came up and ſaid the priſoner had robbed him of his hat, and that he had never loſt ſight of him; I took him to the Rotation Office.

Court. Where did you find the hat?—Another perſon had picked the hat up, which is the other perſon now in confinement.

JOHN FIGG ſworn.

On the 2d of February, the proſecutor came into my houſe, and ſaid he had loſt his hat, I went out and ſaw the priſoner in cuſtody, the hat was found afterwards by the other priſoner Edleſton.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing of the hat.

Court to Proſecutor. Who adviſed you to indict the priſoner for a highway robbery? Nobody that I know of.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, there is no evidence to make it a highway robbery, or any thing like it, you may find him guilty of ſtealing the hat, if you thing he is ſo.

Jury to Farmer. Was it dark when you ſtopped the priſoner?——It was near eight o'clock.

The priſoner called two witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing of the hat.

Court. It is plain there could be no other motive for indicting this man capitally, than the forty pounds reward, and as I do not wiſh to encourage ſuch proſecutions, let the priſoner be privately whipped and diſcharged.

MARY BASTON ſworn.

On the 21ſt of February, about half paſt ten o'clock, I was waiting at ſupper, on my miſtreſs and her niece, and I ſaw, as I was removing the things, the priſoner riſe from behind the counter, there was a glaſs partition, I was within the room; there were a dozen of candles in the ſhop: I told my miſtreſs, and immediately opened the door and purſued the priſoner, I collared him when he was got out in the ſtreet about ten yards, he had juſt delivered ſomething to another of his own ſize, who ran acroſs the way, but what I cannot ſay; I laid hold of him, I collared him, and ſaid, what have you taken from behind the counter? then ſome gentlemen coming from the City Coffee-houſe ſurrounded us, but no perſon laid hold of him but myſelf, and I brought him back myſelf, and my miſtreſs ſaid the till was gone.

PETER PLUMBTREE ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner and another man along with him in the ſtreet, about two or three ſeconds before the young woman ſeized him by the collar; he was a little diſtance before me; as near as I could judge they were exchanging ſomething, and the other man ſtept over the way.

LYDIA HOWE ſworn.

I ſaw the till in the counter, before Mary Baſton gave the alarm, there were half-a-guinea, two half-crowns, and about ten ſhillings in money, there was no lock to it, and it was gone, I did not ſee the priſoner in the ſhop.

Priſouer. I live in Fore-ſtreet, I had bought a pair of ſhoes, and I was going to change them, and this woman laid hold of me.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

346. DENNIS DALEY and MARGARET MILLER were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 2d of Feb. twelve baſe metal ſconces pleated with ſilver, value 5l. the property of John Carpenter.

JOHN CARPENTER ſworn.

I am an undertaker, on the 2d of February, I was ſent for into Fleet Market to ſee ſome ſconces, I did not know I had loſt any, I went immediately, and I found them to be my property; they were in bags, there was twelve branches and twelve backs, ſome were in the backs and ſome out; I took time to place them, and when I returned, I found a box laying upon a pile of deal boards in which they had been; I was in the warehouſe at half paſt three, and the box was in its uſual place; I had occaſion to go up to it; this was near five, they were obliged to get over theſe deals to get at it, I do not know who took them.

GEORGE SUMMERWELL ſworn.

I was coming up Field Lane, I went to buy ſome nails, and heard Mr. Hayward ſay as I was at his door, that he would have nothing to do with them: the two priſoners were both there, and the woman ſaid bid money for them, they had them between them: I thought there were ſtolen goods, and I went in, I followed them up Fleet Lane, while he was weighing my nails, I looked out to ſee which way they went; they went into the White Horſe, and they ſtood in the middle of the road, and the man ſhifted his load to the woman; they went down the Old Bailey, and I ſaw the man take ſome halfpence out of the woman's pocket, and he had two dips for a quartern gin, I followed them, and ſays I, what have you to ſell, ſays ſhe, nothing at all, ſays I, I am ſure you have; ſays ſhe, you may take them all; I ſtopped her, and the man ran away: I brought the woman in Ludgate Hill, and ſhe ſaid, ſhe would have a coach, ſays I, I will take you down to my ſhop, and ſend one of my men, till I know who owns theſe goods, I ſent a man, and took the woman to my ſhop, and the man priſoner came to enquire for her at the watch-houſe.

Are you ſure it was the ſame man?——Yes.

What time was it?—About half paſt five; I had the ſconces till they went to Guildhall, then Thompſon the conſtable took poſſeſſion of them.

THOMAS THOMPSON ſworn.

Theſe are the ſconces that were delivered to me at Guildhall, they have been in my cuſtody ever ſince.

(Depoſed to.)

JAMES HAYWARD ſworn.

On the 2d of laſt month about half after four, theſe people came to my houſe to offer them to ſale, and I told them I would have nothing to do with them: they are the ſame people.

PRISONER MILLER's DEFENCE.

The priſoner Dally, aſked me to carry a few things for them, which I did, he ſaid he would give me ſix-pence, but where he had them I do not know; then a gentleman came, and aſked me what I had, I told him to look and ſee, for they did not belong to me.

PRISONER DALLY's DEFENCE.

I was coming along the ſtreet, and I found theſe things under a gateway.

Jury to Hayward. Did they both offer them to ſale?——Yes.

Which ſaid, "offer ſomething for them?"——The woman.

DENNIS DALLY, GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

MARGARET MILLES, GUILTY.

To be privately whipped and confined to hard labour twelve months in the Houſe of Correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

348. JOSEPH PATTEN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 18th day of February, one truſs and a half of hay, value 21d. the property of Thomas Noble:

And THOMAS DAWSON was indicted for feloniouſly receiving the ſame, knowing it to have been ſtolen.

THOMAS NOBLE ſworn.

On the 18th of January, about eight in the evening, I ſent one Thomas Hurley to look after my horſe, and litter him up for the night, I keep a horſe for my own uſe to do my buſineſs, and he was gone two hours, I had another key which unlocked the ſtable door, I went there and miſſed ſome hay; I knew there was ſome gone, but I did not know how much, I was ſure the horſe could not eat ſo much, I went again the next morning and miſſed more hay, and traced it by the ſeeds, and followed it to Dawſon's door, where my hay was ſold.

How far is Dawſon's from you?—I ſuppoſe about four hundred yards, in Old Montague-ſtreet, Whitechapel; then I went and called Thomas Hurley out of bed, who uſed to look after my horſe; I aſked him how long he had dealt in hay, ſays he have I wronged you; ſays I ſomebody has, he went with me to the ſtable, and told me if I would be favourable to him before the juſtice, he would diſcover his accomplices.

Have you any other witneſſes but him and you?—I have none other here.

Court to Jury. Here is no evidence but the accomplice.

BOTH ACQUITTED.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

349. JOSEPH BAMBRIDGE was indicted, for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 1ſt day of February, fifteen hempen ſacks, value 10s. and four hempen flour bags, value 2s. the property of John Morgan.

JOHN MORGAN ſworn.

I am a Cornchandler; on the 19th of February laſt I met a friend in Tottenham-court-road, through whoſe information I watched the priſoner, who was my ſervant; and on Friday night the 20th, I had James and Thomas Cooper, who were relations, to ſupper, and the priſoner was gone to my warehouſe and granary, which is detached from my dwelling houſe about two hundred yards; this was between eight and nine in the evening, and I deſired Thomas and James Cooper to follow him, to ſee that nothing was gone from the warehouſe; and I followed him myſelf, and one of them came to fetch me in five minutes, and I overtook a man with a ſack on his back, and Thomas Cooper was following him, that man was not the priſoner; I catched hold of the man by the collar, and I ſaid, you ſcoundrel how came you by this, he ſaid, O Lord Mr. Morgan, I know I am doing wrong, and if you will forgive me, I will tell all I know; upon this we took him to the White Lyon, oppoſite St. Giles's round houſe, I then took him to the watch-houſe, and left him in company with Thomas and James Cooper; I got a conſtable, and went back to my own houſe, and the priſoner was then coming out of my houſe, I charged the conſtable with him, he ſeemed greatly terrified, I ſaid Joe, do I deſerve this from you? he fell down on his knees, burſt into tears, and begged for mercy.

JAMES COOPER ſworn.

I was at Mr. Morgan's houſe at ſupper, and my brother was there, it was Friday the 20th of February, and we both went out to the granaries, and I had not been there above three minutes, before I ſaw a man come out with a full bag on his back, we followed, and overtook him at the top of Drury Lane, and I went for Mr. Morgan.

Did you ſee any thing of the priſoner?—Not till I ſaw him the next morning at the juſtice's, I went there about ten.

Who went with you?—Roberts, a conſtable.

Did your brother go with you?—No, he was left with the bag at the White Lyon; I think the priſoner's houſe is in Church-ſtreet St. Giles's, there I found fifteen ſacks, and three bags, which are chiefly uſed for flour; we brought them all to the White Lyon, the priſoner was in the round houſe; Mr. Morgan came and ſaw the ſacks and bags, and ſaid they were his own property, I was preſent, they have been in poſſeſſion of Mr. Morgan, with the conſtable's ſeal on them, one of them was half full of pollard, I did not obſerve the mark on them then, but ſome of them have Mr. Morgan's name at full length on them.

(The ſacks depoſed to by the proſecutor.)

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. The priſoner had lived with you four years?—Four years and four months.

Except as to this buſineſs, what was his character, if he had left you and had applied to you for a character, what character would you have given him?—I only can ſay in a few words, that he was the beſt ſervant I ever had in my life, I placed a great deal of confidence in him, he never loſt me an hour when in health.

Might it not happen, that this man, being in the employment of collecting of ſacks, might have carried them to his own houſe, with a view afterwards to have brought them to yours?——Thoſe fourteen ſacks had not been in my poſſeſſion for more than a twelve-month, nor of any of my ſervants to my knowledge.

Your buſineſs is very extenſive?—Yes.

Continuation of the Trial of Joſeph Bambridge.

Therefore they may have been employed in your buſineſs by your ſervants?——I bought a hundred quarter ſacks at Uxbridge with intent to work flour in them, and to have them branded with my name with pitch.

But that you did not do however?——They are marked with an M.

But you know any other dealer in grain would be likely to mark his ſacks with an M?—It is poſſible.

It is poſſible that theſe ſacks, though they have not come under your obſervation, may have been employed in your buſineſs?—Yes.

EDWARD ROBERTS ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I was preſent at the finding the ſacks at the priſoner's houſe, with Mr. James Cooper; there were twenty ſacks and four bags all full of pollard, peaſe flour, and corn; the pollard and peaſe flour was mixed.

What part of the priſoner's houſe were they in?—We went through the firſt room into the parlour, which was their bed-room, they all ſtood in that room, they were all taken to Mr. Morgan's houſe full the ſame night, and emptied; I was not preſent when they were emptied, I ſaw them the next morning at the Juſtice's, there were ſeveral of them marked with a cuſtomer of Mr. Morgan's name at full length, Mr. Holding, but he only brought them that had his own name on; there were fifteen of them that belonged to Mr. Morgan, ſome had Holding's name that I obſerved the night before, Mr. Morgan came to me and deſired I would go, I told him he did not need a conſtable, as a neighbour I went along with him, we ſecured the firſt man and put him into the round-houſe, then I went along with him to his own houſe, and we had not been in a minute before the priſoner came into the houſe; when he came in Mr. Morgan gave charge of him to me, and he ſeemed very much alarmed; I ſaid to him, I dare ſay you are very ſenſible what this is for; he made no anſwer at all, Mr. Morgan then began upraiding him, and ſaid, Joe, I have uſed you exceedingly well, and I think you ought not to uſe me in that manner; he immediately fell down on his knees in the ſhop, I do not know that he ſaid any thing particular with reſpect to confeſſing, but hoped he would forgive him, or ſomething to that purpoſe; at the time of ſearching the houſe, I went into all the apartments that belonged to him, and I found in the yard twelve pigs.

Mr. Garrow. Before you went to Mr. Morgan's houſe the other man was in cuſtody?—Yes, that man had confeſſed.

We are not trying him now, that man had been apprehended for coming out of the granary with a ſack on his back?—He fell on his knees upon being upraided with his ingratitude and ill-uſage, but was not charged with any felony, I do not know that that had been mentioned to him.

Now there had been a man ſeen coming out of the granary, which granary this man had the key of?—Yes.

ABRAHAM SMITH ſworn.

Mr. Morgan's man, the priſoner, aſked me to carry a bag home for him.

When was that?—I cannot tell the day of the month.

What day was you taken up?—On Friday, it was about a month before.

Where was you to get the bag?—He aſked me to go to Mr. Morgan's granary, and he would give me three pence to carry that bag home, I went to the door about a quarter after eight, I had juſt left work, and his maſter's granary looks through into my maſter's yard.

Did you ſee the priſoner there?—I juſt came out of my maſter's gate, and he was coming out of my maſter's door, and he called to me; my maſter is a coach-wheeler.

What did the priſoner ſay to you?—He aſked me that very night to carry a bag home for him.

What that very night?—Yes.

What was he to give you for this?—One time two-pence, and another time three-pence halfpenny for a pot of beer.

Did you carry a bag that night?—I had it on my back when I was taken.

Where did you get that bag?—The priſoner gave it me on the outſide of the door, the bag was full, but I do not know what it contained.

How many times did you carry bags for the priſoner?—Three times, I think, I carried them to his houſe and ſet them down.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I gathered in theſe ſacks for my maſter's cuſtomers, and it was late at night, and my maſter was gone to bed, and I did not chuſe to knock at the door, and I took them to my own houſe.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord I have witneſſes to the priſoner's character, but after what Mr. Morgan has ſaid of him, it would be waſting your lordſhip's time.

GUILTY.

Proſecutor. My Lord, till this unfortunate affair, I held the priſoner in the higheſt eſteem, and he has a wife that now lays in, that was brought to bed a day or two ago, and has a family beſides, I beg leave to recommend him to your lordſhip's mercy.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I have no diſpoſition whatever to be ſevere upon people, but you muſt conſider we are bound to do our duty for the good of the public; and of all the offences that I have heard tried this ſeſſions, I think this ſtands in the moſt flagitious light; a man whom you have ſhewn ſuch indulgence to, one on whom you repoſed ſuch confidence, and whom you would have truſted to any extent, that he ſhould be guilty of ſuch an act of treachery as this, and it would be a very bad example indeed, to let him go unpuniſhed; therefore, though for my own part, I feel as much as any man can do for the miſerable condition that priſoners bring themſelves into, yet it is neceſſary that ſuch offenders ſhould not go unpuniſhed.

Proſecutor. My Lord it is merely out of humanity to the poor woman, and the ſituation ſhe is in; I ſhall leave it to your Lordſhip.

Mr. Roſe. Joſeph Bambridge, you have been indicted and found guilty of robbing your maſter; it gives me pain to be under the neceſſity of paſſing ſentence on a man, who as a ſervant has born ſo good a character, as you have; but it is neceſſary that a very ſevere example ſhould be made of offenders under your deſcription; all our property muſt be at the mercy of ſervants, and as a ſervant you had the protection of your maſter's property, and your maſter putting confidence in you, you ought rather to protect that property than have ſtolen it: it is neceſſary therefore, for the ſake of the publick good, that you ſhould be very ſeverely puniſhed; and if it had not been for the lenity of your maſter, your puniſhment would have been ſtill more ſevere than it now will be:—The ſentence of the Court is, and we hope it will teach you to behave better for the future, that you be fined one ſhilling, and impriſoned in Clerkenwell Bridewell for the ſpace of twelve months, and there confined to hard labour.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

350. WILLIAM ARCHER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 27th of January laſt, one wooden trunk, value 12d. one ſilk gown, value 1l. 11s. 6d. two linen gowns, value 2l. 2s. two ſilk and cotton gowns, value 1l. 1s. two callico bed gowns, value 14s. one ſattin petticoat, value 10s. 6d. one callico petticoat, value 5s. two dimity petticoats, value 12s. four callico petticoats, value 10s. 6d. one muſlin apron, value 8s. two ſilk handkerchiefs, value 2s. two laced handkerchiefs, value 6s. two pair of linen ſheets, value 6s. two pair of pillow caſes, value 2s. four table clothes, value 8s. three napkins, value 3s. one pink ſattin muff, value 10s. one fan, value 6s. one gold locket, value 5s. one pair of gold ear-drops, value 5s. one ſtone ring ſet in gold, value 1l. 1s. one pair of gold ear-rings, value 10s. 6d. one mahogany tea cheſt, value 4s. three tin canniſters, value 4s. two ſilver tea ſpoons, value 2s. and one five guinea piece, value 5l. 5s. the property of Edward Oſmond.

SARAH OSMOND ſworn.

I am wife of Edward Oſmond, I live in Great Ruſſell-ſtreet, Bloomſbury, on the 27th of January laſt, I loſt this trunk with the contents of it, (the things which are mentioned in the indictment were it it), I had been to fetch them from Hammerſmith, and was carrying them to my lodgings, I packed them that day, and brought them from Mr. Scott's at Hammerſmith, they had been there a great while; I ſaw the trunk put into the coach; it was ſtolen out of the coach, I locked a trunk, and came in the Hammerſmith coach, I ſtopped at the White Horſe Cellar about ſix, and then I called a hackney coach, and brought them in the coach with me; I ſtopped at Mr. Sice's the boot-maker's, the corner of Air-ſtreet, Piccadilly, about twenty minutes after ſix, I got out of the coach and left the trunk in the coach, as ſoon as I got out, the coachman took out two boxes and brought them into the ſhop, and ſaid, Madam, you muſt go and watch, leſt your things ſhould be ſtolen, for there is a man I do not like, I went out and ſtood facing the coach, and I ſaw the coach move, I looked over the door, I did not ſee any body, but ſtill the coach kept moving, then I looked over the coach, and I ſaw a man's legs advance from the coach on the oppoſite ſide of the coach, he was juſt moving from the coach to croſs the ſtreet, then immediately on that I run cloſe to the coach door, and looked in, and then I ſaw the priſoner with the trunk on his right-ſhoulder.

Court. Was the other glaſs down on the oppoſite ſide of the coach?——I cannot ſay, the oppoſite door was open.

Was the glaſs up or down?——I cannot ſay.

You could ſee through the coach?—The priſoner had juſt gained himſelf upright when I ſaw him, juſt got the trunk on his right-ſhoulder.

Was his back to you, or his face?—As he took it out of the coach door he immediately croſſed over, I did not ſee his face, I juſt ſaw him ſideways and his back, I run after him, and cried ſtop thief! and he immediately took down Eagle-ſtreet, ſeveral people came to my aſſiſtance near to him, he went a few yards, and was ſo cloſely purſued by a gentleman that he dropped the trunk, he ran away, and was brought back to me immediately: I ſaw his ſide-face, and I ſaw his perſon.

Can you ſpeak with certainty as to the priſoner, whether that is the man?——I am very ſure of it, I am certain of it.

How long was it before he was taken after he ran away?—About three or four minutes, I did not ſee him taken.

As ſoon as he was brought back to you, did it immediately ſtrike you that he was the perſon?——It did.

Was you quite clear of it then?——I was.

Did you ſay any thing to the priſoner?——Nothing particular, only aſking how he could do it, I did not wiſh to have any thing to do with him, but the people that were with me inſiſted on my taking him to a Juſtice, I have had the trunk in my poſſeſſion ever ſince, the things are in it.

GEORGE CUMMING ſworn.

On the 27th of January, I was coming along Piccadilly, about half after ſix, and that lady came up to the coach, and laid hold of the handle of the door, and made a ſcream, and hallooed out ſtop thief! I then looked before and behind me, and ſaw nobody, ſhe ran towards the kennel, and I ſaw a man about the middle of the road with a trunk on his ſhoulder, the priſoner is the man, I am ſure of it, when I firſt got ſight of him; he was half way up Eagle-ſtreet, I followed him.

Did you ever loſe ſight of him?——No, not I till laid hold of him, being purſued he threw the trunk down at the top of Eagle-ſtreet.

Did you ſay any thing to the priſoner?——No, as the lady was in poſſeſſion of the trunk, I followed him, he rather made a ſtruggle, there were ſome people coming along, and he made up towards York-ſtreet, or St. James's Church, and as he turned, I caught hold of him by the right-breaſt, he aſked me what I laid hold of him for, I kept him till he was committed.

Priſoner. Did I throw the trunk down?——Yes, I ſaw you throw it down.

Mrs. Oſmond. And I ſaw you.

WILLIAM SUMMERSFORD ſworn.

I am a hackney coachman, I drove Mrs. Oſmond from the Old White Horſe Cellar, Piccadilly, and ſhe had three trunks with her, two in my hackney coach, and one in the boot, I carried her to the end of Air-ſtreet, Piccadilly, to the boot-maker's.

Court. Was that the trunk you put into your coach?——Yes.

(The trunk depoſed to by the proſecutrix.)

Court to Cumming. Did you take notice of the trunk?——Not then I did not.

What paſſed after that?——She ordered me to let her out, and I took the little trunk and carried it into the ſhop, and ſhe then ordered me to take a large trunk out of my boot and carry it in; this I left in the coach, when I was taking that other trunk out of the boot, I ſaw this priſoner, that very man, walk backwards and forwards by the ſide of my coach, and he went and ſtood about three or four yards behind the coach againſt the poſt, and when I was dragging this heavy trunk up the ſteps, I miſſed this man from the poſt, I had ſome ſuſpicion, I took hold of the lady, ſays I, Madam, I ſhould be much obliged to you to go and look at the coach; and as I came out, I heard a piece of work in the ſtreet, and the trunk was miſſing, I ran acroſs Piccadilly down Eagle-ſtreet, and caught hold of the trunk, I am ſure that is the trunk, I did not ſee it thrown down; I am ſure the priſoner is the ſame man that was walking by my coach.

PRISONER's DFENCE.

I came to town about a fortnight before this happened, and went up to Piccadilly to ſee a fellow-ſervant; coming along I heard a cry of ſtop thief; I ran down to the corner, and I aſked that man that ſtands here, which way the man was gone, and he hold of my collar, and ſaid I was the man that ſtole the box.

GUILTY.

To be ſent to the hulks to work on the River Thames for three years, according to act of Parliament.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

351. JOHN SIMPSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th of February, one hempen bag, value 8d. and ſixty pounds weight of braſs filings, value 16s. the property of Hezekiah Green.

HEZEKIAH GREEN ſworn.

I am an ironmonger and founder in Drury Lane, I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment on the 9th of February, the priſoner worked for me: about half after one, I found the priſoner in a place in my warehouſe, I ſuſpected him, and ordered him home.

MICHAEL DOBBS ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Green, the priſoner was employed by Mr. Green as a ſmith, I went into the counting houſe to ring the bell, and I heard the warehouſe door open, and a witneſs now in Court, was looking out of the window, and ſaid it was Simpſon, I ſtepped up to the window, and ſaw Simpſon with a bag, and he raiſed it on his knee while he opened another door of a paſſage, where his own ſhop door opens into; I immediately ran to the window, which looks into the ſmith's ſhop, and I ſaw him go through the ſhop with a bag, to a room that joins his ſhop, and in about a minute afterwards, he came out without any bag. I run down and met him, he was going to dinner, I went into the neceſſary: I came back in about two minutes and looked under ſome ſtraw in a chimney, and there I found a bag which contained braſs file duſt, the bag is in Court.

Court. Was you near enough the priſoner to diſcern the bag, was it ſuch a ſort of a bag?—Yes, and of that ſize.

Did you ſee any other bags in this room?——No, I left it in the ſame place, covered up, I told my maſter, and about twenty minutes after, I ſaw John Dell paſs the window with a bag on his ſhoulder, the ſame bag ſeemingly which I had ſeen in the room about the ſame ſize; I followed him into the ſtreet, and tapped him over the ſhoulder, and aſked him what he had there, he ſaid he did not know, I brought him back and delivered him to my maſter, I did not ſee the bag opened; the priſoner was taken up about a quarter of an hour after; there was no bag in the room then.

JOHN DELL ſworn.

Court. Take care to ſay nothing but the truth; you hear by Dobbs, that he came up to you, and found you with a bag on your ſhoulder, how came you by that bag?—The priſoner was my employer, I worked under him as hammer-man; he came to me at my dinner on the 9th of February, and ordered me to go and fetch a bag that was in the filing ſhop, and I ſhould find it in the chimney corner hid under ſome ſtraw; I left my dinner and went and found it there covered, I took it on my back to bring it to him to Mr. Pearce's or Mr. Read's, he would wait there; I took it to carry to him, and Michael Dobbs ſtopt me at the door.

Do you know what was in the bag?—No, he told me there was ſome ſwarth, that is iron file duſt.

What do you call braſs file duſt?—I do not know, I did not ſee the bag opened till it was brought to Mr. Green's, then he opened it in my preſence, and there was in it braſs file duſt.

Of what weight?—I cannot juſtly ſay.

(The bag depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Mr. Green ſent for me from my dinner about this file duſt, I told him I knew nothing thing of it. Dell had always the key of the ſhop door, he might take any thing away, I have been a ſervant under him many years, I know no more of it than my children that are at home, ſo help me God.

Court. Do you wiſh I ſhould aſk your maſter about your former behaviour?——If you pleaſe, he cannot give me a bad character.

Proſecutor. He has worked with me ſome time, but if I go to deſcribe his character, it will do him no good.

GUILTY.

Proſecutor. My Lord, I would wiſh to recommend him to your Lordſhip's mercy, not for the ſake of the man, but he has a large family, three or four children, and I believe a very honeſt wife.

Court to Priſoner. I cannot help lamenting that you are the ſecond ſervant who has been tried this morning, and convicted for robbing his maſter. Your crime deſerves an exemplary puniſhment, and the Court will always inflict it upon offenders of your deſcription; but your maſter having ſtill had more compaſſion for you than you had for him, has recommended you to the mercy of the Court: the ſentence of the Court is, that you be fined 1s. and confined to hard labour in the houſe of correction for nine months.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

351. PHILIP PROSSER was indicted for that he on the 13th day of Auguſt, at the pariſh of Hornſey, unlawfully, and feloniouſly did counſel, aid, abet, and procure one William Marſton Rothwell, otherwiſe William Rothwell, feloniouſly to make, coin and counterfeit, one piece of copper money, called an halfpenny, againſt the ſtatute.

A ſecond count for counſelling, aiding, abetting, and procuring the ſaid William Marſton Rothwell, otherwiſe William Rothwell, to coin one piece of copper money to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of an halfpenny.

The Record of the conviction of William Rothwell, otherwiſe William Marſton Rothwell, was produced and read by Edward Reynolds, Eſq; Clerk of the Arraigns; which was, "That "he, the ſaid William Rothwell, ſhould "be hanged by the neck till he was dead."

Court to Jury. Though the crime itſelf is not capital, yet this Rothwell had been convicted before, and had the benefit of the ſtatute allowed him; then on his ſecond conviction, the Solicitor of the Mint objected to his praying the benefit of the ſtatute a ſecond time; for by the law, a man that has had the benefit of Clergy once, is not entitled to it a ſecond time; that is the reaſon of his being ſentenced to be hanged by the neck, as has been read to you.

JOSEPH DINMORE ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Reeve, Council for the Proſecution.

I am a conſtable, Mr. Redgrave and I had information, that a cart was geing the other ſide of the way in the Old Bailey to receive ſome copper; we came about two in the afternoon, and ſaw the cart ſet out from under the gateway and go acroſs Smithfield; we then took a coach.

Court. Who was with the cart?—Rothwell, the perſon who was tried.

Nobody elſe?—No.

Was he riding in the cart?——Yes, it was a little open cart; we took coach on the ſtand in Smithfield, and followed the cart to Muſwell-hill; the cart ſtopped and went in at a pair of gates, which where opened on the ringing of a bell; we ordered the coachman then to go on that we might not be obſerved, and we came back to Iſlington, and there we waited to ſee if the cart came back the ſame way that evening; it returned a little after ſix, with Rothwell and the priſoner in it.

Court. Had you ſeen the priſoner before that day?—No, I never ſaw him before, to my knowledge. Redgrave and me ſtopped the cart, and they both came out; we took them into the parlour at the Woolpack, a public houſe in Iſlington-road; Redgrave went out to take care of the cart; the priſoner finding I was left alone, attempted to get out of one door and Rothwell at the other, I held Rothwell faſt, and the priſoner got out at the back door which goes into Gwynne's Buildings; we found in the cart a deal of cut copper, called cecil, and 20l. in halfpence; the halfpence were carried to the Tower long ſince, ſome of them are here, which I have had ever ſince.

(Four halfpence produced.)

Court. Did you yourſelf take thoſe four halfpence out of that cart?——Yes, I am confident they were in the cart.

Court. Where did you firſt get thoſe halfpence?——Out of a butter baſket that was in the cart, I took them out myſelf: Redgrave and me, and ſome others, went back to Muſwell hill the ſame night, to this houſe, and there we found a cutting-out preſs, a ſtamping preſs, and ſeveral dies, and ſome blanks, and ſome halfpence, freſh made but not coloured; the preſs was ſtanding as if for work, the dies in the preſs, and a halfpenny between the dies, we brought them away, and they were produced here; they are at the Tower now.

Court. This charge muſt be maintained againſt the priſoner at the bar, and you muſt have the evidence here.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for the Proſecution. My Lord, I ſhould think it was ſufficient for us, in the firſt inſtance, to produce the conviction of the principal, and it is incumbent on the priſoner to impeach it; the Jury muſt ſuppoſe that conviction is right; the record is ſufficient for me, if the priſoner can prove that theſe halfpence were good halfpence, then he is not active in the committing the felony; the law requires that theſe things ſhould be carried to the Tower, and immediately deſtroyed.

Mr. Chetwood, Council for the Priſoner. My Lord, I ſubmit if the record related to any thing relative to this man, he muſt contradict that in the beſt manner he can; but you muſt prove that there was a felony committed; the record proves it againſt the man himſelf that was a party, but not againſt this man.

Mr. Sylveſter. Till it is impeached the record is right.

Court. I ground myſelf upon this; Mr. Juſtice Forſter is of opinion, and very rightly, That if a man is indicted as acceſſary to a felony, the imputation of the felony to the principal is not ſufficient to affect him, he has a right to controvert that felony; it may be an exceeding nice queſtion to diſcuſs this thoroughly, but here is ſufficient evidence of the fact, independent of theſe dies, and theſe machines that this man found; if the priſoner is found coming from a houſe, with a cart, in which was contained a great quantity of counterfeit halfpence, that is a degree of evidence, in my apprehenſion, to lay before the Jury, accompanied with the conviction of Rothwell, whom he is indicted as counſelling, aiding, and abetting; I ſhould think that will be a degree of evidence for the Jury's conſideration, without the production of the machines, and without deciding the other point; therefore I ſhall take no notice to the Jury of this evidence of finding the dies and theſe things.

Mr. Chetwood. Where did you ſee the priſoner firſt?—Juſt by the Angel and the Bluecoat-boy, at Iſlington.

Coming to town, or going from town?—Coming to town.

In a cart with Rothwell?—Yes.

You do not know where he was taken up then?——I do not.

This was an open cart?—Yes.

The halfpence, that you ſay were in it, were they in baſkets or in bags?——They were in different things, they were not all in one thing.

Where did they come to?——To the Woolpack, ſome yards lower.

Had you any converſation with the priſoner there?—No.

Did you know Rothwell?——I had ſeen him before.

Then all that you can ſay is, that he was in the cart with Rothwell, and that you found theſe bad halfpence there?——Yes.

You have never heard any thing of him ſince?—No.

JONATHAN REDGRAVE ſworn.

I was the other officer attending with Dinmore; I watched the cart to Muſwell-hill, I ſaw it go in, then we went up to Highgate, and returned to Iſlington, and waited till the cart returned; I ſaw the priſoner with the other perſon in the cart together, we were at the One Ton, I was up ſtairs, they drove very faſt, and I was obliged to run, and I overtook them at the Woolpack, then I told them to ſtop; Dinmore then came up to me, and they aſked me what I wanted; I told them I had information they had ſome ſmuggled tea in the chaiſe; there was a hamper that one of them ſet his feet on, and there was ſome cecil in it.

Court to the Monier of the Mint. Is that deſtroyed or not?——I do not know.

Redgrave. There was a ſeat in the chaiſe, and in it were two baſkets of halfpence.

Court. Have you any halfpence which were found in the cart with you here?——Yes, here is one.

Were the reſt of them like that?—All alike.

Did you yourſelf ſee that halfpenny taken out of the parcel that were in the cart?——Yes, my Lord, we broke open one paper, and took them out for a ſample, we opened them all, and they were all of that kind, they were in twenty ſhilling papers.

How many were there?—I cannot recollect, we reckoned 20l. in all; I run to the cart, and in the mean while the priſoner made his eſcape from Dinmore.

Do you know any thing when the priſoner was taken again?—Mr. Clarke received a letter from Scotland, that he had made his eſcape there, I was not at the taking of him.

How long has he been in cuſtody?——Above a month.

Mr. Sylveſter. What did you find at the houſe?—Every thing compleat, and ſome new halfpence that were not coloured; it is always uſual to colour them after they are made.

Mr. Chetwood. What became of theſe dies and implements?—They were carried to the Tower.

Mr. Sylveſter. I certainly may give evidence to what is found in a man's houſe.

Mr. Chetwood. That is only introductory evidence.

Court. If you give them in evidence, the Jury ought to ſee theſe inſtruments, unleſs they are gone, and that is not the caſe at all, becauſe the gentleman who ſits here, tells me they are in a confuſed heap now exiſting.

Mr. Sylveſter. The preſſes are never produced here.

Mr. Chetwood. Always.

Court. The law requires that there ſhould be ſufficient evidence, the Court and Jury are to judge whether the evidence is ſufficient, you are to diſtinguiſh according to the crime, if it was for having a die or a ſtamping preſs in his cuſtody, then you muſt produce them, becauſe that is a ſpecific charge, but they are to be produced here as ſo many circumſtances of coining; but if you give evidence of theſe things, you muſt produce them; I do not think it is neceſſary to go that length.

Mr. Chetwood. My Lord, I ſhould apprehend that they muſt produce that evidence that is ſufficient to convict the priſoner, and it is fully in their power, and they have not accounted for it.

Court. The queſtion is, whether they have produced evidence enough?

Mr. Chetwood. My objection is that it was in their power to have produced evidence to ſhew that Rothwell was guilty of felony, and that the mere record is not ſufficient.

Mr. Sylveſter. You miſtake the law, that record is ſufficient at preſent to prove the conviction of the principal; you may impeach it if you can.

Mr. Chetwood. It is the conviction of another man, that this man is a ſtranger to.

JOSEPH SMITH ſworn.

I live in Peartree-ſtreet, near Goſwell-ſtreet, I know the priſoner, I let him a houſe at Muſwell-hill, juſt on the riſe of the hill, in the month of July laſt, he was to have it for twenty-one years, the leaſe was notdrawn up, but there was a written agreement.

Did he inhabit it?—I believe he did.

Court. Do you know he did?——My wife was there, and gave him poſſeſſion of it.

Mr. Chetwood. You never was there with him?—No.

Is it a lone houſe?—It ſtands on a piece of ground at a diſtance from others, he ſaid it would ſuit him very well, if we could agree upon terms.

SARAH SMITH ſworn.

I am wife to Joſeph Smith, my huſband let a houſe at Muſwell-hill, I gave the key to Mr. Proſſer myſelf, Rothwell was with him at the time.

Mr. Chetwood. Did you know whoſe uſe it was for?—For Mr. Proſſer's.

You never ſaw him at the houſe?—I gave him poſſeſſion of the houſe myſelf, and ſold him the fixtures, and received the money from him for the fixtures.

Do you know whether he inhabited it?—I believe he did.

Did you ever ſee him with any of his family there?—No, I did not, I let it him the 16th of July, and I gave him poſſeſſion on the 18th of July, and was with him from eight in the morning till the ſame time in the evening, and came home with him and Rothwell.

Was Rothwell preſent when you gave him the poſſeſſion?—He was.

Mr. Chetwood. You never went afterward to ſee who lived in the houſe?——No.

Court. Is there a cart-way to go into the yard belonging to the houſe?—There is a very good coach-way.

Mr. Sylveſter. How do you know it was the ſame houſe that the conſtables were at?——Becauſe I was there with them.

RICHARD FRANKLIN ſworn.

I am one of the moniers of the Tower, theſe were not made at the Tower, they are counterfeits.

(The halfpence handed to the Jury.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I took this houſe for the purpoſe of dealing in horſes; I let it again to Rothwell as things did not happen to my expectation, I told him he might have it till Michaelmas, by the week, upon that we agreed, and I let it him, but he was to quit it in a week's notice, when I wanted it, I was to have half-a-guinea a week, he ſaid, he would; he went to look at the houſe, to ſee what painting and glazing was wanting, and he had it.

JAMES FRANCIS ſworn.

What are you?——I am a painter and glazier.

Do you know this houſe at Muſwell-hill that was taken of Mr. Smith?——Yes.

Who lived in that houſe? who inhabitted it?——One Proſſer lived in it, and he let it to one Marſton for half-a-guinea a week, but there were no writings drawn up.

Where did the priſoner live himſelf?—I underſtood he lived there, he came to tell me he wanted to have a job of painting, I went to look at it, he let the houſe to Mr. Marſton for half-a-guinea a week, that was a verbal agreement at a public houſe at Iſlington; I do not know where he lived afterwards, he took me to ſee the job, and Marſton's wife was ill and wanted to go and live in the country, I never went after it afterwards, becauſe I waited for an anſwer.

Court to Mrs. Smith. What was the rent of the houſe?—Twenty pounds a year.

The priſoner called five other witneſſes who all gave him a very good character, and one of them ſaid, he ſometimes bought a horſe.

Court to Jury. It is neceſſary, as this man is indicted as an aider, counſellor and abettor of another, that you ſhould firſt be ſatisfied that the principal did commit that felony, which the priſoner is ſo indicted for abetting; therefore the council for the crown, have on this occaſion produced the record of that conviction, which was at this place in September laſt: I ſhall not mention the particular things which were found, as they are not produced, which they might have been, but only ſay that the witneſſes found a compleat apparatus there for coining, and theſe halfpence.

GUILTY.

To be fined 1s. and impriſoned one year in Newgate.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice GOULD.

352. JANE BROWN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th day of September laſt, two ſilver table ſpoons, value 5s. one ſilver tea ſpoon, value 1s. one copper ſtewpan, value 6s. one pair of women's ſtays, value 2s. one linen table cloth, value 12d. one muſlin apron, value 12d. two black ſilk cloaks, value 2s. one pair of linen ſheets, value 2s. one linen ſhift, value 12d. two linen aprons, value 6d. and one piece of gold coin of this realm, called a guinea, value 21s. the property of Margaret Richardſon.

Mr. Burdett, of Council for the Proſecution, thus opened the caſe.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury; although many priſoners have appeared before you in the courſe of this long ſeſſions, indicted for offences, ſimilar to that with which this priſoner ſtands now charged; yet I will venture to affirm, that not one of their caſes has been accompanied with ſimilar circumſtances of ingratitude. The priſoner was left by her huſband, who had gone to ſea, with a young child at her breaſt, in very great diſtreſs; in the month of September laſt ſhe contracted an acquaintance with the proſecutrix, and informed her of her unfortunate ſituation; and that ſhe had no other way of ſubſiſtance, but by working at her needle, and having no acquaintance in town, ſhe inſinuated, that it would be a very great act of charity, if through the recommendation of the proſecutrix or her friends, ſhe ſhould get employed: upon this, the proſecutrix, who is a very poor widow, and has lived where ſhe now reſides, in Preſcot-ſtreet, for forty years paſt, told the priſoner, that ſhe ſhould eſteem herſelf very happy, if ſhe could procure her any employment, which the proſecutrix promiſſed. In conſequence of this encouragement, the priſoner called daily on the proſecutrix, and obtained from her, and through her means, both aſſiſtance and work; and ſoon after propoſed to come and lodge with her: the proſecutrix being old and infirm, and not able to keep a ſervant, was willing to accept this offer, ſhe having at that time a very ſore leg, which confined her: accordingly the priſoner came to reſide with the proſecutrix; but the priſoner had not been long there, before the proſecutrix miſſed ſeveral of her things; however, ſhe had no ſuſpicion of the priſoner at the bar, until ſhe diſcovered the loſs of a cloak, which ſhe was very confident could be taken by no other perſon but the priſoner, nobody elſe having acceſs to the place wherein that cloak was kept; upon this, ſhe charged the priſoner with robbing her, and the priſoner being ſo charged, confeſſed ſhe had taken it, and ſaid ſhe had only pawned it; this ſatisfied the proſecutrix, who imagined, that by ſhewing her ſome lenity on this occaſion, it might cauſe her to confeſs, and return the reſt of the things; but inſtead of that, in a very few days afterwards, one morning before the proſecutrix got up, the priſoner was rummaging for ſomething under the bolſter, and being aſked by the proſecutrix what ſhe was ſearching there for, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was looking for her ſtockings about the bolſter and bed; but after the proſecutrix got up, and came to put her hand in her pocket, ſhe miſſed a guinea; and the ſame day, or the day after, ſhe miſſed the remainder of thoſe things, as ſtated in the indictment. The proſecutrix then told the priſoner, if ſhe did not return her things, ſhe would bring her before a magiſtrate: the priſoner promiſed to get them, but inſtead of doing ſo, ſhe abſconded for ſeveral days, and when found, it appeared ſhe had hired herſelf as a ſervant to an attorney of Clement's-inn; ſhe was upon this taken to Bow-ſtreet, when one of the proſecutrix's cloaks being found upon her, ſhe was committed. Gentlemen, this is a ſhort ſtate of the facts, which will be proved on the part of the proſecutrix, againſt the priſoner at the bar, if I am rightly inſtructed; and if they are proved to your ſatisfaction, it is your duty to find the priſoner guilty; if theſe facts are not proved by the evidence we will produce, you muſt acquit her.

MARGARET RICHARDSON ſworn.

I took in the priſoner out of charity to lodge with me the 12th of September, I have had no ſervant ſince my huſband died, I took care of her child while ſhe aſſiſted me as a ſervant. I miſſed the things mentioned in the indictment; when I was able to get out of my bed, and to go from one room to another, I went up ſtairs for ſome things; ſhe did not want me to get up, ſhe ſaid it would hurt my leg to go up ſtairs, and adviſed me not, but I did go; I went to the cheſt to get a piece of callimanco out, and when I opened the cheſt, I miſſed a pair of new ſtays that were in the cheſt; when I came down ſhe was ſitting in the room, and had ſome ſmall needle work by her; ſays I, where did you leave my ſtays; ſays ſhe, in the cheſt; ſays I, they are not there; ſays I, is there two table cloths there? yes, ſays ſhe; then, on St. Stephen's day, when the priſoner's child was buried, I went to put on my black ſilk cloak, and I aſked her where it was; ſays ſhe, it is in the drawer; ſays I, I cannot find it; ſays ſhe, it was there not a quarter of an hour ago, let me look for it; ſays I, I can ſee as well as you; ſhe laid her hand upon mine, ſays ſhe, make yourſelf eaſy, Mrs. Richardſon, do not put yourſelf into a paſſion, I know where it is, and that night ſhe told me ſhe had pawned it for three ſhillings, and a week after ſhe ſaid ſhe had put it out for three ſhillings and ſixpence, in the name of Brown; then I loſt the ſheets.

Court. How came you, after miſſing all theſe things one after another, and ſhe telling you that ſhe had pawned ſome of them, to leave her in your houſe?——She only owned to the cloak; after ſhe went away I miſſed the ſheets, two ſhifts, and a ſhirt; I loſt alſo a ſilver table ſpoon and a tea ſpoon, and a ſtewpan; ſhe had my black ſilk cloak upon her when ſhe was taken.

NATHANIEL OWEN ſworn.

I lodge in the proſecutrix's houſe; I remember miſſing the ſhirt, but who took it I cannot ſay.

MARGARET BIGNELL ſworn.

I recollect ſeeing the priſoner taking ſomething out with her one morning, but what it was I do not know.

ELIZABETH WRIGHT ſworn.

Did you ever hear the priſoner ſay any thing?——I heard her ſay this, thoſe that took one, took all.

THOMAS MANSELL ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I apprehended the priſoner, and found this cloak on her.

(The cloak depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing of any of the things, ſhe deſired me to pawn them herſelf; the cloak that was taken off my ſhoulders ſhe lent me to go of errands, and ſhe told me to take it with me when I went away.

Court to Proſecutrix. Did you deſire her to pawn theſe things?—No ſuch thing.

The priſoner called one witneſs to her character.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and confined to hard labour twelve months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

353. ELIZABETH DAY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of February, one earthen ware tea pot, value 12d. and two earthen ware diſhes, value 1s. 6d. the property of John Whiſker.

ANN WHISKER ſworn.

I keep an earthen ware ſhop; laſt Saturday was a fortnight, about ſix in the evening, the priſoner came to my ſhop, and two more women, and deſired to ſee ſome black tea pots; I took notice how many I took out, I took out five, they wanted to ſee more, and I did not chuſe it; one of them bid me leſs than I could take for a tea pot, then they quitted the ſhop, and as ſoon as they were gone I miſſed a tea pot, I called my huſband and told him, he went after them, and I followed him and ſaw him bring back the priſoner; I do not know what became of the other two, one of them took out two diſhes, but my huſband did not then know that the two diſhes he took from her belonged to me.

Court to Priſoner. Would you aſk this witneſs any queſtions?—I would rather aſk the gentleman when he is examined, if your Lordſhip pleaſes.

As the priſoner and two more were going out of our ſhop, I juſt ſtepped in, and my wife informed me a tea pot was ſtolen; I followed, and when we came to the end of White Hart-yard, they all ſtopped; the woman on my left hand, who was one of the three, took out two diſhes from under her clothes, they were yellow diſhes with blue edges; the priſoner at the bar was taking out a black tea pot from under her arm, and ſhe dropped the cover of it; on hearing the cover fall, I offered my ſervice to take it up, I told her I knew the pot was mine; ſhe ſaid, ſhe only took it in a joke, and hoped I would not detain her, or words to that effect; I ſaid, I certainly ſhall, it was a joke I could not diſpenſe with, and I brought her to my houſe, and got a conſtable.

Did you bring the tea pot with you?——I brought it in my hand, there is a ſelling mark upon it, of my own making, in red ink; the other two women made their eſcape; the value of the tea pot is one ſhilling, I did not get the diſhes.

Jury, looking at the tea pot. My Lord, the mark is of ſo ſimple a nature, it is a figure of one, any one can make ſuch a mark as that.

Court. Were they ſmartly dreſſed?——Very genteel, I could not have conceived it.

Why did not you ſtop the others?——I confeſs I was flurried a good deal, I might not act with propriety.

Priſoner. Do you recollect whether I was rightly in my ſenſes when you brought me back to the ſhop?——I ſhould think you was not, or you would not have been guilty of that.

Priſoner. I mean to ſay, whether or no he could not perceive I had drank more that afternoon than had done me good?

Court. That is no excuſe at all.

Priſoner. I took it back in my hand to the ſhop, but I would ſooner have broke it.

Court. I am ſorry to hear a young woman of your age tell us, that you was ſo intoxicated you did not know what you did.

The priſoner called two witneſſes, who gave her a good character.

Court to Jury. This proſecution is for a thing of ſmall value, but a perſon being in liquor is no excuſe, for ſome of the lawyers tell you, that drunkenneſs being a voluntary crime, increaſes the guilt; but if a perſon had in a frolic taken ſuch a thing, I think it would be too ſevere to conſtrue it into a felony, and if you ſhould take it in that light, it is poſſible you may acquit her.

NOT GUILTY.

Court to Priſoner. You ſee what an eſcape you have had, entirely owing to the good character given of you, and the thing being of a trivial nature; and I hope this will put you on your guard.

Priſoner. You may depend upon it, my Lord; I am very much obliged to you, gentlemen.

357. RICHARD WOOLDRIDGE, otherwiſe JONAS WOOLDRIDGE, was indicted, for that he, on the 6th day of February laſt, twenty-nine pieces of falſe and counterfeit milled money and coin, each of them called a ſhilling, the ſame not being then cut in pieces, unlawfully and feloniouſly did put off to one Elizabeth Levy, at a lower rate and value than they did import, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

A ſecond Count, for that he, on the ſaid 6th day of February laſt, twenty-nine pieces of falſe and counterfeit milled money and coin, each of them made and counterfeited to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of a piece of good, legal and current milled money and ſilver coin of this realm, called a ſhilling, unlawfully and feloniouſly did put off to one Elizabeth Levy, at the rate of 29s. for one piece of current gold coin of this realm, called a guinea, againſt the ſtatute.

ELIZABETH LEVY ſworn.

I live in Catherine-wheel-alley; I remember the priſoner coming to my houſe on the 6th day of February, my huſband travels in the country, he is a dealer; when the priſoner came, he aſked if my huſband was at home, and ſaid he wanted to ſpeak with him; he was not at home; I told him I could do very poſſibly as well as him; with that he ſaid he had ſome ſhillings, if my huſband could help him to any body that would buy any; I aſked him what they were; he ſaid, twenty-nine ſhillings for a guinea; I aſked him to let me look at them, and he did, and I told him that my huſband was not at home, but to call again; he came very uncertainly at different times, that my huſband could not wait at home; when he came again, I told him I would have ſome of them; he came again the day he was taken, and I bought three parcels of him; I cannot tell the day of the month: when he came the ſecond time, he had none with him; he ſaid he ſhould call again, they were not ready; he never came to his time; he put ſome down, and I looked at them, and I looked out three parcels, and was to give him three guineas for them, twenty-nine ſhillings for a guinea; Mr. Clarke came in at the time, and ſeized us both; they lay there all ready; he took him and me, and ſearched him, and found a vaſt quantity in a bag.

Court. Had you actually paid him the money?—No, but I was going to pay him as Mr. Clarke came in; I had looked the money ready to pay him, and put them up.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. My Lord, I meant to make the objection on the words of the ſtatute, the indictment charges, "that he did put off."

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Is not that putting off, delivering it to another?

Mr. Baron Perryn. I take putting off to be the ſame thing as actually diſpoſing, that is my conſtruction upon it.

Mr. Garrow. I meant to take the objection, but if the Court is clear in favour of the priſoner, I need not.

Mr. Baron Perryn. No, my brother Gould and me differ, I think putting off is the ſame as ſelling; the caſe here is this, while this woman was in treaty, Clarke the officer comes and ſeizes her; the priſoner had put them down, there were three parcels of them, and he was to receive three guineas; but before he received it, and they are ready for her, Clarke comes in and ſweeps them away; the thing is not done.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I concur with that moſt clearly.

Mr. Sylveſter. She ſays, he came and agreed with me; apply to the woman herſelf.

Mr. Garrow. You ſhould not mend the witneſs's evidence.

Mr. Sylveſter. I never wiſh to mend a witneſs's evidence, the interpoſition came ſo ſoon.

Mr. Garrow. I was going to object, and my Lord made the objection, and I hope now that Mr. Sylveſter ſhall not aſk the queſtion; I was ſtanding up to croſs examine, and now Mr. Sylveſter tells your Lordſhip it had been agreed, and he is now to aſk the witneſs whether it was agreed; ſuppoſe ſhe had ſaid upon looking at them, no, Sir, I cannot afford it, I will give you two guineas and a half for it, that is not the meaning of the ſtatute, the contract muſt be compleat; the indictment ſtates this ſubſtantive fact, that he did put off; now, as to that, what is the evidence? was the contract perfectly compleat between theſe parties? was there any money paid? might not the contract be diſſolved?

Mr. Sylveſter. It has not been very uſual to object to queſtions before they are heard; all I deſired was, that the witneſs for the Crown, who is now ſworn, might tell her own ſtory, without being interrupted by me or that gentleman.

Mr. Baron Perryn. Mr. Garrow did ſtand up to croſs examine.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. The thing is as my brother Perryn has taken it; the money was put down; I am of opinion, upon the conſtruction of the act of parliament, that the offence is not compleated till it is received, and taken by the party to whom it is offered; then the evidence is, that Clarke came in before this woman had touched any of this money, and ſwept it all off.

Mr. Sylveſter. I underſtand that ſhe had received it intirely.

Elizabeth Levy. I had looked them out, and bought them, and was going to pay him.

Mr. Garrow. She ſaid they were ready for her to have.

Levy. He had told me the price before.

Mr. Sylveſter. Had you taken poſſeſſion of them?——Yes, I did, and put them in three different places on the table; they were in a bag, and he took them out of the bag.

Then this ſilver was reckoned out to you, and you put them in three parcels?——I had reckoned every parcel, there was twenty-nine ſhillings in every parcel; then Mr. Clarke came in and took the priſoner, and took the remainder of them from him in a bag; he had not thoſe about him that I had bought; and he took thoſe that I had bought off from the table; Mr. Clarke ſaid how came you here, ſays he, what are you about? he made anſwer, nothing at all, I do not know how I came here; I was at a ſtand when Mr. Clarke came in, it ſhocked me ſo I did not know what to do; Mr. Clarke aſked me what that was, and I told him I had bought it.

Mr. Garrow. You was very much ſhocked at his coming, though you expected his viſit?—I expected it much ſooner than he came.

So, you having invited a gentleman, and he not coming to his time, you were very much ſhocked at ſeeing him; is that ſo, Mrs. Levy?——Yes, Sir.

You had told us all that you knew about it when my Lord ſtopped you before?——Yes, Sir.

You had had two or three converſations with this man before?—Yes.

You made an appointment with Clarke to come and meet him?—Yes, there were three parcels on the table, I had not paid for them, I was going to pay for them, I had agreed, and was going to get the money at the pawnbrokers.

Oh! that is your idea of a purchaſe; what was you going to pawn this bad ſilver?—They would not take them in.

Oh! they would not?—I ſuppoſe not, I am not acquainted with this ſort of buſineſs.

You knew you was ſubjecting yourſelf to an indictment for a felony?

Mr. Sylveſter. That is not law.

Mr. Garrow. I beg your pardon.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. You ought not to put it on that ground, you might as well call thoſe accomplices to highwaymen, that go to take the highwaymen.

Mr. Garrow. I ſhall ſhew the Jury the character of this witneſs.

Mr. Baron Perryn. This woman has had frequent communications with this man, and ſhe ſeems to me to be a decoy duck.

Mr. Garrow. How much money had you in your pocket?—About a guinea, or twenty-five or twenty-ſix ſhillings; I was going to the pawnbroker's.

What are you?——I dare ſay you can ſee.

But I wiſh the Jury to know what are you, who are you?—A woman, I cannot give you any better account than that.

That is unlucky; is that the only account you ever gave in this place?—The only account I ever gave in my life.

Is it; why, I believe my learned friend has croſs-examined you before now?——I never was here in my life.

Upon your oath, was you never at that bar in your life?—I was never at that bar.

Are you a married woman?——Yes, I am a married woman, and have two children.

Your huſband is a pedlar when he is at liberty?—He is at liberty now.

Is not he in Newgate at this time?—No.

What is his other name beſides Levy, is not it Lyon?—No, Sir, now you are quite out.

What is it?

Mr. Sylveſter. It is very unneceſſary to know the hiſtory of this woman.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I think theſe trials ought to proceed with more gravity.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, the want of gravity comes from the witneſs, and not from me, I cannot help the Court laughing at the nonſenſe of the witneſs; I am inſtructed, that her huſband is now in the gaol of Newgate, and is to receive mercy in conſequence of this woman's evidence here.—Then you are inſtructed very wrong, I aſſure you.

Mr. Baron Perryn. I do not ſee myſelf the impropriety of that queſtion, becauſe what that gentleman alledged laſt night in the caſe of Mrs. Rudd, with reſpect to the evidence of Mrs. Perreau, the Court refuſed to receive her evidence, becauſe ſhe thought the conſequence would be, that her huſband would receive mercy; and if this woman had now ſaid, that the conſequence of this man's conviction would be that her huſband would receive mercy, it would have been material.

Mr. Sylveſter. I believe the law is, that it cannot go to the competency of a witneſs; nor do I believe in that caſe that the Court refuſed Mrs. Perreau on that; I believe it was put to Mr. Bearcroft, whether he choſe to examine her upon it or not.

Court. If it went to her credit, the queſtion was proper.

Mr. Garrow. If any body has told the witneſs, it will have that operation.

Mr. Baron Perryn. I know a witneſs was rejected by Lord Chief Baron Parker, becauſe he was under an honorary conſideration to pay coſts, not a compulſory one.

Mr. Garrow. Was you never in the cuſtody of an officer before this time?—No.

Never for receiving ſtolen goods?——I never did receive any ſtolen goods; there is ſeveral of the name.

And you neither had paid for theſe things, nor had the three guineas to pay for them?——No, not quite.

Pray Mrs. Levy, I am deſired to aſk you another queſtion, give a ſerious anſwer upon your oath; has not your huſband very recently been in cuſtody for putting off bad guineas?——No, not bad guineas.

For ſome offence about coining?——No, Sir, I will tell you; this was the ſecond time that this man came; the firſt of this man's coming to me, he came with half a guinea, my huſband was not at home, nor knew nothing at all about it; I told him when he came home, and I looked at it; ſays I, it is bad, and I would not have any thing at all to do with any bad money; he went away and came on the Monday; he aſked me if my huſband was at home, and I told him he was not; he bade me keep it, and he begged me to tell my huſband to ſee if he could get any cuſtomers; on the Thurſday, my huſband took the half guinea, and went into that gentleman's ſhop to buy ſome tea and ſugar, and that gentleman ſaid it was bad.

Mr. Garrow. Your huſband then was in cuſtody, on a charge of having put off a bad half guinea?—He was in cuſtody for having this half guinea.

Your huſband being in cuſtody on this ſubject, you then laid this ſcheme to bring the priſoner to your houſe?—I could not, I did not know where he lived, he frequently came and brought me ſilver after he knew this.

When was your huſband diſcharged?—He was not diſcharged, he was bailed.

Mr. Sylveſter. And he is now to be tried?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Now, my Lord, I aſk her the queſtion in Mrs. Rudd's caſe; I aſk you, upon your oath, whether you have not laid this ſcheme to bring that man here, for the purpoſe of bringing off your huſband?—Upon my oath I have not.

Do not you expect that the conviction of that man at the bar will prevent the proſecution of your huſband?—I do not expect it.

Do not you hope it?—I do not hope to convict any body.

Do not you hope your huſband will be diſcharged?——I do not ſuppoſe he will be diſcharged.

Did you never ſay ſo to that gentleman?—I never ſaid any thing to that gentleman.

Did you never promiſe that gentleman to take the priſoner?——I never promiſed any body, I did not promiſe any ſuch a thing, you want to perſuade me that I told him things; there is as much honeſty in me as there is in you.

Have not you been told that your huſband will be diſcharged?—I have told you ſeveral times that nobody has told me ſo.

Have you, then I did not underſtand you.—Then I tell you ſo now.

Do not you expect it will be better for your huſband, if that man is convicted?—I do not expect any thing about it.

Do you believe it?—I believe very little about it, indeed.

You are an unbeliever, is that the caſe?——Like yourſelf.

I do not believe what you ſay, if you you mean that; where is your huſband?—I muſt be a witch or a wizard to know where he is now, I have been here ſince nine this morning, he was in bed when I came out this morning; if you was on the bench, I am ſure you would caſt him right or wrong.

Did not you lay this ſcheme to bring the priſoner to your houſe, that your husband might be diſcharged?——You could not blame me if I did.

Mr. Sylveſter. This man came to you with half a guinea?—Yes.

What did he offer half a guinea for?——Eight ſhillings and ſixpence, I paid him for that.

After that he came ſeveral times to offer you ſilver?—Yes.

You did not know where the priſoner lived?—No.

But you gave information that the priſoner had been with you?——Yes, I did not know his name, I had ſeveral times ſeen him with this ſilver; I had agreed for the payment of the money, and had received it from him.

Mr. Baron Perryn. If you cannot carry this matter any further than the evidence that is now adduced, I am of opinion it is not ſufficient evidence, therefore it is the buſineſs of the Court to decide on that queſtion, and if my brother Gould is of the ſame opinion with me, I ſhall not reſerve this caſe.

Mr. Sylveſter. It is your Lordſhip's wiſh as well as mine, that the determinations of the Court ſhould be conſiſtent, and that one day we ſhould not reject evidence, which another we received; I do not believe there is an objection that can be ſtated by the ingenuity of man, but what has been taken, and has been conſidered; I defy the ingenuity of this gentleman to find a new objection; I remember this objection being taken, and taken by myſelf, and over-ruled; the anſwer to me has been this, the offence is compleat on the priſoner if he puts it off to you, and gives you the poſſeſſion of it, he has done as much as in him lays; to do the ſubſequent part lays in the witneſs, to give the money; no one of the Gentlemen of the Jury would have have paid the money, but the moment he had poſſeſſion of theſe counterfeit ſhillings, he would immediately have taken the priſoner up: I only wiſh we may know how far it is or is not evidence.

Mr. Baron Perryn. Upon the croſs-examination of this woman, ſhe has carried her teſtimony farther than ſhe did on her examination in chief; and as you have another indictment againſt this man, why ſhould you be ſo anxious to have a determination upon this.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, I wiſh it.

Mr. Baron Perryn. If my brother Gould concurs with me, the man muſt be acquitted; but if he thinks it ſuch a caſe as is proper for the conſideration of all the Judges, it ſhall be reſerved for their opinion.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. I concur that nothing can be more clear, than that the act muſt be done according to the terms of the act of Parliament, and whatever progreſs it may have made towards it, if it is not finally compleated and finiſhed, it does not reach that crime; however it may be right to take every poſſible method to repreſs ſuch pernicious practices as theſe, the Judges are bound not to ſtretch laws that are to affect the lives of their fellow ſubjects: I remember a caſe I tried at York, and I reſerved it; it was an indictment for coining a guinea and a half-guinea; the guinea was ſtruck between two dies, with the head and with the reverſe compleat; it was then delivered by the coiner, (for there was actual proof of the fact itſelf, of its being delivered) to a perſon ſtanding by, and the purpoſe of it was manifeſtly and unqueſtionably to go and get it changed; but in the ſtate that it was delivered out, the edges were rough, and it would not paſs; nobody would take it; nothing could be proved of what became of this piece of counterfeit money: the objection as it has ſtruck my brother now occurred to me, that it was treaſon brought very near to completion, but not quite completed: I let the trial go on, I acquainted the late Mr. Wallace, a man very eminent and particularly ſo in the laws of this country; I ſaid, I did not chuſe to let this paſs publicly in the hearing of this whole county, for Yorkſhire was then very famed for this, and I reſerved the caſe: the opinion of the Judges was, that I was right in my conception, that the piece not being compleatly finiſhed, it did not amount to high treaſon. The act of Parliament in this caſe ſays, ſhall take, receive, pay, or put off: now take the common idea of that; a man comes to a tradeſman to pay for a piece of goods, that he is buying in his ſhop, before the tradeſman has delivered his goods he diſcovers this counterfeit money, the man intended and meant, if you pleaſe, to put off that money, but it had not its effect, it was ſtopped before it reached the goal; the legiſlature in my opinion upon the act of Parliament that occurred to me, have themſelves decided this matter, in the act of the fifteenth and ſixteenth of his late Majeſty, there the offence, which I apprehend this amounts to is provided for; if any perſon after ſuch a day ſhall offer or tender in payment any falſe or counterferfeit money, he ſhall be liable to be impriſoned for ſix months: this was offering and tendering this falſe money, and it would clearly come within that act of Parliament, but within the term pay or put off as it ſtrikes my idea, it falls ſhort of the import conveyed by thoſe words, therefore I do concur in opinion with my brother Perryn; altho' it is ſaid here at the bar, that this matter has paſſed ſeveral times here, and then we are told that all the ingenuity of council cannot invent a new objection, that there is no objection that could occur to the ingenuity of man, but has been ſtarted here and thoroughly diſcuſſed; I confeſs, I never heard a queſtion of this kind before, therefore it comes to me purely and ſimply upon the terms of this act of Parliament, and if we are to underſtand theſe words not with a legal acceptation, but a vulgar acceptation, what does a man mean when he ſays I put off ſuch a half-guinea? why, I have got rid of it; therefore we ought to refer to the natural acceptation of the term, and this evidence does not reach it: therefore I am of opinion that in point of law the offence is not proved.

Mr. Sylveſter. My Lord, that act of Parliament your Lordſhip mentions is for offering, or tendering in payment, as and for a good piece of legal coin, falſe money as good money; the objection would be, it cannot come within that act of Parliament, he does not utter it, or pay it as good money, he pays it as bad money.

Mr. Baron Perryn. It is not uſual to reply to the Court, you have heard the opinion of the Court.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. You ſhould look at the act of Parliament, the words are, "ſhall after ſuch a day offer or tender in "payment any falſe or counterfeit money, "knowing the ſame to be falſe and counterfeit."

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

358. The ſaid RICHARD WOOLDRIDGE otherwiſe JONAS WOOLDRIDGE was again indicted, for that he, on the 29th day of January laſt, one piece of falſe and counterfeit milled money and coin, made and counterfeited to the likeneſs and ſimilitude of the good, legal and current milled money and coin of this realm, called a half-guinea, the ſame not being then cut in pieces, unlawfully and feloniouſly did put off to one Elizabeth Levy, at a lower rate than the ſame did import, to wit, for eight pieces of current ſilver coin of this realm called ſhillings, and one other piece of current ſilver coin of this realm, called a ſixpence, being together of the value of 8s. 6d. againſt the form of the ſtatute.

A Second Count, for putting off one piece of counterfeit milled money called a half-guinea, &c. for eight ſhillings and ſixpence, againſt the ſtatute.

Mr. Sylveſter of Council for the Proſecution thus opened the caſe.

Gentlemen; I did not think it right to mention this indictment, in the beginning of the former trial, becauſe though I wiſh juſtice always to take place between the crown and the priſoner, I for one will never endeavour to prejudice the minds of the Jury; for which reaſon cautiouſly did I avoid it, nor did I ſuggeſt the leaſt hint whatever of this offence, I wiſhed that trial to turn on that ſimple fact of the ſhillings; the queſtion now is, Whether the offence mentioned in this indictment, which has now been read to you, is, or is not compleat? becauſe————

Mr. Garrow. I beg Mrs. Levy may go out of Court while Mr. Sylveſter is ſtating this.

Mr. Sylveſter. The character that has been given of the witneſs, Mrs. Levy, I believe ſhe does not deſerve; the way to affect witneſſes, is to call people to impeach their teſtimony; you will judge what credit is due to her teſtimony, and whether it remains unimpeached. The ſtory of this indictment ſhe has pretty nearly told you on her croſs-examination, as well as the former; that on the 29th of January the priſoner came to her, and wanted her huſband to get ſome cuſtomer to buy counterfeit money; that one particular half guinea was left for ſome days, and that at laſt it was bought, and eight ſhillings and ſixpence was paid for this half guinea; the huſband going with this half guinea, and tendering it in payment as a good half guinea, becauſe otherwiſe, in my opinion, it is no offence, the tradeſman ſaid, how did you come by this; then it was diſcovered that it came by this man, the priſoner; he had been traced by the officers of juſtice backwards and forwards to Levy's houſe; they watched him and took him into cuſtody, and found a large quantity of counterfeit money upon him; in this caſe, the money was actually paid for the half guinea, therefore the offence was perfectly compleat, and if ſo, you muſt find the priſoner guilty. If on the other hand, the evidence ſhould not be ſufficient to reach him, or he has a clear defence to this accuſation, I, for one, ſhall rejoice in his acquittal; and as to the Mint, although they think it their duty to ſtand forth to proſecute every offender, and to protect the public, they have no wiſh or inclination on either ſide of the queſtion.

ELIZABETH LEVY ſworn.

The 29th of January was the firſt time the priſoner came to my houſe; he aſked me if my huſband was at home, that was this day five weeks, I cannot rightly tell the day of the month, I told him my huſband was not at home, and I aſked him his buſineſs, then he ſhewed me half a guinea to buy it.

Court. He aſked you to buy it, did he?—Yes, Sir, I told him it was a bad half guinea, and he ſaid it was; I aſked him then what he aſked for it; he ſaid, eight ſhillings and ſixpence; I told him, I thought eight ſhillings and ſixpence for a bad half guinea was a great deal of money, and I told him I could not ſay any thing to it, I would ſhew it to my huſband, and he would call again, for being Saturday, I could not pay him for it.

Court. What it was your ſabbath, was it? Yes, Sir.

So your conſcience would not let you pay for it that day?—No, Sir; he called again on the Monday following, and I told him I did not much like to have any thing to do with it; then he over perſuaded me, and ſaid there was two ſhillings that I might get by half a guinea, and I bought it of him, and gave him eight ſhillings and ſixpence for it.

Court. And you actually bought it?—Yes, Sir.

And did you pay for it?——Yes, Sir, I paid him eight ſhillings and ſixpence for it.

Are you ſure it was the priſoner you dealt with?—Yes.

Had you known any thing of him before?—I had ſeen him ſeveral times before.

Had you ever any dealings with him before?——Once, a good while back.

And only in that inſtance?——Only in that.

Mr. Sylveſter. When did you ſee him after that?—I ſaw him on the Thurſday following, he called and had nothing with him, and he called on Friday, as I have ſaid; I am ſure of the man, I do not come here for gain or intereſt; I gave the half guinea to my huſband in his pocket on the Thurſday, as he called on the Friday.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of Richard Wooldridge.

Mr. Garrow. Is your huſband here?—No, he had no call to be here.

Now, the firſt time that he came to you, you ſay, that he left the half guinea with you?—Yes.

You did not then bargain for it?—I was only to keep it and ſhew it, I was afraid to look at it almoſt, for I did not like the thoughts of bad money, and I know the conſequence of people being brought into trouble.

I think you ſaid you had once before dealt in bad money?—Yes, once with him, but never with any body elſe, I had bought half a guinea worth of ſilver of him, and if he had not come to me, I ſhould not have gone to him.

And ſo this half guinea ſhocked you, and frightened you ſo, that you was afraid to look at it?——I never mentioned any thing of ſhocked.

Well, frightened?——No.

Afraid then?——It was very pretty.

At laſt you gave it to your huſband?—Yes.

What became of it after you gave it to your huſband, you do not know of your knowledge?——He laid it out.

Why will not you tell me that you know nothing at all about it?——I do, Sir.

Your conſcience would not let you pay for it on the Saturday?——No.

Then your conſcience is of this ſort, it will let you make an iniquitous bargain of a Saturday?—I did not make any bargain of a Saturday, I bargained and paid for it on the Monday.

Did you go to the pawnbroker's?—No, I had as much about me.

Your huſband gave you information that he was in trouble about this half guinea?—Yes.

He was taken up for uttering that half guinea, and gave bail?—Yes.

How long was he in cuſtody?—A week.

Did the Solicitor of the Mint conſent to his being diſcharged?——I do not know.

Where was he bailed?——Before them that committed him, ſomebody up in Bow-ſtreet.

ELEANOR LESTLEY ſworn.

My father keeps a grocer's ſhop in the Strand.

Have you the half guinea?—My father has.

Who did you receive it from?——From Mr. Levy.

Did you give it to your father?—Yes.

Mr. Garrow. Miſs Leſtley, was you acquainted with Levy?——No, I never ſaw him before.

So that you received it of a man, whoſe name you afterwards heard was Levy?—I ſaw him afterwards at Sir Sampſon Wright's.

Was the priſoner there then?—No, he was not.

CHARLES LESTLEY ſworn.

I am a grocer; I was preſent when my daughter received that half guinea from a man of the name of Levy; that is the ſame half guinea.

Mr. Garrow. You did not know him before, I ſuppoſe?——No, never.

A man gave that half guinea to your daughter, whoſe name you afterwards underſtood was Levy?—Yes.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Was you at Bow-ſtreet; did you ſee the man there?—I did not; I took him, he ran away as hard as he could, he ran up two ſtreets, and I ran after him and took him to Bow-ſtreet, and he emptied his pockets of bad ſilver.

What charge was made againſt him at Sir Sampſon Wright's?——For uttering a bad half guinea he was committed; I know nothing about his being admitted to bail, only as I have heard; I do not know how long he was in cuſtody.

Mr. Sylveſter. It is the ſame man?——Yes.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

I ſearched the priſoner, and in his breeches pocket I found theſe four half guineas; I alſo found ſix ſhillings in his breeches pocket, and two bad ſixpences in his fob pocket; the ſix ſhillings were all bad.

Did you find any thing more about him?—Yes, in his coat pocket he had a bag of ſilver, with a vaſt quantity indeed, which are the ſame pattern of theſe ſix ſhillings.

Mr. Garrow. Was it before or after the priſoner was apprehended, that her huſband was in cuſtody?——Her huſband was in cuſtody before the priſoner was apprehended.

Was he in cuſtody at the time?——I do not know.

You went there by the appointment of Mrs. Levy?—I ſhall not tell you without ſubmitting it to the Judge.

Court. It is very proper.

It was by the particular deſire of Mr. Clarke; I knew nothing of Mrs. Levy; ſhe did not make that offer; I did not apprehend Levy; I was not preſent when he was examined.

How many parcels of ſilver were there on the table?——I cannot tell; I know the priſoner what a comical ſort of a gentleman he is at ſometimes.

Were there not ſeven or eight?—I cannot tell indeed; four or five there might be.

JOHN CLARKE ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Sylveſter.

You have been employed for the Mint about fifteen or ſixteen years paſt?—A good many.

You went to Levy's houſe?——I did on Friday the 6th, the very day that I was taken ill; I went into the one pair of ſtairs, there I ſaw the priſoner at the bar, and Mrs. Levy, ſitting at a table by the fire, and upon the table there lay three nine and twenty ſhillings worth of ſilver, in three parcels of ſilver, I counted them, and in each parcel there were twenty-nine ſhillings; I deſired Jealous to ſearch the priſoner in my preſence; he did ſo, and in his pocket he found a canvaſs bag, and I think there was twelve or thirteen pounds, beſides the three parcels that were found on the table; (the three parcels ſhewn him) I think there were four counterfeit half guineas, and ſix ſhillings which are in the hands of Mr. Jealous.

Mr. Sylveſter. Have you compared the ſhillings in the parcels and in the bag with thoſe in his pocket?

Mr. Garrow. Will your Lordſhip try any queſtion about the ſhillings.

Mr. Juſtice Gould. This is only a circumſtance to denote that this man dealt in bad money.

Mr. Garrow. That is evidence about his character.

Mr. Baron Perryn. Have you any monier of the Mint, to ſhew that this was bad money?—Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Garrow to Clarke. You took the priſoner and Mrs. Levy both into cuſtody?—Yes, I did at firſt.

She was a good deal frightened and alarmed at your coming into the room?——I do not ſuppoſe ſhe was ſo much frightened as what you may imagine; the fact is this, after her husband was taken into cuſtody, it was thought neceſſary to get at the branch and at the root of it, and the woman herſelf ſaid, ſhe would give up the perſon whom ſhe had the half guinea of.

In order to ſave her husband?—No, Sir, no ſuch thing; he is under proceſs at this time, to appear at Weſtminſter ſeſſions.

I would aſk you, if I may be permitted, whether you do not, upon your oath, believe that that woman expects her husband will be diſcharged in conſequence of the priſoner's conviction?

Mr. Juſtice Gould. Though that affects her credit, it does not affect her competency.

Mr. Garrow. I am as well contented that it ſhould go to her credit.

Mr. Sylveſter to to Clarke. You have ſeen all the half guineas?—All but that of Mr. Leſtley's, which I never had in my hands.

Be ſo good to compare them.

(Clarke looks at the half guinea and the others.)

Mr. Garrow. If the half guinea which is now produced to you by that gentleman, had been produced to you by any body elſe, could you have diſtinguiſhed it from a good half guinea?—Not a doubt of it, if it had been out of my poſſeſſion for ſeven years.

Could you diſtinguiſh that one from the others that are produced to you?—No, I do not ſay that.

They are ſo much alike, that though you could diſtinguiſh them from good half guineas, you could not diſtinguiſh them from theſe?——It is too much for me to ſwear it, I would not ſwear it.

I dare ſay you would not.

RICHARD FRANKLIN ſworn.

I am a monier of the Mint; this is counterfeit; and the others alſo.

Court. How do you know that they are bad?—By the milling.

Is there any gold in it?—It is impoſſible to diſtinguiſh that, without an aſſay.

Mr. Clarke. Whoever made one made the other; I ſhould not like to give above ſixpence; in ſhort, they are worth nothing; I ſhould not ſuppoſe there is any gold in it.

Mr. Garrow to Franklin. You have ſaid it is impoſſible to aſcertain, without an aſſay, how much gold there is in this half guinea?—Yes; one of the reaſons that I think it is bad is, that the milling is very badly executed.

Might not a good half guinea be ſo clipped, and afterwards milled by an inexpert hand, as to produce that ſort of milling that is now on this half guinea?—It might be ſo done.

Court. Does it appear that this half guinea has been clipped?——No.

Can you tell that by your eye?—Yes, I ſpeak from the whole, but the milling is what I know by.

Mr. Clarke. You will find that the very outlines of the die is upon the money, therefore when it comes to be milled, or taken off, it muſt reduce it.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, admitting the whole of Mrs. Levy's evidence to be true, for the ſake of argument, I humbly ſubmit that there is no evidence, that this half guinea was the half guinea that Levy uttered, becauſe Levy is not produced.

Mr. Baron Perryn. That is proper evidence to be left to the Jury.

Mr. Garrow. There is no proof that it is the ſame half guinea that he received from his wife.

Mr. Baron Perryn. Is Levy here, becauſe he is a competent witneſs?

Mr. Garrow. Levy had a great deal of falſe money about him.

Mr. Baron Perryn. He had no other gold, but the priſoner had.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went to Mr. Levy's to ſee him; I knew him ſome time; he ſaid he would help me to ſome employ; he was out of town, and I called again the next day, and ſhe bid me ſtop a bit, and ſhe began telling this money over; I had no time to ſay any thing to her, ſhe had them in the room when I went in; ſhe ſaid here is ſomebody coming up; ſays ſhe, put that bag in your pocket, and ſhe had ſome ſhillings that ſhe was looking at, and there was ſomebody coming up ſtairs, it was theſe gentlemen; ſays ſhe, here is ſomebody coming up ſtairs, and, ſays ſhe, put them in your pocket; I put the ſilver in my coat pocket, and the half guineas and ſhillings I put in my breeches pocket.

Court. What do you ſay as to offering the half guinea to her?—I never ſaw that, I know nothing of it; there were four on the table, that was all that I ſaw.

Court to Jury. This is a caſe that comes directly within the act of parliament; this depends intirely on the credit you give to Mrs. Levy's teſtimony: as to the want of the evidence of Levy being produced, that does not, in my apprehenſion, make any great difference in this caſe; becaſe, if the priſoner offered to ſell any counterfeit money, he has been guilty of the offence which is within the act of parliament; it ſeems to me, that if any half guinea is now produced to you in evidence, which was uttered by the priſoner at the bar at a leſs price, it is ſufficient.

GUILTY.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, this is a man who has had once his Clergy, it is the wiſh of the Mint, that he ſhould be proceeded againſt as Rothwell was.

The ſentence on this priſoner, which is that of Death, he having before had the benefit of Clergy, was not paſſed, but reſpited to next Seſſions.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron PERRYN.

359. THOMAS TURNER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 13th day of February, one wooden box, value 10s. one cloth coat with ſixteen ſilver buttons, value 50s. a cloth waiſtcoat with ſilver buttons, value 20s. a pair of worſted ſtockings, value 2s. one pound and a half of worſted, value 5s. one printed book, value 5s. ſix linen ſhirts, value 30s. three muſlin neckcloths, value 7s. four guineas, value 4l. 4s. and 1l. 19s. 3d. in monies numbered, the property of Thomas Newcomb, in the dwelling houſe of Thomas Babbington.

THOMAS NEWCOMB ſworn.

I am a grazier; I lodged all the winter at the dwelling houſe of Thomas Babbington; I loſt a wooden box, value 10s. I ſaw it at ſeven o'clock on February the 13th, and before eight my room door was broke open, and my box and a bundle of linen was taken away, with the things mentioned in the indictment; a great part of the things have been found, and are in the poſſeſſion of Mr. Jealous.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

Produces a coat, ſome ſhirts and neckcloths, a new book, and a pair of ſtockings.

(Depoſed to.)

DOROTHY BABBINGTON ſworn.

Mr. Newcomb lodged at my houſe in February laſt; I went up a little before eight on the 13th, and I found the proſecutor's door wide open, and his box gone; I have repeatedly ſeen him wear that coat and waiſtcoat, they had ſilver buttons.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. Who elſe lodges at your houſe?——A working man.

Any body elſe ?—Another working man, a watchmaker, very honeſt people.

Do you keep a ſervant ?—No, not theſe two months.

MARY MAVIN ſworn.

The priſoner lodged with me, I know nothing further of him; it is three weeks laſt Saturday ſince firſt his wife took theſe lodgings; I know nothing concerning theſe things, he always behaved to me in the character that he took it in, as a ſhoemaker; I know nothing of the things, till Mr. Jealous came into the room and took them; I never was in the room the whole time they were in the houſe; I live at No. 14, New-ſtreet-hill.

Are you a married woman, or a ſingle woman ?—A married woman, my huſband keeps the houſe; I have other lodgers; my huſband is a taylor.

This room was not taken of you by the priſoner ?—No, his wife took it.

Or, to ſpeak more regularly, a woman took it, whom you thought to be his wife; you never heard him call that woman his wife ?—No, I never ſaw him till they brought their goods.

CHARLES JEALOUS ſworn.

On the 18th of February the priſoner was brought to Sir Sampſon's, and he aſked him where he lived, and he ſaid he did not chuſe to tell him; I was then told immediately of a woman at a certain place, who was called his wife; curioſity led me to watch her home, and I watched her to No. 14, New-ſtreet-hill, I found there this quantity of picklock keys, ſix ſhirts, this coat and waiſtcoat, three neckcloths, and a book; they have been in my cuſtody ever ſince.

Court. Do you know who lodged there ?—Only as I was told.

But you muſt not tell us that; did you ever ſee the priſoner there ?—No, when the priſoner was brought to the Office, before Sir Sampſon, and when I produced the property in that box, Sir Sampſon aſked him how he came by it; he ſaid, he had bought them, and would tell who he bought them from, if Sir Sampſon would admit him an evidence.

Mr. Garrow. Do you happen to know how long it was after the things were loſt before you found them in this box ?—Several days.

From the 14th to the 18th ?—Yes.

Now, as to the converſation that paſſed at the office, are you quite ſure at this diſtance of time; you hear many converſations ?—If it was for ſeven years, and I ſaw your face, or any man's face, I could remember him.

I have ſeen ſo many inſtances of your recollecting faces, that I can believe that; but I ſay as to the converſation ?—Yes, I can.

Mr. Sheriff Skinner. Was there any money found on this man ?—Yes, Sir, Atkins found it.

Court to Mary Mavin. Was you before the magiſtrate ?—Yes.

Did you hear the priſoner ſay any thing ?—My memory is but bad, I cannot remember.

Mr. Garrow. Her memory is not ſo good as Jealous's.

JOHN ATKINS ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Newport, at New Priſon, and I attend at the Office in Bow-ſtreet, to bring priſoners backwards and forwards; the priſoner was brought by a conſtable, and ſome other people, to the watch-houſe, on the 18th of February.

Do you know any thing that the priſoner ſaid before the magiſtrate ?——Yes, when Jealous came back, he ſaid he bought thoſe things, and if Sir Sampſon would admit him an evidence, he would tell who he bought them off; I took him into another room, and I ſearched him, and in his pocket I found a watch, and in his breeches pocket I found five guineas, and ſix ſhillings and ſixpence: I took him over the way, and ſearched him further, and on his taking his ſtockings off, I found twelve guineas and a half in his ſtocking foot; I brought him over again there, and Jealous was in the parlour with the box, and he owned ſome part of the property, and ſaid he found it then; I do not know what part of the property it was.

Mr. Garrow. Was this confeſſion in writing?—No.

Is not it the conſtant cuſtom of your office to take it in writing?—No, Sir, I do not know that it was.

Do you know it was not.

Court. I do not take it to be a direct confeſſion.

Mr. Garrow. Now this man had been in cuſtody of your mirmidons, and he had hid his money, for fear you ſhould ſteal it from him, that is the caſe; is not it?—You may think as you pleaſe.

The priſoner called three witneſſes to his character.

GUILTY.

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s.

N. B. This ſentence reſpited; ſee Part V. this priſoner tried and capitally convicted, but his caſe reſerved for the opinion of the Judges.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

360. JOHN SMITH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 19th day of January laſt, one man's cloth great coat, value 10s. the property of John Jefferſon.

GUILTY.

Whipped.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

361. WHEELER JOHN, JOSEPH GOODALL and THOMAS ROBINS were indicted, for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Manſell, on the 24th of February laſt, about the hour of eight in the night, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, four earthen ware tea cups, value 2d. three china cups, value 1s. five china ſaucers, value 1s. one earthen ware tea pot, value 1s. two wine glaſſes, value 6d. and one other glaſs, value 1d. the property of the ſaid William.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

WILLIAM MANSELL ſworn.

I live in Vincent's Court, Silver-ſtreet, No. 3, I have kept houſe there about half a year; the 24th of February the window was broke open, I was not at home, I loſt a ſmall globe glaſs mentioned in the indictment, the conſtable has it, I loſt nothing elſe to my knowledge.

ANN MANSELL ſworn.

I am wife of the laſt witneſs; on the 24th of February laſt, in the evening, about half paſt ſeven o'clock, I was up in my two pair of ſtairs room, it was quite dark, and having a lodger in the firſt floor, ſhe heard a noiſe, and we both went into the kitchen, and found the ſaſh up, and the ſhutter open; the kitchen is even with the ground; I faſtened the window about half an hour before, the ſhutter I faſtened with a couple of bolts.

Court. Was it dark at ſeven?—Quite dark; when we came down ſtairs, ſeeing the ſaſh up, we went up again, and called out from the one pair of ſtairs for aſſiſtance, and one Thomas Hamilton came, and I went down with him, and found both the bolts were wrenched half way off, I did not ſee any violence done to the windows, and the things mentioned in the indictment were removed on the window-edge, and there was a little glaſs bottle that had been a preſerver of oil, that my little boy had ſtuffed full of ſilks, pink and blue, taken away, the things were taken out of the cupboard cloſe by the window-ſeat, in the window-edge; I loſt nothing of value, only the little bottle with the ſilks, which was produced at Guildhall; I know nothing of the priſoners.

THOMAS

THOMAS ANDERSON ſworn.

Court. What are you ?—I am a taylor, I live in Addle-ſtreet, and have lived there years, I am a houſe keeper; on Tueſday night laſt, the 24th of February I went to my door, which is directly oppoſite this court; oppoſite my door I found three men, I watched about five minutes, there was a lamp directly over the court, at the entrance.

Court. Look at the priſoners, can you tell by that lamp light that the priſoners were the men ?——Yes.

You ſpeak to them all three ?—Yes.

Be very ſure, it is a matter that affects their lives.——Yes, I am very ſure, I ſuppoſe I ſaw them half an hour in the court; they were walking backwards and forwards, and I ſaw Wheeler John croſs the way, from the other two, and go into a green ſhop, he croſſed again and came paſt me, and went round the corner into Wood-ſtreet, and he came back to the other two, who ſtood at the bottom of the court, and then he and Robins went up the court; Goodall waited at the bottom, and preſently the other two came running down the court and joined him; and they all went to Addle-ſtreet together.

Is this court a confined court, or is it open at both ends ?——It is a confined court: as ſoon as they got out of ſight, I heard the cry of murder, and thieves! I went up the court, and ſaw the woman out of the window, who begged me to get in, for there were thieves in the houſe, I ſaw the windows were open, and the window ſaſhes thrown back, the bolts wrenched off, only hung by a nail that one might turn it round with one's finger; the woman came down and let me in, I ſearched the houſe, and below there ſtood the china, and tea pot, and ſome things ready in the window, they ſtood one in the other.

Jury. What diſtance might you be when you was making theſe obſervations ?——I do not know, two coaches can hardly paſs the ſtreet one by the other; I went out afterwards, and at the bottom of Bartholomew Lane, the corner of Whalebone Court I ſaw the ſame three men again; there is a great light there, I heard no converſation, I watched them till a coach turned up the lane, then I loſt ſight of them, I then went up Throgmorton-ſtreet, and found them at the bottom of another court, I paſſed them, and had them apprehended, I heard them ſay nothing at any time; in the court where Goodall was taken, we found an iron crow, about two or three yards from him, I did not ſee it found; the firſt that was taken was Robins, he had a ſcuffle with the man that took him.

Priſoner Goodall. The crow was brought in a quarter of an hour after I was taken.

JOSEPH STREET ſworn.

I am a ſoldier, I took Robins, and brought him into the Black Swan, Anderſon came there and aſked me to aſſiſt him, he pointed to Robins, and ſaid he was the man; when the conſtable was ſearching him, I ſaw him drop ſomething, I picked it up, and it was a bottle full of ſilk, they were left with the conſtable, but I do not know who took the other two, there was nothing found on them.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS ſworn.

I took Goodall in White Lyon Court, Throgmorton-ſtreet, I brought him to the Black Swan, I found nothing on him; both the other priſoners were brought there, Street the ſoldier brought in one, there was found on one a glaſs bottle and ſome raw ſilk of various colours.

Upon which was it found ?——At the feet of Robins.

Were the priſoners near to each other ? ——Yes, about a foot.

Then you cannot tell us from whom this glaſs bottle came; all that you know is, that in that room was found that bottle ?—Yes, the conſtable has the bottle.

FREDRICK MILLAN ſworn.

I am conſtable, I took charge of the priſoners, they ſaid nothing particular, I ſearched them, and found nothing on them, but two claſp knives; I ſaw the glaſs bottle found, I did not ſee it dropped, it has been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

(The bottle produced and depoſed to.)

Prisoner Wheeler John's Defence.

I ſtopped at the end of this court, and I was taken, I am innocent of the affair.

Prisoner Goodall's Defence.

I happened to go up a wrong court, which was not a thoroughfare, and I was coming back, and was taken.

Prisoner Robins's Defence.

I was coming home, and running, I turned too ſharp and my foot ſlipped, and the man took and ſtruck me; I made no reſiſtance.

Court to Anderſon. Who took Wheeler John?——I did not ſee him taken, I ſaw him after, I mentioned it at the Swan.

All three Not Guilty.

Court to Priſoners. The Jury have leaned to the merciful ſide in a doubtful caſe; but if you are ſatisfied in your own minds, that you have been guilty, I hope you will take very great care how you get into ſuch a ſituation in future.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. Rose.

362. DANIEL JONES (a Black), was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 12th day of February laſt, one promiſory note, called a Bank note, dated No. 158, London, 9th of March, 1782, for the ſum of 10l. ſigned by Thomas Ormes, for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, thereby promiſing to Mr. John Hunt or bearer on demand, the ſum of 10l. which ſaid note was the property of Theophilus Walford, Eſq; and the ſaid ſum of 10l. due and unſatiſfied to the ſaid Theophilus, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

I live in Red Lyon Square, the priſoner was my ſervant; in February laſt, I loſt a ten pound Bank bill, about the 12th of February, the note is in Court, the conſtable has it, the number of it I do not know.

Court. Can you be able to aſcertain it when it is produced?—I cannot identify the note, it was one of ten, which I received on the 7th of February, in exchange for a check on Mr. Boldero, for the Banker, for one hundred pounds, and theſe ten notes were brought to me by Mr. Thomas Clarke, one of my clerks.

Court. Were they all in the ſame name?——They were in different names for ten pounds each, I did not remember the name that was in that note: I was dreſſing to go out to dinner, and being rather late, I did not change my breeches pocket, and in my breeches pocket was this ten pound Bank bill, (which I am ſpeaking of,) there was alſo a guinea and ſome ſilver; the priſoner came to me about two hours afterwards, where I dined, and ſaid, Sir, you have not changed your pockets, I brought your money; and he gave me a guinea, and I believe ſeven ſhillings; I had no money about me, which I diſcovered in three minutes after I went out: I told the priſoner when he came to me, that there was a Bank bill in my pocket of ten pounds value; he ſaid he did not ſee one, he had not found one; I then ordered him very peremptorily indeed not to meddle with my clothes, but to let them remain where they were, till I came home: but he acted oppoſite to that.

Mr. Garrow, Priſoner's Council. That you do not know.——Yes, I do, he acted oppoſite to this, as he told me afterwards, that he went home and ſearched my pockets.

Court. When did he tell you this?—He told me ſo that evening before he was taken up, and before I told him I ſuſpected him.

What did he tell you that evening, do you recollect the words?——In coming home pretty late in the evening, he ſaid to me, Sir, that Bank bill is not in your pocket, I replied with ſome degree of quickneſs, how do you know? did not I forbid you to touch my pockets, what have you ſearched them? he ſaid he had, aſſigning for a reaſon, that as I had ſaid it was there, he was willing to ſee whether it was there or not; when I came home I ordered my breeches to be brought and ſearched, and there was no Bank bill.

Court. Who did you order to bring them?——I think it was one of my ſervants or elſe my wife, it was not the priſoner; I ordered my ſervants up ſtairs.

Court. Before the ſervants were ordered up ſtairs, had you ſaid any thing about the loſs of this bill?——I cannot be ſure.

Recollect.——I do not think I had, for I charged the priſoner inſtantly, when I had ſearched my breeches, ſays I, you have robbed me: now I recollect one of the ſervants was there, and I ſent her to fetch the others, and ſhe might probably tell the others.

Who was that ſervant?——Elizabeth Heſter, ſhe is not here: I ordered the other ſervants to turn out their pockets, but did not order him to turn out his, which was ſomething extraordinary, but my wife ſuggeſted to me that I ſhould, Oh! ſays I, he has parted with it before this time, for he had been out all the evening, he had aſked his miſtreſs leave to go out: he told me he was out part of that afternoon: on the Saturday afternoon following he was ſearched at the lodgings of a woman that he kept, that he cohabited with.

Court. How do you know that?——She owned ſo.

You know very well, you cannot tell me that?—He told me ſo himſelf, he called her his wife, but he afterwards ſaid ſhe was not: I was preſent at this lodging when Edward Lucas a conſtable ſearched him, and took this ten pounds Bank bill out of his pocket.

(The bill produced.)

Court. Can you recollect whether you had that identical Bank bill?—I cannot, I know that this was the bill that was taken out of his pocket, but I cannot tell that this was the bill that I loſt.

Are you ſure that all the other notes you received were ten pound notes?——Yes.

Are you ſure that you had all the remaining notes at that time?—No, I had uſed two, but I took them from this parcel, they were not mixed with any other I am confident.

Can you aſcertain at all what notes you had paid away?—No, I cannot; when the conſtable took the bill out of his pocket, and ſaid, Oh! here is the Bank bill, ſays the priſoner (looking very impudently at me) why then Sir, you put it into my pocket.

Mr. Garrow. You have given your evidence as you are naturally expected to do, very candidly, Sir; you are in ſome uncertainty how many Bank notes you had uſed, perhaps two, perhaps three?—I rather think two.

Conſequently this may be one of thoſe that you had paid away?—I do not conceive it is one of them.

Court. Had you that morning that you went out this Bank note in your breeches pocket?—I perfectly well remember having it in my hand, in my breeches pocket when I came in to dreſs; that note which I loſt.

Mr. Garrow. You had taken two ten pound Bank notes from a parcel of notes, and you loſt one, but whether this note now produced in evidence, is the one you loſt out of your pocket, or one of thoſe you paid away you cannot tell?—I cannot diſtinguiſh it from one of thoſe I had paid away.

Did the priſoner attend you to the family where you dined?——No.

Where do you dreſs, in your ſtudy?——I dreſſed that day in my parlour, for I was in a great hurry.

To which parlour the other ſervants have acceſs as well as the priſoner?—Yes, they might have been in, and were in, no doubt, while the clothes lay about.

You have likewiſe ſeveral clerks that may go in if they chuſe it?—Yes.

When the priſoner came to you and brought your money, you apprized him there was a Bank note in your breeches pocket?——Yes.

He returned and ſearched your pockets?——Yes.

Therefore he could have returned it into the pocket if he had choſe?—Yes.

Did he refuſe that night to have his pocket ſearched?—Not at all.

I believe in conſequence of your ſuſpicions you diſmiſſed him your ſervice that very night?—Yes, I ordered him not to ſleep in the houſe, but to come to me in the morning.

Did he come in the morning?—He did, I was buſy, and could not talk with him then.

Then he had the whole afternoon of Thurſday, the whole day of Friday, and of Saturday to diſpoſe of the Bank note to his wife or any body he pleaſed?——Yes.

On the Saturday however this Bank note which is now produced in evidence, God knows where it came from, was found in his pocket?—Yes.

Was it found in that ſtate of care that you and I would take of a Bank note?—It was ſo (in a careleſs manner.)

The priſoner can neither read nor write?—I believe not.

Now I will aſk you a queſtion, Sir, that is ſometimes attended with riſk; what was your opinion of the priſoner before this?—My opinion of him before was, I thought him a very honeſt man; I had the beſt character with him when I hired him that I ever had with a ſervant in my life.

I think it was not probable that Mrs. Walford ſhould bring your clothes?——It was moſt probably a ſervant.

Do you know that when the man went home he carried the papers to a Mr. Brooks?—The priſoner told me he did go immediately from me at dinner, and took the papers out of my waiſtcoat pocket to Mr. Brooks, and ſaid, Sir, are either of theſe a Bank bill?

Did he communicate to thoſe clerks that he conſulted on the ſubject, his reaſons for aſking the queſtion?—I underſtood he did not.

Was not it known, from the priſoner's communication, before you came home, that there was a Bank note loſt?—I underſtood not, that it was not known even to Brooks; I conceive that the Bank bill was put in his pocket that day, from what happened; I told him on the Saturday, when he was at my houſe, that I ſhould ſearch his lodgings, and I bid him wait in my kitchen till I had dined.

Did he wait?—Yes.

When you diſcharged this man, or at any time, did you pay this man his wages in any ſum of money?—He has had his wages in little ſums, one guinea, and two guineas for the funeral of a child.

Within what time may you have paid him this money?—I paid him ten guineas in three or four months; he has been with me eleven months.

THOMAS CLARKE ſworn.

I am clerk to Mr. Walford, he is an attorney; on the 7th of February, he gave me a check on Boldero's, for one hundred pounds.

Mr. Garrow. Will your Lordſhip have the goodneſs to let the note be read, that may ſhorten this proſecution.

(The note read.)

"No. 158. I promiſe to pay to Mr.
"John Hunt, or bearer, on demand, the "ſum of ten pounds. London, 9th March,
"1782. For the Governor and Company
"of the Bank of England.
T. Ormes."

"Entered W. Mullins."

Mr. Garrow to Mr. Walford. Have you any body here that knows Mr. Ormes?—I believe the clerk does.

Mr. BOLDERO's CLERK ſworn.

I know Mr. Ormes, he is a caſhier in the Bank.

Mr. Garrow. Do you know Mr. Ormes's hand writing?—I have ſeen ſeveral Bank notes ſigned by him.

But did you ever ſee him write?—I cannot ſay I have.

Court. Then you cannot prove his hand writing.

Mr. Garrow to Mr. Walford. Have you any body elſe that knows his hand writing?——Mr. Ormes told me it was his hand writing.

Court. Have you ever ſeen him write?—I cannot ſay I have.

Court. Is there any other witneſs that can prove the hand writing of Mr. Ormes?—No.

Mr. Garrow. My Lord, then my objection is this; that the indictment ſets this note out, and ſtates it as a ſubſtantive fact, that this note is ſigned by Thomas Ormes, for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England; it does not ſay, that it purports to be ſigned by Thomas Ormes.

Court. I conceive, whatever you chuſe to lay in an indictment as a fact, that you muſt prove that fact. I remember an indictment for the delivery of a challenge, and that challenge was ſtated to be in the hand writing of the party who delivered it; the delivery was certainly the offence, but we failed in proving the hand writing; and I remember it was fully the opinion of the Recorder, that if you ſtate a fact, you muſt prove it: I therefore think, in this caſe, as they have not laid it in the indictment, purporting to be ſigned by Thomas Ormes, and as there is nobody that can prove the hand writing of Thomas Ormes, that the priſoner muſt be acquitted. If that was proved, I do think there is evidence to go to a Jury, under all the circumſtances of this caſe.

NOT GUILTY.

Court to Priſoner. Priſoner at the bar; you have been acquitted on this occaſion, I may ſay, by an accidental circumſtance of a hand writing not having been proved; there certainly were circumſtances of great ſuſpicion in your caſe; you muſt know, in your own conſcience, whether you are or are not guilty of the offence; it behoves you, as a ſervant, to be particularly cautious of your conduct, for if you are guilty of offences of this kind, you may very probably come to a very ſerious end.

364. HARTY HART was indicted for felonioufly ſtealing, on the 15th day of January, two pair of linen ſheets, value 8s. one linen ſhirt, value 4s. one woollen coat, value 5s. one great coat, value 2s. one pair of white cotton ſtockings, value 12d. and a ſtriped ſilk and cotton waiſtcoat, value 12d. the property of Joſeph Stoney.

JOSEPH STONEY ſworn.

I am a ſilver plater; I went out in the duſk of the evening; I have a ſhop in the garret; I left my errand boy, whoſe name is Arnold; I did not return till ten; when I returned, the door was locked, and the boy was coming up ſtairs; he let me in; then I ſat down before the fire, and the firſt queſtion the boy aſked me was, whether I had been meddling with the bed; I told him, no; he went to make the bed, and there was a pair of ſheets miſſing, and then I looked, and there was; and all the clothes I had in my box, and which are in the indictment; I ſaw the ſheets on the box, and the Sunday before I ſaw the other things; the box was not locked; I miſſed them on the Wedneſday; I know nothing more.

—— ARNOLD.

Court. How old are you?——I am going of twelve.

Do you know the nature of an oath?—I know I am not to tell a falſity.

Can you ſay your catechiſm?——Yes.

——— ARNOLD ſworn.

I live in Crooked-lane now, No. 15; I was Mr. Stoney's errand boy when he was robbed; there was nobody in the room while my maſter was out, that I know of, but the priſoner, and when my maſter came home, the things were gone.

Court. Who firſt found out that they were loſt?——I did.

Did you find it out before your maſter came in?——No, I let my maſter in, and he took a book as he generally uſed of a night, and ſat down by the fire; he told me to make the bed, and I aſked him if he had been pulling the bed about, and he ſaid no; then I pulled the clothes off, and there was a pair of ſheets miſſing from the bed; and he looked in his box, and the other things were gone out of it; the box was unlocked, but the lid was down; I know the priſoner, he lived facing my maſter a good while; he came up ſtairs to me that evening while my maſter was out, I was in the next garret, and he came and looked into that room, where I was, and I got up; he aſked for maſter; I told him I expected my maſter in about ſeven, and that I was going down ſtairs to light a fire, and he might ſtop; he came down along with me, and I unlocked the door, and as I was lighting the fire, he ſtood by me; he aſked me if I had any aqua fortis, and I told him no.

Do you recollect whether the ſheets were on the box then?——Yes.

You are ſure of that?—Yes; I told him he might get a pennyworth at any of the druggiſts, and if he had a mind, when I went down, I would get him ſome; when I had lighted the fire, I ſtood by the fire, and he ſaid, Jack, you had better go up to work; ſo I thought I might as well, for fear my maſter ſhould be angry; ſo I ſaid, you can ſit in the dark, cannot you? and I went up to work and left him in the room; and in about a quarter of an hour, I came down, and I heard him going half way down the one pair of ſtairs, and I aſked him if he had locked the door, and he ſaid, no; I knew his voice.

Did you go into the room then?——No, I only looked to ſee if the fire was ſafe.

Did you ſee whether the ſheets were in the bed, and upon the box then?——No.

Do you think you ſhould know the ſheets at all?—No.

——— BRANNON.

How old are you?—Going of ten.

What will happen to you if you tell a lie?——I ſhall go to hell, Sir.

You know it is only bad boys that tell lies, good boys never tell ſtories?——No, Sir.

——— BRANNON ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner go down ſtairs with a bundle under his arm; my father lives on the ſame floor where Mr. Stoney lays.

Did you know the priſoner's perſon?—No, I followed him down ſtairs.

Did you ſee his face?——No, Sir, I did not.

Is that ſtaircaſe a light ſtaircaſe, or a dark one?—It is a very dark one.

Are you ſure that was the man you ſaw go down ſtairs?——No, Sir, I am not ſure, I cannot ſwear to the man.

What ſort of a bundle was it?—A bundle almoſt as big as himſelf, I could not ſee the colour of it.

Not Guilty.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Rose.

ON the 8th day of this Seſſions, a ſecond London Jury were ſummoned, as follow:

Charles Brown,
Edward Gibbs,

---

370. WILLIAM GARRATT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th day of February, twenty pounds weight of lead, value 3s. belonging to Andrew Nicoll, then and there affixed to a certain empty houſe of the ſaid Andrew, againſt the ſtatute.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

371. NICHOLAS INNES and PATRICK DALEY were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 9th day of February laſt, three thouſand three hundred pounds weight of logwood, value 10l. the property of John Low and James Porteous.

JOHN LOW ſworn.

I am a dealer in foreign wood; my workhouſe is at Shadwell.

Court. Have you a partner?——No, I have a partner in that wood, but no partnerſhip.

Who is your partner in this wood?——James Porteous; we are partners now and then, by mere chance, juſt as we happen to buy a parcel.

Did you buy this wood together?—We did, the wood was bought by me, by the deſire of Porteous, we were to buy it and ſell it on our joint account; I have had it five or ſix months; I know nothing of the priſoners; but at the juſtice's, one of them ſaid he found it.

How did you know the wood?—I knew it at the juſtice's, there is no mark on it, but being ſuch a quantity of wood as that, I had not a doubt before the magiſtrate, and there is not a doubt remains with me; there was three thouſand three hundred pounds weight of it, I had taken it in different lots.

Was all the wood produced that you loſt?—No.

What time might it take to remove three thouſand three hundred pounds weight of this wood?—I ſuppoſe four or five hours, it is in logs.

JAMES PORTEOUS ſworn.

This wood was kept at Shadwell; half of it belongs to me; there was a waggon load of wood brought up to my houſe to be ſold by the priſoners on the 31ſt of January; I can only ſwear to it to the beſt of my knowledge.

Was not it common logwood?——Yes.

Is not there a good deal of logwood in this town?—Yes.

You are not the only man that has logwood in this town?—Not by many; I am ſure the priſoners brought it to me, they were with me an hour at the leaſt; I did not pay for it, nor bargain for it; they left it to me to give the worth of it, they knew I was a judge of it; I told them they had it out of my warehouſe, and I ſent, and the warehouſe was broke open, and the wood miſſing. Before the magiſtrate, Innis ſaid, he found the wood, the other ſaid ſomething, but I cannot tell what.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS ſworn.

I am a carman; about half paſt five, Daley called me up, and ſaid he had a load of fire wood; I live about one hundred yards from Mr. Low's warehouſe; I went with him, and found my waggon half full of wood; I took it for fire wood; I called up my man, and he loaded the remainder of the waggon, and theſe two priſoners went with me to Mr. Porteous's houſe; I was to have ſix ſhillings and ſixpence for the carriage of it; I ſaw none of it loaded; I drove the waggon; Daley is a neighbour of our's, a very honeſt hard working man, bore a good character; I have known him two or three years; I put my cart in an evening in an open place, about one hundred yards from Mr. Low's warehouſe.

Jury. Is it cuſtomary for people that employ you, to load your waggon without your knowledge, and then come to employ you to drive it?——God knows, I do not know.

Is it your mode of buſineſs, or did it appear to you ſingular?—I do not know.

Did you ever have ſuch a thing done before?—No.

JOHN DISE ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Williams; I ſaw the wood loaded by two men, who did not ſpeak; I cannot ſay they were the priſoners, as it was dark; they went with me to Mr. Porteous's; then I ſaw them and remembered their faces.

WILLIAM KNIGHT ſworn.

I worked for Mr. Low the 31ſt of January. (Speaks to the wood being miſſing, and the the warehouſe being broke open next the water-ſide.)

PRISONERS DEFENCE.

We know nothing at all about it.

The priſoner Innes called Elizabeth Bell to his character, who depoſed, that he lodged with her, and that on the Saturday morning before he was taken up, ſhe heard him go out a little after five, as ſhe pulled her curtain back when he went out, and ſaw it was juſt day break.

The priſoner Innes called two other witneſſes to his character.

The priſoner Daly called ſeven witneſſes to his character.

NATHANIEL INNIS, GUILTY.
PATRICK DALEY, GUILTY.

To be each confined to hard labour ſix months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

372. DAVID RICHARDS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th day of February laſt, nine wooden caſks, value 5s. and one thouſand one hundred pounds weight of butter, value 30l. the property of John Bacon.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. ROSE.

MISDEMEANORS.

373. JOSEPH ANGEL was indicted for wilful and corrupt perjury, in a cauſe between Anthony Periera, plaintiff, and John Thompſon, defendant.

The record being produced and read, and examined by the defendant's Council, there appeared a variance between that and the indictment, as to the day of the trial, and the defendant was

ACQUITTED.

Court. I wiſh to obſerve, that as we have not gone into any evidence on one ſide or the other, I hope no impreſſion will be made againſt the priſoner at the bar.

Mr. Morgan, Defendant's Council. My Lord, for the ſake of the man's character, I will ſay, I have a variety of witneſſes.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

---

374. MARMADUKE BROWN was indicted for wilful and corrupt perjury in the before mentioned cauſe.

This caſe being exactly the ſame as the laſt, the defendant was

ACQUITTED.

Court. As this is a charge that affects a man's reputation very much, though he is acquitted in point of form, yet the fact is, this defendant and the laſt have witneſſes to their character.

Tried by the London Jury, before Mr. ROSE.

375. LEAH LEVY, otherwiſe MARY LEVY, was indicted for feloniouſly receiving, on the 21ſt of December laſt, one table clock, in a wooden caſe, value 5l. the property of Thomas Scott, ſtolen by a certain perſon unknown, well knowing the ſame to be ſtolen.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the London Jury before Mr. ROSE.

The Trials being ended, the Court proceeded to give Judgment as follows:

376. THOMAS RANDALL was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Oldfield, about the hour of nine in the night, on the 1ſt of November laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, four linen ſhirts, value 10s. one linen ſhift, value 1s. three linen frocks, value 3s. two linen napkins, value 2s. three linen handkerchiefs, value 1s. four linen aprons, value 4s. one muſlin apron, value 1s. one pair of linen drawers, value 1s. two pair of cotton ſtockings, value 3s. one other pair of ſtockings, value 6d. and one cotton petticoat, value 10s. the property of the ſaid John Oldfield.

ELIZABETH OLDFIELD ſworn.

I live in Fleet-row, near Coldbath-fields; I am wife to John Oldfield; on the firſt of November, between the hour of eight and nine in the evening; I went out to fetch ſome candles, I left nobody at home but my little girl, a twelve-month old; I locked the door, and after I had locked it, I tried it by the knocker, and I am ſure it was faſt, and the windows were faſt.

Court. Are you ſure they were faſt?—Yes.

How long did you ſtay out?——Almoſt ten minutes; when I returned, I perceived the door about a quarter of a yard open; I was quite ſtagnated, knowing that I had locked the door; and as I ſtood, I heard a rattling within; I was going to ſtep into the houſe, and I drew back my foot, and at that inſtant three men came out of the houſe; I ſtepped a little way down the court, and they all run out, and I run after them and cried, ſtop thief! and I ſaw one of them, which was the priſoner, had my property in a bag; I believe the priſoner to be the man.

Was he ſtopped at that time?——Yes.

Did you ſee him ſtopped?——No.

How long after he run out of the court was it, that he was ſtopped and brought back?——About twenty minutes.

Where was he ſtopped; I think it was in Hatton Garden, he was brought back to me in about twenty minutes.

Whereabouts did you loſe ſight of him?——At the corner of the court.

What light was there in the court?——There is a lamp over our door.

What opportunity had you to obſerve the faces of the men that came out of your houſe?——No further than I ſtood at the door when they all ruſhed out; I ſhould know the other two men if I ſaw them; the priſoner was the firſt that came out.

Can you venture to ſay poſitively, that the man that was brought back to you, was the ſame man that you ſaw come out of your houſe?——I believe him to be the ſame man.

Are you ſure of it?——Yes, I am ſure of it.

Did you ever ſee him before?——No, never.

Then can you, ſeeing a man run paſt you, in the inſtant when you are a good deal frightened and flurried, take upon you to ſwear to the man?—I believe him to be the man, ſo far as the light over the door enabled me to ſee him.

But you cannot undertake to ſwear poſitively that it is the ſame man?——No, Sir, I cannot.

Were your things brought back?—Yes, they were brought back with the priſoner.

Who brought him and the bag back?—The conſtable, his name is Griffiths.

THOMAS WEEDOM ſworn.

I took the priſoner in Hatton Garden, on the firſt of November, between eight and nine; I was coming down Hare-ſtreet Hill, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief! I ſaw the priſoner running with this bundle under his arm, I purſued him, and as ſoon as I got up to him he dropped the bundle; I never loſt ſight of him; that was about twenty yards from the end of the court where the proſecutrix lives.

Did you obſerve two other men run?—No, I ſaw none but him.

Did you ſee him drop the bag?——Yes, I ſaw him drop it, he dropped it in Summer's-ſtreet, about twenty yards from the corner; I did not ſee the bag picked up.

You are ſure that is the man that dropped the bag?——I am ſure he is.

Have you any doubt at all that he was the man that dropped the bag?——I have no doubt at all that he was the man that dropped the bag.

What did he ſay when you ſtopped him ?——He ſaid I am not the thief; I took him to Mr. Griffiths, on Hare-ſtreet Hill.

THOMAS GRIFFITHS ſworn.

I am the conſtable, the priſoner was brought to me by the laſt witneſs, I ſearched him, and found nothing upon him but a tobacco box, which was made uſe of as a tinder box.

Court. Was there any tinder in it?——No.

How did you know then?——By the ſmell of it; I took him down to Mrs. Oldfield's and this bag was brought to Mrs. Oldfield's houſe; it was there when I brought the man there; I deſired Mrs. Oldfield to take care of the bag while I took the priſoner to Bridewell; nothing particular paſſed going there; the proſecutrix ſaid, ſhe believed the priſoner was the man that went out of the houſe.

What did he ſay to the charge that was made againſt him?——He pleaded that he was not the man.

STEPHEN TRUSTRASM ſworn.

I picked up this bag at the end of Summer's-ſtreet.

How far from the corner?—About two doors diſtance from the corner, about eight or ten yards; I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and I run out of the door.

Did you ſee any body running?—I ſaw the priſoner at the bar running round the corner, under the lamp, it was light enough for me to ſee him run round the corner.

Did you ſee him drop the bag?——Yes.

How do you know it was the priſoner?—Becauſe I knew him, I had ſeen him before.

Are you ſure he is the man that dropped the bag?—He is the man.

How near was you to him?——Within ten yards.

What light had you?——The light of the lamp.

You knew him before?—I had ſeen him before about in the neighbourhood,

Are you ſure he was the man that dropped the bag?—Yes.

Jury. Was there any more men with him at the time he dropped the bag?——No.

Court. What did you do with the bag?—I gave it to Mrs. Oldfield.

Mrs. Oldfield. The laſt witneſs brought the bag to me, and I laid it on the table till Mr. Griffiths came back, and it is the ſame he brought, and they are the ſame things that are in it now which were delivered to Griffiths; this petticoat I know by an iron mould, and ſeveral things, it is my own making.

How did the door appear to be broke?—It was unlocked, and the lock ſpoiled.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was running along Hatton-ſtreet, going home, I lived in the Hole in the Wall Paſſage, Brooke's Market, there was another perſon before me, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and a man met me and ſaid, which of them is it, and he ſtopped me; I ſtaid there, I dare ſay, a minute and better, and he ſaid again, this is the fellow, and he took me to the conſtable, and then to this gentlewoman's houſe; and then there was this other lady here, and ſhe ſaid, that is the man that broke into my houſe in May; and the conſtable took charge of me: the linen was laying about on the table, and I was taken to the watch-houſe, and to Clerkenwell, and on the Monday they appeared againſt me.

Court. Have you any body to give you a character?—I have not had an opportunity to ſend to any body.

Court. How comes this man to be tried ſo late?—He made his eſcape out of priſon, and was retaken ſince the laſt ſeſſions.

GUILTY Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

Priſoner. My Lord, I wiſh to be tried upon the other indictment which is againſt me.

Court. Does the priſoner wiſh it himſelf?

Priſoner. Yes, my Lord.

377. The ſaid THOMAS RANDALL was again indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Abraham Watt, at the hour of twelve in the night, on the 24th day of May, 1783, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, twenty-four pair of baſe metal ſhoe buckles, value 12s. twelve pair of baſe metal knee buckles, value 6s. twelve pounds weight of tallow candles, value 6s. one pound of tea, value 6s. four pounds of tobacco, value 8s. one pound of ſnuff, value 1s. 8d. twenty pound of cheeſe, value 5s. ten pound weight of butter, value 5s. ſix pair of ſciſſars, value 2s. one linen handkerchief, value 1s. and four hundred and thirty-two copper halfpence, value 18s. the property of the ſaid Abraham.

ELIZABETH WATT ſworn.

Court. Relate what you know of your own knowledge againſt the priſoner?—On the 24th of May, I faſtened my door at paſt twelve at night, there was a difference between my huſband and me, and I believe the priſoner knew that I was alone; I live in Eyre-ſtreet, No. 23, I ſhut my ſhutters, and faſtened my door at paſt twelve at night; I went to bed, and ſlept very heavy, I was tired; I was awaked with a noiſe of glaſſes, as if the whole houſe was glaſs and breaking about my ears; I aroſe upon my elbow, and liſtened, I thought it was the cat; I could not ſleep again; I then thought I would get up and ſee what miſchief was done; I could not get a light; now and then I heard a little tap on the counter; when it became clear daylight, I looked towards my parlour door, and I ſaw the door move; I ſtill thought it was the cat, I prepared to throw my ſhoe at her, inſtead of that I ſaw the door continue to move; I then ſaw a man open the door about half way, he came to the bed foot and looked at me very hard; I had half a yard of flannel pinned over my face; I am no young woman; he came to ſee whether I was awake or no; thinks I, Lord, if he ſhould think I am aſleep, he will come up and choak me! he looked at me again; I was ſatisfied I ſhould know him again; I aſked him what he wanted, he looked at me, ſneered, and bid me aſk his a—e; I could make him no reply; he then turned himſelf round, and went out with his backſide firſt, looking at me; I leaped out of bed, ſlammed to the parlour door, and broke the windows; I called ſome of my lodgers, and ſaid for God's ſake come down, here is a man bids me aſk his a—e!

Court. Where were your lodgers at night when you faſtened up your door?—They were all in bed, they have a private door, the lodgers come in by the paſſage door; I am ſure they were all gone to bed; and when I came out in the morning, my ſhop door next the ſtreet was open, the ſtreet door was faſt, and the lock of the ſhop door was ſpoiled.

When you alarmed your lodgers, what became of the man?——He made off when I ſlammed the door, he put his hand to his right breeches pocket, and felt his pocket, he took nothing out of his pocket.

What did you loſe?—There were twelve pounds of tallow candles, a pound of tea, and the other things in the indictment, the till was taken away; the till and the tea canniſters were found again.

Were any of them ever found on the priſoner?——Never.

What light had you when this man came in?—There was light enough to ſee what I had to do, and I was three minutes looking at him when he came; if I was a dying I think I muſt own him to be the man.

Did you know him before?—I never ſaw him to my knowledge before.

How came you to ſay, in the beginning of your evidence, that you believed he knew you was alone?——He had been frequently about the neighbourhood, as I have been informed, I might have ſeen him, but not to know him.

How long was it after you firſt heard the noiſe of this breaking of the glaſs, before you ſaw this man come into your room?——It was a long time, it was totally dark at firſt.

Then it muſt be a long while?—Yes.

What hour did you get up?——About three in the morning, as near as I can gueſs.

Do you undertake to ſwear quite poſitively, that the priſoner was the man?—Yes.

Have you got any of your things again? ——I have got none of my property, only the man ſeemed to hang about the neighbourhood, and I wiſh he was at liberty, but I am ſure he is the man.

Jury. How was your ſhop door faſtened that night?——Bolted and locked, the lock was picked, nothing was forced, the bolts got undone by being ſhook.

Priſoner. My Lord, Mr. Akerman's books will prove where I was on the 24th of May, I was in Newgate from ſome time in March till the July ſeſſions, then I was diſcharged.

Court to Mr. Newman. Was this man in your cuſtody?—I cannot tell.

Townſend. Yes, my Lord, he was, he was left for the opinion of the twelve Judges.

Priſoner. I am as innocent of that other affair as I am of this, only through that woman perſuading the people, and I hope ſuch a woman as this will be made an example of.

Proſecutrix. Indeed, Mr. Randall, if I was a dying I think it was you.

Priſoner. My Lord, if I had not been in ſuch an unhappy place, my life would have been ſworn away.

Court to Townſend. Was that the man that lay in the priſon from March to July? ——Yes, my Lord, I am very ſure of that.

Court to Proſecutrix. You ſhould certainly be more careful in ſwearing poſitively to the perſons of men.

Mr. Reynolds. My Lord, here is the Seſſions-paper, and it appears that a man of the name of Thomas Randall, was tried for an aſſault, with an intent to rob; he was convicted, and recommended by the Jury; the ſentence was reſpited till the next ſeſſions: and it appears alſo, that in July following your Lordſhip reported the opinion of the Judges.

Townſend. This is the ſame man, and he was in Newgate from March to July.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

378. WILLIAM MOORE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 30th day of October laſt, twenty-one ſhillings in monies numbered, the monies of Thomas Young.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

THOMAS YOUNG ſworn.

I am a gentleman's ſervant in place, I am ſervant to Mr. Blanchard, in Coleman-ſtreet; I loſt my money in Catherine-wheel Alley; the priſoner ſaid, he would ſwear I had taken a porter's knot from him; after that he ſent me a lawyer's letter, and he charged me four ſhillings for that, and ſeventeen ſhillings for the lawyer's fees, which I paid him; after that I thought I had done wrong, and I went to the magiſtrate, and he gave me a warrant, and afterwards I indicted him by the direction of my council.

Court. There is ſome miſtake in that; is this the whole ſtory?—Yes.

Mr. Peat. My Lord, I am Council for the priſoner, the proſecutor owed the priſoner twenty-four ſhillings and ten pence.

Mr. Baron Eyre. We have heard enough of it; you will acquit the priſoner, Gentlemen.

NOT GUILTY.

Court. How long has the priſoner been in cuſtody?—Ever ſince the 18th of March.

Mr. Peat. My Lord, we beg for a copy of the indictment.

Court. Yes, I think you ought to have a copy of it.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

379. RICHARD BRADLEY was indicted for felonioufly ſtealing, on the 22d day of March, one carcaſe of mutton, weight ſeventy pounds, value 30s. the property of Robert Hurdmon.

ROBERT HURDMON ſworn.

I am a butcher, I live in Bridge-ſtreet, Weſtminſter; an alarm being given by a young man, I found a carcaſe of mutton that hung on a hook at my door was miſſing, and he informed me that the priſoner had ſtole the ſheep; and when he was taken, there was the mark of the greaſe of the ſheep on his left ſhoulder, and his hat likewiſe; my ſervant had dreſſed it; we went after him and took him, and we found the carcaſe not far off, with the hook in it.

WILLIAM HOWELL ſworn.

I was going from my maſter's, and I ſaw the priſoner with a carcaſe of mutton on his ſhoulder, he was going very faſt towards the Houſe of Commons; I ſaw him at the end of Union-ſtreet, in Palace-Yard.

Which part of Bridge-ſtreet does the proſecutor live in?——The lower part next King-ſtreet; I told Mr. Hurdmon, and bid him follow me; we purſued him, I ſaw the man on the other ſide of the way, under the dead wall of the Parliament-houſe, at the place they call hell, where the pump is.

Was it the ſame man you had ſeen before?—Yes, I ſaw him go on a gentle trot, till he came to a coach that was ſtanding a few doors off; I went acroſs and caught him, he had thrown the carcaſe down into the place they call hell, where the pump is.

Did you ſee him throw it down?—No, Sir, I did not.

What time of the night was it?—A very few minutes after eight.

Court. When you ſaw the man again, when he was going on as you ſay at a gentle trot, had he then the carcaſe?——He had not, I did not ſee him throw it down, becauſe there is no lamp at hell gate; I ran after the man, and ſeeing him hiding himſelf under a coach, I went and catched him, me and Mr. Hurdmon; I took particular notice of him when I firſt ſaw him, and he did not appear to be a butcher; he had another coat on when I ſaw him; when we came to Mr. Hurdmon's the greaſe was on his ſhoulder, and on the left ſide his hat.

Jury. What coloured coat had he on at that time?—I think it was an olive green.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I croſſed the road to eaſe myſelf, and I ſaw two men before me, and this man ſwore I was the man; I was carrying meat in Newgate-market the Saturday before, and that was the reaſon my hat came greaſy.

THOMAS PERDUE ſworn.

I have known the priſoner between three and four years, he plies on the water.

Court. Has he any family?——He has a wife and one child.

What character has he borne?—I never knew but he was a very induſtrious, honeſt man; I always thought him ſuch.

Priſoner. I have more friends coming, but they are not here.

GUILTY.

To be privately whipped, and confined to hard labour ſix months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

380. SUSANNAH FOOT was indicted for felonioufly ſtealing, on the 26th day of March laſt, one leather ſnuff box, mounted with ſilver, value 10s. fourteen pieces of gold coin of this realm, called guineas, value 14l. 14s. and two pieces of gold coin of this realm, called half guineas, value 1l. 1s. the property of Roderick Mackay.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner.

RODERICK MACKAY ſworn.

I am a cook by buſineſs; I am out of place at preſent; I loſt my ſnuff box and money, money on the 26th of March, about two in the morning, when the priſoner went away and abſconded the room; I was coming from the King's Mews about duſk, between ſeven and eight, I was going home to my lodging, at the One Ton, in the Strand; I met this young woman, and ſhe aſked me for a glaſs of wine.

Whereabouts did you meet her?——At Charing-croſs, ſhe took me to this Naſh's houſe, in Johnſon's-court, Charing-croſs, and we had ſeveral baſons of brandy and water.

Did you go into a room by yourſelves?—Yes, and we were afterwards ſhewn to a different room, a bed room.

How long were you in the firſt room before you were ſhewn to the bed room?—I believe about two hours, drinking brandy and water.

Were you and ſhe alone all that time?—Yes, except the waiter.

What quantity might you drink!—I cannot ſay.

Had you ſeveral bowls?—Yes.

Was you ſober when you firſt met with the woman?—Yes, as ſober as I am now.

But I ſuppoſe, by the time you had drank this brandy and water, you had got tolerably drunk?——I was ſtupid, muddled, and ſleepy.

Did you go to bed?—Yes.

And the priſoner with you?—Yes.

Was the door locked or not?—No, it was not.

Where was your money when you went to bed?—In my breeches pocket, and my box in my coat pocket.

Was your money looſe, or in a purſe?—My money was in a purſe.

Was it all in one purſe or more?—All in one purſe.

Which ſide pocket?——My right ſide pocket.

Where did you put your breeches when you undreſſed?—I did not pull my breeches off.

Were you undreſſed all but your breeches?—I threw off my coat and waiſtcoat, and ſhoes.

You fell aſleep then?—Yes, the priſoner was with me, and when I awaked at two o'clock, ſhe was gone and my money.

It was dark when you awaked, I ſuppoſe?——Yes.

And you found yourſelf alone?——Yes.

How ſoon did you miſs your money and your box?——I could not ſee to reckon it till daylight; then I came down and told the landlord.

What had you left?—Five guineas and ſome ſilver, I had twenty guineas in the whole.

Was your purſe left?—Yes.

What time did you get up in the morning?——About ſeven.

How do you know it was two when you firſt awaked?—I heard the clock go; I fell aſleep again; I knew that my money was gone, but I could not tell how much till day-light.

Did you examine your pocket when you firſt awaked?——Yes, my purſe was out of my pocket, and I could not find it, but when it was daylight I found it on the pillow, and my watch along with it.

How came you to have ſo large a ſum of money about you?——I was lately come from Gibraltar; I loſt fifteen guineas and my ſnuff-box.

Have you any other reaſon for ſuſpecting this woman then her having been with you?——No, ſhe owned to Juſtice Hyde, that ſhe had three guineas and a half that was my money, that ſhe took out of my waiſtcoat pocket.

Did you hear her own that?—Yes.

That could not be true?——No, I had no money in my waiſtcoat pocket, except halfpence.

Had you taken out your purſe while you was in her company?——Yes, I believe I did, for to pay for my bed.

Had you paid your reckoning?——No, not till the next day.

What did you pay for your bed and not your reckoning?——Yes.

Priſoner. Do not you recollect giving the waiter the purſe to take the money, it was four ſhillings you paid for your bed, Mr.

Mackay, and you did pay your reckoning all but three ſhillings and ſixpence.

WILLIAM NASH ſworn.

I keep the Mitre Tavern, Johnſon's-court, Charing-croſs; the proſecutor and this woman came into my houſe together, and drank ſome brandy and water; the priſoner went away, and the proſecutor ſtaid all night, they had a one pair of ſtairs room.

How long did they ſtay in that room?—I believe it might be about two hours; I did not ſee the gentleman that night, till the next morning.

How much had they to drink?—Six or ſeven bowls of brandy and water.

What became of them afterwards?—The priſoner went away.

Is that a bed room that they were in?—No, the priſoner went away, the proſecutor ſlept all night in the houſe.

Did the priſoner leave him while he was in that room?——I did not ſee him that night.

Then how do you know what time ſhe went away?—I ſaw her go between twelve and one, about one.

Was ſhe with him in the bed room?—I do not know; in the morning the man came down ſtairs, and told me he had twenty guineas in his pocket, and out of that fifteen were gone, and he judged the priſoner had robbed him.

Did he take any ſteps to recover the money again?——He went after the priſoner on the Saturday, but could not hear of her, he took her ſome days afterwards, I do not know the day.

Did you take no ſteps yourſelf, for the honour of your houſe, to get this man his money again?—I went with this man over the water, where we were informed the priſoner lodged, but ſhe was gone away.

Is the waiter here?—No, Sir, I have not ſeen him for a day or two after this affair happened, he went away.

So the waiter, who is moſt likely to know ſomething of the matter, is gone?—Yes, he is.

How long has this woman uſed your houſe?——About two years, and always a very honeſt body.

I think that you gentlemen that keep theſe kind of houſes, ſhould be anſwerable for the honeſty of the women that come into them; I wonder you did not pay this money?——We never encourage any ſuch thing, it will happen ſo ſometimes.

Have you any other cuſtom for your tavern but the cuſtom theſe poor women bring you?——Yes, to be ſure.

What licence have you?——A wine licence.

——— M'KENZIE ſworn.

Yeſterday was eight days this proſecutor came to me, and told me he was robbed by this woman, and I told him to go to Juſtice Hyde, and I went with the proſecutor over Weſtminſter-bridge, and we went to a public houſe; we enquired for the priſoner of a girl who was going with a pint of beer, and ſhe alarmed the priſoner, and ſhe left her own room, and then ſhe went and barricaded herſelf up in a garret; I went up in the garret, and a woman took the broom to ſtrike me, and ſaid there was no ſuch perſon as the priſoner there; I went to the next room, and the door was bolted, and a perſon behind; we got a peace officer, and then the woman went up and broke the door open herſelf, and the priſoner was there behind a parcel of tables and chairs, and things of that kind; I brought her to Juſtice Hyde, and he committed her, and the next Saturday ſhe was brought again; ſhe then confeſſed to Juſtice Hyde, that ſhe took out of the proſecutor's waiſtcoat pocket, three guineas and a half.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went with the proſecutor to Mr. Naſh's houſe, we had ſeveral bowls of liquor, but into the bed room I did not go; the proſecutor gave the waiter the purſe to take care of; I ſaid I did not like to ſtay with him all night, as he had given the waiter his purſe; as I came down ſtairs, I ſaw Mr. Naſh and the waiter together, ſince that the waiter has had money; I left a handkerchief chief of mine with Mr. Naſh in the bar, I went and aſked for my handkerchief, it was not there, and the gentleman had it in his pocket; Mr. Naſh ſaid he muſt take it out of his bar. I never told Mr. Hyde any ſuch thing, and he would not ſay it if he was here; I had no more than two half crown pieces; a perſon was to have come to my character, one Mr. Ravenſcroft, who lives over the way, but I did know of my trial coming on.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

381. WILLIAM MARKS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th day of March laſt, one plain gold ring, value 2s. 6d. one gold enamelled ring, value 3s. one ſilver fillagree worked windmill, value 5s. one pocket book, value 12d. one ruler, value 1s. one ſilver dollar, value 4s. 6d. and one ſilver medal, value 5s. the property of Edward Holden Cruttenden, Eſq;

EDWARD HOLDEN CRUTTENDEN, Eſq; ſworn.

I loſt theſe things from my houſe in Berner's-ſtreet; I did not miſs them till the priſoner was gone away; the priſoner was my ſervant, I diſmiſſed him on the 15th of laſt month, in conſequence of his ſtaying out all night; he was my under man; the Thurſday after, Ann Miles came to enquire after him, and ſaid he had robbed her, ſhe confeſſed that he had two rings, and that ſhe had changed a five guinea piece for him; I miſſed theſe two rings from my bureau, and the ſilver fillagree worked windmill was in the cloſet, that I am pretty clear in, and the pocket book, the ſilver ruler was in the pocket book, and the medal was, I believe, in the bureau.

What room did that ſtand in?——In my bedchamber; ſhe gave one of the rings to my ſervant, which I have; the other ring ſhe ſaid he had given to the boy which is here, my ſervant brought me the ring, I have the two rings and the windmill; alſo the pocket book and the ruler; the pawnbroker who has the medals does not chuſe to appear.

Court. Call him on his recognizance.

John Watts, called on his recognizance, and not appearing, the recognizance ordered to be eſtreated.

Court to Proſecutor. I ſhall order this recognizance to be eſtreated, and it will go into the Exchequer immediately, by the firſt day of the term; I wiſh you would apply at the Treaſurer's Remembrancer's Office, to have proceſs iſſue on it immediately, and in conſequence of that, you may have execution in the courſe of next week; in order to let theſe people know, that they are not to dare to trifle with the adminiſtration of Juſtice: and, Mr. Reynolds, make a ſeparate eſtreat of it, it will be a uſeful thing in point of example; this buſineſs, where it is not carried on with a hearty deſire to bring thieves to juſtice, is not to be borne, it does more miſchief as it is than any other buſineſs in the world.

Court to Proſecutor. One of the rings Ann Miles had on?——Yes.

Court to Ann Miles. Is that the ring you gave to Mr. Cruttenden's ſervant?——Yes, it is.

To Proſecutor. Now, as to the next ring, how came you by that; I got it from Charles Wathen, it was ſent me by the magiſtrate; the pocket book Ann Miles gave me herſelf before Mr. Hyde, and the ruler was taken from the priſoner, in the preſence of Mr. Hyde; I know the mourning ring, one ſide of it is remarkably flat, from another ring being worn next to it; the pocket book I believe to mine, but I cannot poſitively ſwear to it; that ruler the lad confeſſed himſelf having taken it before Mr. Hyde.

Court. How old is the lad?——About ſeventeen; the windmill was ſtopped by a man in Oxford-road, who produced it before Mr. Hyde.

ANN MILES ſworn.

Is this priſoner an acquaintance of your's?——He was.

How came you by that enamelled ring?——He gave it me on the Sunday before he was taken.

How came you by that pocket book?——He gave me that the next day.

Have you any thing elſe?—I changed a five guinea piece.

Do you know any thing of a medal?—No.

How long was you acquainted with the priſoner?——Two months.

How came you to go after him?——Becauſe I had loſt things myſelf from my lodgings in Soho.

CHARLES WHALEY ſworn.

I am a gentleman's ſervant; I have known the priſoner about three months before he was taken; I was walking along Leiceſter-fields with the priſoner one day, and he told me he had found two gold rings in a piece of paper, and one he pulled out, a plain gold ring, which that gentleman ſhewed juſt now, and he aſked me to go in and ſee if it was gold; they told me it was, and they ſaid they would not buy it; I went into another ſhop, and they told me it was not gold; upon that, he gave me the ring, and I carried it to my mother, and it was pawned by her for half a crown; I was taken up after that, and then I went with the conſtables to my mother, and ſhe brought it down in the morning, and it was delivered up to the high conſtable; he aſked me to go in and ſell the mill, and the man knew the gentlewoman that I lived with, and he ſtopped the things; it was Mr. Elliott, oppoſite Swallow-ſtreet; that was at another time.

Court. Look at that windmill, and ſee whether it is the ſame?—Yes, it was broke in the ſame manner then.

Court. How came that windmill from Mr. Elliott?——He brought it to Mr. Hyde.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay; I underſtood I ſhould not be tried till Saturday; the proſecutor had a character with me.

Court to Proſecutor. What was his character?—I underſtood he lived three years with Sir James Lake, but he had been ſome time out of ſervice before I took him into my ſervice.

Have you any reaſon to believe that this is his firſt fault?——Upon my word I do not know that it is not.

Court. Have you no friends, young man, that can anſwer for you, and put you into any way of living, if the Court would ſhew you any favour?—Yes, my Lord.

Then let them be brought to the Recorder in the courſe of the ſeſſions.

GUILTY.

JOHN WATTS, one pawnbroker's man coming into Court, was ſworn.

Where do you live?—At Mr. Newke's in Ruſſel-court.

Who came for you?——Nobody, I was gone to Mr. Cruttenden's in Berner's-ſtreet, he ſent a meſſage, and I underſtood he wanted to ſee me, I am only a ſervant; and the proſecutor ſent yeſterday; I told him I could not come, becauſe my maſter was out, but I ſent word that I would come this morning; I have ſeen nobody whatſoever that came for me.

Court. Make an affidavit of that in writing.

What things have you?——A medal and a dollar.

Where are they?—I have left them at home, Mr. Cruttenden cannot identify them.

Court. Go home and fetch them, Sir, and upon producing them, and making an affidavit in writing of what you have ſaid, I ſhall diſcharge your recognizance.

The priſoner brought nobody to his character in the courſe of the ſeſſions.

To be confined to hard labour twelve months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

382. ROBERT GANLEY, otherwiſe GANBY, was indicted (with one RICHARD JACOBS, not in cuſtody) for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Edward Thomſon, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 10th of March laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein, one ſilver milk-pot, value 36s. two ſilver ſalts, value 30s. one ſilver pepper caſtor, value 10s. one pair of ſilver tea tongs, value 5s. five ſilver table ſpoons, value 50s. ſix ſilver tea ſpoons, value 15s. one watch, with the inſide caſe made of gold, and the outſide caſe made of green ſhagreen, value 10l. one pair of ſtone ſhoe buckles ſet in ſilver, value 30s. one pair of ſteel ſhoe buckles, value 3s. one ſilver purſe, value 2s. one crown piece, value 5s. two half crown pieces, value 5s. and one ſilver three-pence, value 3d. the property of Edward Thomſon.

EDWARD THOMSON ſworn.

I live in Iſlington.

Are you in any buſineſs?—No.

When was your houſe broke open?——The 10th of laſt month, I was not at home, it was between ſeven and eight, Mrs. Thomſon and my maid were both at home, they are here.

Cour. Let us hear them firſt.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoner.

Mrs. THOMSON ſworn.

Somebody knocked at the door, the maid and I were in the parlour, a little after ſeven; the maid went and opened the door a little way, and a man ſaid he had a letter of importance, and ſhe looked at the directions, and ſhe ſaid it was not for her, nor any body there.

Was you near enough to hear or ſee what paſſed?—I heard it.

Were the candles lighted at that time?—Yes, ſhe was going to ſhut the door, and he ſaid, no, hold, and then they puſhed the door open, and in they ruſhed; they all came into the parlour firſt.

How many were there?—Six, to the beſt of my knowledge.

How many did you ſee?—O, I do not know, I was frightened, I do not know how many I ſaw.

How many came into the room where you was?—I cannot tell, there were ſeveral, I was too much frightened to count them, I was in the fore parlour.

What did they do?—They walked backwards and forwards in the room, and I ſcreamed out, and they held up a cutlaſs to my face, and threatened me if I did not hold my tongue; they did nothing but walk backwards and forwards, and guard me and my maid.

What were the others doing the while?—Only one ſtood over me.

Where was your maid?—She was in the ſame room; when ſhe firſt let them into the paſſage, they put a gag into her mouth, and hurt her very much.

After they ruſhed in, did ſhe come back again into your room?—Yes.

Was ſhe guarded in the ſame room that you was in, or in another room?—In the ſame room.

How many of them were there guarding her and you?—Only two, the others went up ſtairs.

Was there any thing rifled in the room where you was?—No.

How long did they remain up ſtairs?—I believe near three quarters of an hour.

Could you hear what they were doing up ſtairs?—I heard them very buſy, pulling out all the drawers, and they did pull them out, and did a great deal before they went away, but I could only hear them tumbling the things about, and pulling open the drawers.

Did they all go away together?—I believe ſo, I believe it was not quite eight when they were all gone.

How long had you lighted candles before they came in?——About half an hour, it might be about twenty minutes after ſeven when they came in.

Can you tell as to its being dark, did you light candles early that night?—Not earlier than uſual.

Was it dark?—O yes, it was dark, a very dark night.

Becauſe the ſun does not ſet at this time till after ſix, this was the 10th of March?—This was twenty minutes after ſeven; after they were gone, I went up ſtairs, and found all the drawers open; I went firſt into the fore room, over the parlour, that was the bedchamber.

Were the drawers that you found open, in that chamber?—Yes, they were a double cheſt of drawers, and a low cheſt of drawers beſides.

Did you miſs any thing elſe out of theſe drawers?—No, none of my clothes, they had not meddled with them, they told me they only wanted money; I miſſed one diamond ring, which was in a ſnuff box in my dreſſing glaſs drawer; I miſſed a ſilver net purſe, with a crown piece and two half crown pieces in it; I miſſed them from my dreſſing box, with a pincuſhion at the top of it, in a low cheſt of drawers.

Did you miſs any thing elſe?—I believe not.

Where were the ſilver milk pot and the other things?——The ſilver milk pot, and the tea ſpoons and tongs were in a little green baiſe bag, pinned up in the drawers in the back parlour, in the bureau drawer.

Was the bureau forced open?—They broke it open, in order to have found ſomething elſe; they broke it with a pair of tongs, they came into the parlour and carried off the tongs, and ſo forced it open.

Where were the ſalts, and the pepper caſtor, and the table ſpoons, and the watch and buckles taken from?—The table ſpoons were in a caſe with ſome ſilver handled knives and forks, that caſe was at the top of the cheſt of drawers in my bed-chamber, one of the ſalts was on the table in the room with me; I loſt nothing out of that room but that one ſalt, that happened accidentally to be in the room with me, the other was in the back parlour, and they moved the ſalt out; the pepper caſtor was in the back parlour too, and the watch was hanging up by the chimney ſide in my bedchamber, it was a gold watch in a black ſhagreen caſe.

Court. Look at your indictment, Mr. Reynolds.

Mr. Reynolds. My Lord, it ſays green in the indictment.

Mrs. Thomſon. The ſhoe buckles and knee buckles were in a black caſe, I ſuppoſe, in the low drawers.

Where were the other ſhoe buckles?—They were in the bureau, in the back parlour, which they broke open, hoping to find ſomething better.

Where was the ſilver three-pence loſt from?—That was in the little ſilver purſe, with the crown piece and two half crowns.

Did you ever find any of your things again?—No, they are found.

Look at the priſoner at the bar, and tell me whether you have any thing to ſay againſt him?—I cannot.

ANN MARTHE ſworn.

I have been ſervant to Mrs. Thomſon ſeven years, except two months; I have a letter in my pocket; on the 10th of March, between ſeven and eight, or about a quarter after ſeven, they knocked a gentle knock at the door, I was in the parlour with my miſtreſs at work; I aſked who was at the door; they ſaid, there was a letter of importance, upon which I opened the door a little way, and they held their thumb on the direction of the letter, and I ſaid it was not for us, becauſe it was directed for Miſs Young.

Did they thruſt the letter in?——Yes, they held it with their hand to the candle, and when I went to puſh the door with my hand and my knee, they thruſt in; they ſaid, ſtop, and in they all came.

How many?—To the beſt of my knowledge there were ſix.

What was the firſt thing you obſerved they did?——When they came I cried out, O, Lord Jeſus, we ſhall all be killed! and one of them immediately ſeized me by the throat, and I felt ſeveral others about me; after that, I deſired them to let me go into the parlour to my miſtreſs, who was juſt come out of a fit of ſickneſs, for I was afraid they would frighten her to death; with that, ſome cried out, cut them down, and others ſaid, gag them, and I ſaw ſeveral gags in their hands.

Do you know what gags are?——They were ſeveral pieces of wood, of different ſizes; then the child ſcreamed out violently, that they would not murder her aunt; and the waſherwoman came out of the kitchen, and a man in ſhort clothes met her on the ſtairs, and clapped her hand to her mouth, and deſired her not to make a noiſe; and ſhe ſaid ſhe would not, if he would let her go to us; and when ſhe came in, the tall man ſaid, take the child and quiet her, and be damned to you, and they let her take the child away; after that, three of them, as nigh as I can gueſs, left the room; with that, the priſoner at the bar and two others went away, and left one with a cutlaſs and another with a piſtol in the parlour, and I thought I heard another in the paſſage, or at the ſtreet door, and I ſtaid in the parlour; preſently after that my miſtreſs ſaid there was a knock at the door, and I ſaid I heard nobody, but my maſter would be home at eight o'clock; a man came into the parlour, with a ſhort jacket, and breeches buttoned in, and took the parlour tongs and opened the deſk, they ſtood all then by the ſide of the deſk. A pair of ſteel buckles of my maſter's were found on the priſoner.

How long did they ſtay in the houſe?—As nigh as I can gueſs, about three quarters of an hour; I believe they had been there about a quarter of an hour when I ſaid my maſter would be in at eight o'clock: the priſoner was the man that came in and took the candles off the table, and went to the deſk in the back room.

How was he dreſſed?—In a ſhort jacket and fuſtian breeches buttoned in, and a hat very much over his face.

Had he any thing elſe over his face?—No, Sir, I did not know that there was any thing elſe over his face.

Did not know! why you ſaw, did not you?——No, I did not ſee any thing over his face.

As his hat was very much over his face, you could not ſee his face, could you?——When I ſaw him at the Rotation Office, with his hat very much over his face, he was a ſtriking likeneſs of the man, I could ſee his noſe, and mouth, and lips.

Did he ſpeak at all?—I never hard him open his lips.

How ſoon did you ſee him after?—The perſons that took him came to me the day after, and we went the next day at eleven o'clock; this was on the Wedneſday, and on the Friday we were appointed to ſee them; I knew him to be the ſame man that was in the houſe, and went backwards and forwards in the two rooms.

When did you firſt know that the ſteel buckles had been found upon him?—The ſame afternoon the man came to us with the watch and the other things.

When the men came, deſiring you to come to the Rotation Office, did they bring the buckles with them?—I ſaw them at the Rotation Office.

Before you had ſeen the man or after?—It was after.

What dreſs was he in when you ſaw him at the Rotation Office?——He was dreſſed in a purple long coat, of a fine cloth, and a neckcloth about his neck.

Had he his hat on when you firſt ſaw him?—Not when I firſt ſaw him, but it was a new hat, lined with blue.

That was a very different dreſs?——It was, but I knew him.

You go before me all the way, you will have it you know the man, and perhaps you do, but anſwer my queſtions; did you know him to be the ſame man when you firſt ſaw him?—I knew him to be the ſame man before his hat was put on; I immediately ſaid, that was the man that was in the houſe, and that went into the back parlour; I ſaw him afterwards with his hat on twice, the Juſtice made him put it on; he would not have it put over his face, and he gave one of the runners a knock; it was put over his face, and I knew him perfectly well before it was put over; when it was put over his face, he appeared to be the ſame man.

Court. Remember, child, here is a man's life at ſtake, and when you ſaw him at the Rotation Office he was very differently dreſſed.—I am very ſure he is the man that was in the room, and that went into the back parlour, for he ſtruck me the moment I ſaw him.

After they were gone you found the houſe had been rifled?—After they were gone out of the parlour, I thought they might be in the houſe, and I called out of the window; I found all the drawers entirely broken, and the cabinet broke open.

(The letter produced, being a blank ſheet of paper, directed to Miſs Young, Iſlington.)

On the 10th of March, about nine in the evening, M'Donald, Charles Young, Charles Grubb, and myſelf, were going along Broad St. Giles's, and turning into Drury-lane, I met the priſoner and three other men, they walked two by two, the priſoner was behind along with Jacobs, I paſſed them, and ſtopped again to ſee if M'Donald or Grubb ſtopped them; they did not; on the off ſide, by the light of the tallow chandler's ſhop, I ſaw a bundle in Jacobs's right-hand, the priſoner was on the left hand ſide; I immediately run and caught hold of Jacobs, and aſked him what he had got there? immediately he flung the bundle round to give it to the priſoner; I let go Jacobs, and called out to lay hold of the others; Jacobs jumped out of the road, but the bundle the priſoner had not got as I thought he had; Young and M'Donald caught Jacobs in about a dozen yards; I took the priſoner, and they brought Jacobs into the Brown Bear, in Broad St. Giles's; then M'Donald and Grub ſearched Jacobs, and took the plate from him.

Did you ſee him ſearched?—Yes, they took the plate out of his hand in the ſtreet, and ſome pieces of money out of his pocket in the public houſe; theſe ſteel buckles I took out of the priſoner's breeches pocket; I aſked him how he came by them? he ſaid he found them in a coach.

The buckles produced and depoſed to by the Proſecutor.

Proſecutor. They were in my deſk in the back parlour, which was broke open; I did not wear them, I had ſeen them about a week before.

Priſoner. What dreſs was the man in that got away?—To the beſt of my knowledge it was a brown under coat.

Priſoner. What waiſtcoat and breeches?——He had a white great coat, a kind of a bloſſom coat, and a purple coat under it.

What kind of breeches?—Fuſtian, and a white waiſtcoat.

What ſort of a hat?——A round hat.

Was the upper coat a long coat, or a ſhort one?——A long coat.

And that white great coat that the priſoner wore came down pretty low?—Yes.

And a purple coat under it?——Yes.

I was along with the laſt witneſs, and M'Donald and Grubb; coming along juſt by Drury-lane, there were four men, and the priſoner and Jacobs were ſide by ſide, and Jacobs next the wall, the other two were walking ſide by ſide, by them.

Could you judge by their manner of walking, whether they ſpoke to another or not?——They were talking very loud as they went by, they ſeemed to be all in one company; Sayre went by them, and turned round and came up to Jacobs and the priſoner; and Jacobs had this bundle in his hand, and I ſaw him move his hand towards the priſoner, and Sayer caught hold of the priſoner, and Jacobs run on; we purſued him, and M'Donald caught hold of the ſkirts of his coat, he had the bundle in his hand; then he run about twelve or fourteen yards; I took the bundle out of his hand; this is the bundle, I have had it locked up up ever ſince; here is a watch, a pair of ſalts, half a dozen tea ſpoons and a pair of ſugar tongs.

How came you to let Jacobs get away? —He broke out of the round houſe while we were gone to Iſlington to look for the proſecutor. (The things depoſed to by Mrs. Thomſon.) Here are five table ſpoons, and ſix tea ſpoons, one pair of ſalts, a cream jug, and a watch, a little box, and a little ſilver bell, and one ſtone buckle.

Court to Mrs. Thomſon. Have any of them your mark on them?—They are all marked.

Priſoner. What kind of waiſtcoat and breeches had the man on when he got away? —I cannot remember.

Priſoner. When they advertiſed him they could remember every individual that he had on then.

CHARLES GRUBB ſworn.

The priſoner and Jacobs were walking together and talking, I ſaw Jacobs have a bundle; we followed them, and Jacobs went to throw the bundle to the priſoner, he did not get it, and Jacobs run away with it, Young and M'Donald run after him and took him with the bundle, and I ſtaid with this man: I found in Jacobs's pocket that crown piece, and two half crown pieces, and a ſilver three-pence; I aſked the priſoner how he came by the buckles, and he ſaid he found them in a hackney coach, the priſoner and Jacobs were both very dirty as if they had been in the country, I think they both were in boots.

Priſoner. What time of night was this? —It was exactly nine, when we took them into a public houſe to ſearch them.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I lived in Drury Lane, and was going out to get ſome ſupper, and there were five or ſix men going along, I was coming along, and they were ſhoving one another about; and as they were ſhoving one another about, I picked up theſe buckles; theſe men took me, and took me into a public houſe, and ſearched me.

Sayer. My Lord, the buckles were in this paper and tied with a bit of ſtring, and it was a very wet night, and there was no dirt on the paper.

Court to Proſecutor. Were your buckles when you loſt them tied up in a paper or were they looſe?—I really forget whether they were looſe, or in a paper, but I rather think in a paper.

Court to Priſoner. What way of life have you been in?—I am a heel maker by trade.

Have you worked at your trade till you was taken?——Yes, Sir, till I was taken bad, theſe men know when I was taken, I was not able to lift my hands to my head.

Grubb. He pretended he was lame that night.

Court. Can you prove where you was at this time?—I had nobody at home but my wife, I worked at the widow Barnes's, at Barbican, I had not been at work for almoſt a fortnight, I was not able to work.

Have you any body to ſpeak for you?—No, Sir, I was taken at ſuch a diſadvantage, that I had no time to get any body to come up.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, this is a burglary of a kind rather unuſual, though very atrocious; the entry was obtained by artifice and by management, therefore there is no direct breaking; but inaſmuch as the miſchief is preciſely the ſame, whether the entry is obtained by artifice, when the intention is to commit a felony in the houſe; as if they had actually broke open the door with a ſledge hammer: the law conſtructs the obtaining the entry by a trick and artifice for the ſame purpoſe, to be preciſely the ſame crime as breaking into the houſe: as to the miſtake of the watch being in a green ſhagreen caſe, that might have been material if he had been charged with ſtealing nothing elſe. If therefore, the priſoner appears to you upon the evidence before you, to be one of the parties concerned in this burglary, which is a very daring and atrocious one, it will be your duty to find him guilty; but however daring and atrocious the outrage is, unleſs the evidence is ſuch as to bring home conviction to your minds, that the priſoner was a party concerned in it, you will alſo think it your duty to acquit him.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

383. WILLIAM SNALEHAM was indicted for burglariouſly and felonioſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Jackſon, Doctor in Divinity, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 27th of March laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein fourteen linen ſhirts, value 7l. ſix linen ſtocks, value 12s. three muſlin neckcloths, value 12s. fifteen linen handkerchiefs, value 20s. one cotton night-cap, value 12d. two other cotton night-caps, value 4s. eight pair of ſtockings, value 20s. one thread ſtocking, value 12d. four leather gloves, value 2s. and one pair of worſted garters, value 2d. the property of the ſaid Thomas.

Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, D. D. ſworn.

I live in Somerſet-ſtreet, Portman-ſquare; on Saturday the 27th of March I dined out at Groſvenor-ſquare, I returned home about ten in the evening, and I aſked my ſervant, which I generally do the firſt queſtion, whether all my children were well; he replied the children were all well, but there had been rogues in the houſe.

MICHAEL HARRIS ſworn.

I am ſervant to Doctor Jackſon, on the 27th of March near eight in the evening, my fellow ſervant was going up ſtairs, and ſhe thought ſhe heard ſomebody pull the door gently after them, ſhe called me up and we went to the door, and found the ſtreet-door open, I had put the chain up about a quarter after ſeven; two lads and a boy were in the houſe.

Were they all at home at the time you found the door open?—Yes, I went directly into my maſter's room the back parlour, and there were three of the drawers of the bureau drawn out, and the linen taken out.

What things were uſually kept there?—Shirts, ſtockings, handkerchiefs, and ſo on, we could not find which way they got in, I went into the fore parlour, and the ſaſh was down, and I ſaw a little print of dirt cloſe by the fore parlour window.

Have you any reaſon now to know how they got in?—No other than that the ſaſh was not faſtened, I ſuppoſe they got in that way, and took the chain down and let themſelves out. The things were found, and are in Court.

JAMES RANDALL ſworn.

I am a carpenter and joiner by trade, I ſtopped this man with a ſack about nine, or a quarter after, on the 27th of March, I firſt met him in Henrietta-ſtreet, I was coming down Oxford-road about nine o'clock, and I met him with this ſack, and this man that is by, Clifford, ſays here is a man that has a ſack, and I think it is ſtolen things; ſays he, go along with me, and I went with him, and we dogged him into Oxford-road, and he pitched it down near the Golden Horſe, at an apothecary's ſhop upon the pavement, upon the curbſtone, we paſſed him and went to the corner of Berner-ſtreet; ſome time after he took up the bundle again, and croſſed over the corner of Bond-ſtreet, and pitched it on the pump, I croſſed over and aſked him if it was his property, ſays he, Mr. Randall are you going to ſtop me? Yes, ſays I, if it is not your property I will; he run away immediately, and he was ſecured.

Did you know him?—Not then, not till the next morning, then I knew him, he called me by my name.

Was he the ſame man you ſaw firſt with the ſack?—O it is the ſame perſon, I am very particular in it.

CHARLES CLIFFORD ſworn.

I am a ſhoe-maker, I was going home with my goods, I firſt ſaw the priſoner in Gray-ſtreet with a bundle, he aſked me to liſt it upon his back, he was ſtanding there with the ſack on the ground, as I was lifting it up he ſaid it was a few ſhavings and rags; I had a ſupicion it was ſtolen linen by the weight of it, I went to the corner of Henrietta-ſtreet, and I happened to meet with Randall, and deſired him to follow him with me, and we followed him into Bond-ſtreet, and there he let it down, and he took it up again, and carried it to the pump.

ROBERT HUTCHENSON ſworn.

I ſtopped the priſoner, I was coming along and I heard the cry of ſtop thief, I met him right in the face, and took him.

Was he running?—He run very faſt, I ſaw him run but a very little way.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court to Priſoner. What do you ſay for yourſelf, how came you by all theſe things?

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

About half paſt eight I came from the pay-table, then I went to my mother's, for if I have any thing to ſpare I give it to her, ſhe was not at home, ſhe chared at Lady Byron's in Somerſet-ſtreet; there was a man ſtood againſt the wine vaults with this bundle, he aſked me to give him a hand with it to Bond-ſtreet, and he would pay me any thing I required, I immediately took it on my back, and when I came to the corner of Bond-ſtreet I put it down as the man told me, then came up Mr. Randall, and he ſaid, what have you got here, chips or ſhavings? I ſaid, be it which it will, it does not belong to you. I have no friends here at preſent, I did not think my trial would have come on ſo ſoon.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, As to breaking there is a difficulty which is not explained to your ſatisfaction or mine; nobody knows how they got into the houſe, there are no marks of violence any where; there is a ſmall circumſtance that goes to make it more probable that it ſhould be at the parlour window, but that I rather think falls ſhort of ſatisfactory proof that they did get in that way; they might have got in by ſome way which excludes the idea of force uſed to obtain admiſſion; as for inſtance, if a garret window was open, and they got in by the leads, or if they got in at any other open window by a ladder: it therefore ſeems to me upon the whole evidence, if you ſhould be ſatisfied that the priſoner was concerned in this robbery, the ſafeſt and propereſt verdict for you to give will be, that he is guilty of ſtealing the things, but not guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing the goods, but NOT GUILTY of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

384. The ſaid WILLIAM SNALEHAM was again indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Goodrick, Eſq; about the hour of eight in the night, on the 27th day of March laſt, and feloniouſly ſtealing one ſilk gown, value 20s. one linen gown, value 1s. one flannel powdering gown, value 3s. one petticoat, value 2s. two ſilk petticoats, value 10s. one cotton gown, value 7s. one bed-gown, value 5s. one dimity bed-gown, value 5s. four petticoats, value 20s. one ſilk cloak, value 10s. one ſattin cloak, value 20s. one linen apron, value 5s. one handkerchief, value 12d. one pair of pockets, value 6d. one pair of linen ſheets, value 10s. one window curtain, value 3s. one toilet cover, value 3s. one cotton and worſted check cover, value 2s. and two yards of muſlin, value 5s. the property of the ſaid Thomas, in his dwelling houſe.

JANE GOLIGHTLEY ſworn.

I live with Mr. Goodrick, on the 27th of March, about nine o'clock in the evening, I heard a noiſe as of the lamp breaking over the door, the lamp was broke at the top of the door on the outſide, I went into the area, there were ſome children picking up the glaſs, there was a woman ſtanding by them, I aſked her who had done it, ſhe ſaid ſhe ſaw nobody, I got the candle and went up ſtairs, with one of my fellow ſervants, which was John Spencer, and in the drawing-room the bottoms of ſome chairs were pulled out, they were lapped up in a large cloth, there was one of the little cabinets half out of the window; we went up one pair of ſtairs higher, the drawers was all open, and all the things taken out of them out of the two pair of ſtairs back room.

Court. Were the things taken quite away?—Yes, there was the ſheets taken off the bed, and the quilt; we came down and told the people below ſtairs.

Court. Was any purſuit made after the thieves?——Not by our family.

When had you been in the drawing room before?——About one o'clock in the day.

Was the windows then ſhut down or open?—Shut down.

Was there any appearance of any body having got in?——There was no appearance of that, but both the windows were very much dirtied; I do not know whether any of the family had been in ſince.

Priſoner. The gentleman ſaid it was about nine, I was in the watch-houſe about half after eight.

I was the firſt that gave the alarm, I ſaw the lamp broke, that was about a quarter before nine o'clock.

Court. Did you go out?—I went to the door immediately, but I did not ſee any body but ſome children picking up the glaſs; I went up ſtairs, and in the drawing room there was a little cabinet removed, and ſome chair covers; we went up ſtairs, and we ſaw ſome ſheets taken off the bed; we looked in every room about the houſe before we acquainted the gentleman of the houſe with it, and there was a great deal of dirt about the window, and there was a flint and ſteel found dropped in the area.

I took the priſoner with this ſack upon him a little after nine, he was carrying it along Oxford-road, he had the ſack on his head, and we dogged him; I am ſure he is the ſame lad that had the ſack.

CHARLES CLIFFORD ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner with the ſack as I was going to carry home a pair of ſhoes; the priſoner aſked me to lift it up; that was the ſame ſack.

——— HUTCHENSON ſworn.

Coming up Oxford-road, I heard people cry, ſtop thief! and I took him.

(The gown depoſed to by Jane Golightly.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing more to ſay of this than the other, they were given to me to carry, and it is very hard I ſhould ſuffer for what I am not guilty of.

Court. What may be the value of theſe things?

Golightly. I ſhould think they muſt be worth five pounds.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, with reſpect to the burglary, there ſeems to be no preciſe evidence to bring that part of the charge home to the priſoner, or any body elſe; there is ſtrong preſumptive evidence, that whoever committed this robbery, got in at the drawing room window; but in order to make it a burglary, you ſhould have preciſe proof that the window through which the thieves entered was ſhut at the time; of that there is no preciſe proof. She has valued the whole of the things at five pounds, but you will judge of the value; the gown only is depoſed to particularly.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s. but Not Guilty of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

385. JOSEPH LORRISON was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Richard Collett the younger, about the hour of four in the night, on the 7th day of April laſt, with intent the goods and chattels of the ſaid Richard, then and there being, burglariouſly to ſteal, take and carry away.

JOHN JORDAN ſworn.

On the 8th of this month, about five in the morning, or a little after, we were alarmed with a knock at the door of Mr. Collet's houſe, I got up, and I heard ſomebody walking about the paſſage, but I thought it was my maſter got up, which he frequently did on particular occaſions.

Where do you ſleep?——Up one pair of ſtairs; I heard ſome perſon go half way down the paſſage, and then down the kitchen ſtairs; I did not ſee who it was; then after that I came down ſtairs, and went to my maſter for the key of the door, and he gave me the key, I went down to open the door, it was ſhut at night, and when I found it, the bolts were undone; I let in ſome people and examined every room, and I found the priſoner in the neceſſary; I found the office window open, and the bolt of the outſide ſhutter broke off, taken off, and it has not been ſeen ſince, and the inſide ſhutter was wrenched off the hinges; I heard ſomebody go down the kitchen ſtairs, and I heard him walking about, about a minute or ſo before.

Court. Was it daylight then?——Yes.

You know nothing farther?——No, I found a dark lanthorn in the office where he broke in, and this piece of wax candle.

RICHARD COLLETT ſworn.

When did you firſt hear any alarm?——Not till paſt five o'clock.

Did any of your family hear any alarm?——I do not know that they did.

Have you any evidence that tends to fix the time of the priſoner's getting into your houſe at an earlier hour?——No, Sir.

Was there any thing taken away?——No.

Court. Then, Gentlemen, upon this indictment I find it is impoſſible to convict the priſoner; this is an indictment for burglary, which you know conſiſts of breaking and entering the houſe in the night, with intent to ſteal; the whole eſſence of the charge conſiſts of breaking and entering the houſe in the night, and there is nothing in this indictment which we can ſeparate or diſtinguiſh, it is one ſimple charge, and there is not, nor there cannot be, any evidence to ſhew that this was done in the night.

NOT GUILTY.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

386. JOHN LEWIS, WILLIAM DUFF, and ROBERT READ, were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Jacob Kirkman about the hour of two in the night, on the 28th day of March laſt, with intent his goods, chattles, and monies, then and there being, burglariouſly and feloniouſly to ſteal.

JACOB KIRKMAN, Jun. ſworn.

My uncle's houſe was broke open the 28th of laſt month, I was alarmed between two and three in the morning by the watchman's rattle at the knocker of the door; I got up inſtantly, and aſked what was the matter, and the watchman anſwered, get up, there are thieves in your houſe; upon that I put on my clothes, and went up ſtairs into the garret to awake the coachman; it was very dark; I afterwards came down in the firſt floor into my uncle's room, who was ill of the gout, and when I had lighted a candle, I went to the ſtreet door, and let in the watchman and ſome others that were with him; the ſtreet door was ſhut, we examined the kitchen and there was nobody there; I opened the area door, and the watchman and the others proceeded to examine the houſe, and in the cellar where the coals were put, there they found the three priſoners at the bar.

Court. Is that coal cellar within the houſe?——There is an area about four or five feet wide between the houſe and the coal cellars.

Can they get into the coal cellar without coming into the houſe at all from the area?——Yes, the coal cellar opens into the area.

Were any of the doors of the houſe broke?——No, there were two holes made in the door, and another in the poſt to which it is faſtened, but they had not got it open, they had not got into the houſe.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an attempt to commit a burglary, but it was diſcovered before it was committed, certainly we cannot conſider the coal cellar on the other ſide of the area as a part of the dwelling houſe, there is therefore no proof of the burglary, though there was a clear attempt to commit it.

ALL THREE ACQUITTED.

Court to Priſoners. Young men, you have by your conduct on this occaſion brought yourſelves to this bar, to be tried for your lives upon a capital indictment, and you have had the good fortune to eſcape, through being, (as I hope it will turn out happily for you) interrupted in the commiſſion of an offence, which there is too much reaſon to fear, from the evidence, you have attempted to commit; I ſhall abſtain from ſaying all I think on the ſubject, therefore, there being no other charge againſt you, and no intention of further proſecuting you, you will be diſcharged; and, I hope, the riſk you have run of your lives on this occaſion, together with the diſgrace of being brought into this Court of Juſtice, will be a warning to you, and that you will be thankful to God for having eſcaped the puniſhment due to ſuch a crime.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

387. ARCHIBALD BURRIDGE and DANIEL BEAN were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Henry Lord Stawell, about the hour of ſeven in the night, on the 28th day of March laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one oak tray, value 6d. three ſilver caſtors, value 1l. 10s. three caſtor covers, value 6s. three caſtor ſpoons, value 3s. two ſilver cruets, value 7l. one ſilver cruet frame, value 5l. ſix ſilver cruet ſpoons, value 12s. ſix ſilver labels, value 6s. two cruet boxes, value 50s. two French plate waiters, value 2s. two French plate ſalts, value 12d. and two ſilver labels, value 3s. the property of the ſaid Henry Lord Stawell.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

STEPHEN RING ſworn.

Mr. Sylveſter Council for the Proſecution. Tell your ſtory to the Court concerning this robbery.

Ring. I am a baker; I was going through Hanover Square, about half after ſeven in the evening of the 29th of March, in company with George Logan, I ſaw the priſoner Burridge ſtand with one foot on the iron bar that goes acroſs the area, and another on the parlour window of Lord Stawell, he had a tray in his hands, handing it to the man on the other ſide; the other man was ſtanding againſt the rails, Bean ſtood ready to receive it, with his hands againſt the bar.

Court. Did he ſtand in any poſture that was in the act of receiving it?—He ſtood in the act of receiving it; when I came up to them, Bean ſtepped down to me, and aſked me the way to Charterhouſe Square.

Court. How do you mean ſtepped down to you?—He walked off the ſteps, he was upon the ſteps before the door; then the other that had the tray dropped it down the area; then my companion catched hold of Bean, and ſaid to me, theſe are thieves; I ſaid, ſo they are, let us purſue them; Bean got from him, and Burridge jumped over the bars and run away; I and Logar purſued them.

How ſoon did you take them?—We took them between fifty and ſixty yards off.

Did you loſe ſight of them?—Not at all,

Did you ſee any body elſe there?—Yes, three men ſtood at a diſtance.

Did they aſſiſt you?——No, they ran away.

Mr. Chetwood, Council for the Priſoner.

Was it quite light, Sir?——It was not dark, nor was it quite light, I could ſee at a great diſtance.

Had he hold of the rails?—No.

He was in the ſtreet then?—Yes, up againſt the door.

You did not ſee him do any thing whatever?—No, Sir.

Or receive any thing?—No.

When theſe priſoners were taken, were they taken running or ſtanding ſtill?——When they found they were purſued cloſe they ſtood ſtill.

They were ſtanding ſtill?—Yes.

There was nobody but you and your friend?—No.

Are you ſure it was Burridge that had his foot on the rails?——Yes.

Did you charge him with it directly?—Yes, they ſubmitted to be ſearched, but nothing was found.

Did you or your companion make uſe of this expreſſion, that you had loſt ſeveral loaves, and you ſuppoſed theſe were the thieves that had ſtole them?——I did not, my companion did.

Did not you or your friend expreſs that you laid hold of them on ſuſpicion at that time?—No, Sir, not at that time.

Your companion was along with you?——Yes.

Did he ſay, he believed theſe were the men that robbed the houſe or that ſtole the loaves, which was it?——He did not mention then, that he believed theſe were the men that had been in the houſe.

Did not a tall gentleman interfere for them?——He ſaid, they ſhould be taken and examined.

Then there was ſome doubt even upon your own ſtory at that time, whether they were the real identical people or no?——Yes, Sir.

Did you ever loſe ſight of the men?——No.

Court. Are you ſure upon your oath that they were the men?——Yes.

What did they appear to you to ſtop for?——We purſued them ſo cloſe that they found they could not get away.

GEORGE LOGAN ſworn.

I ſaw Burridge ſtanding with one foot on the window and the other on the rail, Bean ſtood with his hands to receive a tray of plate, the plate fell, juſt as it fell he aſked my friend the way to Charter-houſe Square, I ſaid they were thieves, and we purſued them and took them, I never loſt ſight of them, I am ſure theſe are the ſame men that were there.

Was it day-light?——No, Sir, it was duſk.

Court to Ring. Did you mean that there was any day-light, or that there was other light?—It was not very dark.

Was there any day-light at the time or not?—It was not very dark, we could purſue them ſixty yards.

Was that by the day-light?—Yes, Sir.

Then you mean to ſay, that there was day-light enough to diſcern their faces?—Yes.

Court to Logan. What do you ſay to that, was there any day-light left?—No, Sir.

WILLIAM HORACE ſworn.

I was coming by this evening, the firſt time, I took notice of theſe young men one of them was inſide the rails, and the other was, ſtood cloſe by the door on the ſteps, the other let the tray out of his hands.

Are theſe the two men?—Yes, Sir, they are.

Priſoner's Council. How far was you from them?——About twelve or fifteen yards.

Did you follow them?—I ſtood oppoſite the door till my Lord's ſervants came out, and then we went after them.

Did the ſervants join the purſuit?—Yes.

They were out of ſight from you?—Yes, for a little while.

MARLBOROUGH HARDY ſworn.

I am houſe ſteward to my Lord Stawell, we were alarmed by the tray falling down into the area, I ſaw it the beſt part of an hour before, it was in the front part of the parlour, between the windows on a table, when I was alarmed I went out with a candle there, and I found the tray upſide down, with the principal part of the contents that are here under it, I looked up then to the windows, and the ſaſh was up to the top.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court. Was any body in the room after you ſaw the things on the table?—Yes, the under butler.

What time was it when you heard this tray fall?——About twenty minutes paſt ſeven.

Mr. Sylveſter. What may be the value of the plate?—The value of the whole is twenty-five pounds eight ſhillings and one penny.

Court. Was it day-light?—No, it was dark.

Was there no day-light left at all?—I cannot ſay there was, my Lady had had candles ſome time, and we had candles below.

Priſoner's Council. It was an under ground room where you ſit?—Yes.

And where your Lady ſits there were curtains?—Yes.

TIMOTHY CLINT ſworn.

I am under butler, I was in the parlour ten minutes before the alarm, and the plate was there then, and the window was ſhut, I am ſure of it, I purſued the men till they were taken; after the alarm I ſaw the window open.

Priſoner's Council. Had you any particular reaſon to take notice whether the window was open or ſhut?——It was not open.

Do not you think it might have been open and you not have ſeen it?——No, I ſhut the blinds that got half way up the window.

PRISONER BURRIDGE'S DEFENCE.

I had been at Kenſington after ſome work, I ſaw a mob lay hold of this man, and I went, and they ſaid, that is one, they ſaid I ſhould go back, they took me back to the houſe, and kept me upwards of two hours, and they put me in the watch houſe.

The priſoner Burridge called one witneſs to his character.

The priſoner Bean made no defence, but called two witneſſes to his character.

ARCHIBALD BURRIDGE, }
DANIEL BEAN, } GUILTY.

Of ſtealing the goods in the dwelling houſe to the value of 25l. but not guilty of the burglary; Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

---

388. WILLIAM WALKER was indicted for that he, not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, on the 5th day of March laſt, with force and arms, in the pariſh of Harefield, in and upon Ann Walker his wife, in the peace of God and our Lord the King then and there being, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an aſſault, and that he the ſaid William Walker, with a certain claſp knife of the value of twopence, which he in his right-hand then and there held, in and upon the breaſt of the ſaid Ann did ſtrike, ſtab, and thruſt, giving to the ſaid Ann, in and upon the breaſt of the ſaid Ann, with the claſp knife aforeſaid, one mortal wound of the length of one inch, and of the breadth of three inches, of which ſhe inſtantly died, and the jurors ſay that the ſaid William, her the ſaid Ann, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of malice aforethought, did kill and murder: the ſaid William Walker was likewiſe charged with the like murder on the Coroner's inquiſition.

JOSEPH BRANCH ſworn.

Court. What is your name?——Joſeph Branch.

Where do you live?—In Harefield, in the county of Middleſex.

What buſineſs do you follow?—A day labourer.

Where did the priſoner William Walker live?—The next door to me.

What buſineſs did he follow?—A day labourer.

Who did he work with?—With one Mr. Horne the laſt.

Was he in regular work?—As far as I know, I cannot ſay.

But you might happen to know whether he was in conſtant work or not?——Yes, he was.

In what way?—In thraſhing in a barn.

Was you much with him?—No, otherwiſe than as neighbours.

Was you in his houſe?—I never was in his houſe twice in my life.

How long did you live next door to him?—I lived there before he came.

When did he come?—I cannot ſay upon my life.

As near as you can tell?—I cannot ſay.

My friend, cannot you tell me within a twelvemonth ?—About two years as near as I can gueſs.

What did his family conſiſt of ?—A wife and two children.

What age were the children ?——They were young children.

Can you gueſs how old the eldeſt of them might be ?—About five years old.

What aged man was he ?——I cannot ſay.

What aged woman might the wife be ?——I cannot ſay, they were not born in the place.

Did any body elſe live in the houſe with them ?——No, Sir.

Do you remember the death of this woman ?——Yes.

When did that happen, what day ?—The 5th of March.

Tell me now what you know with reſpect to it ?—This woman came to aſk me to come and ſit in the houſe in the evening about nine o'clock, I was going to bed.

She came to your houſe did ſhe ?—Yes; and ſhe aſked me to come and ſit in the low room.

For what ?—She did not give me any account for what, only ſhe ſaid there was another man in the houſe, and if I would come and ſit there ſhe ſhould be glad, ſo I went home with her.

Did ſhe tell you how long ſhe wanted you to ſit there, all night, or how long ?—No, ſhe did not mention all night.

Had ſhe ever aſked you to come and ſit there before ?—Never before.

Did not you aſk her what ſhe wanted you to come for ?——She ſaid then ſhe thought her huſband would not meddle with her, if there was ſomebody in the houſe, and ſhe ſaid then ſhe would go to bed, ſhe had not had any reſt a good while; I went with her, and found another man in the houſe, one Francis Jones.

In what room was he ?——In the ſame room ?—the lower room.

Where was the priſoner ?—Up ſtairs in bed.

As you underſtood; you did not go up ſtairs did you ?—No, Sir, I did not, I underſtood he was there, I aſked her to ſit down, but ſhe would not, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would go to bed, ſhe had not had any reſt for ſome time, ſhe went and laid there for ſome time, and very ſtill they were for ſome time, I cannot ſay how long; by and by I heard her ſay to him, are you going to get up.

Where was it they ſlept ?—Up ſtairs.

Over the room were you was ?—Yes.

What anſwer did the priſoner make to her ?—He anſwered her, no; and ſhe aſked him whether he wanted the pot, and he ſaid, no; and in about a minute after they were very ſtill, and ſhe ſcreamed out, and the man and I jumped up and run towards the ſtairs; they come down upon us both together, and I laid hold of the priſoner's right-arm.

Did they come walking ?—No, they came tumbling down together.

Undreſſed ?—Only their ſhirt and ſhift; I caught hold of the priſoner's right-arm, and with my pulling him off the woman, ſhe tumbled down, I caught hold of his right-hand, and he had a knife in his right-hand.

Did you ſee the knife before you laid hold of his right arm ?—No.

At the time you laid hold of his right-arm where was ſhe ?—Laying down at the foot of the ſtairs, ſhe fell down.

How near the foot of the ſtairs was it that you laid hold of his right-arm ?—As near as could be, he tried to ſtamp upon her, and we pulled him off of her like.

Did you obſerve him try to ſtamp upon her before or after you laid hold of him ?—When we laid hold of him, ſhe jumped up and run out of doors, and tumbled down on the left-hand ſide of the door, and with our pulling him about, he got rid of his knife out of his hand ſome how, I cannot ſay how.

Dropped it, I ſuppoſe ?——I ſuppoſe ſo, when I found the knife was out of his hand, I run to call Edward Trumper the conſtable and Samuel Woods, and when I came back ſhe was on the other ſide of the door laying bleeding, and then Francis Jones got her in doors, and got ſomething over her, and there came a couple of women there, and I left her under the care of them; I ſaw no more.

Did you hear him ſay any thing to her at the time ſhe ſcreamed?——No, Sir.

Did he ſay any thing at the time he endeavoured to ſtamp upon her?—No.

When you ſeized his arm, did he ſay any thing to you?—No.

Did you never hear him ſay any thing at all?—No, not then, when they came down together they ſaid nothing.

Did not you aſk him what he had been doing?——No.

Is it poſſible that ſuch a ſcene as this ſhould paſs, and that you ſhould not aſk him what he had done, or what he was doing, or why he had done it?—— I laid hold of his arm, but I aſked him no queſtions, and he ſaid nothing to me.

How long before this happened had you ſeen this man?—The day before.

Had you ſeen him in the courſe of that day?——I ſaw him in the morning going to work, about ſix o'clock.

You do not work very near him?—No.

Did you meet him in the courſe of that day?——No.

Did you ſpeak to him in the morning?—No.

Had you ſpoke to him within a week before? Yes, but I cannot ſay when.

Had you within three days?——I cannot ſay.

Now, my friend, did it not ſtrike you as ſomething odd, that the woman ſhould come and deſire you to ſit in the room below?—As my wife ſat with me, and I was going to bed, I did not aſk her nothing, and ſhe told me nothing what it was for.

When ſhe went up ſtairs to go to bed, did not you aſk her how long you was to ſtay there?——No, ſhe ſaid nothing about how long I was to ſtay or nothing.

Did Jones ſay any thing to you how long you was to ſtay?——I ſuppoſed no longer than the morning that we went to work.

Did not you aſk her, why ſhe ſuppoſed her huſband would hurt her?——No.

How did they live together before?——I do not know, I never was acquainted with them, I never was at their houſe above once or twice in my life.

Would not you have thought it a very odd thing, if your wife had ſent for a man to have come and ſtaid in your houſe all night, while ſhe and you were above ſtairs?——I do not know, it was ſomething odd to be ſure, I could give no account about it.

Had you obſerved any thing remarkable about the man or the woman before that time?——No, the woman was always a very good ſort of a woman.

What ſort of a man was he?——A very good ſort of a man all that I ſaw.

Was he a ſober man?——I never heard that he was given to drinking, I was not acquainted with them any otherwiſe than living neighbours by them.

It ſeems to me, by your account, you might as well have lived a thouſand miles off?——I never go to any body's houſe but my own, and that is beſt.

Did you and he never meet at an alehouſe?——No.

Is there any alehouſes in your pariſh?—There is two.

Which houſe did you frequent?—Sometimes I had a pint of beer at the Goat.

And did you never meet him there?——No.

Court. I think you ſay this man's maſter's name was Horne?——Yes.

Can you tell how long he worked with him?

Priſoner. Mr. Horne is no maſter of mine.

Jury. Did the woman ſay ſhe was afraid of her huſband's beating of her.

Court to Priſoner. Who did you work for at the time your wife died?—Nobody at all.

FRANCIS JONES ſworn.

I am a day labourer.

Court. How near did you live to William

Walker?——Cloſe to him till near a fortnight before the accident.

What do you know of the accident?—On the 4th of March I was in Samuel Wood's, and William Walker's wiſe came in.

What time of the day?—Between ſeven and eight in the evening, as nigh as I can gueſs; ſhe ſaid to Samuel Wood, will you be ſo good to come and ſit in our houſe, ſhe ſaid ſhe had ſent to the overſeer, and there was nobody come; Samuel Wood ſaid, he had not had his ſupper, and another thing, ſays he, I do not chooſe it; I was ſitting in Samuel Wood's corner, and I got up, and William Walker came in after his wife, and he ſaid, Nan, what do you mean by leaving me to myſelf? ſays he, you be not afraid of a man, you never uſed to be afraid of a man.

What anſwer did ſhe make to that?—She ſaid, no; he then ſaid, come along and go to bed; ſo I got up, and ſaid, neighbour, how do you do; and he ſaid the ſame to me, how do you do; then ſhe aſked me to go along with them into their houſe.

He being preſent?——Yes, he ſaid come along and go to bed, let any body come, I do not care who comes; ſo I went along with them.

Is that all he ſaid at that time?—Yes; when we came to their houſe, there was another woman at the door, and we went and followed Walker and his wife in doors.

Did any thing paſs between that other woman and them before you went in?——As ſoon as we were in, he locked one door and faſtened the other, and he ſaid, ſays he, I want to ſettle affairs with my wife, and ſhe will not reſolve me; ſhe ſaid ſhe would reſolve him any thing that lay in her power.

Do you recollect the very words that ſhe ſaid?—Yes, them were the very words.

Cannot you tell it me in the manner ſhe ſpoke it?——She ſaid ſhe would reſolve him any thing that lay in her power.

I want you to put yourſelf in her place, and tell me the words that ſhe ſaid?——I do now; ſhe ſaid ſhe would reſolve any thing that he aſked her.

But you know ſhe muſt have ſaid, I will reſolve you?——Yes, ſhe ſaid, I will reſolve you as far as lays in my power.

Did ſhe ſay huſband, or my dear, or any expreſſion of that kind?—No, ſhe did not; ſo he wanted to go to bed, and ſhe took the coals up, and he went to bed, and ſhe went up ſtairs with him, and warmed his bed, I believe.

Leaving you and the woman below?—Yes, ſhe came down again when he was in bed, and told this other woman and us, that how he had drawn his knife upon her ſix weeks ago in bed, before that time, and on the Wedneſday night before that in bed.

That is the laſt Wedneſday night you mean before you was there?——Yes, and he had drawn his knife on her on the Thurſday morning following, and ſaid he would give her time to ſay her prayers, and then he would kill her; then Samuel Woods came to the ſame houſe.

Was that all that ſhe ſaid at that time?——Yes.

Did not ſhe ſay how it happened he did not kill her?——No.

Did not you aſk her how ſhe ſaved herſelf?——No.

Did not you aſk her what they had quarrelled about?——No, I aſked her no queſtions at all concerning the affair ſhe told me about.

Had you no curioſity to know what ſhould make the man draw his knife upon the woman?——No; then Samuel Woods came, and ſhe aſked him if he would be ſo good to go down to the overſeers, becauſe they had promiſed her that they would ſend ſomebody, and they had not ſent any body to put in the houſe.

For what?——Becauſe ſhe was afraid to be in the houſe when there was nobody elſe in the houſe but they and the children.

Why was ſhe afraid to be in the houſe, did ſhe ſay?—I cannot tell, ſhe did not reſolve me any thing about that.

Why did ſhe ſend to the overſeers, why did not ſhe ſend to the conſtable to come and take him away, if he drew his knife upon her?——That I cannot tell any thing at all about; ſo Samuel Wood he went to one overſeer, and he was not at home, then he went to the other, and he ſaw one of them, I cannot tell which, and came back, and brought word, that if ſhe could get any body to be in the houſe, they would ſatisfy them; then ſhe went and aſked Joſeph Branch if he would be ſo good to come and be in her houſe, and he came, and was in the houſe along with me.

What became of the other woman?——She went home.

When did ſhe go home?—I cannot ſay juſtly how long ſhe ſtaid, ſhe went juſt as the woman went to bed.

Then the woman went to bed you ſay?—Yes, and in about two hours and a half after this, Walker came down ſtairs in his ſhirt, and ſaid, what, my lads! to the other man and me; ſo I ſaid, what do you come down ſtairs without your clothes for; he never ſpoke no more, he went up ſtairs again, and in about two hours and a half after this, as nigh as I can gueſs, he ſays to his wife, Nan, who is to pay theſe two men?

Did not you drop in ſleep in all this time?——No.

Did you ſit talking to one another, or what?——I cannot ſay that we did not ſpeak to one another, but we heard every word that was ſaid; ſhe ſaid, do not make yourſelf uneaſy, they will be paid I warrant you; ſo Walker ſays to his wife, ſays he, Nan, you muſt ſatisfy them; ſays ſhe, do not make yourſelf uneaſy, go to ſleep if you can, you have not had any a good while; Mr. Morton will ſatisfy them; and in about a minute or two before the accident happened, he ſays, Nan, where is the pot?

How long did they lay after this before he ſaid that?——About two hours.

What two hours more?—Yes, and ſhe ſaid, ſhall I reach it you, and he ſaid no, and there was not another word more ſpoke, till ſhe began ſcreaming out, and from the time ſhe began ſcreaming out, they were down ſtairs in a very ſhort time, and this other man and I went to the ſtairs foot, and they both came down directly upon us, ſo I laid hold of his left hand, and ſaid, Walker, what are you at, what is the matter with you? he never ſpoke, and when we releaſed him from her, ſhe dropped all along upon the ground.

How was he holding her then?—With his arm round her neck that I laid hold on, ſo ſhe dropped, and he ſtamped his left foot on her.

Deſcribe the manner of his ſtamping his left foot upon her?——So, (a ſort of ſtamp) then ſhe got up and run out of doors, and tumbled down on the left hand ſide of the door, and he ran out after her, and I had hold of his left arm, and he pulled me along after him, then ſhe got up.

Did he ſpeak to her, or do any thing to her out of doors before ſhe got up?——No, he did not touch her then as I ſaw, ſhe got up and fell down again; there is a hurdle on the right hand ſide of the door, and Joſeph Branch went away to call the conſtable, and call aſſiſtance; the priſoner went in doors, and I ſtood between the door place and the woman.

So you did not follow him in?——No.

Did you obſerve whether he had any thing at any part of that time in his right hand?——No, Sir, the priſoner went in and came back again to the door, and I ſaid, Walker, do not come nigh your wife no more, you have killed your wife, look at the blood.

Did you ſee any blood?——Yes.

The woman was bleeding?—Yes.

Could you obſerve from what part the blood came?——No, not at that time; he ſaid, ſays he, I meant to kill her, now I am eaſy, now I ſhall be hanged, and I wiſh to die; he ſaid, do not let her lay there, bring her in doors, ſo I had her in.

How did you carry her in, or did ſhe get up and walk in?——No, I picked her up and carried her in, ſhe never ſpoke, then I ſet her down upon the ground in the houſe.

Where was he then?—In the houſe.

Did he ſpeak to her?—No, not then.

Did ſhe ſpeak to him?——No, ſo I ſtood againſt her till ſuch time as ſomebody came.

And in that time ſhe neither ſpoke to him nor he to her?——No, Sir, not in that time.

Was he ſitting or ſtanding?——He was walking about the houſe, he went up ſtairs and down again, I cannot ſay how many times.

Was he dreſſed or undreſſed?—He fetched his clothes down, ſome of them at a time, and dreſſed himſelf down in the houſe; the firſt perſon that came in afterwards was Martha Branch, and I aſked her to come and ſtand againſt the woman as I was, while I lighted a candle.

About what o'clock might this be?——Between two and three, I believe.

Was it a moon-light night or dark?——Very light, the moon ſhone, I lighted a candle, and the priſoner came and took it out of my hand, and went into a place where the candles were hanging, and burnt another off, and lighted that.

What did he do with it when he had lighted it?——He went and looked about the houſe, and looked in the drawers for ſomething, I cannot ſay what.

Did he give you the other candle?——I am not ſure whether I took it out of his hand, or whether he hung it up ſomewhere.

Did you obſerve whether he took any thing out of the drawers?——Yes, a handkerchief and keys, and ſuch as that, and put into his pocket.

Did he ſay any thing when he had lighted the candle, or when he was looking into the drawers?—He walked about the houſe, and came and looked into his wife's face as ſhe ſat on the ground, and, ſays he, Nan, what beeſt dead? he ſaid, ſays he, I told thee how I would ſerve thee, but thee wouldſt not be ruled; ſays he, you naſty dirty huſſy, and he called her in that manner, ſays he, you meant to kill me, now I believe I have killed you.

Was ſhe able to ſpeak?——Yes.

What did ſhe ſay?——She made no anſwer, but in two or three minutes after, ſhe ſaid, O Lord have mercy upon me! where be I a going, what is the matter with my head, what have I done? and ſhe never ſpoke any more.

She made no anſwer then to what he ſaid about her trying to kill him?——No, Sir, I never heard any anſwer to that, that was the laſt that ſhe ſaid.

When ſhe ſaid that, did he ſay any thing?—No, he was not by her then.

How long was it after he had called her naſty dirty huſſy, and ſaid you meant to kill me?—It might not be above three or four minutes, I be not ſure.

Then he had turned from her before ſhe ſaid this?—Yes.

She made no anſwer at all to him?—No.

Where was he when ſhe ſaid this?—He might be about the houſe looking after his things, his handkerchief he pulled out of the drawers, and keys and things.

He did not offer to go away?——No.

He did not ſay any thing to you, or threaten you for being there?——No, Sir.

He ſaid nothing uncivil to you?——No, Sir, nor to nobody as I heard.

What happened after ſhe ſaid this, what have I done?——Then another perſon and I lifted her up in a chair, and ſhe lived about three quarters of an hour from the accident.

Where was he when ſhe died?——In the ſame room.

Was you in the room when ſhe died?—Yes.

Did you tell him ſhe was dead?——Yes.

What did he ſay?——He aſked for ſomewhat himſelf to tie her jaw up, I gave him ſomething, and he lapped it round and tied it up; ſo then the conſtable came, either after that, or a little before, and a great many people, then he was confined and taken care of.

At the time the conſtable came, what did he ſay then?——I cannot tell what he ſaid then.

Did he ſay nothing?——I cannot ſay as he did not, but I cannot recollect what he ſaid.

Did you ſee any alteration in him when the conſtable came?——No, he ſaid he would not give them any trouble, let them do juſt what they would.

What did they do with him, did they lay hold of him?——Yes.

Did they handcuff him?——Yes.

Did he ſubmit quietly to that?——Yes.

At the time they were handcuffing him, do you recollect whether he ſaid any thing?——No, Sir, only that they might do juſt what they pleaſed with him, he would interrupt nobody.

Then they had him up to the conſtable's houſe?——Yes.

Did any thing paſs there?——I cannot ſay that nothing paſſed, but I did not take notice of any thing.

How long did you ſtay with him at the conſtable's houſe?——From four o'clock till about eight or nine.

Was there any refreſhment had at that time?——Some victuals and ſome drink.

What time was that had?——About five.

At the conſtable's houſe?——Yes.

You had none at Walker's houſe, had you?——No, Sir.

Did the priſoner eat and drink with you?—Yes, Sir, he eat and drank very hearty.

Did he talk with you?——Yes, Sir, he might talk, but I cannot ſay I knew any thing what he ſpoke.

It was nothing particular or extraordinary?—Not as I heard.

Did he talk like the reſt of the people?——He might talk, but I did not take notice of any thing he ſaid.

Nor he did nothing extraordinary?——No.

He eat and drank like other people?——Yes.

And he behaved orderly?——Yes.

Were his handcuffs taken off when he eat?——No.

Did he appear to you, during all this time, to be ſober?——Yes.

When you firſt ſaw him that evening?—Yes.

Had you any ſtrong liquors?—No, only a little ale and bread and cheeſe.

How much might he drink?——I cannot tell, he drank ſeveral times, as much as the reſt.

How much was drank amongſt you all?——I cannot ſay.

How much do you apprehend you drank to your own ſhare?——I cannot tell.

Were you all ſober?—Yes, I ſtaid there till eight o'clock, and then he was taken to Uxbridge.

Who was he taken to there?——Mr. Fellows.

Did you go along with him to Uxbridge?——Yes.

What became of him after he went to Uxbridge?—Then he was brought back up to the conſtable's houſe, and there kept.

How long was he kept there?——Till the Tueſday morning following.

What became of him then?——Then he was brought to London.

Did you ſee him at the conſtable's houſe after he returned from Uxbridge?——Yes, Sir, I was with him all night, the Sunday night, and the Monday following.

How did he behave?——Very well.

Was he very quiet and orderly?——Very quiet, and did not offer to interrupt any body or any thing.

Did he talk to you much?——No, Sir, the landlord of the houſe fetched him a bed down ſtairs, and he laid down upon it, and ſlept, as far as I know, all night, only in the middle of the night he wanted to get up.

Did he talk at all about what had happened?—No, Sir, not in the night.

Well, in the next day?—Yes, Sir, people aſked him how he did, and he anſwered to them and ſaid, not half bad enough.

What did he mean by that?—I cannot tell.

Did you aſk him what he meant by it?No.

Did any body talk to him about what he had done?——Yes, a great many people, they aſked him if he was not ſorry for what he had done, and he would not ſpeak to a great many.

Did you hear him anſwer any body to that queſtion?—No, Sir, I cannot ſay that I did.

Did you ever hear him ſay, in anſwer to that, whether he was or was not ſorry for what he had done?——No, Sir.

How long had you known the man before this thing happened?——About two years.

Have you been often in his company?—Yes, ſeveral times, I cannot ſay how many.

At his houſe?—Yes, ſeveral times.

What aged woman was his wife?—I cannot tell, I have not been in the place above four years.

How did they live together?—They lived together very well, as far as I know.

Did they ſeem to live in friendſhip with each other?——Yes, Sir, as far as ever I ſaw.

You know it is eaſy, if you was often at his houſe, to ſee whether either of them was of a quarrelſome temper, or whether they quarrelled with each other, or were upon good terms?——I never ſaw them when I was in the houſe, but I have heard her cry out many times when I was in my own houſe, I lived next door to him till within a fortnight.

What ſort of cries?—Cry out, O Lord, her head, or her arms, or her ſhoulders, or ſuch a matter as that.

Did you live nearer than Branch?—Yes, their chimney-piece and mine were cloſe together, and the two doors were not above three yards apart.

Then you was near enough to hear a great deal that paſſed between theſe people when you was not in their houſe; did they live in bad terms, quarrelling, or in friendſhip together?—Whenever I was in their houſe I never heard them have a word amiſs.

I am not aſking you that you know, I aſk you when you was not in the houſe?—I never heard any words paſs, only ſhe would cry out.

Did you hear nothing before that that led to it?——No.

What did ſhe complain of?——I never heard her ſay.

But at the time that ſhe cried out, could not you underſtand from her expreſſions what it was ſhe was complaining of?—No, Sir, not at all, ſhe was a woman that was very ſtill woman, and hardly ever went to any body's houſe but her own, as far as I know.

Kept company with nobody, I ſuppoſe?—Nobody at all, as far as I know.

Did ſhe take care of her children?—Yes, Sir, as much as any woman did, for all that ever I ſaw or knew.

Was their houſe well taken care of and kept clean?—Yes, Sir, as clean as moſt poor people's houſes are.

Did ſhe ſeem an induſtrious ſober woman?—Yes, no woman more ſo, I believe, as far as I know.

Are you a married man or a ſingle man?——A married man.

Your wife lived the next door?—Yes.

How many children have you?—One.

How long have you been married?—Little better than twelve months.

Was he a ſober man?—Yes, Sir, a very ſober man, as far as ever I heard, any further than having a pint of beer and away.

What tempered man was he?——I cannot ſay what his temper was.

Was he a quarrelſome man?——I never knew nor ſaw any ſuch thing.

Cannot you tell whether he was a good tempered man?—No, Sir, I cannot indeed.

Have you any notion what it was he took amiſs of his wife?—No, Sir.

You cannot gueſs what it was?——No, Sir.

Had any thing paſſed before this happened that could give you any gueſs what it was he took ſo ill of his wife?—No, Sir, I know nothing at all of it any further.

How long before this happened had you ſeen him?—This was the Thurſday night, I had not ſeen him ſince the Saturday night before.

Had you ſpent any time with him?—No further than we ſpoke together.

How long before this accident happened was it that you heard her cry out of her head or her ſhoulders?——It might be a quarter of a year, or it might be more, or it might be leſs.

Where did you ſee him the Saturday night before?—At his own door.

Did you ſpeak to him?—Yes.

Did he appear to you to be in health then?——Yes, Sir, as well as ever he was, as far as I ſaw.

You took no notice of any thing extraordinary about him?—No, Sir, not at all.

Had he ever talked at any time that you have obſerved, in any thing of a wild way?—No, Sir, I never heard him talk no other ways than as another man does.

Then by your account I do not find that you had any ſuſpicion that he was not in his right mind?—No, Sir, I had no ſuſpicion as any thing was the matter with him not before the accident was.

It is wonderful to me, my friend, when the woman talked of ſending for the overſeer, to deſire that he would ſend ſomebody to be with them, as you know they had lived upon good terms, and had not quarrelled, that you did not aſk the cauſe?—No, Sir, I could not think any thing about it.

What could you ſuppoſe the overſeer ſhould be applied to for?——God knows, Sir, I do not know.

They did not want money?—I cannot tell.

Then according to your account you had no ſuſpicion that the man was out of his mind?——No, Sir.

You had never ſeen any thing to lead you to ſuppoſe ſo?—No, Sir, nothing at all.

Court to Jury. Does any thing occur to the Jury, I ſhould be glad to have all poſſible aſſiſtance in this caſe, it is one of the moſt extraordinary caſes I ever met with.

Jury. Did you go out of friendſhip or did you expect to be paid?——The overſeer ſent word down by Samuel Wood, if ſhe could get any body to ſit up they would ſatisfy them, I went out of good nature into the houſe for the woman, I did not know what was the matter.

Mr. Recorder. What is the name of the overſeer?——Mr. Morton.

Is he here?——I cannot tell.

Court. The coroner ſeems to have had no notion what the true queſtion was, his inqueſt was wilful murder, therefore he has not bound over the overſeer.

EDWARD TROMPER ſworn.

I was conſtable at that time; on the 5th of March, between two and three in the morning, I was called up.

You know nothing of it earlier than that?——On the Monday before this happened, the woman, Walker's wife, ſpoke to me as I was going by the door, the miſchief happened on the Friday, and ſhe deſired me to come over and ſpeak to her huſband, ſhe ſaid, ſhe did not know what was the matter with him, and I came over and aſked him, ſays I, Walker, what is the matter with you, and he replied, I do not know, I am very much troubled, but I do not know what is the reaſon of it; I aſked him, if he did not know what troubled him? and he ſaid, no, he had never done any body harm, and he did not know what was the reaſon of it; I told him to go to work, and ſee if he would not be better, and I afterwards ſaw him and his wife go together.

Where?——They ſet out I imagined to go to work, I ſaw his wife return in about half an hour afterwards without him, and I aſked her if he was gone to work, and ſhe ſaid, yes; and I never heard any more of them till the morning I was called up, which was on 5th of March, between two and three o'clock, I was in bed, and I was called up, I came to the window, and Joſeph Branch called me, and I aſked him what was the matter, and he replied get up directly, Walker has killed his wife, and I got up immediately, and went to the priſoner's houſe, and his wife was ſitting in a chair bleeding, ſupported by Ann Prieſt, and I ſaid to the priſoner, Walker, what have you done? you have killed your wife, and the priſoner replied, ſhe deſerved it, ſhe has uſed me ill, I am not ſorry for it, now I ſhall be hanged, but I do not mind that; he had a candle in his hand looking about the houſe, lifting the things up about the houſe, and a woman that was there, (Martha Branch) ſaid, here is a knife, upon which I turned round and took it out of her hand, and it was open, and a little matter bloody.

A claſpknife open and a little bloody?–Yes, the deceaſed was not dead at that time, and I ran home for a horſe to go for a ſurgeon, and while I was getting that and returning, the deceaſed was dead; I immediately got aſſiſtance and ſecured the priſoner, and took him up to the other conſtable's houſe, and kept him there till about eight o'clock in the morning; then we took him to Uxbridge, to Mr. Fellows's, and he ſaid, he could not commit him till the Coróner's inquiſition, the other conſtable took him Uxbridge, and I went for the Coroner, he was not at home, but he came on the Monday following, the 8th of March, and he took the inquiſition, I was examined there and bound over, I took the priſoner to Newgate on the Tueſday morning.

Did any thing paſs between you and him at any time that was remarkable?—When I ſeized him with another man, he ſaid, I will not hurt you, you may do what you pleaſe; I had not the handcuffs with me, but I got a cord and pinioned his hands, and I went home for the handcuffs.

Did you hear him ſay any thing about it afterwards?—Not that day, but the day I was going to Uxbridge with him, I aſked him if the handcuffs pinched his hands, and he replied, it is no matter about my hands, if they were pulled off, after what I have done; I heard no more, I went down from Uxbridge to the Coroner's, I went to ſee him once at the other conſtable's houſe, and told him to think of his latter end, and he aſked me for a book that was down at his houſe, I aſked him what book it was, and he ſaid it was The Sincere Word of God; I went down to his houſe, and found the book, and carried it to him, and he thanked me; the other conſtable brought him in the chaiſe to Newgate.

Had you ſeen him often before this thing happened?——Yes, as paſſing by him; I ſaw him at work about a fortnight before.

How was he then?——He ſeemed very well.

When the thing happened, did not that converſation that the wife had with you before, come into your mind?——Yes, at that time it did, but I never thought of that converſation till the accident happened.

Did you mention that converſation to any of the people at the time?——No, I do not remember that I did.

Did you ſee Morton the overſeer?—No, my Lord, I do not remember that I did.

Did you mention to any body, when you came to take him into cuſtody, that there had been that ſort of converſation a week before?——I do not remember that I did.

Did you intimate to any body your ſuſpicion, that the man was not in his right mind?——No.

The man behaved quiet and orderly that Monday, when he talked to you of being troubled in mind?—Yes, he anſwered very properly.

How did he look?—He looked very well, but rather diſturbed that ſomething troubled him.

Did you take notice of his countenance, his eyes, whether there was any wildneſs?—I did not take notice that there was any wildneſs.

Did he look paler than ordinary, or redder than ordinary?—No, my Lord, much the ſame.

Have you judgment enough to know when a man has a fever?—No, my Lord.

I ſuppoſe you have had one yourſelf?—A very ſlight one, I never had much of a fever.

Or your family; or agues, or any thing of that ſort?——I had the ague once, but it is a great many years ago.

You did not happen to take hold of the man's hand?——No.

If it had happened to you to have thought of calling upon the overſeer, and ſent an apothecary to this man, probably the loſing of a little blood, and a little medicine would have ſaved all this?——Yes, my Lord, but I did not think that there was any thing, but ſomewhat had troubled him; I did not know whether it was in his family, nor he did not ſay what.

Did you obſerve any coolneſs between him and his wife?——No, my Lord, they ſeemed very agreeable.

Jury. During the time that you had the priſoner in your cuſtody, did he ſhew any marks of inſanity?—No, I was very little with him.

Court. There is ſomething a little ambiguous in that, he might not ſhew marks of violent inſanity, yet there might be a great deal more to be collected from that, than this man could obſerve; they are apt to think no man inſane that does not do outrageous things; but we muſt collect his inſanity from the facts—his mind ſeems to have turned to one object.

SAMUEL WOODS ſworn.

I am a neighbour, I lived about twenty yards from the priſoner.

How long have you known him?——Known him, Sir! I cannot ſay how long, I believe as much as eleven or twelve years, ever ſince he has been in the country.

What do you know of the fact?—I was called up on Friday the 5th of March, and when I got up, I found his wife bleeding in the houſe, with her head laying lolling againſt a woman's breaſt, and the priſoner, with a candle, ſearching about the houſe.

Could you diſcover what he was ſearching for?—He was looking about, as if he had loſt ſomewhat, and he went out of the houſe into the yard, with the candle in his hand.

Can you tell whether the knife had been found at that time?——I cannot my Lord, I went out into the yard with him, I ſays to him, Walker, what are you ſearching after, and he made me anſwer, what he could not find; then from that I went down to the overſeer, Mr. Morton, to call him to go to ſee for ſome aſſiſtance for the woman, and he ſent me to the governor of the workhouſe, which is one John Round, and coming back down to this Mr. Walker's houſe, I met Mr. Tromper the conſtable coming down on horſeback; I went down to the priſoner's houſe, and ſaw ſhe was nigh upon death, and the governor of the workhouſe, or Mr. Tromper, I cannot be ſure which, ſaid, that the church-warden ſhould be there, I aſked for a horſe, and I would go and fetch him, and I went on Mr. Tromper's horſe to the church-warden and called him up between three and four, and told him what had happened, and he told me to ſecure the man, and he would come up in the morning; when I returned from there I found the woman was dead, and carried up ſtairs, and the priſoner was taken care of, and carried to the King's Arms; when they took him away, the officer took an inventory of the goods, and aſked me to go to ſee for ſome of the deceaſed's friends, and I went to her brother, and he came with me up to the King's Arms, and went into a room where William Walker was; this was on Friday morning after the accident happened.

What did her brother ſay to him?——I do not know, Sir, there was very little diſcourſe, the man ſeemed to cry mightily, they both cried one againſt the other, Walker and his wife's brother; I did not remember her brother ſaid any thing, I ſat by him, and I ſaid, Walker, are not you ſorry for what you have done? you have taken your wife's life away, and your own will be taken away, and your two children will be left deſtitute to the world; he cried very much, but made no anſwer.

You had ſeen ſomething of the woman before the accident happened?——Yes.

What time was that?——She came to me on the Thurſday evening, as nigh as I can gueſs, about ſeven, to my own houſe, and ſays, Mr. Wood, I ſhould be glad if you would go in doors and ſit along with me, for my huſband wants to go to bed, and ſhut up the doors, and I am afraid to go with him; ſhe ſaid Mr. Morton had promiſed to ſend ſomebody to be with her that night, but they were not come, I ſaid I had not had my ſupper yet, and another thing, ſays I, I really do not chuſe it, for to tell you the truth, I am afraid, and then the priſoner Walker came into my houſe after his wife.

That was all that paſſed till the priſoner came in?——Yes, when he came in, he ſays, Nan, what do you mean by ſerving me in this form, you ſeem to be afraid of a man, you did not uſe to be; and he made her anſwer again, that he would not hurt her.

What did ſhe ſay to him?——I do not remember ſhe made any anſwer to him, and I ſaid, Walker, if you hurt your wife you hurt yourſelf, and I entreated him to ſit down and make himſelf eaſy, but he was not willing; and he ſaid to me, I want her at home, I have got ſome buſineſs to ſettle with her; ſo I ſays to this Jones that was in my houſe, go along with them, and I will come to you as ſoon as I have had my ſupper; when I had had my ſupper, I went, and when I came to the houſe the ſtreet door was ſhut faſt, but Jones or ſomebody let me in, I cannot ſay which; when I came in, they told me he was gone to bed, and I went to the foot of the ſtairs and called to him, and ſaid, Walker, what be you in bed, and he ſaid, yes; then I went down to the overſeer, Mr. Morton.

How came you to go to the overſeer, who ſent you?—The woman told me that ſhe had been to him, and he had promiſed her to ſend ſomebody to her; he was not at home, then I went to the governor of the workhouſe, to aſk him if he had ſeen Mr. Morton, or had got any body to be along with Mrs. Walker; he ſaid he did not know that he had; Mr. Morton had been about the village to try to get ſomebody to ſit up with him in the houſe, and that he would ſatisfy any body that would ſit up with him; then from there I went back to the priſoner's houſe, and the woman met me at the door, and aſked me if I had done any thing for her, that was, whether I had got any grant for any body to be with her that night; I told her, yes; and ſhe ſays to me, I wiſh you would ſit up with Francis Jones, and I made anſwer, I had rather not, I did not chuſe it, ſo I did not ſtay but a very little while after in the houſe; and ſoon after I went home, Joſeph Branch came and told me he was going to ſit up; I heard no more till morning, I was called up about two o'clock.

Had the woman ever aſked you before to come and ſit up in the houſe?——No, my Lord, ſhe never did.

What was you to ſit up for?—I do not know, there was ſomewhat I imagined.

What did you underſtand to be the matter?——It ſeemed from what I thought, I cannot ſay any further, that this man muſt certainly have made ſome attempt to do ſomething that he ſhould not do with this woman, or elſe ſhe would not be afraid to be with him by herſelf.

If he had made any attempt upon her, the conſtable ſhould have been ſent for rather than the overſeer, and ſhe ſhould not have been left in the houſe along with him.——That would certainly have been the right way; I was with Walker on the Tueſday before the accident, I heard he was not well, and I went to his houſe, when I came into his houſe, there was nobody but a young lad beſides himſelf, and I aſked him how he did, and he ſaid he was very poorly, that he was in a very poor way; and I aſked him what was the matter, and he ſaid he could give me no account; and he went about the houſe trembling, the man ſeemed in a great flurry in his behaviour, as far as I could ſee, he walked backward and forwards; I aſked him the reaſon, he ſaid he was in a great flutter, and it came upon him at times, and then he got better when the fluttering went off, and he cried, and told me that he ſhould be hanged, and that the neighbours ſaid he bewitched people, and ſo he went on in that form in that diſcourſe; and I told him there was no ſuch thing, he muſt not fill himſelf up with ſuch fancies, and he cried, and ſaid that he had never done nobody no harm, and his wife was to have him away in a cart, and he was to be hanged; I tried to perſuade him off of any thing of the kind of ſuch nonſenſical talk; his wife was gone to Mr. Morton's, I believe, at that time, and he ſeemed to be in a great flurry becauſe his wife was not in the way; and he aſked me if I would go and fetch his wife, I told him to make himſelf eaſy, ſhe would not be long before ſhe was back again, and he ſtill ſeemed to be very uneaſy; at laſt I ſaid, well, Mr. Walker, if you are willing, I will go and ſee for your wife, and I went out into the yard which comes into the ſtreet, and I ſaw her coming down the ſtreet, and I went and told him ſhe was coming, and ſhe came in while I was there, into the houſe, with a man with her, which ſhe had been up to get to be with him that night.

What man was that?——His name was William Provender.

What time of the day or night was this?—It might be, as nigh as I can gueſs, between eight or nine o'clock at night; then I went home.

Did he ſpeak to her when ſhe came home?—I do not recollect that he did.

Becauſe you have told us he was uneaſy and impatient becauſe ſhe was not at home; did not he aſk her where ſhe had been, or what the man was brought for?—To the beſt of my knowledge he never ſpoke at all; then I went away.

Can you tell whether any body had ſat up with them before that night?——No, I do not believe any body had.

Did any body on the Wedneſday night?——I believe nobody, only that night and the Thurſday night, I believe nobody ſat up on the Wedneſday night.

Was this the firſt time you ever knew of the man's being ill?—Yes.

Before that time, how did he and his wife live together?—I never lived nigh enough to know any thing of their affairs in their living way.

What ſort of a man was he, was he a quiet man?—As nigh as ever I knew in my life, I never knew any miſbehaviour of the man.

What character did ſhe bear?—As good a character as any woman, a quiet, ſteady, harmleſs woman.

And you do not know of any thing that ſhould have occaſioned any unhappineſs between them, do you?—None at all, my Lord.

Did he ever drop any thing of being jealous of her?——I never heard any thing of that in my life.

Do you know any thing more?——No.

Was you examined by the coroner?—No.

Jury. When you was applied to ſit up, you ſay you refuſed becauſe you was afraid, what was you afraid of?—I tell you, Sir, I had been with him on the Tueſday before, and I ſaw him run on talking a heap of ſtuff, and I thought that he ſeemed like a man not fit for me to be with; and another thing, I knew he was a ſtrong powerful man.

Court. That is ſpeaking more ſatisfactorily to you, Gentlemen, than if he had ſaid he was mad.

ANN PRIEST ſworn.

I live near the priſoner.

How near?—In the neighbourhood, not very near.

Did you uſe to be much at Walker's houſe?—Very little.

What do you know then of this unhappy affair?—I heard the murder cried out in the morning, and I got up and run down, and ſhe was ſat in doors, and Martha Branch was by her, and Jones was lighting the candle, and the priſoner came down ſtairs in his ſhirt and his night-cap, and I ſaid to him, O Walker! you wicked man, to go to lay your revenge upon your poor wife! he ſaid he ſerved her right, ſhe ought to die; he ſaid, if he had not killed her, ſhe would him; then he went up ſtairs, and came and brought his breeches down, and put them on, and lighted a candle, and went about ſearching the houſe.

For what?——I did not know for what; one aſked him and another aſked him, and he told them he did not know for what, for that he could not find, he was out of doors then, and as he came in doors, he ſaid, damn her, ſhe had ſwallowed it; and as he was going up ſtairs he ſays, damn the knife, where is it gone, I cannot find it; then he went up ſtairs and dreſſed himſelf.

Above or below?——Some above, and ſome below; then I aſked Francis Jones to go up and fetch me ſomething to put on her ſhoulders, as ſhe was in her ſhift; then we lifted her up in a chair, I and two men, and then ſhe died; Martha Branch and I was with her four nights in the houſe after ſhe was dead.

Did you ſee any thing of the knife?—I ſaw it in Mr. Tromper's hands.

Was it found before he ſaid damn the knife, I do not know where it is?—No, it was not picked up then.

Who picked it up?—Martha Branch, I ſaw the man the night before in his own houſe, I went in for a bit of fire.

Was you at Wood's?—No.

Who was there at the time you was there?——They were going to ſupper.

Did they go to ſupper while you was there?—No, ſhe was going to fry him ſome mutton chops.

You did not ſtay then?—No.

Did you take notice of any thing that paſſed between them at that time?——No, there was no words between them at that time.

When before?—None that I heard of.

Had you ever heard any thing of his being ill?—No.

There was nobody in the houſe with him and her, at that time?—No, and he had got the little girl upon his knee.

I ſuppoſe you ſaw the body after the death?—Yes, I was there from that morning between two and three o'clock, till ſhe was buried.

Where was the wound?—He had ſtabbed her in three places on the ſtomach, and one on the ſide.

There were four ſtabs, were there?—Yes, when we came to ſtrip her.

Did it appear that blood had come from all of them?——Yes, a little matter from all, but where the knife went in about three inches the blood poured from there, but a little from the other.

Which was the deepeſt wound?—This in the middle.

Was there any ſurgeon ſent for?—Yes, at the time the Jury ſat.

Is there any ſurgeon here?—Not that I know of.

When the Jury ſat, did you ſee the ſurgeon probe the wound?——Yes.

How deep was it?——It went in about three inches.

MARTHA BRANCH ſworn.

How near do you live to theſe people?—The next door.

Are you the wife of Joſeph Branch?—Yes.

What do you know of this?—Between two and three in the morning, Joſeph Branch was crying out, murder! and I put on my coat and my gown, and went to their aſſiſtance immediately, and when I came into the houſe, ſhe ſat down on her backſide a bleeding.

Sitting upon the ground?—Yes, in nothing but her ſhift, and that was tore all down the back, and hanging by her two arms, and her cap off, and her hair all down her back, and her cap hanging by one pin, juſt at the top of her head, and Jones had hold of her, and I ſaid, where is the candle; he ſaid, if you will lay hold of her, I will light one; I helped her up, and the priſoner came down ſtairs in his ſhirt and his night-cap, and he called her a naſty whore, and a naſty jade, and he ſays, what did you do with theſe two men in the houſe; ſays he, could not we have ſlept in the houſe as we have done, by ourſelves.

Did ſhe make any anſwer?—Yes.

What did ſhe ſay?—She ſaid, O my poor head, Lord have mercy upon me, what have I done, and where am I a going; then the priſoner gave Jones a petticoat down ſtairs, and I put it over her ſhoulders, then we took her up and ſet her in a chair, then I went up town to call the overſeer and the other conſtable, and then I ſaw no more.

Did not you ſee ſomething of the knife?—Yes, that was before we took her up.

Tell me how that was?——The other woman, Ann Prieſt, picked the knife up in the houſe, and it was bloody, and I took my apron, and was going to wipe it, and Mr. Tromper the conſtable took it.

Whereabouts did ſhe pick it up?—By the ſcreen in the houſe.

Is that near the ſtairs?—About a couple of yards from the ſtairs.

Right forwards from the ſtairs?—On the left hand from the ſtairs.

Was it in ſuch a place, that if it had fallen on the ſtairs, it might have rolled there?—No, it was as if it had been thrown out from a perſon's hand.

You lived very near theſe people?—Yes, I never heard any diſpute between them in my life, ſhe was as extraordinary a good ſort of a woman as ever was in the world I believe.

What ſort of a tempered man was he?—I cannot ſay, I never had no great talkings with him, I never heard him in a paſſion in my life.

Not a quarrelſome man?—No Sir, not that I ever heard.

You ſaid you ſaw him on the Thurſday morning?—I ſaw him come home, and he went in doors.

Did any body ſit up on the Tueſday night?—Yes, William Provender.

How came he to ſit up?—I do not know Sir, I did not know that he ſet up till ſhe told me.

Did ſhe tell you the reaſon?—No, ſhe did not tell me, ſhe ſaid ſhe was rather fearful of being in the houſe by herſelf.

Why, what was ſhe afraid of?—She did not tell me.

Did not you aſk her?—No Sir, I did not aſk her.

Do you know whether he had uſed her ill?—She told me that he had uſed her ill of the Wedneſday night, I went in of the Thurſday morning after a bit of fire.

Did ſhe deſcribe in what manner?——Yes, ſhe ſaid he got up an end in his bed about twelve on the Wedneſday night, and he pulled his knife out of his pocket, and he opened it, and he took hold of her arm, and pulled her up an end in her bed, and ſaid, damn you, you bitch, I will give you time to ſay your prayers; then I never heard any more of them till the morning that he had killed her.

Did not you tell her then, that he was mad?—No Sir, I did not think he was mad, I never ſaw him any ways mad, he ſpoke as well as any man in the world, and was digging in the garden the day before he killed her in the night.

Did not you aſk her what ſhe had done to offend him?—No Sir, ſhe ſaid he was jealous of her.

Did ſhe ſay how long he had been jealous of her?—No, ſhe did not tell me how long.

You did not ſee any thing in her behaviour, that gave you any reaſon to ſuppoſe he had cauſe to be jealous of her?—No, Sir, nor nobody elſe in the neighbourhood, ſhe was as ſtill and quiet a woman as ever was in the world, and always kept herſelf vaſtly cloſe.

Have you any reaſon to know how long he had been jealous of her, had ſhe ever talked to you of his being jealous of her?—No Sir, nor never made any complaint before, as I heard, to any body.

Court to Jones. Do you know any thing of the circumſtance of a cat being killed?—I do not know Sir, ſhe ſaid as how he had killed the cat.

When was that?——On the Thurſday night.

What did ſhe ſay?——She ſaid he had killed the cat, and ſhe had not ſeen the cat, ſhe ſaid he went out of doors with his axe, and followed her into another old houſe, and had killed the cat.

When did ſhe tell you that?—On the Thurſday night, the 4th of March.

How came the converſation to be about the cat?—On the Thurſday morning ſhe ſaid he drew his knife upon her, and then ſhe ſaid he went out of doors, and took his axe, and followed the cat into this old houſe.

Where did ſhe ſay he had drawn his knife upon her?—On the Thurſday morning in the houſe.

Court. Let the priſoner ſtand up if he is able.—Is Morton here?—No, my Lord, I believe not.

Who is the other pariſh officer?—James Hunt was the overſeer.

Who was to manage the proſecution?—I do not know.

Who paid for the indictment?—One of the pariſh officers, I was lately choſen.

Did he advance money to you, or did he pay it himſelf?—He paid it.

Who pays the charges of theſe people being here?——I paid it.

Court. Morton himſelf ought to be here, it is aſtoniſhing to me, how ſuch a caſe could paſs without the coroner calling for Morton and examining him, and binding him over, he was the propereſt perſon of all.

Court to Priſoner. This is the proper time for you to make your defence, againſt this charge for killing your wife.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I am not ſenſible as I did kill my wife, and pleaſe you my Lord.

Have you any thing more to ſay?—No, my Lord.

Is there any of your friends here to ſpeak for you?——No, my Lord, none at all.

Do you refer to any of your neighbours to give you a character?——No, without it is Mr. Tromper.

Court to Tromper. I believe I aſked you before?—Yes, my Lord, he bore a very good character whatever I knew of him, I was not much acquainted with him.

He had not the character of being an ill-natured, malicious man?——No my Lord.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen of the Jury, the priſoner ſtands indicted for the wilful murder of Ann his wife, by ſtabbing her in the breaſt with a claſp knife, giving her thereby a mortal wound, of which ſhe inſtantly died; he is alſo charged on the coroner's inquiſition: and the reſult of a very long examination is, that unqueſtionably, this man has been the occaſion of the death of his wife, and that it has happened in the manner deſcribed in this indictment, by his giving her not one only, but no leſs than four ſtabs in the breaſt and body, one of which proved mortal, and of which ſhe did in effect inſtantly die; and the fact being thus clearly proved againſt him, unleſs it is eſtabliſhed in his favour that he did this under ſuch an impreſſion, and in ſuch a ſtate of mind that ought not to make him anſwerable for what he has done, unqueſtionably he is guilty of the crime of wilful murder imputed to him; for he that intentionally, with a degree of deliberation, uſes ſuch a weapon in ſuch a manner, muſt do it for the purpoſe of depriving the party of life, therefore it is wilful in the ſtrongeſt ſenſe of that word; therefore the crime ſtands fully proved againſt him, unleſs there can be collected from the circumſtances that are in the evidence, ſomething which will amount to a defence for him, by ſhewing that though his hand was guilty of the crime, his heart was free from it; and the whole caſe is brought to turn upon a ſingle point, whether this man, at the time he committed this outrage upon his wife, was in his right mind or no, whether he did it from motives of wickedneſs and malice towards her, or whether he did it under the impreſſion of ſome diſtemper of mind which had deprived him of the uſe of his reaſon; in which caſe, though his hand committed the offence, in the conſideration of law as well as upon the plain principles of reaſon and juſtice, no crime can be imputed to him in doing it.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few Days.

Continuation of the Trial of William Walker.

I ſtate this to you on the outſet, that I may turn your attention to that which is really the queſtion, becauſe there can be no queſtion that he gave theſe wounds, and if in his right mind, that he has been guilty of a very foul murder, for which he is juſtly anſwerable to the laws of his country; on the other hand, if you ſhould really ſee reaſon to collect from the evidence, that at the moment he committed the act, he was not in poſſeſſion of himſelf, that he was not in poſſeſſion of his right ſenſes, and of his right mind, but that it was done under the preſſure of ſome diſorder of mind, occaſioned by ſomething that you and I cannot get to the bottom of, that will make him nothing more than a mere inſtrument in the hands of Providence, and he not at all anſwerable to the laws of God or man for what he has done, any more than the ſimple knife could be anſwerable that gave the fatal blow: the general outlines of the caſe led one to have a conſiderable degree of ſuſpicion, that there would ſome ſuch point as this ariſe in the cauſe, and after I have ſtated to you the particular evidence, I will endeavour to collect for your uſe, what thoſe circumſtances are that ſeem moſt ſtrongly to bear to this point, upon which you are to exerciſe your judgment, whether the man was in his right mind: the firſt witneſs examined was Joſeph Branch, and he ſays [here the learned judge ſummed up the evidence of Joſeph Branch, and then added] as far as the narration went, he told the ſtory pretty well, but when I came to examine him to the circumſtances, which the ſtory told by him naturally led me to enquire after, I never found a man either ſo perfectly uninformed, or from whom it was ſo impoſſible to extract any thing; it was a ſingular circumſtance related by him that this woman ſhould come to him the firſt time in her life, to aſk him to come and ſit up in the houſe, but it did not ſtrike him as at all extraordinary, he did not aſk a queſtion at all about it, when aſked he was contented to go, and when there he was contented to ſtay; in ſhort, nothing could be got from him; however that which could not be got from him, has been got from the other evidences; the next is a more intelligent man by far, one Francis Jones, he ſays [here the learned judge ſummed up the evidence of Jones and the reſt of the witneſſes, and then added] Gentlemen, this is the whole of the evidence; the priſoner contents himſelf with ſaying he was not at at all ſenſible that he had killed his wife, that he did it in a ſtate unconſcious of what he was doing; and it is from this evidence, and ſome of the circumſtances that are ſtated in it, that you will be to collect as I told you, the only point which remains in any degree doubtful on this inquiry, and upon which the fate of this man depends; that is, whether at the time he gave theſe mortal wounds, he was in his right mind or no; againſt the man, the general tranquility of his behaviour, his converſing with the people like another man, and eating and drinking, and appearing to be conſcious of what he had done, endeavouring to juſtify it, and accuſing her of having behaved ill to him; theſe are all of them circumſtances that ſeem to denote that he was in poſſeſſion of himſelf, that he knew what he was doing, that he meant to do it, and that he did it on motives of malice urging him to revenge, for ſome injury that he had received, or was to receive from her; and there is one circumſtance beyond that againſt him, namely, the circumſtance that one of the witneſſes had frequently heard her cry out O my head, or my ſhoulder, or my arm; but whether that was owing to any ill uſage received from him, or to an accidental hurt, or to pains in her head or her arms, which might make her cry out, the witneſs could not tell; however, they all agree in his favour, that ſhe was a very extraordinary good kind of a woman, not likely to give him any cauſe of a quarrel, and he not a quarrelſome man, and that they lived in a ſtate of good underſtanding together; this leads one to expect to find, that this unfortunate event did ariſe from ſomething ſingular and extraordinary, and not to be accounted for in any way in which people ordinarily account for thoſe dreadful acts of violence, which are committed either from deep malice, or revenge for injuries ſuppoſed to be received, or at leaſt from ſome ſudden tranſports of revenge, for ſome ill uſage received: you find it is moſt certain from this ſtate of the evidence, that for ſome days before this woman came to her end, the man had not been ſo well, and in the ſame orderly ſtate that he uſed to be; it is a fact that is beyond all contradiction I think, that the woman was conſcious that there was ſomething amiſs with him, that ſhe had made complaints to the overſeer that there was ſomething wrong, that it was dangerous for her to be in the houſe with him; and theſe were not complaints expreſſive of reſentment for ill-uſage offered by him to her, for brutality, or any thing for which he ſhould be puniſhed; for ſhe ſeemed to have tenderneſs to him to the laſt; ſhe choſe on the laſt night to go to him, to ſleep with him, but if he had treated her as brutal men do women that they have in their power, one would have thought, having men in the houſe, ſhe would not have gone to bed to him. The conſtable Tromper ſeems to me to be an evidence of great credit, and he ſays, on the Monday at the deſire of the woman, he went to talk with the man, ſhe having told him he was not well; there was ſomething the matter with him, ſhe did not know what!—She found him not well, and ſhe had been alarmed with him before: Tromper ſpoke to him and found him in a condition which ſhould have alarmed him; he complained he was troubled in his mind, he did not know why, but he was, he could not tell what was the matter, but he was troubled and uneaſy; I am ſatisfied that if at that time the ſtate of the man's body had been examined into, he would have been found to have had a fever upon him; I have not a doubt but it was a nervous fever that had ſeized his ſpirits: Tromper adviſed him to compoſe himſelf, and go to his work; accordingly the man did. The evidence of what paſſed on the Tueſday, which is given to you by Samuel Wood, is ſtill more particular; for, on the Tueſday between eight and nine, Wood had heard that the man was not well, he went to his houſe to ſpeak to him, and at that moment you find the woman was gone to the overſeer; therefore at that time the woman muſt have a very ſtrong impreſſion on her mind, that he was not well, and not fit for her to be in the houſe with alone, and ſhe actually brought ſomebody with her. The converſation he held with the man that night, was the converſation of a man whoſe brain was touched, that his neighbours ſaid he had bewitched them, and he ſhould be hanged, and then he talked of his wife's fetching him away in a cart, and that he ſhould be hanged, and all the man could do would not pacify him; he was very uneaſy becauſe his wife was not then at home, and ſhe came in with Provender, and he went away without ſaying one ſingle word; that ſtrikes me as a very ſingular circumſtance: On the Wedneſday the woman complained of his having frightened her, and again on the Thurſday; and I am ſorry to obſerve that the overſeer did his duty very ill, for after theſe alarms he ought to have done more a great deal than leaving a blind meſſage with the governor of the work-houſe; his duty would have been to have gone inſtantly to have ſeen the man; his duty would have been to have employed a perſon of ſkill to have looked at him; the man might have been ſaved, the woman might have been ſaved, and all this miſchief prevented. In that manner, however it was, and this poor woman gets the two men to ſit up, and in the courſe of that night this fatal accident happened, and it ſeems to me, as far as I can judge from the reſult of the evidence, to have happened under the effect of ſome diſorder that had ſeized the man, and affected his ſpirits, and deprived him to a certain degree of reaſon, and that particularly rendered him ſuſpicious, among other people, of his wife; ſhe had been driven to take ſome care of herſelf by applying to the overſeer; and nothing alarms a man, who has any ſymptoms of inſanity about him, ſo much as the idea of being taken care of as an inſane man; there is nothing that impreſſes them with ſo much terror, and there being no medical man preſent that I know of, I take upon me to ſay ſo, it having fallen within my own knowledge, nothing alarms them ſo much, nothing irritates them ſo much, as the idea of being treated as inſane: I account for the ſulky manner in which the man went away when Provender came, and on the next night he followed the woman, perſuaded her to go back, but ſubmitted in a a ſulky way, and ſaid ſhe might have who ſhe would, and went to bed in a kind of ſullenneſs. If having his mind diſtempered, affected, diſturbed, and deranged; if his madneſs was pointed againſt his wife in conſequence of their having taken theſe meaſures which were fit for her to take, but which he was not in a humour to bear; if he conceived rage againſt her under that impreſſion of mind, and under that impreſſion did this fatal act, he certainly ought not to be conſidered as a man in his ſober ſenſes; but it is the unhappy effect of the diſtemper that was upon him; and I think we ſhould not do juſtice to the caſe, conſidering the character of the woman, conſidering the manner in which they had lived together for a long while; the woman an extraordinary woman; the man, a quiet, ſober, inoffenſive man, if we did not look for ſomething extraordinary to account for this tragedy; and if you do find ſymptoms of diſorder, of diſeaſe, by which the man was apparently affected on the Monday, and on the Tueſday, by which that fatal act was committed; and if thoſe expreſſions of rage and reſentment againſt the woman is to be accounted for moſt naturally by his conceiving a wild prejudice againſt her, for her having brought people into the houſe to guard her and her children; that is a very different thing to that wilful and deliberate thing which the law calls murder:—Where men ſuffer their paſſions to get the better of their reaſons, and do in tranſports of rage commit this crime, they muſt anſwer for the conſequences; but rage which is the effect of diſtemper, is brought upon them by the act of God, and not by themſelves, and they are not anſwerable for what they do in thoſe moments. Gentlemen, upon the reſult of as careful an examination as I could make, it appears to me, that this was the unhappy effect of rage againſt this woman, conceived in conſequence of diſtemper of mind, brought on by diſeaſe, and that under that impreſſion the violence was committed. The man's afterwards coming to his ſenſes will not alter the nature of the caſe, if it was committed under the impreſſion of inſanity, and the mind diſturbed and deprived of its powers of governing the man: he is not anſwerable, and you muſt find your verdict, Not Guilty: Indeed he is either guilty of the crime of wilful murder, or he is a mere machine; but if you think that this was all artifice, and there was no diſorder, that he did it cooly and deliberately, to ſatisfy ſome purpoſe of his mind, then he is guilty of the murder; but if it is, as I confeſs it appears to me to be, the effect of inſanity, you muſt then find him not guilty.

NOT GUILTY.

NOT GUILTY on the Coroner's Inquiſition.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

Court. This man muſt not be diſcharged, unleſs the pariſh officers, to ſave the expences, come and take him away; he muſt be carried before a magiſtrate, confined, and taken proper care of.

389. PATRICK BIRMINGHAM, and SAMUEL HALL were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Robert Gray, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 2d day of April, with intent the goods and chattles of the ſaid Robert, in the ſaid dwelling houſe, burglariouſly and feloniouſly to ſteal.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoner.

ROBERT GRAY ſworn.

I live in Dean-ſtreet, Red Lion-ſquare.

What is your buſineſs?——An organ-builder, I know nothing of the robbery, I was out at the time.

CHRISTOPHER IBBETSON ſworn.

On the 2d of April, about eight o'clock, me and another perſon were riding down Leigh-ſtreet, Red Lion-ſquare, and we ſaw a young fellow come out of Mr. Gray's parlour window, I ſpoke to the gentleman that was along with me, and as I ſpoke, Hall opened the window, and the priſoner Birmingham jumped out; there were palliſadoes before the window, Hall was in the ſtreet and had hold of the ſhutters, Hall opened the window ſhutter, and then Birmingham came out.

Court. Was it dark?—Yes, it was candle-light.

How near was you to him?—About three yards.

How did you diſtinguiſh their faces?—It was quite a moon-light night, I could diſtinguiſh them by the light of the moon; Hall did not attempt to run away.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. Did Hall ſtop?—I croſſed over to him, and bid him ſtop.

And he ſtopped immediately?—Yes.

How many minutes might it be?—Not many.

Priſoner Hall. He ſwore that I had hold of the ſhutter the firſt time, and the ſecond time he ſaid I was near it, but I had not hold of it.

When you was before the Juſtice of Peace, did not you ſwear that he ſtood near the window, not that he touched it, or much leſs that he opened it?—If I did I muſt ſay falſe, for he opened it, and held it for the other man to come out.

Was you examined twice?—Yes.

Did the Juſtice admit him to bail?—Not when I was preſent.

SARAH WOOLLEY ſworn.

I live with a gentlewoman that has Mrs. Gray's firſt floor, Mrs. Gray came up ſtairs to ſit with the gentlewoman that is ill, and brought a young child about two months old, and I took it down ſtairs, and gave it to the maid to give it ſome victuals, and then I heard the alarm.

Court. Do you know how the houſe door was?—I cannot tell, it was ſhut when I heard the alarm, I did not hear any body in the houſe.

MARY HARROW ſworn.

I was in the houſe, my maſter was not within, my miſtreſs was, the door was ſhut, it is with a ſpring lock, and it is generally ſhut, it cannot be opened on the outſide without a key.

Was the parlour window open or ſhut?—I ſhut it in between ſix and ſeven, puſhed it in, but not faſtened it, and the ſaſh was down, I am ſure of it.

Did you ſee or hear any body in the houſe?—No.

Mr. Sylveſter. What does your family conſiſt of?——Maſter, miſtreſs, and five children.

What are the ages of thoſe?—The eldeſt is thirteen.

A boy or a girl?—A boy.

Is he at home?—He is put out to ſchool.

Was he at home then?—I cannot ſay where he was, he was not in the houſe at that time, he was out with other boys.

When did he go out?—After he had had his dinner.

How long did he ſtay out?—Till after it was over.

What age is the next child?——About nine, that is a girl, ſhe is at home.

Were was ſhe that afternoon?—She was in the parlour in the mean time with me.

I ſuppoſe you was going backwards and forwards in the houſe was not you?—No, I was in the parlour with three of the children, I did not leave the parlour till we heard the cry of thieves.

How came you not to ſhut the window ſhutters?——I juſt puſhed it to with my hand, and a little child in my arms, I meant to get a light to faſten it.

Did you puſh it too from the outſide or the inſide?——The outſide, that was between ſix and ſeven, I cannot ſay whether any body had been in from that time till the alarm was, I do not think they had.

What do you know?—I know for certain that nobody had been in that room, my miſtreſs was above ſtairs with a lady that was ſick, ſhe was but juſt gone up ſtairs, ſhe drank tea in the parlour, but not in that parlour.

When your miſtreſs got out; do you not know which way ſhe went?—No.

Do you know what time the boy came home?—No.

What is the age of the next child?——About ſeven, a girl, ſhe was all the time there.

Do your children always ſit ſtill my girl?—She was not out of the room I am ſure, becauſe I was with her, we have no lodgers, only a lady in the firſt floor, I pulled the door after me, it is a catch lock.

You are not carcleſs I ſuppoſe at all?—No, I am not careleſs, I went out in the ſtreet, and coming by with a child in my arms, I thought it was time to have the door ſhut, they could not open it without a key on the outſide.

Did you try it?—No, I ſhut it in the uſual way.

Court. You ſay your miſtreſs went up to the ſick perſon, what time was that?——Between ſeven and eight.

She does not go through the parlour?—No, the ſtairs front her as ſoon as ſhe comes out of the door, and ſhe goes directly up.

You are ſure the ſaſh was ſhut down?—Yes, I ſhut it down in the morning, and it was not opened at all, it ſticks out when it is not faſtened, any body can tell that it is not faſtened.

Was the ſaſh faſtened down?——It was faſtened down, it was not ſcrewed down.

PRISONER HALL'S DEFENCE.

I was coming down the ſtreet, and the ſhutter was a wide ſhutter, it projects right over the pavement, and I might run againſt the ſhutter once, but no more; it is a ſingle ſhutter to the whole window, I might touch it with my ſhoulder.

Court to Ibbetſon. The priſoner ſays he only might touch it with his ſhoulder, as it ſtood upon the jar?—No, he had hold of it with his hand.

Court. Had he hold of it with his hand, did he ſhut it too with his hand?—He ſhut it too with his hand, and opened it again.

Did you take notice at the time, whether the ſaſh was up or not?—I ſaw the ſaſh up, and ſaw the man come out of it.

PRISONER BIRMINGHAM'S DEFENCE.

I was coming from Grays-Inn-Lane about half after ſeven, and I ſtopped to make water oppoſite the houſe on the other ſide of the way, I ſaw a man ſtanding at the window, and the window was up, I thought the man was about no good, ſeeing the room in darkneſs, I went on towards the place, and the man run away, and another man came and ruſhed out right againſt me, with that my hat fell down, he thought I was going to lay hold of him, he puſhed me as I was ſtooping for my hat, and this gentleman came up and thought I was the man that came out of the window, there was one man ſtanding outſide, and when he ſaw I took notice, he made off as faſt as ever he could, and when I went over to the window, a man came out right againſt me, I never was in the houſe in the world, nor never knew a half-penny worth of any thing diſhoneſt.

Court to Gray. How high is this window?—I believe about three foot.

Court. Then Hall might run againſt it, there is no doubt.

WILLIAM OWEN ſworn.

I have known Hall two years, he has lodged with me that time, I am a butcher in Cannon ſtreet, I had a very good character with him, and I know nothing to the contrary, it was ſuch a character, that I would take him in again.

What buſineſs is Hall?—A carpenter.

WILLIAM BARNES ſworn.

I am a corn chandler, I live at Clapton, near Hackney, I have known Hall better than two years, he was at work for Mr. Hilton, and he being ſlack of work, told him he muſt lay by for a week or more, then he came and worked for me, and built a granary, it is in hand now, he is at work for me now, I will employ him now, no man ſooner, he has always done me juſtice, more people would have come to his character, but we thought it not neceſſary to trouble our neighbours.

Court to Birmingham. What are you?—A gentleman's ſervant, I came from Ireland three months ago, I have no friends but an aunt that I kept with, ſince I left my maſter.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen this is a capital offence if proved, the facts muſt be either actually breaking the houſe by violence, or a conſtructive breaking, which will be conſtrued, in point of reaſon and juſtice, the ſame as if there was an actual force and breaking of it; for no man has a right to ſay you have not ſecured your houſe in a proper manner, if your door is only upon the latch, lifting that up is as much a burglary as breaking the door to pieces! for the ſame reaſon it is determined that if a ſaſh be ſhut down, the lifting it up is burglary, for no man has a right to ſay, you ſhould have faſtened your houſe better, if you do not I will come in at every room in your houſe; another thing is, if a burglary is committed, or intended to be committed, if perſons are not in the houſe, but go there with intent to help and aſſiſt, they are equally guilty of the burglary with the perſon that gets into the houſe: I cannot help thinking but this girl's going out of doors and puſhing the window ſhutter too, might be a lure and temptation for getting in, as there was nothing but a ſaſh to throw open to obtain acceſs into the houſe: there is no evidence to ſhew you, that after the time this girl puſhed this window too, and ſhut the outſide door, that any body went into that room. If the priſoner Birmingham was in the houſe, then the matter for your conſideration is, with what intent he went in there; it was night and the candles were lighted, it was about eight o'clock; the ſun is down about thirty-two minutes after ſix, but then there is an hour for the twilight, and if you could diſtinguiſh men's faces by the day-light or the twilight, it is not ſo completely night as to conſtitute the crime of burglary; but Ibbetſon does poſitively ſwear that all the light that enabled him to ſee the faces of the priſoners was the moon-light: with reſpect to Hall he never was in the houſe, and the only conſideration is, whether he was there as an accomplice with, and joining in the felonious intent, ſuppoſing you think there was one, and whether he was aiding and aſſiſting in carrying that intent into execution; if you believe Ibbetſon, Hall certainly muſt be conſidered as a principal in aiding and aſſiſting Birmingham to attempt to carry their illegal proceedings into execution, for if he opened the window for one, or ſhut it again, and opened it for another, in order that they might make their eſcape, and if ſo, though not in the houſe, yet aiding and aſſiſting, he is as much guilty as if in the houſe himſelf; but as he was not in the houſe, you muſt have the ſtronger evidence to ſatisfy you that he was an accomplice; he has called two people to his character, and has a very good character; if you are ſatisfied that Birmingham got into this houſe through the window, or broke the houſe to get in, then he is guilty of the burglary, and if you think the other man was there aiding and aſſiſting him, then he is guilty alſo; but if you think he was not there as aiding and aſſiſting the priſoner Birmingham, in that caſe you will acquit him.

Pat. Birmingham } Guilty Death.
Samuel Hall }

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Justice Nares.

The priſoner Hall was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

390. JOHN BOYLE was indicted, for that he, well knowing that one John Frazer had lately ſerved our Lord the King on board the L'Hector, and ſuppoſing that certain wages and pay were due to him for ſuch ſervice on board the ſaid ſhip, on the 25th of March laſt, with force and arms feloniouſly, willingly, and knowingly, did perſonate, and falſly aſſume the name and character of the ſaid John Frazer, the ſeaman aforeſaid, ſuppoſing him to be entitled to certain wages and pay, in order to receive the ſame, againſt the ſtatute.

A Second Count, for perſonating the ſaid John Frazer, ſuppoſing him to be entitled to certain wages and pay, in order to receive the ſame, due from our Lord the King to the ſaid John, againſt the ſtatute.

I am clerk of the Navy Office for the payment of ſeamen's wages, the priſoner applied to me for the wages due to John Frazer, who had ſerved on board the L'Hector man of war, which was a French prize that we had taken, he ſaid his name was John Frazer; when the man opened the books, it appeared the man was dead on the books, I told him this, he ſtill perſiſted that he was the man, and that his name was John Frazer, and that he went by the name of John Frazer the ſecond, in the Marborough; there was two on board the Marlborough, and he was turned over from the Marlborough, and to prove that he was John Frazer, he ſaid he had received pay at our Office on ſuch a day for the Marlborough; now the wages had been paid for the Marlborough a few days before; I aſked him what ſhip he was of, he ſaid the Porteous; there was no ſuch name to be found as John Frazer on that ſhip's books; I aſked him what other ſhip he belonged to, he ſaid he was paid off in the Hind armed tranſport; I looked in this book, and could find no ſuch name there; he perſiſted all along that his real name was Frazer; upon examining the Hind armed tranſport's books I could find no ſuch name there, I ſaid then to him, you muſt have went by ſome other name in the Hind armed tranſport, for there is no ſuch name as Frazer in that book; he then ſaid he went by the name of Charles Boyle; I told him at the beginning, that Frazer was dead in America, he ſtill perſiſted, and even before the ſitting alderman he ſaid his name was Frazer.

Court. Was he on board the Hind by the name of Charles Boyle?——There was a Charles Boyle on board that ſhip, and by the money he ſaid he received for that tranſport, it may be the perſon; the money againſt the name of Charles Boyle for that tranſport agreed with the money which he ſaid he had received; he brought a certificate from a young gentleman who ſigns his name John Smith, who ſigns as a midſhipman on board the L'Hector, in order to ſhow his name was John Frazer.

Did you know him?——I did not know him at that time, he is in Court.

(The certificate read.)

“ Theſe are to certify to whom it may “ concern, that John Frazer ſerved on “ board the L'Hector.

“ John Smith, Midſhipman.”

Priſoner. Mr. Smith wrote me the certificate.

WILLIAM WADE ſworn.

I am clerk in the Office, theſe are the L'Hector books, here is ſuch a name on the books as John Frazer, entered on the 14th of July 1782, and appears to be dead on the 2d of October following, at ſea.

Court. There are not two Frazers on board that veſſel?——Only one.

Was there any wages due to him on board the L'Hector?—Frazer's wages are unpaid, he being dead.

Mr. Fielding, Council for the Proſecution. Was you in the Office with Mr. Slade, when the priſoner applied to him?—I was.

What did he ſay of himſelf?—Upon my word I cannot charge my memory with what paſſed, I know no more than that he came in, and ſaid his name was John Frazer, he ſaid he came for the wages of Frazer, and on my turning to the books, I ſaw John Frazer, dead, therefore we ſuſpected him.

JAMES AUSTEN ſworn.

I was a ſailor on board the Marlborough.

Do you know the priſoner at the bar?—Yes.

What is his name?—John Boyle.

Did he ſerve along with you?—Yes.

Did you know a man on board the Marlborough of the name of John Frazer?——Yes.

They were turned over to the L'Hector together?—Yes, I continued on board the Marlborough till it was paid off.

How long was you on board together?—We came on board in the year 1782, and continued till July 1783.

JOHN SMITH ſworn.

You was midſhipman on board the L'Hector?——I was.

Do you remember the priſoner?—I do.

Do you remember the name of John Frazer?——Yes; the priſoner met me in Tooley-ſtreet, on the 24th of March, I was in a hurry, going upon ſome buſineſs in the ſtreet, and he ſtopped me; he ſaid Mr. Smith, how do you do; I ſaid I was very well; he ſaid, Sir, do not you remember me; ſays I, I do your face, but not your name; God bleſs me! ſays he, do not you, my name is Frazer, I was caſt away with you on board the L'Hector; I recollected the face of this man, and I knew there was a man of the name of Frazer on board.

Did he ſay his Chriſtian name?——He ſaid his Chriſtian name was John, he told me that he was come up from Portſmouth, and I think he ſaid he belonged to the Ganges, and that he could not get the wages there of the L'Hector, and could not find any of the officers to give him a certificate, that he was ſtarving in the ſtreet, he lay with an old ſhipmate at Deptford, and had not money for a pint of beer; I told him he muſt go out to the captain, for he lived at Richmond, he ſeemed to be very willing to go, and walked with me as far as the end of Tooley-ſtreet; I directed him the way to Richmond, and he told me, Sir, ſays he, I have not a halfpenny in the world, and the boatſwain and other of the warrant officers have given the people certificates, and they have got their wages, and if you give me a certificate it will be the ſame thing; I ſaid, no, they will not pay it on my certificate any more than on your word; he ſaid, Sir, for God's ſake give me a certificate, and if they will not pay me on that, it is only going to the captain at laſt; from my own good nature and humanity together, and the man's being caſt away with me, his requeſt being ſo very ſmall, I went into a ſhop, and I wrote him that certificate.

Court. You thought him to be John Frazer at that time?——I did.

Was he caſt away with you?—Yes, Sir, he was, he belonged to our main top in the L'Hector.

Was Frazer alſo?—Yes, he belonged to the ſhip too; I know no more of him till I got a letter from Mr. Slade, deſiring me to go to the Office to identify the man; the moment he mentioned the name, I recollected the perſon of the man immediately.

Then you are now ſatisfied that this is not Frazer, but Boyle?—That he went by the name of Boyle; the perſon of Frazer I do not recollect, he was wounded in the action with the frigates, after he was wounded, he was incapable of duty, therefore, in the middle of our diſtreſs, I ſaw nothing of him, but this man I perfectly remember.

JOSEPH DENTON ſworn.

I am boatſwain of the L'Hector, I remember the perſon of John Frazer, I knew the priſoner, his name on board the L'Hector was John Boyle.

What became of John Frazer?—He was wounded on the 5th of September, and died in the ſame month of his wounds.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, I have no friends, I leave it to the mercy of the Court, and your Lordſhip, I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY, Death.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury, before Mr. Juſtice NARES.

391. CHARLES CRESWELL was indicted for that he, well knowing that Charles Creſwell had lately ſerved our Lord the king, on board the Lizard as a marine, and that certain wages and pay were due to him for ſuch ſervice, on the 4th of March laſt, feloniouſly, wilfully, and knowingly, did perſonate, and falſely aſſume the name and character of the ſaid Charles Creſwell, the marine aforeſaid; in order to receive the wages and pay due from our Lord the King, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

A ſecond count, for perſonating on the ſame day the ſaid Charles, ſuppoſing he was intitled to certain wages and pay, in order to receive the ſame.

The priſoner applied to me either on the 4th or 5th of March, but I cannot charge my memory which day, he brought me this diſcharge of a marine from head quarters upon a reduction, after the peace took place; he applied to me for the wages of Charles Creſwell, belonging to the Lizard as a marine; upon the books being looked into, it was found that the wages had been paid to his father as adminiſtrator; upon finding the man's wages had been paid, made me look more minutely into the diſcharge which I now have in my hand, and I found the name of Charles Creſwell was wrote on an erazure, which made me aſk him ſome further queſtions; I aſked him what company he belonged to, he ſaid the twentieth, now his own diſcharge ſays the fourteenth, I aſked him what diviſion he belonged to, he ſaid to Portſmouth, now on the ſhip's books he is marked to belong to the Chatham diviſion; I then diſcovered to him that his name had been wrote on an eraſure, I deſired to know who did it, or whether he did it himſelf, he ſaid he did not do it himſelf; he prevaricated a little while, but at laſt he confeſſed that his name was Charles Creſwell, but that this did not belong to him, but was given to him by one M‘Dermont; I aſked him if he knew where M‘Dermont was, he ſaid he did not, I aſked him whether he was about the office, he ſaid he believed he might, I ſaid ſhould you know him again, he ſaid yes; with that he was taken out of the office where he was to have received the money, out into the court yard, he could not find him there, we then went into Wincheſter ſtreet, and there was M‘Dermont and one Haddock in company with him, and he being in company with him, we took them both into cuſtody on ſuſpicion, we brought them all into the office, and then the priſoner was aſked, if Haddock had any concern or knowledge of this matter, he ſaid no, not to his knowledge, that he had it from M‘Dermont; we then ſent for a conſtable, and took him before the ſitting alderman, he then ſaid he had it from Haddock and not from M‘Dermont; upon which M‘Dermont was diſcharged by the ſitting alderman.

Mr. Sylveſter council for the proſecution. When he came to you firſt, did he pretend to be the identical Creſwell?—The identical Creſwell, and demanded his money as Charles Creſwell; ſome time after I was looking on the certificate, and I found here a receipt, which is always given on the back at the time of the diſcharge in full of all arrears, and there is the name which appears to have been Michael and an H. the real Charles Creſwell was loſt in the Ville de Paris.

This is the Lizard's pay book, here is the name of Charles Creſwell, a marine from the 1ſt of July, appears to be diſcharged the 13th of March 1782, into his Majeſty's ſhip the Formidable.

STEPHEN MILLS ſworn.

I ſerved with Charles Creſwell in the marines.

Is that the man?—No Sir.

PAUL GAVITUS ſworn.

I belong to the diviſion at Chatham, I knew Charles Creſwell, he went on board the Lizard frigate with me, I was on board from the 6th of April 1781, to the 13th of March 1782.

Look at that man, is that him?—That is not the man.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was led into it innocently by a man that belonged to the ſhip; I was made a priſoner, and they let the other men go.

GUILTY Death.

He was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury.

Court. I do verily believe that this man's name was a very unfortunate thing to him; I think there may be circumſtances of alleviation in this poor man's caſe.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury, before Mr. JUSTICE NARES.

392. JOHN MOSELEY, otherwiſe called John Shore, (a black) was indicted for that he well knowing that Amos Anderſon ſerved our Lord the King on board the Loyaliſt, and that certain wages and pay was due to him for ſuch ſervice on the 30th of December laſt, feloniouſly, wilfully, and knowingly, did perſonate, and falſely aſſume the name and character of the ſaid Amos Anderſon aforeſaid, in order to receive the wages and pay due to him from our Lord the King, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

A ſecond count for perſonating on the ſame day the ſaid Amos Amos Anderſon, ſuppoſing he was intitled to certain wages and pay, in order to receive the ſame.

I know no more of the matter than the priſoner acknowledged the whole when he was taken up by Amos Anderſon, the perſon whom he perſonated, he confeſſed in the office that he had received the pay belonging to Amos Anderſon.

Court. Did he do this of his own accord, or did any body intimate to him, that it would be better for him?—Nothing had been ſaid to him in our office, what had been ſaid to him before I cannot ſay.

Then tell us how the converſation was introduced?—Amos Anderſon applied to us for his wages, and on examining the books, it appeared, as far as we knew, that his wages had been received by him, upon which Anderſon afterwards brought the priſoner before the Commiſſioners and charged him with receiving his pay for the Loyaliſt, and he acknowledged that he had received ſo much money in town, and ſo much money in Portſmouth, he was aſked how he came to do it, he ſaid he was put on to do it by a butcher down at Portſmouth, whoſe name I have forgot.

To do what?—To perſonate this man, there to receive the pay belonging to Amos Anderſon, which is perſonating.

Court. There is no ſuch thing as receiving the wages, but by perſonating and aſſuming the name?—No, my Lord, only by letter of attorney, but there was nothing of that kind ever produced or ſpoke of.

Captain WILLIAMS ſworn.

I am Captain of the Loyaliſt.

Did you know the priſoner?—Pefectly well, he came on board as John Moſeley.

Do you know any man of the name of Amos Anderſon?—Perfectly well.

Is this the man?—No, he is a Mulatto.

Did Moſeley at any time apply to you for a certificate?—He did ſometime in November laſt.

For what purpoſe?—He came with Amos Anderſon, he called on me and ſaid, that Amos Anderſon was ill in ſome part of Wapping; I thought it improper to ſend Amos Anderſon's certificate by that man, and deſired him to let Amos know he muſt come for it himſelf, he ſaid he was ſo exceeding ill that he was not able, but that his landlord, whom he lodged with, by virtue of my certificate, would give him his wages, he ſhewed me a certificate of Amos Anderſon, who ſerved in the Janus, and as I thought ſigned by Captain O'Hara, who commanded the Janus; I had ſome thought then by his preſenting that certificate that Amos Anderſon was in Wapping, as he had already mentioned it; I gave him a certificate, that which he ſhewed me, and which I thought to be ſigned by Captain O'Hara induced me to ſign it; he called in a few days after, and ſaid that there was an R againſt Amos Anderſon's name in the books, and begged I would alter the certificate, I took that certificate and gave him another, recommending Amos Anderſon to the Commiſſioners of the Navy as a perſon deſerving of clemency, as during his ſervice in the Loyaliſt, I found him a very good ſeaman, and a very extraordinary cooper, which was expreſſed in the certificate; upon which I believe the R was taken off; I perfectly well knew the two men, about three months afterwards Anderſon applied to me, I told him I had ſent his certificate by Moſeley, who informed me he was very ill in Wapping; he ſaid, Sir, I am juſt come from America, I was ſold at Martinico, and I got on Rhode Iſland, and I came to London in a Rhode Iſland ſhip; by his appearance and dreſs I thought he told me truth, and I gave him a certificate; on application to the Navy Office, the money had been received and paid; the man called upon me, he recollected the figure of Moſeley, and after ſearching Wapping he found him; he immediately waited upon me, I went with the man, or juſt after, when I found that was the very perſon who came to me for a certificate as from Amos Anderſon.

Did Amos Anderſon charge Moſely with any thing in your preſence?—He ſaid he had confeſſed he had received his money; and when I was preſent in the Poultry Compter, the priſoner ſaid he received the money; I aſked him where he got the certificate as from Captain O'Hara, he ſaid that Mr. Fleet a butcher at Portſmouth gave him the certificate.

How did he ſay he received the wages?——He ſaid he received it for Amos Anderſon.

Mr. Sylveſter. As his agent, or perſonating Amos Anderſon.

Court. Did you underſtand that he received it as an agent for him, or that he perſonated Amos Anderſon himſelf?——I underſtood that he perſonated Amos Anderſon himſelf.

How did you underſtand that?——He went and received the money as for Amos Anderſon, and he had a certificate from me as to Amos Anderſon.

Mr. Baldwin, Council for Proſecution. There are but two ways of receiving the money, one in perſon and the other by letter of attorney.

WILLIAM WADE ſworn.

He entered the 14th of December 1779, and he run away the 25th of November 1780; the R was taken off by the Commiſſioners of the Navy; whoever came was Amos Anderſon the party, it was not by letter of attorney; whenever it is paid in perſon it is marked party, whenever it is received by attorney, it is marked attorney.

CAPT. AARON SHEFFIELD ſworn.

I was captain of the Enterprize; I know Amos Anderſon, we ſailed from Rhode Iſland the 29th of December, we ſhipped on board the 6th of December, and ſailed from Rhode Iſland the 29th of the ſame month.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I did not receive the money; I have nobody to call.

GUILTY Death.

393. PETER HARLETT, otherwiſe called EDWARD VERULEY, was indicted, for that he, well knowing that one James Howard had lately ſerved our Lord the King on board the Pallas, and that certain prize money was due to him for ſuch ſervice, on the 5th of January laſt, feloniouſly, wilfully, and knowingly, did perſonate and falſly aſſume the name and character of the ſaid James Howard aforeſaid, in order to receive the ſaid prize money, againſt the form of the ſtatute.

A Second Count, for perſonating on the ſame day the ſaid James Howard, ſuppoſing he was entitled to certain prize money, in order to receive the ſame.

CHARLES PINKSTON ſworn.

I am clerk to Mr. Hooper, he is a navy agent, on the 5th of January the priſoner at the bar came to our office with Thomas Brady, he ſaid he had an order to receive ſome prize money, and deſired me to draw an order, which I did; he made his mark, and I witneſſed it.

(The order produced.)

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for Proſecution. Did you afterwards pay him any prize money?——Yes, I received three pounds ſeventeen ſhillings and ſixpence, and afterwards paid it, there is a receipt for the money.

(The order read.)

"The mark of James Howard."

"London, the 5th of Jan. 1784.

"Sir,

"Pleaſe to pay the money due to me for "prize money on the Pallas, James Howard, and you will oblige your humble ſervant."

"Pallas prize money, £3 17*s.* 6*d.*

"Received the 17th of January 1784, "three pounds ſeventeen ſhillings and ſixpence, being ſo much received by me as "abovementioned; I ſay received by me."

Do you know any thing elſe?—On the day Brady was taken up, this man at the bar came into the office towards the evening, and aſked me if there was any more prize money money for him; knowing Brady was in cuſtody, I informed my maſter, who was in the kitchen, that Howard was come to know if there was any more prize money; Mr. Hooper came into the office, and aſked him what his name was; he ſaid his name was James Howard, and he came after more prize money; he then deſired him to go with him, and he would acquaint him ſomething of it; he took him to the public houſe cloſe by where Brady was; when we took him to the public houſe he ſaid his name was Peter Haſlett, juſt come from Ireland to receive the wages of his brother, James Haſlett, deceaſed.

Mr. Sylveſter. Is this the ſame man who received the prize money in the name of James Howard?——Yes.

You are ſure as to his perſon?——I am poſitive.

Was Howard entitled to prize money? ——Yes.

Mr. WADE ſworn.

I have James Howard from September 1778, to 1783.

Have you any of the name of Veruley, or Haſlett?—I have Edward Veruley.

WILLIAM LIVINGSTONE ſworn.

Mr. Fielding. Did you ſerve on board the Pallas?——Yes.

Did you know the priſoner?——Yes.

What is his name?——Edward Veruley.

Did you know James Howard?—Yes.

Were they two men?——Yes.

JAMES MITCHELL ſworn.

You were a ſeaman on board the Pallas? ——Yes.

You know the priſoner?——Yes.

What is his name?——Edward Veruley, at the time I ſerved on board the ſhip.

Do you know James Howard?——Yes, that is not the man at all.

Was you at Mr. Hooper's when the priſoner was there?——Yes.

What happened?——He trod upon my toes, and pinched a piece out of my finger; he aſked me what I called him by his name for.

What did you call him?—I called him Veruly, he aſked me what I called him by his name for; I thought he was in liquor, I went in to aſk a queſtion about the prize money, I ſaw him in Hooper's office.

Did you ſee the clerk of Mr. Hooper?—I ſaw him ſitting at the deſk.

—— M'INTOSH ſworn.

Did you know the priſoner?—The day that I apprehended Thomas Brady, in conſequence of what had juſt paſſed, the priſoner came with him, and this Brady ſaid he wanted ſome buſineſs done in the agency line; this man applied to me in the name of Peter Haſlett, as adminiſtrator to his brother that he had on board the Pallas.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My name was James Howard on board the Pallas five years, and I got my own prize money that was due to me in that name; that man has ſwore my life away wrongfully; when Mr. Hooper firſt took me, he ſaid he would hang me without Judge or Jury.

Court to Livingſtone. Did he go by the name of James Howard?——Never.

Mitchell. He never did, my Lord, while I was in the ſhip, which was two and twenty months.

The priſoner called one witneſs who gave him a good character.

GUILTY Death.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Juſtice NARES.

324. PATRICK BURNE and CHARLES BARTON were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Delport, on the 14th of April laſt, about the hour of eight in the night, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein one linen ſheet, value 3s. two yards of linen cloth, value 3s. one linen ſhirt, value 3s. three ſilver teaſpoons, value 2s. his property.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

JOHN DELPORT ſworn.

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for Proſecution. Where do you live?——I live in Staining-lane, I am a working Jeweller, my family conſiſts of my wife, my wife's couſin Miſs Radford, who was upon a viſit, and children: on Wedneſday the 14th of April I had dined with my next door neighbour, after dinner the ladies went to take a walk, and they returned at duſk, and we ſat down to tea at eight, and I ſaid to my ſon about half after eight, let us go to ſee whether every thing is ſafe, and we went up two pair of ſtairs, the door was ſhut, and every thing ſafe at that time.

When you left the houſe how was it faſtened?——It was faſtened, my ſon pulled the door to him and put the key in and double locked it, I ſtood by him and ſaw him puſh againſt the door, to ſee if it was locked, we returned to our friends again.

What hour did your wife go home with the children?—About a quarter before nine, ſoon after which I was alarmed by my ſon giving me information that the ſtreet door was open, I immediately run and ſtopped at the door, I heard a noiſe up ſtairs, and directly I ſaid what raſcal is that in my houſe, and immediately the two priſoners came down ſtairs as faſt as they could, I ſtood ſtill at the ſtreet-door, and one of the priſoners, Patrick Burne, was the firſt that came out, when he thought he was at my reach to take hold of him, I received a blow on my head with a bit of iron, but I could not diſtinguiſh what bit of iron it was, immediately I went back towards the ſtreet, and I thought to take hold of them, but by being obliged to hold my head, it was not in my power to take hold of them when they ruſhed out; I think the other priſoner had a light coloured coat on, but I cannot ſwear to him.

Had you any opportunity of taking notice of the other man at that time?——No, my Lord, I know the other, Patrick Byrne was one but I could not ſee the other, though I think I could ſwear to him by the colour of his coat; they ran as faſt as they could to make their eſcape; Burne run down Lillypot-lane: here is the hat which I was cut with (The hat produced which was bloody) I could not go any further, the blood run ſo faſt down my neck, when I returned I found the bureau open, and ſome things on the carpet.

Mr. Fielding, Priſoner's Council. Mrs. Delport went out with the children?—Yes.

You cannot be ſure as to one of their perſons?——No.

CLEMENTINA DELPORT ſworn.

I am wife to Mr. John Delport, I went home with my children from the next door, about half after eight, or a quarter to nine, I found the outward door open, I went to the parlour door and found it open, and ſome things taken out of the bureau, and laid on the carpet, ſome new cloth, and a ſheet and a ſhirt.

Out of the bureau drawer?—Yes.

Where had you left them when you went out?——In the drawers, I left the drawers ſhut but not locked, the parlour door was locked, and I had the key in my pocket, the ſcrew was broke, and it was forced open; I miſſed three ſilver tea-ſpoons with our name on them, that were upon the mantle piece in the parlour; at the ſame time I heard a noiſe on the one pair of ſtairs, and I ſaid to my couſin, I am ſure there are thieves in the houſe, I came immediately and called Mr. Delport, he ſtood at the door, I went over the way to make room for my huſband to take hold of them, and I ſaw the two fellows come out, one in a light coat, and one in a dark coat.

LEWIS DELPORT ſworn.

What age are you?——Fourteen.

You had dined with your father at the next door neighbour's Mr. Whittingham's?——Yes, I went with my father to the houſe about a quarter before nine.

Who ſhut the door?—I did, I pulled it by the knocker, then it was only on the ſingle lock, then I put the key in and double locked the door, and puſhed againſt the door afterwards.

Are you ſure that you double locked the door, and the door was faſt?—Yes.

Mr. Fielding. What time was it when your father and you firſt went home from where you dined?——It wanted a quarter of nine.

How came you to ſay a quarter before nine, did you ſee any clock, or take any particular notice of the time?——The gentleman next door looked at his watch juſt before we went out.

What gentleman was that?——A gentleman at the houſe where we dined; I carried the key with me, I got it from my mother, I kept poſſeſſion of the key till I came out again.

Court. How long after you came back with the key was it when your mother and the children went home?——Soon after, I only drank my tea before they went home.

What time did you go out to dinner?—About a quarter after one.

You did not ſhut up the houſe I ſuppoſe on the week day at dinner time?—No Sir.

JOHN WHITTINGHAM ſworn.

I live next door to Mr. Delport, I went out after the alarm, juſt after Mr. Delport, being near Mr. Delport I ſaw two men run out, the one run down Lillypot-lane, the other down Staining-lane, they both run into Noble-ſtreet, I gave the alarm of ſtop thief, and one of the men that run down Lillypot-lane was ſtopped in Noble-ſtreet, or in Falcon-ſquare, I cannot be ſure which, he was preſently brought back, I followed him ſome little way at ſome diſtance, I firſt ſaw him in Noble-ſtreet, I went into Noble-ſtreet, and there I found him in cuſtody.

In whoſe cuſtody was he then?——I believe Cox was the man who had hold of him.

Was the man that you found in cuſtody of Cox, the ſame man that you ſaw come out of the houſe, and run down Lillypot-lane?——I ſtrictly believe it was him, I cannot ſay to the identity of the perſon, I particularly remember he had a brown great coat on, and the man that was taken had a brown great coat on; when I firſt came down to ſee them in cuſtody, there was rather a diſpute which way they ſhould bring the priſoners, I told them to follow me to the proſecutor's, the proſecutor was aſked if that was the man that ſtruck him, he immediately anſwered it was the man, he could ſwear to him.

Mr. Fielding. Had you lighted candles at your houſe when your gueſts went away?—Yes, before that.

You loſt ſight of the perſons who ruſhed out of Mr. Delport's houſe?—Yes.

How far is Noble-ſtreet from the entrance of Mr. Delport's, forty or fifty yards?—More than that.

One hundred perhaps?——More than that: there are about ſix houſes I believe in the lane.

WILLIAM COX ſworn.

On Wedneſday the 14th of April I ſtopped the priſoner Burne; there were three of us coming together, James Robinſon, and William Ward, and myſelf, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief, I then ſaw no one, I run immediately towards the report, and ſeeing a perſon running, I laid faſt hold of the priſoner, which was then there, he made uſe of an expreſſion which I well remember, I have done nothing at all, he made a draw back as if to give a blow, he fell down and threw ſomething down, I ſaid to the other man, he has thrown ſomething down, we looked for it, and it was a poker.

Court. How near is Falcon-ſquare to Staining-lane?—It is I believe ſix or ſeven hundred yards.

Do you know Noble-ſtreet?—I cannot ſay I do.

How long before you laid hold of the priſoner, had you ſeen him running?——I had hardly ſeen him time enough to notice any thing, the alarm being ſo great, I laid hold of the firſt perſon that approached towards wards me, I did not ſee him running any diſtance, I am ſure he was running, he ſaid I have done nothing, it was rather dark, I believe I might rather run before him, and ſlip in ſideways, but the firſt that approached me proved to be the man at the bar.

JAMES ROBINSON ſworn.

Mr. Sylveſter. You was in company with Cox, on the 14th of this inſtant?——Yes, we came from the Caſtle and Falcon in Alderſgate-ſtreet, Cox, Ward, and myſelf, we heard the cry of ſtop thief! we all ſet off.

Where were you?——About fifty yards from the ſquare, going out of Alderſgate-ſtreet; we ſet off and run into the ſquare, and we ſaw ſome people running, and Cox ſtopped a man, and they fell down together; I ran up, and Mr. Ward came directly after, and puſhed me right over them down; I got up, and Cox ſaid to the man, keep your hands of your pockets, and immediately he threw an iron crow out of that pocket, and it hurt my leg, the crow was taken up; Cox ſaid to me, he has thrown ſomething out of his hand; ſays I, I have got it, it is a poker, but I carried it down that night to the Compter, and it was a crow; Ward knows no more than I do.

Mr. Fielding. There were ſeveral people running, you ſay?—Yes, but this man was the firſt.

Court. You ſay that the priſoner threw an iron crow againſt your leg, did you ſee him throw it?——Yes.

THOMAS MEERS ſworn.

I am a carver and gilder.

Where was you on the evening of the 14th of this month?—I was at the end of Fitches Court, Noble-ſtreet, and I was leaning againſt a poſt, and between eight and nine, I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and I ſaw two men, one with his hat off, and there ſeemed to be a piece of iron in his hand; and the other was in a round hat and a light coloured great coat, and there ſeemed to be a ſtick in his hand, they were upon a ſlight run, I kept up with them very well, they run into Falcon-ſquare, I followed and laid hold of the coat of the man in the light coloured great coat, till a gentleman came up and ſtopped him; I laid hold of Barton, the other man ran acroſs the ſquare; I ſaw a man before, and I let go his coat, a gentleman ran him up againſt the wall, and ſaid, I will be damned if I let you go, and I ran up and collared him; and the priſoner ſaid he was no thief! then I let go his coat, and ran to look at the other.

Do you know the other man?——Yes, I know him by his ſhocky head, I was not five minutes with the priſoner.

Did the mob bring back the other man the ſame way that you ſaw the other man run, or another way?——Yes, the ſame way.

The Rev. RICHARD FREER ſworn.

On Wedneſday evening, I believe it was the 14th of this Month, I was coming out of Silver-ſtreet, going into Wood-ſtreet, I knocked at Falcon-ſquare for a perſon, one Mr. Davis, I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and I heard the ſound of feet coming down from Noble-ſtreet, and we croſſed the way, and againſt the dead wall I met the priſoner Barton; I immediately collared him, he aſked me what I ſtopped him for; I ſaid I apprehended he was a thief; he ſaid he was in purſuit of a man; he ſtrove to get away, and I held up my ſtick, and told him I would knock him down; I obſerved another man come down after him, and he turned to the right where we were ſtanding, and ſeveral people after him, and I heard ſomebody cry out, damn him, the other is taken; I then proceeded with him after the other people to Staining-lane, where they ſaid there had been a robbery committed; when I came there, I was behind the other priſoner whom two people had in cuſtody, and I heard that gentleman who was wounded ſay, that is the man who ſtruck me, and he then looked into the other man's face, but I do not believe he ſaid any thing of him; I proceeded with him to the compter, nobody elſe went with him there; I ſaw him ſearched by a man that is a Jew I believe, he firſt ſearched the other priſoner, and I ſaw the ends of ſome keys, which appeared to be picklock keys, taken out of his pocket; they then ſearched the priſoner Barton, and he pulled out ſomething, the man that ſearched him did, and put into his coat pocket, then he pulled out a japanned tobacco box, and the priſoner Barton ſaid, that is only my tobacco box; I ſaid you had better open it, and ſee what is in it, which he did, and it contained tinder and two or three matches; I then heard ſomebody cry, go for a conſtable, which I believe was the man who examined them; then I ſaw an iron crow.

Did you aſk the man what it was that he put into his pocket?——No.

What was the name of the man that ſearched them?—I do not know, he appeared to be a Jew.

When did you firſt ſee the boy Thomas Meers?——I believe at the compter, not before.

Where did you firſt ſee the boy lay hold of the flap of the man's coat?—I believe it was the corner of Staining-lane.

Court. Becauſe this boy has been telling us he had hold of his coat before you laid hold of him?——The priſoner was upon the full run, and from his running ſo faſt, I rather conceived him to be the thief.

Was there at that time any boy near him?——I did not ſee any boy, I have had ſome talk with the boy after he told me he was near him and put up his ſtick, or ſomething, and he he was frightened and let go his coat.

Priſoner Barton. Did you ſee any ſtick in my hand?—I cannot ſay I did.

Did you make uſe of any imprecation? ——I made uſe of no imprecation, I told you, I apprehended you was the perſon.

Court. Did you uſe any ſuch expreſſion as this, I will be damned if I let you go? —No, my Lord, that I am conſcious I never did; when I firſt met the priſoner, I am confident there was no boy laid hold of him, the boy mentioned the circumſtance to me, and I was rather uneaſy in my mind, I went to the boy's maſter and had ſome converſation with him, and the boy then ſaid he believed he was at ſome yards diſtance when I ſtopped him, but prior to my ſtopping him when he was coming down the lane, he caught hold of his coat.

Mr. Fielding. You did not ſee any boy till ſome time afterwards?——I ſaw a boy have hold of the priſoner Barton's coat, when I came to the corner of Staining-lane.

MOSES HARVEY ſworn.

I am a priſoner for debt in the Compter.

Do you remember theſe two men being brought there?—I do, it was the 14th of this month, I ſearched them both.

What did you find on each of them?—On Barton I found three pick-lock keys, and on the other I found a tobacco box which contained tinder, ſeveral pieces of matches, and three ſilver ſpoons.

Court. Where were the ſpoons?——In another pocket.

In what pocket?—In his coat pocket, but which I do not recollect exactly.

What did you do with theſe ſpoons as ſoon as you found them?——I put all the things in my pocket together, there was no conſtable came in with the priſoners.

When did you produce theſe ſpoons afterwards?——The next day.

Not till the next day?—No.

Did you tell any body that you had found ſpoons in his pocket?——No, I did not know that there was any occaſion.

One of the gentlemen has told us that when you had taken ſomething out of his pocket, you put it into your pocket without ſhewing it?——I put every thing elſe in my pocket in the ſame manner.

Were not the matches in the tobacco box? ——No, nothing but tinder, I gave the things to the conſtable, Mr. Fletcher; there was a crow when I ſearched them, I delivered the crow and the reſt of the things to Mr. Fletcher.

Mr. Freers. I beg leave to know if he delivered up all the things, it is a ſatisfaction to my mind?

Harvey. I delivered up every thing excepting the ſpoons, knowing they were the only pieces of property belonging to the proſecutor, and as there was no conſtable brought in with them, I did not deliver them to any body, I carried the ſpoons to my own apartment in the compter, there they were ſafe, when the conſtable came I did not deliver them to the conſtable the next day, but the perſon came that ſaw me take them, and I went immediately and fetched them.

Court. Did you deliver up every thing to the conſtable that you took from the priſoner?——I delivered up every thing.

I aſk you whether now you have delivered up every thing that you received from the priſoners?——I have moſt certainly.

Becauſe it looks very much like a manœuvre, when they were diſcovered to deliver them up?——It was no diſcovery at all, there were ten or twelve people that were preſent at my ſearching them, that ſaw me take the ſpoons and every thing elſe from the priſoner.

Court to Mr. Freer. Have you any more reaſon for ſuſpecting that man's conduct?——I was conſcious I ſaw him take ſomething elſe out of his pocket, but I could not aſcertain what.

Court. He ſays the other people ſaw what it was?——I ſaw him take ſomething out of the pocket, but I could not aſcertain what it was, I did not aſk him, it ſeemed to be cloſe claſped in his hands, I ſaw every thing but the ſpoons.

WILLIAM BUTT ſworn.

You received ſome ſpoons from Moſes Harvey?—I gave them to Mr. Kirby my maſter.

——— KIRBY ſworn.

I am keeper of Woodſtreet Compter, I received three ſilver tea-ſpoons from my ſervant, Moſes Harvey had marked them, and a Mr. Ward that was preſent when the man was ſearched, he mentioned it, I took them from my man, and delivered them to Fletcher the conſtable.

JOHN FLETCHER ſworn.

I am conſtable, theſe are the ſpoons that were given to me before the ſitting Alderman, here is the tinder box and matches, the crow and pick-lock keys, one of theſe keys opened Mr. Delport's door, but I cannot tell which it was.

To Proſecutor. Look at theſe ſpoons?—They are my own.

PRISONER BURNE's DEFENCE.

My Lord I was that evening in St. Martins Le Grand, it was my way home to go down Monkwell-ſtreet, coming down I ſaw two men run ſwiftly by me down Noble-ſtreet, and I ſaw theſe three keys drop, I picked them up and run after them, and one turned up a court in Noble-ſtreet, and I thought I ſaw the other man by him, and I run after him; in Falcon-ſquare a man came up and ſtopped me, I ſaid I did not know any thing about the matter, he jumped upon me and threw me down, be got up again and ſaid he would ſecure me for a thief, ſo he brought me back to this man's houſe, as for that iron crow I know nothing about it, I never had it in my hand, I have friends here.

Court. What are you?—I am a weaver.

The priſoner Burne called two witneſſes who gave him a very good character.

PRISONER BARTON's DEFENCE.

I came from Richmond with a barge that evening, I came to Queenhithe and I made the barge faſt to go to Finch-lane, coming along I heard the cry of ſtop thief, and that gentleman accoſted me and ſaid he believed I was the thief, becauſe I was the foremoſt perſon, that is all that I know.

How came you by theſe ſpoons?——I know nothing at all concerning the ſpoons,

Nor the tobacco box?——Yes, I own to that, I had it in my pocket.

How came you by tinder in your tobacco box?——It is a neceſſary that I make uſe of on board the barge, I had witneſſes laſt week and yeſterday, I had two when I was called up laſt night on my trial, and they went away, and are not here now, I know nothing of this priſoner, I never ſaw him before; as to that man ſwearing that he ook the ſpoons from me it is falſe.

Court. He is a witneſs who is above all ſuſpicion, who ſays he ſaw the man take ſomething from you which he concealed and put into his pocket.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, for the boy I am afraid he has been inſtructed that it would be of ſervice to him to go ſo far as he has done, with reſpect to ſome future expectation.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, that there was a burglary by two men is proved to a demonſtration, I think, becauſe the door was ſafe at half paſt eight, or a quarter before nine, and very ſoon afterwards the ſtreet door and parlour door were open, and the parlour door forced, and things taken out of the drawers of the bureau in that parlour, and when three ſpoons were actually miſſing, there can be no doubt but ſomebody had found means to enter that houſe by ſome falſe key, for the purpoſe of plundering the houſe, and had gone ſome length towards doing it, for the ſpoons were actually taken away, and the moving the things but an inch is a feloniouſly taking; the taking the things out of the drawer, and laying them down with intention to convey them away, is a felonious taking, and there is no doubt but the two men who run down ſtairs, one of whom ſtruck Delport, were the thieves; the only queſtion is, whether the priſoners are the men; Burne is ſworn to by the proſecutor as the man that ſtruck the blow, and in confirmation of his evidence, this blow being ſtruck with iron, you find when Burne was apprehended in Falcon-ſquare, he threw ſomething from him which appeared to be an iron crow, he had pick-lock keys in his pocket, one of which actually opened Mr. Delport's door, but the circumſtance of the crow ſticks to him: I think there is no doubt with reſpect to Burne; the evidence is different with reſpect to Barton, Mr. and Mrs. Delport, and Whittingham, do not take upon themſelves to ſwear to Barton, but each ſay he was in a light coloured great coat, and the evidence is, that Barton had on a light coloured great coat, and he was taken running in the ſame track, and when taken to the compter and ſearched, there was found upon him, if you believe the Jew, three ſilver tea-ſpoons, which tea-ſpoons are poſitively ſworn to by the proſecutor; and the priſoner judges well for himſelf in ſaying that he knew nothing of the ſpoons, as he did not get rid of them, and he tells you that the Jew ſwore falſely; the real complexion of the Jew's conduct is, that he had a wiſh to finger theſe ſpoons, that I am very much inclined to believe, but though he did not deliver them before, he did deliver them, and how ſhould he come by them, he was a priſoner himſelf before, and Mr. Freer ſaw him take ſomething from the priſoner Barton, which he did not ſhew to them, but put in his pocket, he produced the ſpoons the next day; I think now it would be too much to entertain any ſerious doubt whether theſe ſpoons were found on the priſoner Barton, and if they were found upon him, it is better evidence than fifty people ſwearing to the identity of his perſon.

395. ISAAC TORRIES and WILLIAM SMITH were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Thomas Barber, about the hour of nine in the night, on the 31ſt of March laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, half a yard of ſilk ribbon, value 2d. a muſlin half handkerchief, value 6d. one piece of flowered linen, value 1d. the property of the ſaid Thomas Barber.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

MARGARET BARBER ſworn.

On the 31ſt of March laſt, between eight and nine o'clock our houſe was broke open, I went out between four and five, I faſtened my houſe, it was a caſement, and I generally put a bit of ſtring, becauſe I did not think the haſp was enough, I have no key to the door, I pull it after me, I always do.

Court. It has a ſpring lock ?—Yes, I am ſure that I ſhut it, I tried with my hand after I had ſhut it, I did not come home till it was all over, and they had taken the men into cuſtody and carried them into the publick-houſe, I ſaw nobody till theſe men were taken to the compter.

Mr. Peat, Council for Priſoners. Did not you ſay before the Juſtice that you had double locked the door ?—No, I ſaid I had pulled it too, and put my hand againſt it.

THOMAS BARBER ſworn.

I came home on the 31ſt of March before my wife, and I found the caſement open and the door open, and I went in and found the ſcreen that we have round our fire-place was put a little backward, and I ſaw a light on the outſide over the chamber, and I heard the trampling of feet over head, and I thought it was my dame as I call her, and I called at the ſtairfoot and ſaid, halloo dame, ſays I, is it you, which is my uſual way of talking, and no anſwer was made me, I called the ſecond time, halloo dame, are you coming down, no anſwer, and then they immediately ruſhed down ſtairs, then I thought there were ſome thieves in the houſe, or ſomebody that there ſhould not be, and I made away to the door, and got it in my hand, and jammed it faſt, and they were both pulling up againſt me to get by me.

What time was this ?—Between the hours of eight and nine, while we were pulling together one againſt the other, one of them, but I cannot ſay which, ſtruck me with this ſtick, as I ſuppoſe, for I was cut over the knuckles to make me quit my hold of the door, and one of them ſays, damn him, cut his hands off.

Do you know which ſaid that ?—No, it is out of my power.

Had they any thing in their hands to cut your hands off with ?—Not that I can tell, then I made an alarm, and many people came about with pokers and tongs, and one thing or another, and when they found they were overpowered, and that the houſe was beſet, they went into a little cellar that we have, and there they were taken.

Are you ſure theſe are the two men that run down againſt you at the door?—It was dark my Lord, I could not ſwear that, but theſe are the two men that were taken in my cellar.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes, I am ſure of that, there is no way of coming to my houſe but at the front door, there is no yard, no backſide to my houſe.

Mr. Peat. It was the outſide of the door?—Yes.

You was a good deal alarmed and frightened?——Yes, any body would.

You did not obſerve whether any perſons went in but thoſe of your neighbours then?——I know nothing more, I went up ſtairs, and they had got an apron, and ſpread in the room and taken out theſe little trinkets and things, they were not all worth one ſhilling I ſuppoſe, which they had taken out of this drawer.

Mrs. Barber. They were in the drawer before.

What was there in the apron?—A half handkerchief, and a piece of a cap, and a bit of linen, theſe things were in the drawers when I went out, and they were all ſhut but not locked, the apron belonged to one of the priſoners.

Mr. Peat. Did you examine the drawers immediately before you went out?——I had taken ſome of my things out before that day, I ſaw them, and had them in my hand.

JAMES ALLEN ſworn.

I was ſitting by the fire between eight and nine o'clock, I heard an outcry in the alley, I live next door to the proſecutor, he was calling out for help, I told him we would get ſome able aſſiſtance, and go in and ſee, we went up ſtairs and ſaw the drawers out, and that apron laid on the floor, we went down ſtairs, and two or three men went into the cellar, I did not go into the cellar with them, the witneſs Mann and others went down and found them, I ſaw them come up, I ſtood at the head of the ſtairs.

Court. Are you ſure that the two priſoners are the two men that they brought up?—Yes.

Did you go with them to the Juſtice's?—Yes, I attended the ſitting Alderman next day, I know nothing more, I was examined before the Alderman, I gave the ſame account then as I do now.

Priſoners. When we were examined before the Alderman, that gentleman who ſays now we were taken out of the houſe, ſaid, my young fellows, we will have a good weeks work out of each of you.

Allen. I defy any man to ſay that I ſaid any ſuch words, I want nothing at all, I come to ſee juſtice done, I will take my oath, that I never ſpoke no ſuch thing in the world, I will bring a character for twenty years, and one man that has known me for fifteen years.

Mr. Peat. Did you ſee the priſoners ſearched at all?——Yes.

Priſoners. We were ſearched by five different people in the houſe, before ever we were taken out of the houſe.

WILLIAM MANN ſworn.

I live within a few yards of the proſecutor, I was at his houſe that night, I went in and took theſe two men out of the cellar, any thing further I know nothing about, one was a Jew looking man, and the other was a fair faced man, them are the two men ſtanding there with the flowers before them, they were in the cellar near to the neceſſary, they were ſtanding together as they do now.

Is it a large cellar?—It is a middling ſized cellar, we went down there with another man, but I do not know his name, we brought them up, the other man and me.

Is the other man here?—No, not to my knowledge.

Mr. Peat. Did you ſee them ſearched?——Yes, there was nothing found upon them but this ſtick.

WILLIAM HOW ſworn.

I was ſent for to the publick-houſe, the priſoners were both hand-cuffed together, I took them to the Poultry Compter, after that I went into Mr. Barber's houſe, in the one pair of ſtairs room, and I ſaw theſe things on the floor, I ſearched the priſoners, there was a knife in Smith's pocket, a common ſized knife.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER TORRIES's DEFENCE.

The reaſon why we went into the cellar was, there is the ſign of a chandler's ſhop, we went in, and there was nobody at home, and directly after the proſecutor came in and we was frightened, over and above frightened, and we went out of the way for fear of being ſhot, or having ſome damage, there was nothing found upon us, I had not ſo much as a knife, I never went with intent to ſteal any thing, there is the ſign of a chandler's ſhop, and the door was wide open, then there came in ſome men which collared me.

Proſecutor. I keep a green ſhop.

Mr. Peat. Was there any locks or bolts on the inſide part of the houſe?——On the inſide there was a lock, but it had no key to it.

Court to the Conſtable. Did the woman ſay that the door was not locked?——Yes, ſhe told me it was upon the latch, and ſhe lifted up the latch with a ſkewer.

Why, is there a latch?——It is an iron latch.

Did you ſay the woman told you that the door was upon the latch, and it was not locked?——Yes.

Mrs. Barber. I had broke my key ſome time before, and my huſband and me know how to open it without the key, and nobody elſe.

Are you ſure you puſhed your hands againſt it, and it was ſhut?——Yes.

Conſtable. I ſaw the lock of the ſtreet-door, it is a ſpring lock, there was no lock on the room that I was in, I did not ſee any when I went up ſtairs, the room door was open, it was afterwards I carried the priſoner to the Compter.

MARY LEE ſworn.

I went about ten minutes before Mr. Barber cried out, and the door was faſt, I went for ſome potatoes and I puſhed at the door, and the door was faſt not ten minutes before.

Priſoner Torries. The door was quite open when I came there to buy ſome tobacco.

Court to Proſecutor. What ſign have you to the door?——Some half cheeſes near to the poſt of the door; I do not ſell cheeſe, I ſell greens.

The priſoner Torries called two witneſſes who gave him a good character.

The priſoner Smith called two witneſſes who gave him a good character.

Court. Was there room for any man to get in at the window?——Yes.

And are you ſure that the caſement was faſt?——Yes.

ISAAC TORRIES,
WILLIAM SMITH,
} GUILTY Death.

Court to Smith. What are you?——I have been to ſea about ſeven months.

Where do you live?——In Paternoſter-row, Spitalfields, with my mother.

Tried by the firſt London Jury, before Mr. JUSTICE NARES.

396. ELIZABETH VICKRY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 17th day of March laſt, twenty-two yards of printed cotton, value 40s. the property of Thomas Racey, privily in his ſhop.

And JOSEPH MARSHALL was indicted for receiving the ſame, knowing it to have been ſtolen.

The Witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the Priſoners.

THO-

THOMAS RACEY ſworn.

I am a linen draper and haberdaſher, No. 4, Smock-alley, Spitalfields, I know the priſoner Elizabeth Vickry, ſhe and two others came into my ſhop on the 17th of March laſt, about a quarter after eight at night, they all came in together, but ſeparated afterwards, and while I turned my back the priſoner went out of the ſhop, and before I had finiſhed ſerving, I heard the cry of ſtop thief, on which the priſoner was brought back, and a piece of cotton containing twenty-two yards: the cotton is mine.

Court. Do you recollect where it lay when the priſoner came into your ſhop?—On the corner of the counter with two other pieces, next to the opening, which leads up to a pair of ſtairs, that was near to where the priſoner ſtood, I did not ſee her take it, ſhe might be in the ſhop about three or four minutes.

You had not miſſed any thing till you heard the cry of ſtop thief, had you?—No, I was not ſure then that I had loſt any thing.

WILLIAM HARROW ſworn.

I was coming home about eight on Wedneſday night the 17th of March, I ſtopped the corner of Smock-alley, I heard ſomebody fall, and turning round I ſaw the priſoner fall down, with her hands flat on the ground, I ſaid, Lord bleſs me what a fall that woman has got, then I turned my head about and ſaw a man croſs the way to her, and lift her up as I thought, and when he went to lift her up, he took away from her this piece of cotton which I thought then to be a bundle, and that he had robbed the woman, he came running by me and puſhed by me, I caught hold of the ſkirts of his coat in Petticoat-lane, he dropped a piece of cotton, and I and two young women picked it up, and they cried that is Joe Marſhall, and I ſaid where is the woman, and they ſaid there ſhe goes, I purſued her and caught her, me and another young man run after the woman, Marſhall run away, when we came down the gateway again, we took hold of the woman, and brought her back, and delivered her to the conſtable, ſhe was not got above twenty yards.

How do you know for what purpoſe it was that Marſhall took the bundle?—He went to receive the things that ſhe had ſtole from the ſhop.

What makes you think ſo?—Becauſe I know him of old, they both live together as I have been told, they cohabit in one houſe together.

You do not know that of your own knowledge?—No, I cannot ſay of my own knowledge.

Did it appear to you to be a real fall, or was it affectation?—I do not know whether it was a real fall or pretended but ſhe fell before ſhe got paſt the window of Mr. Racey's ſhop.

ELIZABETH BURGESS ſworn.

I was ſtanding at my father's door talking to the young woman, and I heard ſomebody cry out ſtop thief; it is right acroſs the way, almoſt facing Mr. Racey's, and the priſoner Joſeph Marſhall came up to me with a bundle of cotton under his arm, the young woman that ſtood by me ſaid that was Joſeph Marſhall, and he immediately dropped the bundle, and I picked it up and gave it to two young men, one of whom is here, that is Harrow.

Priſoner Marſhall. My Lord, the man ſaid he picked up the bundle himſelf, and the woman ſays ſhe picked it up.

Court. I hear what they ſay.

HESTER LEGOU ſworn.

I was ſtanding at the door of the laſt witneſs, and Joſeph Marſhall came by with a piece of cotton under his arm, and I mentioned his name, and immediateiy he dropped a piece of cotton, that young woman picked it up, and gave it to a young man, that young man had hold of his coat.

BENJAMIN WARD ſworn.

I am the conſtable, I have the bundle, I know nothing at all about it, I was ſent for, and I took the woman priſoner, then I had information of Joſeph Marſhall, where he lived, as I was officer of that night, and on the 17th, about one or two o'clock in the morning, I went to his his lodgings and took him, and then he ſaid his name was Newman, the cotton was given to me at Mr. Racey's ſhop, (The cotton produced and depoſed to) this little piece of cotton was taken out of her pocket, which the proſecutor knows nothing about.

Court. Who knows that they cohabited together as man and wife?

Legou I know it.

PRISONER VICKRY's DEFENCE.

I was going through Smock-alley to buy a bit of meat, I buy and ſell old clothes, two women were looking at a ribbon, I went in with them, they bought a yard and a quarter, one of the young women ſaid it was too ſhort for her head, and I bought it of her, the proſecutor bid me go in and ſhew him which ribbon I meant, I ſaw a little boy with ſomething under his arm, and another ſlim young man came and took the property from him and run away with it, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief, and I run after them and was knocked down underneath the archway in Smock-alley, I live with my mother in Chriſtopher-alley, Spitalfields, ſhe is near, the priſoner at the bar is not the man that took the property, it was a ſlim lad in white clothes; it is very well known that this witneſs ſaid to a good many people, if I would give her and another a guinea a piece, ſhe would not be againſt us.

Legou. I never ſaid ſo in my life, he offered me ten guineas not to ſpeak the truth.

PRISONER MARSHALL's DEFENCE.

I am as innocent as the child unborn; ſhe is uſed to ſwearing.

Priſoner Vickry. Her mother hallood out, I am glad you are going to gaol, they had a warrant ſome time in the froſty weather, and Heſter Legou ſwore I hit her, which I did not, and ſhe was afraid I ſhould come againſt her, they ſaid I am glad you are going to gaol.

Court to Legou. How long have you known Marſhall and Vickry?—I am ſure I have known them four years.

What was this quarrel between you and them?——One time I was coming down and I had a very bad foot, and the pavement is very narrow, and this woman puſhed me off the pavement, and another came up and gave me three ſmacks on the face, I got a warrant for her.

Court to Racey. What is it ſhe ſays about going to ſhew you the ribbons?——Theſe two women were in the ſhop, and came again and bought a yard and half of ribbon, and this woman when ſhe went out, went with a pretence of looking for a ribbon, they are ſpread in the window; but inſtead of coming back ſhe went off.

ELIZABETH VICKRY, GUILTY Death.

JOSEPH MARSHALL, GUILTY.

Tranſported for fourteen years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

---

397. GEORGE ROBINSON, aged fourteen, GEORGE BANNISTER, aged ſixteen, JOHN NURSE, aged fourteen, were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of John Newen, about the hour of five in the afternoon, on the 26th of March laſt, no perſon being therein, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein, one marcella petticoat, value 8s. one child's dimity cloak, value 3s. one linen gown, value 1s. 6d. one pair of cotton ſtockings, value 6d. the property of the ſaid John.

ELIZABETH NEWEN ſworn.

I am wife of John Newen of Milbank, my huſband is a labouring man, on the 15th of March I went out from my houſe a little before five in the afternoon, I locked my door, I left nobody in the houſe, I was abſent about ten or eleven minutes, to the beſt of my knowledge, I went to my next door neighbour's, where two of my children were at play, I took my little one out of the cradle, and went to fetch them home, and there came a little girl, ſiſter-in-law to this woman, to know whether ſhe ſhould carry ſome tea, and as ſhe opened her door, and ſtood for a minute on the ſtep of the door, ſhe called out to me, Mrs. Newen, here is a boy getting out of your window, with your clothes under his arm, I immediately looked out and ſaw the three boys, one with the clothes; they were all out of the houſe when I ſaw them, I ſaw none get out of the houſe, I called ſtop thief, he that had the clothes threw them down and run away, they all three run away, the things mentioned in the indictment were taken up, they were all mine.

Court. Do you know any thing of theſe boys?—No, upon my life I do not, one of their faces I ſaw, that of Banniſter.

Was he one of the three that you ſaw running at the time your clothes were taken away?—Yes, when I went home my door was locked, and my key in my pocket, my window was cracked, and a piece of the pane was pulled out, and the window was unſcrewed, and ſhoved up and open, the things were taken out of a pan on the table, wet, as I had waſhed them the day before.

SUSANNAH SADLER ſworn.

I was coming out of my ſiſter's, and I ſaw the boy get out of the window.

What boy coming out of what window?—Him in the middle, that is Robinſon, he had clothes under his arm, and I hallooed out, and told Mrs. Newen, I ſaw them afterwards and knew them again, I ſaw them all three run.

Where were the other two when you ſaw one boy get out of the window?—Not four yards from the houſe, they were looking to ſee whether any body was coming.

Who picked up the bundle?—I picked up the bundle, and put it into the cheſt under the ſhop window, till Mrs. Newen came back.

RICHARD SADLER ſworn.

Mrs. Newen called out thieves, and I aſſiſted to take the priſoners, getting over a fence, and it being ſnowy, we traced them, and found George Banniſter, he had hid himſelf behind ſome Willows.

Court. Was it out of any road?—Yes, in a private field, fenced at both ends.

THOMAS ROLLS ſworn.

I was at work at the next houſe, and I heard the cry of ſtop thief, I followed, and at the top of the lane one went over ſome willows down the creek, by the ſide of the water, and juſt behind the willows, in the ſame field, the priſoner Banniſter was laid in the corner.

JOSEPH ISAAC ſworn.

I know no other of it only taking the priſoner Nurſe to the neat houſe, that is about a quarter of a mile off, he was out of the road, and he ſaid he had got there out of the ſnow, I run after him, and run before him, the people ſaid he had hid himſelf up in that field, I went there and deſired him to come out.

SAMUEL PAYNE ſworn.

I was in my maſter's yard, I heard the cry of ſtop thief, and I run after them, and at the top of the lane there was a turning to the right hand and to the left, then I loſt ſight of them for a few minutes, and I traced one, that is Robinſon, into a ditch behind a houſe about a quarter of a mile off.

PRISONER ROBINSON'S DEFENCE.

I was not near the place at that time, my mother takes in needle work, ſhe had three ſhirts to make, and ſhe could not finiſh them; ſhe ſent me to enquire for one Mrs. Wright, and as I was coming back I wanted to eaſe myſelf, and I went round there, and juſt as I was buttoning my breeches this man ſaid come out, the gentlewoman ſaid ſhe did know whether I was one, and ſhe bid me go, and that man came and took me, and tied my hands to theſe lads hands, and the tide was very high, and they ſaid let us throw them into the Thames.

PRISONER BANNISTER's DEFENCE.

It was a very ſnowy day, I had no work to do, and I went to look after my mother's aſs, I was going along the bank running to keep myſelf warm, after I had got a good way paſt this woman's door, ſhe cried out, ſtop thief, and I ſtood up by ſome willows becauſe it ſnowed, a little time after two men came and fetched me out, the gentlewoman ſaid ſhe could not ſwear to me, but ſhe believed I was one.

The priſoner Banniſter called three witneſſes to his character.

PRISONER NURSE's DEFENCE.

I was ſent of an errand over Chelſea-bridge, and it ſnowed and rained very hard, and I ſtood up for ſhelter, and they brought me to the gentlewoman, and ſhe ſaid ſhe had nothing againſt me, and then I was going away, and they came and caught hold of me again, and threatened to chuck me into the Thames, my friends did not think my trial would come on to-day.

398. JOHN PETTITT and JOHN AYRES were indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of William Bailey, about the hour of eight in the night, on the 28th day of March laſt, and burglariouſly ſtealing therein one flute, called an Engliſh flute, value 4s. and two fifes, value 1s. the property of the ſaid William.

WILLIAM BAILEY ſworn.

I live at No. 42, St. Martin's Le Grand, I am a flute maker, I loſt two flutes, I do not remember the day of the month, but it was the day Mr. Pitt came into the city, my wife laid in, and ſomebody knocked at the door, and my apprentice went down, and I followed and ſaw my window was broke, and a flute was taken and two fifes, I ſaw my property at the watch-houſe that night.

Mr. Roſe, Priſoner's Council. When had you ſeen that window before?——An hour before.

Are you ſure it was ſo late as that when you had ſeen it?—Yes.

It was at eight in the evening?—Yes.

Your doors were not faſtened, were they?——The lock was let go, it goes with a ſpring lock, and always faſtens.

Whether this door was ſhut or no, you do not know?——No.

WILLIAM JACOMB ſworn.

I live facing the proſecutor, I was ſent out to change a guinea for my miſtreſs in Angel-ſtreet, and as I came back I heard ſome people ſinging a ſong in St. Martin's Le Grand about Pitt, ſo I went and heard it, and I heard a pane of glaſs break, and I watched theſe two lads, and I ſaw them pull out the fifes out of the window, the little boy pulled them out of the window, and the big one put them into a ſack, when they had done they walked away, and I knocked at the door, and the apprentice came down ſtairs, and him and me followed them into Fleet-lane, and there they went into an ironmonger's ſhop to ſell them, and they played on them to try them.

Who played on them?——The thieves did, then they came out of that houſe, and went into the Cock ale-houſe, they did not ſell any in Fleet-lane that I know of, and they were taken to the watch-houſe.

What were they in?——They were in a ſack.

And they were theſe two priſoners, were they?——Yes.

Mr. Roſe. Had you ever ſeen theſe lads before?—Never in my life.

Are you very ſure that they are the lads?—Yes I am very ſure they are.

You was attending to the ſinging about Mr. Pitt.——Yes, I went up to hear it, but inſtead of hearing it I heard a pane of glaſs crack.

There was a good many people about this ſong?—About ten or twelve.

Was there any body between you and the window?—Nobody.

At what diſtance might you ſtand?——About three or four yards from the window.

Was there any lamps in that neighbourhood?——Yes, one facing.

Did you follow them immediately?——Yes.

Were the boys that you thought took theſe things from the window, out of your ſight before you got to the houſe?—No.

JAMES AMPLIN ſworn.

I followed the priſoners along with the laſt witneſs into an old iron ſhop, we ſtood oppoſite the houſe, and heard them playing, then they came out and went down to Fleet-market, to the Cock alehouſe, there they went in and had the things out, and we ſent for Mr. Baillie and took them up.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER PETTITT'S DEFENCE.

I am as innocent as the child unborn, I never had any flutes or fifes.

A WITNESS ſworn.

I took the little boy and went into the Cock, and he pointed to theſe two lads, one of them had a bag, I took hold of one of them by the collar, and delivered the other to the watchman, and as they were croſſing the way they dropped the flutes from them, and a coach run over them and broke them.

Court. Then the flutes were not in the bag?—No, they were wrapped up in ſome part of them, I do not know in what part.

Did you hear them fall?—I did.

You cannot tell from which of them they fell?——I believe they fell from Pettitt.

Court to Priſoner Pettitt. What are you?——A ſhoe-maker.

PRISONER AYRE'S DEFENCE.

I am as innocent as the child unborn, I have no friends to ſpeak for me.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, there is no difference in point of law between breaking a pane of glaſs and breaking open a houſe; but to be ſure in point of enormity of offence there is a very ſubſtantial difference; therefore, you would not incline to preſs a fact of this ſort beyond what it does neceſſarily import; the boy ſays he heard the cracking of glaſs while he was liſtening to the ſinging; he did not ſee it done; ſomebody elſe might have broke the window, and if after this pane of glaſs had been broke, one of theſe boys had taken the things out, he would have been Guilty of ſtealing them, but not of breaking and entering the houſe; therefore, perhaps you will think it ſufficient if you find them Guilty of ſtealing, but not of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

JOHN PETTITT, }
JOHN AYRES, } GUILTY

Of ſtealing, but not of breaking and entering the dwelling houſe.

339. DRUMMOND CLARK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 28th day of February laſt, five guineas, value 5l. 5s. and forty three ſhillings in monies numbered, the monies of Ralph Hollingſworth, privily from the perſon of Mary his wife.

Mr. Garrow thus opened the caſe.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of counſel for the proſecutor, the indictment as you have heard, imputes to the priſoner the commiſſion of a capital offence, I ſhall not detain you at this hour of the night with a long ſpeech in opening the proſecution, the circumſtances of the caſe are extremely ſhort, and I am afraid extremely concluſive, and it will be your duty to decide upon it: the proſecutor is a butcher in the pariſh of Chriſt-Church, the priſoner had been a cuſtomer of the proſecutor's for ſome time, but as Mrs. Hollingſworth had at various times loſt money from her perſon to a monſtrous amount, and particularly on a Saturday, ſhe was induced to take ſome ſteps, in order to find out by what means it could be taken, and there was a ſingularity in the conduct of the priſoner, that induced her to ſuſpect her: you all know it is the cuſtom of thoſe that trade with butchers and market people, to have their things ſent home, but that never was the choice of the priſoner, and to Mrs. Hollingſworth down to the time of her apprehenſion, the place of her abode was never known: Mrs. Hollingſworth, by the advice of a neighbour, marked twenty-one ſhillings and a guinea, which was marked in a way that is not at all liable to a miſtake, for that neighbour put upon it a ſtamp with his name at length; in the evening of the Saturday, the priſoner, as was her cuſtom, came to the ſhop of Mrs. Hollingſworth, and ſhe dealt with her for ſome goods in the way of her buſineſs, and in a very few minutes, when the priſoner came to pay for the goods, the proſecutrix diſcovered that two of the ſhillings which were delivered to her in payment by the priſoner, had almoſt the inſtant before been in the proſecutrix's own pocket; this was a little too ſtrong; but Mrs. Hollingſworth alſo found that all her money, to the amount of ſeven or eight pounds, was gone, and the priſoner was of courſe immediately ſtopped. Gentlemen, if theſe circumſtances are proved to your ſatisfaction, you muſt of neceſſity find the priſoner Guilty; but on the other hand, I for one ſhall be extremely happy, if you ſhould have any ſerious doubt in the caſe, and I aſſure you I ſhall not at all lament if you can find any ground to acquit the priſoner.

MARY HOLLINGSWORTH ſworn.

I am wife of Ralph Hollingſworth, the priſoner dealt a great while at my ſhop, ſhe was there on Saturday the 28th of February.

Mr. Garrow. At what time?—She was there in the morning, and bought two pieces of beef of me, which ſhe agreed and paid for before ſhe went out of the ſhop; I aſked her if ſhe ſhould want any thing more, ſhe told me to ſave her a ſweet bread; after ſhe was gone I found my money was gone: the gentleman that lived facing me, deſired me to mark ſome money, he marked twenty-one ſhillings and one guinea with his own name; I put that money on one ſide, in my ſide pocket, in a ſeparate pocket, not my common pocket.

Had you that money in your pocket when the priſoner came to your ſhop in the evening?—I put the money in my pocket; ſhe dealt with me for a ſweet bread and a bit of veal, and paid me with two of thoſe very marked ſhillings; I am very ſure I had not given them in change, I had them in my pocket when ſhe came in, I ſaw the mark upon them; I then ſaid to her, now I have caught you, I took her into the kitchen and ſearched her, and found nineteen ſhillings that were marked in the morning, and one guinea, which, with two ſhillings ſhe gave me, made up the whole money: ſhe ſaid ſhe had them in change at the grocer's; as to the guinea, ſhe could not ſay any thing of it.

(The two ſhillings produced.)

——— LANDY ſworn.

I am a neighbour of Mrs. Hollingſworth's, ſhe was telling me the affair what had happened, ſhe gave me twenty-one ſhillings and a guinea, I took them backwards to the anvil and marked them with this punch, which I had never uſed before, it is what I mark lancets with in common, but it is a new mark, it never had ſtruck any thing before; thoſe are two of the ſhillings I marked.

What time of the day did you mark them?—About half paſt eleven in the forenoon.

Court to Mrs. Hollingſworth. You have a good deal of buſineſs on the Saturday?—Yes.

You took a good deal of money in the courſe of that day?—Yes.

And changed a good deal?—Yes.

Are you ſure you gave none of thoſe twenty-one ſhillings in change in the courſe of that day?——Yes, becauſe I did not put it in my pocket apron, I put it in my ſide pocket.

Do not you take change out of that pocket as well as the other?—No.

Did you put no other money in that pocket as well as the other?——No.

—— CARR ſworn.

I was preſent when the priſoner was at Mrs. Hollingſworth's.

Mr. Garrow. When was that?—In the evening of the 28th of February.

What paſſed in your obſervation?——When I came in, the priſoner at the bar and Mrs. Hollingſworth were ſtanding together, the priſoner took two ſhillings to pay Mrs. Hollingſworth, and rubbed them as if they were dirty; ſays the proſecutrix, are not you a bad woman, you have robbed me ſeveral times, but now I have caught you: we took her backwards into the back room, there were ſeveral neighbours preſent, there were nineteen ſhillings and a guinea, and I think two or three ſhillings beſides; I aſked her how ſhe came by them; ſays ſhe I had them in change; I aſked her how ſhe came by the guinea, and ſhe ſaid nothing to that; ſhe was a going to put ſomething in her boſom, and it was a glove, and there were three guineas and ſome ſilver in it; Mrs. Hollingſworth ſaid, if the money is mine, there is one guinea black of the tail ſide, and when ſhe ſaw it, ſhe ſaid ſhe would ſwear to the guinea; the ſhillings all bore the ſame mark.

—— WARD ſworn.

I was ſent for to take the priſoner into cuſtody, Mr. Carr delivered me the money.

Court to Carr. Was that money the ſame you had from the priſoner?——Yes.

Mr. Sheridan, Priſoner's Council. My Lord, I waved aſking any queſtions till the money was produced. Mrs. Hollingſworth, you ſaid you put this particular ſilver that was marked, into a particular pocket?——Yes.

You ſay you ſuſpected the priſoner, did not that put you on your guard?—No, Sir, I wiſhed to catch the priſoner out.

You had no particular ſuſpicion of her at all?——No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing of it, for my huſband changed a ten pound note on the Friday, and I received money of him to pay away, and he gave it me, I know nothing of it.

Court. Have you that perſon here that you took it of?—No, my Lord, I cannot, he is not in town.

The priſoner called four witneſſes, who all gave her a very good character.

Court to Proſecutrix. Did you ſee the priſoner take any thing from your pocket?—I did not.

Are you ſure of that?——I am ſure of that.

Mr. Carr. I only want to inform the Court——

Mr. Garrow. If you wiſh to ſay any thing againſt the priſoner, I do not wiſh to call you.

Court. You do very right Mr. Garrow, it would not be proper now.

GUILTY Death.

She was humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury and the proſecutrix.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

400. JAMES STEWART was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 7th of April, one piece of ſtriped bed ticking, containing ſeventy yards, value 7l. the property of Robert Gillow and John Gillow.

JAMES JAMES ſworn.

I am porter to Robert and John Gillow, No. 106, Oxford-ſtreet; on the 7th of April, about ſeven o'clock, I was bringing a piece of ticking from one Mr. Limes in Milk-ſtreet in my cart; I ſtopped at the Crown and Mitre, in Little Ruſſel-ſtreet, Bloomſbury; when I went in the piece was in the cart, I left the cart about two minutes, and when I returned to the cart, I found the piece was miſſing, there was but that one piece; on miſſing it I looked about the ſtreets to ſee if I could ſee any body, the people came out of the houſe to look for it, and I went home to my maſter and told him; afterwards I ſaw the advertiſement in the Daily Advertiſer about the priſoner at the bar being detained with a piece of ticking on his ſhoulders; I went in conſequence of that to the office in Hide-ſtreet, where the advertiſement mentioned, that was the Saturday following when I went to the office in Hide-ſtreet.

Who did you find there?—The priſoner and the ticking were both there; I did not know the piece of ticking.

GEORGE MEECHAM ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoner on Wedneſday night the 7th of April, about nine, I met him coming down Portpool-lane, and he paſſed me with this on his ſhoulder; I knew him and purſued him, and he run away; I ſtopped him; he run knowing of me; I overtook him in Bradſhaw's-rents, and then he threw this piece down off of his ſhoulders, I ſaw him drop it down, I called out ſtop thief! and ſome people came out with a candle, and he run into the corner and I took him; I never loſt ſight of him, there was no thoroughfare in the court, I took up the piece of ticking and him by the collar, I took him to Clerkenwell Bridewell, and the piece of ticking was advertiſed.

Priſoner. Had not you that piece of ticking in your arms when you came and laid hold of me at the bottom of the court?—Yes, you had dropped it.

——— LIMES ſworn.

This is the piece of ticking that I delivered to the firſt witneſs James James, there is the maker's name and my own private mark what it coſt me, and the day of the month when it was bought; I have no doubt of it at all; it was on Wedneſday the 7th of this month.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I never had the piece at all, I had been to my ſiſter's, I never ſaw the piece till I ſaw it at the Juſtices; I have no witneſſes.

Court. This depends intirely on the evidence of Meecham, and it is right to tell you in this caſe, that there is no reward, ſo that the witneſs comes under no influence.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

401. SIMON YOUNG was indicted, for that he, well knowing that one Robert Saltmaſh had lately ſerved our Lord the King on board the Swallow, and ſuppoſing that certain wages and pay were due to him for ſuch ſervice, on the 12th of April with force and arms feloniouſly, willingly, and knowingly, did perſonate and falſly aſſume the name and character of the ſaid Robert, ſuppoſing he was intitled to ſuch wages and pay then ſuppoſed to be due and payable from our Lord the King, for and on account of the ſaid ſervice, againſt the ſtatute.

A Second Count, for perſonating and falſly aſſuming the name and character of the ſaid Robert Saltmaſh in order to receive his wages and pay.

JAMES SLADE ſworn.

I am the clerk to the treaſurer for payment of ſeamens wages; on the 12th of April the priſoner applied to me in the name of Robert Saltmaſh, of his Majeſty's ſhip the Swallow.

Court. Did he apply as being the man himſelf, or in behalf of the man?—As the man himſelf, and he produced two certificates.

(The certificates read, ſigned "J. Gun, "maſter, April the 9th, 1784; and Francis "Bever, late purſer of the Swallow."

Mr. Sylveſter, Council for Proſecution. What did you do next?—We found on the books that the wages had been received before, and that Saltmaſh was returned, dead.

Who did they appear to be paid to?——To a Mr. Lawſon of our office, to James Ingliſh Lawſon, for William Hall, attorney to the widow Elizabeth, adminiſtratrix.

What did you do then?—Mr. Lawſon not being in the office to get at the adminiſtration, I deſired the priſoner to ſet down and I would ſend to the office to get his papers ſearched of the different ſhips, and it there appeared that Robert Saltmaſh was diſcharged from the Huſſar to the Alfred, and was diſcharged from the Alfred to ſick quarters, and died in April 1782; that appeared from the Sick and Hurt Office; when I had theſe proper things, I took him into cuſtody, he acknowledged his name was not Robert Saltmaſh, but Simon Young.

Priſoner. I told my name before I was in cuſtody.

Mr. Sylveſter. Are you ſure he came in the name of Robert Saltmaſh, or Young?—Of Robert Saltmaſh, the identical perſon of Robert Saltmaſh.

Priſoner. Did I make any attempt to eſcape?——He did, and was taken by our porter.

WILLIAM WADE ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Fielding.

I belong to the Navy Office, this is the Swallow pay book.

Turn to the Swallow; is there any more than one name of Robert Saltmaſh there?——There is only one.

What is the entry in that after the name of Robert Saltmaſh?—He appeared to enter in the Swallow the firſt of October 1780, and to be diſcharged the 24th of Auguſt from this ſhip, and it appears that he died at the hoſpital at Barbadoes; ten pounds four ſhillings and eleven-pence was paid on the 11th of September 1783, to Mr. J. I. Lawſon, attorney of the widow and adminiſtratrix.

Court. I do not think the entry is evidence of the death if that was material, but as to the time the man ſerved, the ſhips books is the beſt evidence, but in this caſe it is not material.

FRANCIS BEVER ſworn.

Was you an officer on board the Swallow?—Yes.

Do you remember a man of the name of Saltmaſh?——Yes, the priſoner is not the man.

Were there any wages due to Saltmaſh, do you know?——There certainly was.

Was that the man that you gave the certificate to?——No.

Court. Is that your certificate?——No.

If you knew the perſon of that Robert Saltmaſh who was on board, did you give a certificate to another perſon, who came in his name?—I did not recollect the perſon of Saltmaſh then, I knew there was a perſon on board of his name; this priſoner brought on the 9th of April laſt, a young man with him, who, he ſaid, wanted a certificate; I perfectly remembered his face, as being on board the ſhip, I aſked him his name, he told me his name was Robert Saltmaſh, I thought him then to be the man.

Court. Then you clearly did not know the perſon of Saltmaſh?——I did not recollect it then, ſince that time I have ſeen ſome other Gentlemen that belonged to the ſhip, and I aſked them.

Court. You muſt not ſpeak of what other people told you; can you yourſelf recollect any circumſtance ſince that time that brings the perſon of Saltmaſh to your remembrance?——Yes, that he was a littler man, and rather ſubject to a decay in his conſtitution, and a man who was not a perfect ſeaman.

That you knew at the time?—I did not recollect it at the time, I knew the man's face that came for the certificate perfectly well, I did not recollect he was the man.

Do you know this man's face too?——Yes, he belonged to the Swallow.

Court to Wade. Does it appear whether he had received any wages in his own name? Yes, he had received his own wages.

Priſoner. He certifies that I did not forge theſe certificates, and he did not give them to me.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

Pleaſe your Lordſhip, the firſt time I met this man was going up to Captain Byron's to get a certificate for the Proſerpine frigate, and he aſked me if I knew him, I told him I belonged to the Swallow, he ſaid, do not you remember me, he ſaid his name was Robert Saltmaſh; he aſked me if I knew where any of the ſigning officers lived, he aſked me to go with him there, I went with him to Mr. Bever, and he wrote the certificate directly, I went with him to Mr. Gunn, and he gave me a certificate; I went to Captain Byron's and the next day I was going by Temple-bar, and I met this man, he aſked me if I was going to ſtay in town, and he ſaid he had a certificate, to get from the Captain of the Daphne down at Chatham, and had no money, and he would truſt me with his certificate, and I could receive the pay; I told him it was of a bad conſequence to me to venture or think of, he ſaid you know they are not forged, ſo I went to get my own certificate, and I came to the office and aſked for the Swallow's books, I went in directly, and handed over the certificate, and the books were overhauled, and he aſked me directly had I ever a wife, I ſaid I had no wife that would take that, I told him my name was Simon Young, and I gave him two certificates in my own name.

Court. But Mr. Slade ſays you told him your name was Saltmaſh and not Young?——Upon my word I did not.

Court to Slade. Recollect back as diſtinctly as you can, becauſe in truth, the whole caſe turns upon it; did this man apply to you as on the behalf of Robert Saltmaſh?——I aſked him his name, and he ſaid his name was Robert Saltmaſh.

Did he at any time before you ſent for a peace officer, or threatened to take him into cuſtody, ſay what his own name was?—Never till he was in cuſtody, when he found he could not make his eſcape, then the Commiſſioners aſked him what his name was, and then when he was threatened in the office, he ſaid his name was Simon Young.

Did he know the conſtable was ſent for?—I believe he did.

Are you ſure of that?——He muſt have heard me order the conſtable.

Wade. I was preſent, he ſaid his name was Robert Saltmaſh, and did not acknowledge his name was Young, till he was threatened to be ſecured.

Court to Priſoner. Have you any witneſſes to call?—Priſoner. I am a ſea-faring man, I have no witneſſes, I have no one here to give me a character; if Capt. Byron was here I could get a character of him.

Court to Slade. You have been clerk in the Navy-office ſome time, is it uſual to take certificates from the purſer?—I always pay great reſpect to the purſer, being more connected with men's faces, than any other officer, but the Captain is the proper officer: regularly the certificates ſhould come from the Captain.

You pay on that certificate?—Yes.

Court to Bever. You have not been ſufficiently careful in this caſe, it was extremely imprudent, at leaſt, to grant ſuch a certificate as this; if ever you fall into a ſituation to give ſuch a certificate again, you muſt be very careful to know of your own knowledge that it is the man; or elſe you expoſe the party to be defrauded, and aſſiſt the other party in the further proſecution of the plan he has in contemplation.

Priſoner. Pleaſe your Lordſhip, the gentleman now has two certificates, they will ſerve me for a character in the ſhips in which I have been.

Court to Slade. Was there any promiſe of favour made to the priſoner if he ſpoke the truth?—Nothing of that kind.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, the priſoner is indicted for perſonating Robert

Saltmaſh, ſuppoſing him to be entitled to wages; this offence is made a capital felony by the act of parliament now before the Court, in the reign of his late majeſty, and deprived of the benefit of clergy: the words of the act are, any perſon intitled, or ſuppoſed to be intitled, to receive any wages or prize money: In this caſe if the priſoner had not himſelf acknowledged that he was not Robert Saltmaſh, but Simon Young, I ſhould have thought it neceſſary to have produced better evidence than this Bever, to prove that Robert Saltmaſh was either dead, or that the priſoner was not the perſon.

Slade. He came into the office and ſaid, he had wages due for the Swallow, he was aſked his name and he ſaid Robert Saltmaſh, then the books were opened.

Court to Slade. A very ſmall variation in the putting the queſtion will produce the ſame anſwer, as thus, if you had aſked this man, O, you apply for wages, in what name; that queſtion would have produced the ſame anſwer; then you would have ſaid, O you apply in the name of Robert Saltmaſh?——I perfectly recollect, for the men are crouding about the door, ſometimes an hundred, they come in two or three at a time, they aſk them what ſhip, ſuch a ſhip, what is your name, then they give the name, and then they turn to the books.

Court. In that caſe, after the name is given in, was there any thing further than the general queſtion; did you aſk him whether he was the man?—We aſked him if his name was Robert Saltmaſh, and he ſaid Yes.

Wade. It was repeated twice.

GUILTY Death.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

402. JOHN CROUCH was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of April, one pink ſilk gown, value 20s. one pair of ſhoes value 12d. one linen ſhirt, value 2s. one handkerchief, value 6d. one waiſtcoat, value 2s. one pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 2s. the property of John Kingham.

JOHN KINGHAM ſworn.

I am a carrier from Eſher to London; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment from the Cock in the Haymarket, on the 6th of April; I was employed to carry them on the 5th of April, I came up at night from Eſher, and I had theſe parcels with others; I did not know what was in it at that time; one parcel I brought from one Mrs. Crawley, and the other two parcels from William Crawley, I left them in the cart at the inn, and the next morning this man the priſoner got over the tops of the gates, and took them out.

But you did not ſee that?——No.

Only tell me what you know yourſelf?——I know them to be the parcels, I miſſed them the next morning at half after five, the priſoner was taken before I miſſed the parcels.

WILLIAM COLLINS ſworn.

I got up rather ſooner than ordinary that morning, about twenty-five minutes paſt five, and as I was coming down ſtairs there is a window looks into the barn where the cart ſtood, I ſaw the priſoner taking three parcels out of the cart one at a time, and he laid them down on the ground till he had got the whole three out; then he took them up and run up the gateway, I came down, it was about ſix ſtairs to the door, and I ſaw him put one parcel under the gate, he ſaid, here, James, take this parcel firſt; I ſaid I will take you firſt, and I run up and caught hold of him; when I ſpoke to him he threw the two parcels down which he had left, the third parcel was gone; the two parcels are here.

(The things opened.)

Court to Proſecutor. You do not know what was in the parcel?—Only as the perſon told me that ſent them.

Is that perſon here?——No.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I got up about half paſt five, I met a parcel of men that had been voting for Fox and Hood, I hallooed out, Fox for ever, and they knocked me down; then I ſaid, Hood for ever, and then they knocked me down again, and they took my hat and threw it over the gate, and I went for it.

Court. What are you?——A bricklayer, I have witneſſes to ſpeak for me, one Mr. Bowen.

(Mr. Bowen called, but did not appear.)

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe things are charged to be the property of Kingham, for being in his care and cuſtody, he had, in conſideration of law, ſufficient property to defend them againſt all perſons but the true owner.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. BARON EYRE.

403. ANDREW GOUDRY was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 19th of April, three ſhillings and eight-pence halfpenny, in monies numbered, the monies of John Wilſon.

I am a publican, I keep the Bear and Ragged Staff, the corner of Bear-ſtreet, Leiceſter-fields, the priſoner lodged at my houſe a full year and a quarter, or near a year and half; I miſſed money, and I put in about five or ſix ſhillings about three weeks ago, and about fifteen or ſixteen days ago; I do not recollect the day of the week, I firſt miſſed any ſoon after Lady Day; laſt Monday morning I miſſed the money mentioned in the indictment, a witneſs and I were together, I had ſet up for ſix nights to watch, and we planted ourſelves in a room where there is a glaſs door fronts the till, and we heard the priſoner between the hours of five and ſix go down ſtairs, and into the tap-room, then he turned out, and went into the bar; I immediately heard him unlock the till, and take out the money at three different times, and lock it again; I immediately went out and ſeized him.

Court. How much money had been in your till the night before?—Eight ſhillings in halfpence, and ſome of them marked; there were four of them that were marked which I can ſwear to, they are here; we took him to the watch-houſe, and there we ſearched him, we found four ſhillings in halfpence and two farthings, three ſhillings and eightpence halfpenny I miſſed out of the till.

Were any of theſe halfpence that you found in his pocket, ſo marked that you could know them?——Yes.

Were they the ſame halfpence you had of him?——Yes.

Have they been in your poſſeſſion ever ſince?——Yes, they were never out of this bag till this moment. (The halfpence ſhewn to the Court.) The crooked halfpence I know without the mark, two of theſe halfpence had marks on them, and I wrote down the marks in the paper before.

You are ſure you did not ſet down theſe marks ſince you loſt them?—Yes.

——— JONES ſworn.

I watched with the laſt witneſs, I ſet up with him; I heard the priſoner come down ſtairs and go into the tap-room, and come out of the tap-room and go into the bar, and unlocked the till and took out the halfpence, and locked the till again; I did not diſtinguiſh more than once, I heard the halfpence chink, I went in with the laſt witneſs and ſecured him, there were found in his pockets four ſhillings and three-pence halfpenny.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

Court to Proſecutor. What is this man?——He is a carpenter, I took him to be as honeſt a man as ever lived, I would have truſted him in any part of my houſe without the leaſt ſuſpicion.

Court to Priſoner. How comes you have nobody to attend here to give you a character.

Proſecutor. I believe him to be a very honeſt man except this; he had four guineas and a half in his box, and a dollar, and his maſter owed him four guineas.

Court. Is he a ſingle man?——For any thing I know, my Lord.

Priſoner. I am a married man.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

404. SAMUEL HAWKINS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th of April, four ſheets, value 20s. two blankets, value 8s. one large braſs mortar, value 2s. one peſtle, value 12d. two candleſticks, value 3s. twenty pounds weight of bacon, value 4s. four and a half yards of cloth, value 2s. the property of Thomas Sanders in his dwelling houſe.

THOMAS SANDERS ſworn.

The priſoner at the bar came the 2d of April to my houſe, and aſked for a lodging, he brought ſome meat in his hand, he ſaid, he had been making particular enquiry about me, my wife broiled his meat for ſupper, he went to bed about duſk, I was buſy at work; when I came in I told my wife he looked more like a thief than any thing elſe; he behaved very well that day and the next night; which was Saturday night, he went to bed very ſoon, and he got up that night and went out, my wife heard him.

You did not hear him?—No, I did not, on Sunday the 4th I got up very early, he had opened two doors, one of which was locked and barred; when I got up I found the door open where he ſlept, I thought he was a thief, and the things were taken that is mentioned in the indictment, and from the mantle-piece over the tap-room he had taken a very large braſs peſtle and mortar, and a pair of large candleſticks, I ſearched a little further in my hurry before I had any clothes upon me; he beſpoke a bit of bacon to keep him the next week, inſtead of which he had ſtolen all the bacon, and there was a parcel of pieces of linen put up in an old pillow caſe; there were three beds in the room he ſlept in, he had one to himſelf, one was empty, and the other a poor old man of fourſcore laid in, there were four ſheets and two blankets; when I came down in the morning, the door was unlocked, and he gone, and all the things gone, and the door ſhut after him, it was unbolted, the bar down, and the bolts drawn; I happened to go to Brentford market, and ſaw the priſoner; I found none of the things, the priſoner was taken up on the Tueſday following, about eleven, I took him near Turnham Green, going into the country; I took him to the Pack-horſe; the firſt thing I ſaid was, here you are, I have been many a mile after you, and I will ſwear to you, he ſaid nothing, but hung down his head.

THOMAS WATKINS ſworn.

I know nothing but ſtopping him on the road, he owned in coming at the top of the coach that he had the man's things, and that he had ſold them.

Was there any promiſes made uſe of?—No, he ſaid he had no accomplices, that he took away the things himſelf, and had ſold them.

Did not you tell him it would be better for him to confeſs?——I did not, and theſe things were found upon him at Bow-ſtreet Office, this cord, and here is a picklock key.

(The things depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The man took four guineas and a half from me, when I got up in the morning and the door was unbolted at the foot of the ſtairs, I heard a man in the back room, I thought it was the landlord, I got up at four in the morning, I called and had no anſwer, I paid the landlord over night, and went away in the morning without any anſwer at all; I have no witneſſes.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 20s.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

405. JOHN TAYLOR and WILLIAM HOBBS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 6th day of March laſt, one bay mare price £4. the property of Richard Humphries.

RICHARD HUMPHRIES ſworn.

I loſt a bay mare on the 6th day of March laſt, off Finchley Common, I ſaw her a day or two before, I went home when I miſſed her, and one Seaſons brought her from London, ſhe was my mare.

WILLIAM SEASONS ſworn.

On the 6th of March, about 7 o'clock I was ſtanding at my door, I keep a publick houſe oppoſite the new Seſſions Houſe Clerkenwell-green? I ſaw the priſoner Taylor, leading a mare, and the other priſoner Hobbs was then on the pavement, he ſaid, bring it this way, we ſhall get more for it here than any where elſe; they led her down to Hockley in the Hole, to one Paris, a horſe boiler, I ſaw them both ſtanding at the gate, I then returned back to my own houſe from there, and called up my wife, and I went back and ſaw Mr. Paris coming, for where they boiled them is down Black-boy Alley, ſays I, Mr. Paris there is a horſe that is in your yard that is a ſtolen one, ſays he, the ſervant has ſent for me to look at him; I went with him and the mare ſtood there, and the men were over at the public houſe, I deſired Paris to aſk them ſome queſtions, the priſoner Taylor ſaid, he brought it from Hornſey, and that there was no fear of his buying the mare, for ſhe was worn out and broken winded, and very apt to lay down under a load. Mr. Paris ſaid, if they could bring any body to prove that they came honeſtly by the mare he would buy her, the priſoner Hobbs ſaid if you will go with me into Saint John's-ſtreet, I will bring witneſſes, they went into Saint John's-ſtreet and returned, I ſtood with the other not taking any notice that I was an officer, Paris returned, ſays he, Mr. Seaſons this young man bears a good character, I ſaid I was not ſatisfied, I returned and told the priſoner Taylor, ſays I, young man this is a ſtolen mare, and the man is in cuſtody, ſays he, I did not ſteal it myſelf but it was Hobbs that ſtole it.

What did you tell him would be the conſequence if he told you the truth?—In order to get it out of him whether it was ſo or not, I told him that if the horſe was ſtolen to go away, and he got up inſtantly, that was while Hobbs was gone with Paris, I then took the priſoner Taylor to my houſe, I ſaw Paris coming down I could ſee him out of my door, I handcuffed Taylor and took him to New Priſon, I met Paris with Hobbs, ſays I, Mr. Paris take hold of him, it is a ſtolen horſe, I put them both into New Priſon, I went and acquainted the Magiſtrates with what had paſſed, and they both owned that the horſe was a ſtolen horſe.

Did they ſay where they had ſtolen him?—They ſaid they took him from Finchley Common, I aſked them who it belonged to they ſaid they did not know.

Court. Was there any promiſes or threats made uſe of?—None only what I have mentioned.

Are you ſure of it?—Yes, I went to ſeek after the owner of the horſe, and at Holloway turnpike I ſaw a man who directed me to ſeveral people that were drinking, and when I told them, they ſaid, they ſhould as ſoon have thought of the beſt people in the country being guilty as them, they gave them a very good character, and upon that character I hope I ſhall be called.

JOHN CHERVILL ſworn.

I am a ſervant of Mr. Pariſh's, on Saturday morning a little before ſeven Hobbs offered me a horſe for ſale, ſo I aſked Hobbs the price of the horſe, he aſked fourteen ſhillings, with that I bid him half a guinea, and then eleven ſhillings, then he allowed it to me for twelve ſhillings, I told him I would have it at twelve ſhillings, with that Taylor ſaid that is too little; I bought the horſe of Hobbs for twelve ſhillings, I took the horſe out of Taylor's hands and I took it to the yard, I told them to go over to the publick houſe and there wait, and then I would come and pay them for it, in the mean time they were waiting I ſent for my maſter, and he came with a conſtable.

Are you ſure that theſe men are the young men that brought the horſe?—Yes.

What might that mare be worth?—She was in foal, I ſuppoſe three or four pounds.

How came you to bid half a guinea for her?—They told me that it was broken-winded, I had a ſuſpicion it was not an honeſt horſe and therefore I deſired them to wait, and I ſent for my maſter, this horſe was the ſame that Seaſons had from our yard.

Court to Proſecutor. Was the mare that Seaſons brought home to you yours?—Yes.

You are clear in that?—Yes, I had her about four years, ſhe had cropped ears, ſhe was a bay colour.

What feet had ſhe?—She had one white leg behind.

Any blaze on her face?—No.

Any ſaddle marks?—A little behind by the weight of the ſadle, a ſhortiſh mane and tail, a ſwitch tail.

PRISONER HOBBS's DEFENCE.

This Mr. Seaſons ſaid this young man was in cuſtody, and he put the handcuffs upon me, and he ſaid now I had the handcuffs on he would ſend me about my buſineſs.

Seaſons. He told me in the houſe oppoſite Haris's, and I did not put the handcuffs on till I got him to my houſe.

—— WOODWARD ſworn.

I am a butcher at Whetſtone, I have known both the priſoners ever ſince they were born, one is a collar maker and the other is a labourer's ſon, they are ſons of two widows, one of them has worked at his trade, and the other in the character of a gentleman's ſervant, he lived laſt with one Mr. Ellis in Whetſtone, I believe his maſter is gone abroad, I never heard a word amiſs of either of them before this, relative to thieving, or any thing of the kind.

—— COOPER ſworn.

I live at Whetſtone; I knew both the priſoners from children, I ſerved my time with Hobbs's father, I never knew either of them do any offence, they had both good characters.

JAMES SMITH ſworn.

I live in Whetſtone; I know them both from their infancy, they had both very good characters, I have never ſeen them at the publick houſe above four or five times, and they always behaved very well and very honeſt; when the conſtable came down, every body was alarmed to think they could be guilty.

THOMAS —— ſworn.

I live at Whetſtone; I knew them both theſe dozen years, both had good characters to the beſt of my knowledge, I never heard any thing amiſs.

—— MEUX ſworn.

I live at Whetſtone; I know them both, Taylor has an extraordinary good character, I do not believe he ever robbed any body of ſixpence, and Hobbs the ſame.

—— SPILLER ſworn.

I live at Whetſtone; I have known them from their infancy, they had very good characters, I ſuppoſe an hundred people would come and ſpeak in their behalf if required.

—— NIXON ſworn.

I live at Whetſtone, they bore very good characters.

Another WITNESS ſworn.

I have known them both ever ſince their infancy, I live at Whetſtone, I never heard a word a word againſt them, they had an extraordinary good character, I never heard a word againſt their parents, they are both widow women, left with a family of children.

WILLIAM HOBBS, } GUILTY Death.
JOHN TAYLOR, }

They were both humbly recommended to mercy by the Jury and Proſecutor.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

406. JAMES LOGAN was indicted for that he not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the devil, on the 29th of April laſt, with force and arms upon John Mealey, in the peace of God and our Lord the King then and there being, in the pariſh of St. John, Wapping, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did make an aſſault, and ſtrike, beat, and kick the ſaid John with both his hands and feet, in and upon the head, breaſt, back, and ſides, and other parts of the body of the ſaid John, and feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, did caſt him down to and upon the ground, giving him then and there, as well by the ſtriking, beating, and kicking, in form aforeſaid, as by the caſting him down to and upon the ground as aforeſaid, ſeveral mortal ſtrokes, wounds, and bruiſes, of which the ſaid John died; and that he the ſaid James feloniouſly, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought did kill and murder the ſaid John, againſt his Majeſty's peace.

The ſaid JAMES LOGAN was alſo charged on the coroner's inquiſition for feloniouſly and wilfully killing and ſlaying the ſaid John.

JAMES ROSE ſworn.

Court. Were you in company with the priſoner and the deceaſed any time on Friday evening?—I ſaw them between twelve and one on the Friday drinking together.

At what houſe?—At the White Swan Eaſt Smithfield, I ſaw them again at three o'clock, that was the place where they fought, in the place called new Rag-fair in the ſtreet.

Who elſe was in company with them?—Nobody but a girl that the deceaſed cohabited with.

You left them drinking together?—Yes.

Where did you ſee them next, and at what time?—Nigh upon three o'clock near the Anchor and Crown, the back of the Swan in new Rag-fair.

Were they together then, or did you ſee them meet?—They were together.

What paſſed between them?—I cannot tell what the deceaſed ſaid to the priſoner, I did not hear what it was, but the priſoner replied to him, and ſaid ſhipmate do not uſe me ill, what have I done, with that the deceaſed made no anſwer that I heard, but ſtruck at him.

Did the priſoner return the blow?—No, he ſaid he had rather drink with you than fight, and I will give it up to you, by that time there came up two ſoldiers and another man together, who ſaid fight it out my lads, and we will ſee fair play and treat you with a ſhillings worth, with that they both ſtripped into their buff to fight.

What happened after that?—At the firſt blow the priſoner's foot ſliped and he fell at the deceaſed's feet, and there was no more falls between them, but they kept fighting as hard as they could.

How long did they fight?—Three or four minutes.

The deceaſed was not down at all?—No.

How were they parted?—Two or three people went and parted them.

Did they fight with their fiſts?—Yes.

Had the priſoner any weapon of any kind?—No.

THE WHOLE

PROCEEDINGS

UPON THE

KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of James Logan.

What became of them after they were parted?—The deceaſed went with the woman where he lodged to her lodgings, and the priſoner went to the Swan alehouſe again, and called for ſome beer, and before the beer was drank, the out-cry was the man was dead, that was about ten minutes after.

Did you ſee the man after the deceaſe? —No, I could not get in, the door was ſhut, I did not ſee him after he was dead.

From what you heard there was no provocation given by the priſoner at all?—Not as I heard.

And he declined fighting after the other had ſtruck him?—Yes.

ANN ROSE ſworn.

Were you preſent at this quarrel?—Yes.

Did you ſee the beginning of it?—I was not at the beginning of the firſt words, I was going to my huſband, and as I came along, I ſaw the deceaſed and the priſoner at variance together; I ſaw the deceaſed ſtrike the priſoner.

What happened after that?——I heard the priſoner ſay ſome few minutes after that, ſhipmate, do not uſe me ill; the deceaſed did not anſwer, he ſeemed very much in liquor; after that there was a few blows paſſed on both ſides.

How came blows to paſs?——By the deceaſed I believe ſtriking the priſoner firſt; I ſaw him ſtrike him as I paſſed.

How came they to fight afterwards?—I cannot tell, I ſaw them fight.

How did they fight?—I heard no words paſs, but after that they ſeemed pretty ſociable, and were going away together, and after that came up two ſoldiers and a gentleman, and the gentleman ſaid, fight it fairly, and I will give you a ſhillingſworth; after ſome time I ſaw the deceaſed come up, and take away his clothes, but what happened after that I cannot ſay.

MARY FRYER ſworn.

I was in the public houſe when theſe two men came in drinking, that was about eleven in the morning when I ſaw them firſt, and as they were drinking, this man's girl came in, and they fell out about her, and ſo he went out at the back door, and the other followed her out at the fore door; and this man that was here ſaid he would go out and give them a good licking, and that is all that I ſaw about it, I ſaw nothing of the fight at all.

Did you ſee the deceaſed after?——No.

JOHN SADLER ſworn.

I know nothing of the fight between the deceaſed and the priſoner, I apprehended the priſoner, he was very agreeable to come as ſoon as I went; I ſaw the deceaſed after he was dead, but I did not ſtop to ſee any thing about any marks of violence.

EDWARD EWER ſworn.

I know nothing concerning the matter, I am only bound over to carry on the proſecution for the pariſh.

Court. Is there any body here that examined the deceaſed, to know the cauſe of his death?——Yes, the ſurgeon is here.

——— LESLIE ſworn.

Court. I ſuppoſe you know nothing of the fact further than examining the body of the deceaſed?—No, I examined the body very ſtrictly; I examined the head, and there was no kind of violence, but on the breaſt, between the belly and breaſt, near the heart, there were different bruiſes, like as if it was the knuckles of a hand; there might be about five or ſix, I examined him further, and found he was troubled with a rupture, but that was not the occaſion of his death, that was in a perfect ſtate; I opened the body, and when I opened the body in the internal part of the belly, I found a large portion of coagulated blood, and I went to the breaſt to ſee if I could find any thing there, it was perfectly clear of blood, but by the different contuſions of the lungs, they were bruiſed ſufficiently.

Did you diſcover what veſſels were broke?—In the belly I examined the veſſels, and there I found one particular veſſel was broke, my opinion therefore is, that he could not reſpire freely, but died in a very languiſhing ſtate, and I am of opinion that theſe bruiſes were the cauſe of his death.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I have nothing to ſay, any further than I am a ſtranger in this place, and came here for my wages, I never was here in my life before.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, this caſe does not ſeem to be attended with much doubt or difficulty; it is proved by the ſurgeon, that the bruiſes which this man received were the probable cauſe of his death, therefore the priſoner has by theſe bruiſes been the occaſion of this misfortune; but the circumſtances of the caſe exclude all idea of premeditated malice, or of that general malignant diſpoſition which the law will conſtrue into murder; it is the effect of a quarrel, intirely ſet on foot by the deceaſed; the deceaſed followed them with a declaration, he would give them both a good licking, and the anſwer of the priſoner in New Rag-fair was a peaceable one, ſaying, ſhipmate, do not uſe me ill; notwithſtanding which, the deceaſed ſtruck him; but even after that the priſoner declined fighting, and ſaid he would rather drink with him than fight; and ſo it ſeems they would have parted, if ſome malignant people had not encouraged them to fight again; that appearing clearly upon the evidence, you cannot altogether acquit the priſoner of blame, though clearly the caſe does not go further than manſlaughter, nor is it a very unfavourable caſe of that kind.

GUILTY

Of manſlaughter on the coroner's inquiſition.

To be burnt in the hand and diſcharged.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

407. NICHOLAS TODD and GEORGE KAYTON, otherwiſe CLAYTON, were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 17th day of March laſt, eleven linen ſheets, value 50s. four cotton ſhirts, value 42s. one waiſtcoat, value 3s. two linen handkerchiefs, value 1s. 6d. one ſilk handkerchief, value 2s. the property of William Watſon, in his dwelling houſe.

WIL-

WILLIAM WATSON ſworn.

I am a bricklayer in Swallow-ſtreet; I only know that my houſe was robbed on the 17th of March; I went to put up ſome lines for ſome clothes that had been waſhing, my wife went to hang up ſome clothes and take down ſome others between ſix and ſeven, ſhe went up into the one pair of ſtairs front room where the lines were, and ſhe came down ſtairs and fainted away; ſhe got it out, the room is robbed! ſhe inſtantly fell down and fainted away; I took the key out of her hand, and went up and opened the door, and the lines I had put up were all cut excepting one, and that one had ſome coloured aprons hanging upon it, and that was left; all the ſhirts were gone except one that was left, and a waiſtcoat that dropped down by the window; I told my caſe, and on the 19th, I ſaw in the newſpaper a deſcription that anſwered my marks; I went to the conſtable and told him what I had.

JOHN MOORE ſworn.

I was along with Burley and Todd going up Swallow-ſtreet, and we ſaw theſe windows open, and linen hanging in the room up one pair of ſtairs; Burley is a boy, and he got into the room by the help of the lamp iron, and he was two hours in the room.

Court. What was he doing there for two hours?——I do not know, we thought he was apprehended, and I went down to Clayton to his lodgings, I bid him come down to help the boy out of the room, and he came with three more, and hallooed to the boy, and he came out of the room and chucked the property out.

Where was Clayton?—At his lodgings in Peter-ſtreet.

Who were the other three?——I do not know, they were ſtrangers to me.

How did the boy get down?——By the help of the lamp iron.

What did he ſtay ſo long for?—Becauſe he ſaw ſome people oppoſite that he thought ſaw him.

What time of the day or night was it?—About ſix o'clock.

Who took the things?——One of the ſtrangers that came up; we carried them down to the lodging where Clayton and I lodged, then we parted them into three parcels, and brought them away to ſell them in Field-lane, juſt by, I do not know the houſe.

How was the money to be divided?—It was to be divided amongſt us all.

Amongſt not only the firſt three but the others that came up?——Yes.

Did you go to ſell them?—Yes, and the people would not buy them; coming up Cow-lane, Todd and I were apprehended by the patrol.

Where was Clayton at that time?—He went away to his lodgings, he ran away from us.

WILLIAM CONWAY ſworn.

I was doing duty in Cow-lane, I am a watchman; as I was ſtanding at the door where the ſtand is, there were three men came paſt me, the two firſt with a bundle in each arm, the evidence was the laſt man that came after, he had a bundle under his arm, that led me to a greater ſuſpicion becauſe they were looſe; I gave information to two patrols acroſs the way, they immediately ſtopped the firſt, and I kept behind; as ſoon as they ſaw me, the evidence went to make a run, I immediately accoſted him, and as he run I happened to ſlip down, he got a little from me, a young man croſſed upon him and tripped him up; he never was out of my ſight the whole time; I took ſome of the linen from under his arm, and the reſt he ſeparated about the place; I took him up and took him to the watch-houſe; one of the patrols took Todd, but the other made his eſcape; between ſix and ſeven in the evening I went with the evidence to ſecure Clayton, I met him in Crown-court, Soho; a young man ſaid to me, is that the man? ſays I, I am certain ſure that is the man, I had a full view of his face.

Are you ſure now that he is the man?—Yes; when I firſt accoſted Clayton, we found a piſtol upon him, loaded with powder and ſlugs, ſquare pieces of lead.

EDWARD RYLAND ſworn.

I am one of the patrol, I took Todd and this bundle.

How many were there along with him?——Two more, which were the evidence and Clayton.

Do you know that Clayton was the third?—He was the third, I ſearched him and found this handkerchief, which the proſecutor owned to be his, in his boſom next to his ſkin; I know no more of it.

FRANCIS SMART ſworn.

I am one of the patrol, I helped to take theſe people Todd and Clayton, I am ſure Clayton was one.

JOSEPH CLIFFORD ſworn.

I was along with Conway at the apprehending of Clayton in Crown-court, and we found this piſtol in one pocket, and this handkerchief, which the proſecutor has ſworn to, in the other pocket.

SAMUEL ROBERTS ſworn.

When the priſoners was apprehended, they were brought to the watch-houſe, and each of theſe bundles were given into my charge as from the different priſoners; when the examination was on the Thurſday the evidence was remanded till the next day, and he was admitted an evidence; and I went with the other and apprehended Clayton; this piſtol was delivered into my charge, I unloaded it, and there was a charge in it half way; firſt we drew up one charge of powder and pieces of lead, then another charge of powder and another piece of lead.

(The things depoſed to.)

Court to Proſecutor. Look particularly at that handkerchief that was found in Clayton's pocket.——It is my property, I have the fellow to it.

You can only ſay you believe it to be your property?——I do not ſuppoſe there are two more ſuch handkerchiefs in the city of London, I had ſeven in one piece, they are India; I can ſwear to all the linen except one ſhirt.

PRISONER TODD'S DEFENCE.

I know nothing of the robbery, I was coming down Holborn, and that man and another man was talking together with bundles under their arms, and that man tapped me over the ſhoulder, and aſked me where he could get a coach, he ſaid he was a ſtranger, we went in and had a glaſs, he threw down a guinea; and as we were going to Smithfield his apron came looſe, he deſired me to lay hold of this bundle while he tied his apron up, and as he was tying his apron up, ſome men croſſed immediately, he threw the bundle down and run away; I looked back for that man, and he was gone; they caught hold of me, and ſaid they would cut me down; I let the bundle fall: if I had been guilty of the robbery I ſhould certainly have ran away as well as the reſt. That is not the handkerchief he took from me; I had been ſeven years abroad.

The priſoner Todd called three witneſſes, who gave him a good character.

GEORGE CLAYTON'S DEFENCE.

I know nothing of it; I ſerved my time to that man Moore the evidence, he is a ſhoe-maker, and after I was out of my time he cut me moſt terribly with a knife acroſs the face; I was ill ſix weeks, and my ſhopmates adviſed me to take the law.

Court. How came you by that piſtol in your pocket?—I brought it from ſea with me.

What, ready charged?——We brought it up charged, me and the reſt of my ſhipmates.

How came you by that handkerchief?—It is not his handkerchief, if you look cloſe into it you will ſee it is different: I have nobody to ſpeak for me, the fitteſt man I have to ſpeak for me is Moore, which I do not expect.

Court to Moore. Are you a ſhoe-maker?—Yes, I am, and he ſerved with me ſome part of his time.

How much?—I ſuppoſe about a twelvemonth.

NICHOLAS TODD, } GUILTY
GEORGE KAYTON,

Of ſtealing, but not in the dwelling houſe.
To be each tranſported ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before
Mr. Baron EYRE.

408. WILLIAM TUCKEY, and FRANCIS GARDENER, were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 4th day of March laſt, twenty buſhels of coals, value 20s. the property of William Wright.

WILLIAM WRIGHT ſworn.

I am a coal merchant; all I have to ſay is hearſay, I ſaw nothing.

THOMAS ARMSTRONG ſworn.

I know I loaded a barge belonging to Mr. Wright the 3d of March, on board the Charming Sally, Captain Robinſon, and I put her the ſame afternoon along ſide of the George and Jane, Captain Marſhall, with intent to load her up the next morning, ſhe was not quite loaded; I went to load her the next day, and when I came, I found coals gone out of the barge; ſhe lay at King James's-ſtairs.

THOMAS SPATE ſworn.

On the 4th of March, about three in the morning, I ſaw three boys in a wherry with coals, I rowed up to them, I went into the boat to ſee who they were, ſuſpecting the coals were ſtolen, the boat was off Pelican-ſtairs, where there is nothing but empty craft lay; it was a common wherry.

How long had you obſerved them before you went on board their boat?——About ten minutes, I knew Tuckey and the other, but I could not call him by his name, they were all three in the boat together.

Did you aſk them any thing reſpecting theſe coals?—I aſked Tuckey whether the boat belonged to him, and he ſaid yes; they ran away out of the boat as ſoon as I came in.

Court. How did they get off?——They went over the light craft.

How far was the place off where you ſaw the loaded wherry to the ſtairs?—The ſhip lay in the tier oppoſite.

Mr. Sylveſter, Priſoner's Council. Tuckey is an apprentice, is not he?——I believe he is.

WILLIAM ELBY ſworn.

Being informed that a boat load of coals was ſtopped, I apprehended the priſoners.

Did any thing paſs?—I ſaid to Tuckey, you will not leave off theſe old tricks you are going on with; I took Tuckey, and the other priſoner, and the evidence, all out of one bed; Tuckey told me he had theſe coals out of a lighter, and the number he could not tell.

Was Eaton preſent at that time?—No.

Was the other perſon?—No.

Mr. Sylveſter. They all knew you were a runner to one of the juſtices?——Yes.

THOMAS EATON ſworn.

Mr. Garrow, Council for the Proſecution. Tell the Court in your own way what you know of this boat of coals?—About twelve or one, the two priſoners and me took a ſculler out of the houſe where we lodge, No. 48, Palmer's-ſtreet, Ratcliff-highway, and went down to New Crane-ſtairs, the bottom of New Gravel-lane, when we came there we found a boat adrift, we all three ſtepped into her, and put the ſculls into her, and rowed up to Wapping-new-ſtairs, and finding there was no coals there, we rowed down again, and found this boat of Mr. Wright's, and ſtepped into her, and made the boat faſt, and handed the coals out; we were rowing for ſhore, and ſeeing a wherry go paſt, we were dubious; we went in between ſome craft as they ſhould not ſee us, and Mr. Spate ſaw us, and we all three jumped out of the boat, and he ran after us, and he ſaid to Tuckey, what you will not leave your old tricks; we all went into a light craft and ſhoved her on ſhore; we were all aprehended the ſame morning about eight.

Mr. Sylveſter. Was it light or dark?——It was moonlight.

Then Mr. Spate never was within five or ſix yards of you, was he?——He was atop of ſome craft ſtrand, and we were jumped into a wherry that was under it.

PRISONER TUCKEY'S DEFENCE.

We went to Deptford, and got a caſt, and we ſaw this boat adrift, and the man came and took us.

The priſoner Tuckey called two witneſſes to his character.

PRISONER GARDENER'S DEFENCE.

This young man lodged in the ſame houſe as I did, and there was a merry-making, and he aſked me to go along with him down to Deptford, to ſee his acquaintance home, and I went with him, and coming back, we got a caſt over the water, and we ſaw this boat loaded with coals, the waterman put us into the boat, and we rowed her on ſhore.

Court. What are you?——I go to ſea.

Court to Elby. What is Tuckey?—I only know him him for theſe little tricks.

WILLIAM TUCKEY, } GUILTY.
FRANCIS GARDENER, }

To be each tranſported ſeven years.

Court. Can Gardener bring any body to ſpeak for him?

Gardener. I came home from ſea, and both father and mother were dead.

Tuckey. I am Tuckey's father, my Lord.

Court. I am very ſorry for it.

Tuckey. I cannot help it; ſhew him a little lenity, my Lord.

Court. What can we do with him, Mr. Tuckey, to ſave you more regret? if I could put him out of the way of more miſchief, and accomodate his caſe to your feelings, I ſhould be very glad to do it.

Tuckey. I will ſend him into the country, down to my friends, my Lord, he is a young freſh boy, led away with bad people.

Court. Can you ſend him abroad?—Yes, I can ſend him to the Eaſt or Weſt Indies.

Court. I have no objection in the world, if you will ſatisfy the Recorder that he ſhall be ſent to the Eaſt or Weſt Indies, but I will not agree to it upon any other terms but his going abroad.

Tried by the firſt London Jury before Mr. Baron EYRE.

409. JANE JONES was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 25th of February laſt, one black ſilk cloak, trimmed with lace, value 8s. one white Marſeilles petticoat, value 8s. two pair of ſilk ſtockings, value 4s. one velvet cloak, value 8s. three ounces weight of ſilk and ſilver trimmings, value 12s. and one linen handkerchief, value 12d. the property of Thomas Thredder.

THOMAS THREDDER ſworn.

I live in Marybone-ſtreet, Golden-ſquare, I am a coach-maker; I loſt the things mentioned in the indictment on the 25th or 26th of February laſt, out of the drawer in our bed room, and part out of another room; the priſoner was a waſher and chair woman at the time, I went and ſearched her lodgings, and I found ſome of the things at a pawnbroker's, his name is Hill.

——— HILLS ſworn.

I live with Mr. Hills in Carnaby-ſtreet, I have a cloak, a petticoat, and two pair of ſtockings, which were pledged with me by the priſoner at the bar at different times in January and February.

(The things depoſed to by Mr. Thredder.)

ARCHIBALD RUSHTON ſworn.

I went with the proſecutor to ſearch a perſon's lodgings whom I do not know, we did not find any thing there; we enquired round the neighbouring pawnbrokers, and about two on the Friday, he ſent a letter to Mr. Bond, to deſire the favour of him to come to him again, for in the mean time he had found two more drawers open; I went down and ſtaid till the priſoner had done dinner; I ſpoke to her in the kitchen, on ſearching her I found in her right-hand pocket this ſilver lace or trimming; on further ſearching her, I found between her ſtays and her ſhift, this velvet cloak and this pocket hankerchief, I queſtioned her how ſhe got them, ſhe ſaid ſhe found them coming to Mr. Thredder in the morning, juſt by Marybone-ſtreet.

(Theſe things depoſed to by Mr. and Mrs. Thredder.)

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay, I leave it to the mercy of the Court.

GUILTY.

Proſecutor. My Lord, I wiſh you would be favourable to her, ſhe has been brought to bed of a dead child ſince.

Upon the recommendation of the Jury, to be privately whipped and impriſoned in Newgate one month.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

410. DANIEL STEVENS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 8th day of April laſt, eight ſilver table ſpoons, value 4l. the property of George Napier, Eſq; in his dwelling-houſe.

GEORGE NAPIER, Eſq; ſworn.

About a fortnight ago one of my ſervants informed me there were two ſilver ſpoons miſſing, and on further examination I found there were ſix miſſing in all, of a particular ſet, that happened neither to have arms nor cypher on them, but which were very eaſily known, from a flaw in the mould in which they were caſt; the priſoner had been three months in my ſervice, but had been ſent away, but came very often to my houſe, he had been diſcharged about the 26th or 25th of November; he came to me in Auguſt; he came to ſee his fellow ſervants frequently, and on the day the ſpoons were miſſed I was told he was in the houſe; a pawnbroker who is here I was informed had five of theſe ſpoons, he had taken up the priſoner before, but he was diſcharged as nobody had appeared againſt him.

ALEXANDER M'DONALD ſworn.

I am ſervant to the proſecutor, the priſoner was that morning at the houſe of the proſecutor.

JAMES ALDER ſworn.

I am a Pawnbroker in Berwick-ſtreet Soho, I have five table ſpoons; on the 8th of April the priſoner at the bar brought two ſilver ſpoons, he told me he wanted the ſame money on theſe as he had on three before, and on enquiring I found that there had been three table ſpoons taken of him, I aſked him what he was, he ſaid he was a gentleman's ſervant, he ſaid he lived in Oxford-ſtreet at the Crown alehouſe, I went there and aſked the landlord if the priſoner did lodge there, and the priſoner ſaid to the man you know I do lodge here, I ſaid to the man tell me whether he does or not, the man ſaid he comes here, but he does not lodge here; then not being ſatisfied with him I took him down to the Magiſtrates in order to find out the owner of the ſpoons, and he was remanded till the evening, he gave an account of ſeveral gentleman's families that he had lived in, and he was diſcharged on ſome perſons undertaking to produce him when he ſhould be called for.

Are you ſure the priſoner is the man? —Yes.

Mr. Napier depoſed to the ſpoons, and ſaid he was perfectly ſatisfied as far as it was poſſible to identify any thing of that kind.

M'Donald. Thoſe are my maſter's property.

PRISONER'S DEFENCE.

I bought the ſpoons of a Jew in Holborn, I bought half a dozen.

Court. What probable account can you give to the Jury of the purpoſe for which you ſhould buy theſe ſpoons of a Jew in Holborn?—The day I came away from Sir Gilbert Elliot's I went up Holborn, and a man aſked me to buy a bargain, I thought as I was a ſervant out of place if I could get a ſhilling or two it would be a very good thing, I went in with him he had ſome nice muſlin.

Court. Where was this?—It was at a publick houſe.

Court. What publick houſe?—I ſhould know the ſign if I was to ſee it again, it went down two ſteps, he aſked me five guineas for them, ſays I that is too much I will give you three pounds; the man ſaid he would not take it, he ſtopped me as I was going out, and I told him I would give him three pounds and ſixpence for them, and he ſaid I ſhould have them, I meant to make them a preſent to my brother who is in buſineſs at Bath; but money running ſhort I was forced to pledge the ſpoons, and I told the pawnbroker I bought them.

How came you to tell the pawnbroker you lived at that publick houſe?—That was where I lived when I was out of place, and there I could be met with at any time.

Court. Now call your witneſſes?—My witneſſes are not come, I have ſent for them, they told me they would come as quick as poſſible.

Court. You have amuſed us now for two days with that ſtory.

Court. Gentlemen of the Jury, the difficulty with reſpect to the marks of the ſpoons might have been material in the priſoner's favour, if he had given any account of the manner how he came by them; as to the ſtory of buying them of a Jew, you know the manner how he came by them; but, a Jew does not part with ſilver for leſs than the value; it will be a queſtion whether the whole of the capital part of the indictment is proved, the value of all theſe five ſpoons taken together might poſſibly amount to more than 40s. but there is reaſon to ſuppoſe that they were ſtolen at different times, indeed it appears with certainty from the pawnbroker's account that they were not all taken at one time, and it would not be a reaſonable thing to add up theſe three felonies together, in order to increaſe the priſoner's charges.

GUILTY

Of ſtealing to the value of 39s.

Priſoner. Lord Sydney will give me a character, or Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Court. I do not know whether that is not an aggravation of your offence, becauſe by means of a good character you have taken an opportunity of plundering your maſter.

To be privately whipped, and confined to hard labour ſix months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. BARON EYRE.

411. JAMES GARDNER was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 22d of January laſt, five wooden caſks value 3s. 700 pounds weight of butter, value 15l. the property of William Shakeſpeare and Francis Kayſall.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

FRANCIS KAYSALL ſworn.

On the 22d of January, I think it was, a warehouſe belonging to me and my partner in Vine-ſtreet, Bloomſbury, was broken open, and five caſks of butter ſtolen out; it was in the evening after dark, the warehouſe was made faſt at dark, it was locked and padlocked and a ſtaple on the outſide, two days after I went to the Rotation office in Litchfield-ſtreet, and there were two caſks that were proved to be my property.

ANN MILFORD ſworn.

The priſoner rolled two tubs of butter into my yard the 26th of January, about three months ago I think it was.

How came you to fix on the 26th of January?—I know to day is the 23d and it is about three months ago, I apprehended it was on Thurſday about a quarter after ten, I live in Banbridge-ſtreet,

Do you keep a public houſe?—No, a chandler's ſhop.

How could he roll them into your yard?—The door was open and the lodger in the houſe came in with him, he rolled them through the paſſage into the yard, I told my daughter to go and ſee what it was, and in the morning I went to ſee what it was and it was butter, I then went down to the office, and they told me to take care of it till they ſent to me, which I did; when the priſoner came he was ſtopped.

RICHARD FORD ſworn.

I know no more only the ſtopping the priſoner when he was going to take away the butter out of the yard, he had it upon his knee taking it out, that was between ſix and ſeven on the Friday evening, I do not recollect the day of the month, I told him he muſt not take away, and he aſked if I would let William Leach have it, I ſaid I did not know but I might, I ſtopped him, he is a Lamplighter.

LUCY SPEEN ſworn.

About a quarter after ten he brought the butter in, I heard a noiſe and I aſked what it was, I live with Mr. Milford in High-ſtreet; after he was gone I went to ſee what it was, and it was two tubs of butter, the caſks were taken to the Rotation-office by Grubb.

Court. Have you any body here to prove that the caſks are the ſame.

Ford. I marked them with a knife in ſuch a manner that I could know them again. (The caſks depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEEENCE.

They only ſwear to me for the ſake of the money, nothing elſe, it is all falſe that they ſwear.

The priſoner called four witneſſes who all gave him a good character.

GUILTY

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

412. DAVID LOGAN was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 31ſt of March laſt, twenty pounds weight of raw ſugar, the property of James Gaſcoigne.

SAMUEL WEBB ſworn.

I am a labourer, coming down Thames-ſtreet, Porter's-quay gateway, I looked up the area, and ſaw the priſoner coming out of the buildings, I perceived he was loaded with ſugar, all round him, I had him ſecured and found ſugar about him, to the amount of twenty pounds weight, it was ſtowed round him inſide his jacket, between the lining and the cloth, afterwards we took him into the buildings, and he ſhewed a hogſhead out of which he took it, I aſked him if he was poſitive he took it out of that hogſhead, he ſaid yes; the proſecutors are the proprietors of the wharf.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming down the gateway, and I ſaw a man come out of the door, and he dropped that ſugar, and I took it up, and I was going away, and that man took me up.

What are you?——A ſailor.

Have you any friends to ſpeak for you?——No.

Jury. How was the ſugar ſtowed?——Looſe withinſide.

THOMAS HUNTER ſworn.

Mr. Gaſcoigne ſent for me and gave me charge of this man, I ſearched him and took the ſugar between the outſide and lining of his jacket, on ſearching him further I found this key, which opens the lower lock of the warehouſe, and I found a gimblet in his pocket; this is an old key that had been filed on purpoſe to ſuit the lock, it opens this lock, which was the bottom lock of the warehouſe.

Court. I thought he had been only a common thief that had plundered a hogſhead that happened to be open, but he turns out to be a worſe man a great deal.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for fourteen years.

Tried by the firſt London Jury, before Baron EYRE.

413. MARY ALLPORT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 6th day of May laſt, twenty-three pair of women's leather gloves, value 20s. the property of George Jennings.

And JOHN CARROLL, otherwiſe CANNON was indicted for feloniouſly receiving the ſame, knowing them to be ſtolen.

GEORGE JENNINGS ſworn.

I live in the Strand, I loſt ſome gloves at different times, I am a manufacturer of gloves, I deal pretty conſiderably in the wholeſale way, and my manufactory is pretty well known by the dealers, I received information by a letter on the 21ſt of February, where ſome of my gloves had been offered for ſale, the gentleman with this letter ſent me a pair of mittins, deſiring me to ſee whether they were my manufactory, I went in conſequence of this letter next morning to this gentleman's houſe in Oxford-ſtreet, his name is Andrews, I found there eleven pair of mittins which this gentleman had bought, which are here, and are mine.

Did you loſe any mittins?——Yes.

Did you find any thing elſe?—When I ſaw them I knew them to be my manufactory, and I deſired the gentleman to ſtop the perſon that brought any more, about a week afterwards Mr. Andrews ſent to me again, he having ſtopped a dozen pair of mittins.

FREDERICK ANDREWS ſworn.

I am a haberdaſher and glover, the man priſoner at the bar brought me on the 20th of February theſe eleven pair of mittins about ſix in the evening, and offered to ſell them to me, I purchaſed them, he aſked me eight ſhillings and ſix pence for them, I aſked him if he made them, he told me yes, I gave him the eight ſhillings and ſixpence, and took the gloves, he went away and ſaid he could bring me ſome more on the Monday morning; after he went away by looking over the gloves, I thought them better than I thought them at firſt, and that he had ſold them rather too cheap, and upon examining them I found Mr. Jennings's mark, which I knew by comparing them with ſome others that I had of him, I immediately wrote a letter to Mr. Jennings, who came to my houſe, and deſired me if the man came again to ſtop him and ſecure him.

When did he come?—Not till the 6th of March, and then he brought this other dozen, I immediately ſtopped him and ſent for a conſtable.

Theſe are the ſame gloves that Mr. Jennings has ſpoke to, and you received of the priſoner at the bar?—Yes, they have not been out of my poſſeſſion ſince.

Court. This man is indicted as an acceſſary after the fact; is there any evidence againſt this woman?——Only her owning that ſhe ſtole them at the office, the man told where he got them, that the priſoner gave them to him in conſequence of which we ſent to the woman priſoner, they cohabited together at firſt they ſaid they were married, then they ſaid they were not.

How did your converſation ariſe?—The Juſtice aſked her where ſhe got them.

I want to know the very words, did you ſay any thing to her that it would be better for her to confeſs?——No promiſe of any favor.

What did you ſay?——I think the Juſtice in general put the queſtion to her, the Juſtice aſked her how ſhe came by them, and ſhe ſaid ſhe had ſtole them of Mr. Jennings, and the laſt dozen ſhe had ſtole that week, the man was there at the time.

Was Mr. Jennings there at the time?—Yes, and ſhe ſaid this of her own accord in the manner that has been mentioned, I aſked her when ſhe ſtole the laſt dozen, and ſhe ſaid the laſt week.

Did you hear any promiſes whatever that ſhe ſhould not be proſecuted, or any thing of that kind?——No.

PRISONER ALLPORTS DEFENCE.

My Lord it is a falſe indictment, for I was uſed ſo ill at the Juſtices that I did not know what I ſaid, I never was before a Juſtice before in my life.

Jury. This woman works for you?—She did at that time work for me.

PRISONER CARROL'S DEFENCE.

I called at the appointment of this woman, ſhe aſked me to diſpoſe of theſe things, and ſhe would pay me for my afternoon's work, ſhe told me ſhe bought them which I believe ſhe did, I know ſhe uſed to deal in ſuch things, I know no more of it than that.

Mr. Jennings. I underſtood they were man and wife, ſhe always went with me by the man's name, they lived together, but when ſhe come before the Juſtice, the Juſtice wanted to ſift out where and when ſhe was married, and it came out ſhe was not married; theſe gloves are completely finiſhed and muſt have been taken from papers of three or four dozens together.

Priſoner Allport. I have not ſent for any witneſſes yet.

Priſoner Carroll. I am poor and have no acquaintance in town.

MARY ALLPORT GUILTY.

419. BENJAMIN STEVENSON was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 1ſt day of March laſt, one callico petticoat value 8s. the property of Suſannah Wood.

SUSANNAH WOOD ſworn.

I was informed I had loſt a petticoat from my yard, which is the front of my houſe, it was hanging out for ſale, it was loſt about three o'clock.

ELIZABETH HILL ſworn.

What have you in your hand?—A petticoat, a man ſtole it from Mrs. Wood.

How came you by it?—I took it from him.

Where was you?—I was going to the black horſe, and the man paſſed me about three or a little after.

Who was the man?—That is the man in the white jacket, he had the petticoat under his coat, I knew it was Mrs. Woods, my mother had aſked the price of it, it hung up at the door a great while, I live in the neighbourhood, a little girl that was with me ſaid there is a man has got a petticoat, I pulled his coat on one ſide, and a quart pot dropped out of it, which belonged to a publican at Blackwall.

When you pulled his coat on one ſide could you then ſee what it was?—Yes, the priſoner ſaid you buggering bitch let me go, then he run up the ſtreet as hard as he could run.

Did he go off with the petticoat?—Yes, I run after him, and I ſaw him chuck the petticoat and the pot over the garden, then this man run after him; one Thomas Parker took him, I was with him.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I know nothing about it, I am a ſeafaring man, I was on board a King's ſhip all the troubleſome times.

Court. And when you get on ſhore come and thieve; I am ſorry for it: have you any body here to ſpeak for you?——I have not a friend in the world.

GUILTY.

To be publickly whipped, and confined to hard labour twelve months in the houſe of correction.

Tried by the ſecond Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Baron EYRE.

---

420. JOHN HERBERT was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 5th day of April laſt, one ſilk handkerchief, value 1s. the property of John Thompſon.

JOHN THOMPSON ſworn.

About twelve o'clock on the 5th of April I loſt my handkerchief; I was walking along Smithfield, and a gentleman called to me and ſaid I had loſt my handkerchief, I turned round, and the gentleman had the boy and my handkerchief.

—— ALEXANDER ſworn.

Between ten and eleven o'clock on the 5th of April, I obſerved the priſoner with ſome others attempting to pick gentlemen's pockets; at laſt I obſerved the proſecutor come along, and the priſoner followed him, and when he came to the corner of Long-lane, he picked his pocket; I followed him, I clapped my hands around the priſoner, and he dropped the handkerchief from under his coat; that was about eight or ten yards from where he took it.

(The handkerchief depoſed to.)

Court to Alexander. Was any body with you at the time?——There was not, there were ſeveral gentlemen paſſing along.

GUILTY, 1s.

Tranſported ſeven years.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury, before Mr. Baron EYRE.

421. JAMES NOWLAND was indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting George Booth on the King's highway, on the 28th day of February laſt, and putting him in fear, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon, one canvas bag, value 1d. eight guineas, value 8l. 8s. four half guineas, value 2l. 2s. two half crowns, value 5s. and 6s. in monies numbered, his goods and monies.

GEORGE BOOTH ſworn.

I travel to ſell blankets and cloth; I was robbed on the 28th of February, about half paſt five, juſt below the Poultry Compter; I had a bundle on my back, and another under my arm, and a man weighed me backwards by the bundle on my back, ſo as to preſs upon me backwards to be in ſome danger of falling; I had my hands on my pocket, but there was a crowd, and I was obliged to take my hand from my pockets to prevent my loſing the bundle, and I loſt my money: I could ſee over my ſhoulder that the priſoner was the man that weighed down my bundle in that manner; and he took the money mentioned in the indictment, which was in a purſe in my right-hand breeches pocket.

Court. Was it dark?——No, the priſoner was on the pavement, and I turned round and cried, ſtop thief! two people came up, and he was ſecured; he let the money drop, and another man picked it up.

Court. How do you know he let the money drop?——I heard it fall; I ſaw him drop it.

Who picked it up?——One of the men that is here.

Was you ſober?—Yes.

Priſoner. I was eight or nine yards out of the crowd.

Proſecutor. No ſuch thing, you preſſed me yourſelf.

JOHN SMITH ſworn.

I ſaw the priſoner as I was going to the Royal Exchange on ſome buſineſs of my maſter's, coming back there was a parcel of people ſtood, Mr. Pitt was going to dine in Grocer's-alley, and in the ſpace of five or ſix minutes, I heard a man cry out, ſtop thief! I am robbed, I am robbed! I turned round, and ſaw the priſoner ſtepping under the wheel of a coach, with a yellow bag in his hand, I took hold of him, and he flung it down directly.

Who had hold of it at the time?—I cannot tell, he was going under the wheel of a coach; I ſaw a man in a white frock gather it up; I ſecured the priſoner.

WILLIAM EAMES ſworn.

I was near Grocer's-alley; I ſaw the man drop it.

What man?—James Nowland, the priſoner.

Did you know him before?——No, he was in the ſtreet off the pavement, between Grocer's-alley and the Old Jewry; there was a pole of a coach juſt before.

Did you obſerve his poſture at the time?—He came ſtooping, and clapped his hand to his knee; when he dropped it I picked it up.

What did you do with it?——I gave it to Mr. Booth.

Court to Proſecutor. When the purſe was put into your hands, did you open it to ſee what was in it?—No.

What was done with it?——It was given to the conſtable.

THOMAS TENNER ſworn.

I have the purſe, it is in the ſame ſtate I had it; I gave the money to the proſecutor by order of the Lord Mayor.

Proſecutor. I received the ſame ſum back that I loſt.

(The purſe depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I was coming through the city the day that Mr. Pitt was coming to dine at Grocer's-hall, we were about two thouſand in company, ſtanding and walking, there was a great crowd of people; I ſaw the proſecutor running, with his bundle over his head; ſays he, I have loſt my money; a man came and laid hold of me; I ſuppoſe they judged becauſe I was meanly dreſſed I took it; I am as innocent of it as any gentleman here in Court.

What are you?—A ſhoe-maker; I have been but a fortnight in England, I came from Ireland.

You are not an Iriſhman?——Yes.

What part of Ireland?—Broadie, in the county of Meath; I have nobody to ſpeak for me, without it is your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Grand Jury.

Court. You ſhould have ſtood your own friend when you had it in your power.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, the only doubt that ariſes in my mind upon the caſe is this, he is charged with having aſſaulted this man, and with having taken this purſe by force and violence from his perſon; now whether it was a fact of that nature, or whether it was what I dare ſay the priſoner meant it ſhould be, a picking of pockets only; I think that is the material queſtion on this caſe, for there ſeems to be no doubt but he had a great ſhare in the miſchief, whatever it was: now if he laid hold of the man's bundle behind, and ſo preſſed him backwards by force, and ſo took the purſe out of his pocket, I think the indictment is proved, and it will conſtitute a robbery, becauſe it is a forcible taking from the perſon; on the other hand, if when the priſoner was in the crowd, the proſecutor was thrown back, and his pocket was picked, that would be ſtealing, but it would not be robbery, becauſe to make it a robbery, there muſt be ſome degree of force uſed on the perſon of the man from whom the property was taken; the proſecutor ſays, that force was uſed by the priſoner, and by ſome perſon who threw him back; if he did, that is as I told you, robbing him; if it was the other way, that would not be a robbery, but ſtealing; therfore, you will take that ſingle point into your conſideration: if you agree with the proſecutor, and think he was ſufficiently attentive to what paſſed, to be able to know with certainty that the priſoner was the man that actually threw him back by his bundle, then you will find him Guilty of this indictment as here charged; if you think, from the ſituation he deſcribes himſelf to be in, and the crowd that was there, that part is not ſufficiently made out to your ſatisfaction, you may acquit him of the robbery, and find him Guilty of ſtealing only.

Jury. Did not the crowd preſs you?——He preſſed me himſelf, he ſtood at my ſhoulder, as this man may do now.

Jury. Was you on the pavement or the highway?——On the pavement.

Court. How near was the coach wheel to the pavement?—As cloſe as it could get once.

Jury. Are you actually clear that the priſoner drew the weight over you purpoſely, or was he preſſed upon you?——There was no other man ſtanding behind him, he was as near the houſe as he could get.

Jury to Eames. Did not you ſay it was between Grocer's-alley and the Old Jewry?——Yes.

JOHN CAMPBELL ſworn.

Examined by Mr. Peat, Council for the Proſecution.

I live in Morris-court, St. John's, Wapping, my wife works for a ſlopman; on the 14th of March laſt I went out to have a bit of ſupper.

Did you leave any body at home?—No.

In what ſituation did you leave the houſe?——I locked the door faſt, and bolted the windows of my lower apartments.

Where did you go?——About two hundred yards, while I was there between eight and nine, they ſent a girl for us, and told us we were wanted at home, my wife and me went home directly, and when I went home there were a number of people in the court, and I aſked them what was the matter, they ſaid there were ſome thieves broke into the houſe, I put the key into the door, the door was locked as I left it, I looked up, and I ſaw people going into the window on a ladder, that was as I was opening the door, when I went into the houſe I found the parlour door was broke open.

Were there any lodgers in the houſe at that time?——No.

Did you examine the parlour?——Yes, I ſaw all the drawers out, and they told me the things were taken up to the one pair of ſtairs fore room, and tied up in a bundle, William Whiteway was one of the perſons that told me ſo, I afterwards went up ſtairs, and found the things there, they were all taken out of the drawers, they were looſe and laying about the floor, all the things that were laying on the floor were taken out of the parlour.

Are you ſure of that?—Yes.

Whoſe houſe is this?——The owner of the houſe is one Callicot, I rent the houſe.

There were no lodgers in the houſe at that time?——None, they went away the week before.

What ſtate were the windows in up ſtairs?——I cannot ſay, I know the ſaſh was down before.

How do you know?——Becauſe I was in the chamber before I went out, the window was properly faſt, and I ſaw it was properly faſt.

I am aſking you about the firſt floor?—I faſtened the chamber door and windows as well as the lower apartments.

Did you lock the room door?——Yes.

Was that door broke open?——No.

Did you find it locked when you went up?—No, it is a ſpring lock; and the people that got in at the window opend the door.

WILLIAM WHITEWAY ſworn.

I am an officer of the pariſh where this matter was ſaid to be done, I was ſent for about nine in the evening on the 14th of March, the houſe was all faſt then, the one pair of ſtairs window was open, we could not get in at the front door, I got in at a neighbour's houſe, and got in at the back door, there were a number of people about the houſe, and the priſoners were in cuſtody, I ſearched the priſoners and found nothing upon them, as ſoon as I could get into the houſe I went into the one pair of ſtairs, and there I found theſe things bundled up in this apron, the people firſt got in by the help of a ladder, and they let me in at the back door, theſe things have been in my poſſeſſion ever ſince.

ALEXANDER SINCLAIR ſmorn.

I live next door to Campbell, and on the 14th of March, about a quarter after eight, coming up the court where Campbell lives, I ſaw my father, ſiſter, and brother out at the door, and I underſtood from them that there was ſomebody in Mr. Campbell's houſe, I ſtood at the door for about ten minutes, and Linch came out of the window.

Court. How did he come out of the window ?——Dropped out of the one pair of ſtairs window.

Did he drop any thing out upon you ?—No.

How high is the window ?—It is a one pair of ſtairs window, I ſuppoſe about eight or ten foot, my brother and father run after him, and I ſtaid in the court, and in about eight or ten minutes after Farrell came out of the window, I took him, and he was not out of my cuſtody till he was ſecured, he threw a dark lanthorn at me, he dropped out of the window, and he made a blow at me, I took him right under the chin, and I knocked him down, and delivered him to Mr. Whiteway the officer, then I knocked him down a ſecond time, till my father came and gave me ſome aſſiſtance, he ſwore many oaths that he would do for me.

On the 14th of March on a Sunday night, I and my daughter and ſon-in-law, ſat in the houſe, they are wooden houſes, and we heard an uncommon noiſe, ſuch as tumbling of cheſts and throwing of tables down, and ſuch things, ſo my daughter ſays, there is a very uncommon noiſe in Mr. Campbell's houſe, ſo there is, ſays I, it is nothing to us ; preſently there came another uncommon noiſe, like as throwing down a cheſt, and then we came out of the door, and it was backward, and I could ſee a light, and I ſaid there is ſomebody there, ſure enough, ſo we all came into the ſtreet, and I went and lifted up the latch and ſaid, are you at home Mr. Campbell ? yes, ſays one of theſe two men, we are at home, as bold as can be.

Who aſked the queſtion ?——It was an old woman of eighty-ſix that aſked the queſtion, we ſtood at the door, and in four minutes out comes the man in the brown coat, hauls open the window, and out he comes, and puts his backſide upon the edge of the window and jumped down, my ſon purſued and ſtopped him, I loſt ſight of him before he was taken, he is the ſame man.

FRANCIS PEGHAM ſworn.

On the 14th of March on the Sunday evening, me and my father and family were ſitting by the fire between eight and nine, and by and by we heard a great noiſe in our neighbour Mr. Campbell's houſe, that alarmed us a little, a while after we heard another great noiſe, my wife ſaid they are out, and deſired me to go to the door, I went and ſaw a light through the key-hole, then I went over to a neighbour's houſe, and aſked if they were there, they ſaid, no, ſays I, I believe there are thieves in the houſe, the old woman came out of the door with a candle, and ſhe went and ſhook the door, and lifted the latch up, they made anſwer in the houſe, yes, we are at home ; as ſoon as I heard that, I returned to my own door, by and by I heard the ſaſh lift up, and a man came out of the window bodily, and jumped down, that was Linch, he run away and I after him and called out ſtop thief, and one John Brown caught him as he paſſed by.

Was he at any time out of your ſight?—No, he was not out of my ſight when he catched him.

Was he out of your ſight before?—No, never after he came out of the window, I went up to him inſtantly with Brown and led him up the court again, he ſaid what are you going to do with me, what have I done, I delivered him to Whiteway.

Court. Was the window open when you firſt ſaw it?—No.

Priſoner Linch. Whether he did not ſay before the Juſtice he loſt ſight of me three times?——I never ſaid ſuch a word.

The things produced, and depoſed to.

PRISONER FARELL's DEFENCE.

My Lord this man ſays I hove the dark lanthorn at him, and this man ſays he found it in the room; I was going down Nightingale-lane and I went up this alley, there was a great quantity of people at the ſame time, this man was ſtanding by me and a man jumps right out of the window and treads upon my ſhoulders, and knocked me down.

PRISONER LINCH's DEFENCE.

I was coming along and I heard a noiſe and the people ran and called out ſtop thief, I run to ſee what was the matter, the man came and caught hold of me, and ſaid I robbed the houſe, he ſaid before the Juſtice that he loſt ſight of me three times, my witneſſes are not here now.

Priſoner Farrel. I have no witneſſes.

Court to George Sinclair. Did you obſerve this houſe whether the windows were ſhut when you firſt took notice of it?——I ſaw him pull the windows up, but before that they were ſhut down as any other window is properly.

What time was it?—Between 8 and 9.

What time did you firſt hear the noiſe?——About a quarter before eight.

None before that?——No.

Are you ſure you heard no noiſe before this?—Not an uncommon noiſe.

What was the earlieſt that you heard any noiſe at all?—Why, I tell you about a quarter before eight.

How high is this window from the ground?——About ten or twelve foot.

Is it over the door?——No it does not come over the door, it runs right along ſide the houſe.

Is there any getting up into it?——Not without a good deal of help, to ſtand upon one another's ſhoulders.

Was the window of ſuch a height that you think one man might get in by ſtanding upon another man's ſhoulder's?—Yes, I think ſuch a man as the priſoner might.

Court to Whiteway. You got in at the back-door?—Not until I was let in by ſomebody.

Was you in the houſe before Campbell came in?—I cannot ſay.

You ſaid you tried at the front door, and could not get in then?—I was let in by ſomebody, I cannot ſay who it was.

Do not you know that you was there before Campbell?—No, I do not know I was, I imagine in the mean time I was trytrying at the back door, that Campbell muſt come in at the front door.

Campbell. It was ſo.

Priſoner Farrell. If you remember, this Whiteway ſwore that he found the things up ſtairs, he took me before the Juſtice, he would hang me or any man living for the ſake of the reward.

——— WILKINSON ſworn.

I got in at the chamber window, the window was ſhoved up, and I put the ladder and got in, I had no light, I believe Sinclair was the next man that came and brought a light, there were ſome things laying about in this apron, as I went down ſtairs, Mr. Campbell the owner of the houſe came to the door, they were all faſt, but the window I got in at.

Was the door of that room open or not, when you went in?—It was wide open.

You are ſure of that?—I am very clear of it.

Court to Campbell. That opens on a ſpring lock?——Yes, I left it on a ſpring lock, I am ſure the windows were ſhut down when I went out.

JOHN LINCH,
JAMES FARRELL, } GUILTY Death.

434. HENRY GRIFFITHS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 17th of April, three guineas, value 3l. 3s. and 18d. in monies numbered, the monies of John Knareſborough Simpſon.

JOHN KNARESBOROUGH SIMPSON ſworn.

On Saturday laſt about half paſt three I was returning from the Temple, going into Leiceſter-fields, and before I came there this young fellow and two or three more that were with him forced me on a ſtep in Henrietta-ſtreet, there was a conſiderable number of people but I particularly marked this young fellow and two or three that were with him, I endeavoured to get out of the croud as I was going to dinner, and they ſtill followed me, and I found ſome perſon's hand in my breeches pocket at the left ſide, I immediately miſſed my money which I had before, I turned myſelf round and there was another young fellow had hold of the priſoner's arm, and both their hands were at my pocket, but whether or not Griffiths took the money I will not ſay; I ſaw the other young man's hand in my pocket, the priſoner's hand was three or four inches from me, I immediately ſeized the other perſon who had hold of this perſon's arm by the collar, I ſaid to him you raſcal you have picked my pocket, I have loſt ſuch a ſum of money; this Griffiths ſtruck me on my right ſide, and forced the other perſon from me, and ſaid he knew him, and called me a raſcal for accuſing him of being a pickpocket, for that he was a tradeſman's ſon, upon which I applied to three or four that were near me, I told them I had my pocket picked, they aſſiſted me, and I ſeized the priſoner by the collar, and held him as well as I was able, I was beſet by ſeveral of the gang who ſtruck me in ſeveral places, he denied it, he was ſearched and no property was found upon him, I am ſenſible that he had hold of the perſon's arm whoſe hand I felt at my pocket, he was with him all the time.

Was he ſtooping towards your pocket?—He was not.

Which arm had the other hold of?—They got me round them, and the other perſon ſtood on my left ſide and this on my right.

Had this man his other arm round you?—No, after they had picked my pocket the other that was with him ſeparated, and this perſon ſtruck me.

The remainder of this Trial in the next Part, which will be publiſhed in a few days.

THE WHOLE
PROCEEDINGS
UPON THE
KING's Commiſſion of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery for the CITY of LONDON, &c.

Continuation of the Trial of Henry Griffiths.

The one man was on your left ſide behind you with his hand in your pocket?——Yes.

The other man was on your right ſide, was his right arm reached round before you?—I cannot ſay that.

Then it could not by any poſſibility be near you pocket?—It was his left arm that was near my pocket, they were not arm in arm as people walk in the ſtreet, only croſſed within his arm, and they were both behind me.

Mr. Garrow Counſel for the Priſoner.

May I take the liberty of aſking you who you are?—I live at Newcaſtle upon Tyne, I am a haberdaſher.

This was much about the cloſe of the poll?—Half paſt three o'clock.

There was a pretty conſiderable mob at this time?—There was.

Some Pittites and ſome Foxites, ſome in good humour ſome in bad humour?—That I cannot tell.

Have you prefered any indictment againſt this man for an aſſault?—No.

Nor any for a reſcue?—No.

This man you ſay did not pick your pocket?—I do not ſwear that.

And this man miſtaking the part you was of gave you a blow?—No.

Do you recollect ſeeing Mr. Bachara in the mob?—Yes I ſaw this man.

RICHARD BLANDY ſworn.

I went into the ſtreet where the quarrel aroſe, I heard the alarm of a pick pocket, this Gentleman and two more brought the priſoner, I knew nothing before that, I found ſixpence upon him.

ISAAC BACHARA ſworn.

I am a tradeſman.

Do you recollect being in Covent Garden at the time the proſecutor has deſcribed?——Yes.

In what ſituation did you obſerve him?—I was ſtanding there to ſee the election, I went to ſee Mr. Fox as I had heard talk of him, the priſoner ſtood next to me, the gentleman looked and looked, and at laſt he collared a man, that man goes away from him, he came back again and caught hold of the priſoner, ſays he you muſt be an accomplice with the other man, ſays the priſoner if I have done any thing amiſs ſearch me, the priſoner ſaid he would not go away, the proſecutor took the priſoner, there was nothing found upon him.

Court. You mean to ſay then that when this gentleman firſt collared the other, the priſoner was not with him?—The priſoner was on this ſide, and I was in the middle.

Then the priſoner was not with the other man?—He did not hold the other man nor was he near him, there were ſeveral together.

Upon your oath Sir will you ſwear that?——I went to the Juſtice and told the ſame ſtory there.

Will you ſwear now that the priſoner and the other man were not together when you firſt ſaw them?—I cannot ſwear that.

Proſecutor. The witneſs here has ſaid he mentioned the ſame thing before the Juſtice, he came into the room, the Juſtice would not ſuffer him to ſpeak, he gave no account before the Juſtice.

Conſtable. Not a word, my Lord.

Bachara. I told the Juſtice the very ſame.

Proſecutor. He was not ſuffered to ſpeak.

Jury to Bachara. What are you?——A hatter by trade.

Court to Jury. Gentlemen, if theſe two people were together upon the buſineſs of picking pockets, and you believe that they ſhoved this gentleman up jointly, for the purpoſe of getting an opportunity of picking his pocket, and that they followed him for that purpoſe, and one of them got his hand into his pocket and the felony was compleated, the other being preſent and aſſiſting at the time, the man whoſe hand was not in his pocket was equally guilty with the man whoſe hand was in; if you are clearly ſatisfied from the evidence, that he was actually aiding and aſſiſting the others, in the attempt to pick the gentleman's pocket, you will find him Guilty; but whether the evidence under all the circumſtances is ſufficiently clear and certain to ſatisfy your minds of that, is a queſtion for your determination.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

435. JOSEPH HAWES and JAMES HAWKINS were indicted for feloniouſly aſſaulting on the King's highway, Samuel Weſt, on the 16th of April, and putting him in fear and danger of his life, and feloniouſly taking from his perſon and againſt his will one metal watch chain, value 3s. and one ſtone ſeal ſet in gold, value 40s. his property.

The witneſſes examined apart at the requeſt of the priſoners.

SAMUEL WEST ſworn.

On Friday the 16th inſtant, at half after eight in the evening, at the corner of Caſtle-ſtreet, the top of Bury-ſtreet, St. Mary-axe, I was ſtopped by a perſon with a drawn hanger, who with his other hand collared me, and he aſked me in a low voice three times for my money; with that I ſaid, for God's ſake ſpare my life, and you ſhall have every thing I have about me; then two others came up, one with a drawn hanger, but I will not be poſitive to the ſecond, whether he had a drawn hanger or not; he began feeling for my watch, and immediately I put down my hand to my fob, and held my watch with both hands; they then got hold of the chain, I ſtill kept both my hands to my fob, and by ſome means the ſwivel of the chain gave way, which put the priſoner in poſſeſſion of the chain; the chain is in poſſeſſion of one of the witneſſes; upon finding they had got my chain, and being very much intimidated, I cried out, murder, as loud as I could; they left their hold of me and made off; they got clear off, I ſaw no more of them.

Do you know the perſon of either of them?——No, Sir, I ſhould be very glad if I could ſwear to either of them; I have the watch and the ſwivel where the chain broke off.

JAMES GABETUS ſworn.

I was the patrol belonging to Aldgate within, and as I was going down Bevis Marks, on Saturday the 16th of April, I heard the cry of thieves! thieves! murder! murder! and at the corner of Caſtle-ſtreet, I ſaw

I ſaw two men, which are the priſoners; they never was out of my ſight, I ſaw them ſtand at the corner of Caſtle-ſtreet, all in a timidating affair.

Court. How?—As if they had been doing ſomething amiſs.

Deſcribe what you mean?——Seeing me come up, they ſtood in a ſort of poſture of defence, Hawes made a blow at me with his cutlaſs, without my ſpeaking a word; I had a bludgeon which I carry, ſays I, are you good at that, then I made a blow at him with my blugeon, as hard as ever I could, then he ſtooped and I miſſed him; I found myſelf in danger, and let my bludgeon fall, and drew my cutlaſs and attacked him again; when they found I was ſo reſolute they ran away; I immediately cried out, ſtop thief! as loud as I could, and followed them very cloſely; Hawes the priſoner ſtruck at me with a cutlaſs, I ran after them about three parts of Caſtle-ſtreet, but the ſhort one, Hawkins, fired a piſtol, not at me, it was directed forwards: Hawes was my object, becauſe he made a blow at me, and juſt as he had got to the kennel, a gentleman tripped him as he run, and he fell down; another man aſſiſted me and ſtood over him; I was afraid he had ſome fire-arms, he ſaid he had not, he ſaid for God's ſake ſpare my life! I did not fire the piſtol; the other I never ſaw afterwards; I took Hawes, he never was out of my ſight five yards, the other got off at that time.

Do you know that the other priſoner was the man that was with Hawes?—I did not ſee him till he was brought to the Compter, I cannot ſwear to him: when Hawes was taken, he was ſearched, and nothing was found upon him; when I returned again from the Compter, I came back to go my rounds as uſual, I ſaw Mr. Weſt as I came to the ſpot where I attacked them firſt, and I ſaid, Sir, you was not one that was robbed? and he ſaid, yes, it was me that was robbed; when I came to the watch-houſe, I told the ſtory to the conſtable and ſeveral others, and they directed the watchman to look for a piſtol and a watch chain, that that gentleman had been robbed of, and he found the chain, as he told me, cloſe to the place where they attacked me; they firſt attacked me the corner of Caſtle-ſtreet, in Bevis-marks; Kelton gave me the chain, I have had it in my poſſeſſion ever ſince; this cutlaſs was found in Caſtle-ſtreet, when we came from the Compter.

OTTO KELTON ſworn.

I am a watchman belonging to Aldgate Ward, the 16th of April, about ten at night; when I went out upon duty, the patrol deſired me to look if I could find a piſtol, and I found a watch chain the corner of Caſtle-ſtreet, Bevis-marks, I delivered the chain to the patrol, which was the ſame I found there.

DAVID LEVY ſworn.

On the 16th of April, I was coming through Houndſditch, I heard the cry of, ſtop thief! I run up to Caſtle-ſtreet, and ſaw Hawes the priſoner fall down, and Hawkins come running, and he fired a piſtol; I knew them both very well before; I deſcribed them before they came to the Compter.

What became of Hawkins then?——He made off.

Priſoner Hawes. My Lord, I wiſh you would look into this Levy's character, his own brother was tried for his life this ſeſſions, and he has another tranſported.

JACOB SOLOMONS ſworn.

Between eight and nine, as I was coming down paſt the Three Tuns, I ſaw three men attacking a gentleman, the gentleman called out murder! ſo I turned down Caſtle-ſtreet, looking for the patrol, and I ſaw him go up to the priſoner, and one of the priſoners takes out a ſhort ſtick, and made a blow at him; a gentleman came up, and wanted to lay hold of his coat, and he fired a piſtol at him.

When the patrol came up, what ſituation was they in?—They were round the gentleman that was attacked.

Did you ſee Mr. Weſt at all?—I could not ſee who he was; I ſaw one of them that had a naked ſword over his head.

Are you ſure of that?——Yes.

How near was you to them?——Not above a yard and half from them.

Was not you in company with them?—No, juſt come from my maſter's.

The gentleman has deſcribed three perſons as attacking him, was not you one of them?——No, Sir.

Was not you with the other two?—No, Sir, juſt come from my maſter.

What did you ſee them do?—I ſaw them round the gentleman, and the gentleman called out murder! I did not ſtop to look at them; when the gentleman called out murder, you know if they did not ſpeak I could not hear them.

As you was ſo near them, what did you ſee or hear?——One of them held a cutlaſs over the gentleman's head, I could not tell which, it was very dark.

When they left the gentleman, what became of them?——I went after them, and they ran down Caſtle-ſtreet, and a gentleman coming up tripped up the tall one's heels.

But when they left the gentleman they had attacked, what became of them afterwards?——They ran away when the patrol were coming.

When did the patrol firſt come up?——When I turned back again from Houndſditch, I heard the cry of murder! I turned to look for the patrol.

When did the patrol come up?——The patrol came up before they ran away, while they were attacking the gentleman; the patrol come up, and one of them made a blow at the gentleman directly with his cutlaſs.

Then the gentleman might have ſeen the patrol as well as you?——I do not know, I could not tell what he ſaw; I ſaw, after they had attacked the gentleman and before they ran away, they made a blow at the patrol.

Pray, young man, was not you one of their company?——No.

What became of the third man?—I cannot tell.

Was you there when Hawes was taken?——Yes, I tell you, I ſaw him taken.

Priſoner Hawes. Was not you at the taking of me to the Compter?——Me!

Did not you ſay you thought there was a houſe broke open, and you thought we were the people?——No.

THOMAS BATES ſworn.

I am one of the patrol belonging to Shoreditch; I was on my duty this night, between eight and nine, I was at ſome diſtance when this affair happened, I heard a great noiſe, and I haſtened up as faſt as I could; when I came up, there was a great number of people, and the priſoner, Hawkins, was in the middle of them, and the people ſaid he was the man that fired the piſtol, ſo I made no more to do, but I drew my hanger, and ruſhed into the mob, and took him by the collar, and took him to the Compter directly.

JOHN LOCKWOOD ſworn.

On the 16th of this month, about nine at night on Friday, I was going down Houndſditch, and I heard a piſtol go off the corner of Caſtle-ſtreet, I heard the cry of ſtop thief! and ſaw the priſoner Hawkins come from the corner towards me, I thought it might be the perſon who had done this miſchief; he made for Woolpack-alley, and I was the firſt that went after him; and before I got half way down the alley there was another young man before me, but the young man and I kept pretty cloſe together, and took hold of him, and the mob ſaid, here is the other; I took him to the Compter.

(The chain depoſed to by the proſecutor.)

PRISONER HAWES'S DEFENCE.

I was coming by, and I ran along to ſee what was the matter, and the patrol knocked me down inſtantly; I have been in his Majeſty's ſervice theſe four years, I was paid off about ten months ago.

Jury to Solomons. What number of people did you ſee round the gentleman when he was attacked?—Three.

Who were they?—The priſoners at the bar were two of them, they were never out of my ſight.

Did you go away to look for the patrol when you ſaw the gentleman attacked?——Yes, I went to look for them, but I could not ſee them; when I returned the patrol was with them.

Was it light enough in the evening for you to ſee both their faces plain enough?—It was not very light, but one of them had a ribband round his head.

Are you ſure of the number round Mr. Weſt?—Yes, and the number was three.

Court to Weſt. Did you ſee any more than the three men near you at the time?—No, my Lord, I was under ſo great agitation of mind I did not ſee any more.

Could a man have been ſo near you, as Solomon ſays he was, and you not ſee him?——I do not know how that might be, becauſe this ſide was againſt the wall, and the man had hold of my collar, and he held a cutlaſs over my head.

Jury to Solomons. Whether he came up to Mr. Weſt's aſſiſtance?——I ſaw nobody before I heard the cry of murder and thieves; firſt that I heard was murder!

Court to Weſt. They went away immediately when they got your watch chain?——Yes.

What length of time was it that the patrol came up?——Not above a minute.

You went away, did not you?——I went down the ſtreet to look for the patrol, I never loſt ſight of them.

JOSEPH HAWES,
JAMES HAWKINS, } GUILTY Death.

Tried by the ſecond London Jury before Mr. RECORDER.

436. JAMES DAVIS was indicted for burglariouſly and feloniouſly breaking and entering the dwelling houſe of Daniel Gardner and Robert Wilſon, at the hour of two in the night, on the 23d day of April, and feloniouſly ſtealing therein four cotton ſhawls, value 18s. and two other ſhawls, value 2s. 6d. nine handkerchiefs, value 27s. ſixty-ſeven ſilk handkerchiefs, value 12l. fifty-ſix ſilk and cotton handkerchiefs, value 5l. forty yards of Iriſh linen, value 33s. and one piece of Scotch linen, value 20s. the property of the ſaid Robert and Daniel.

DANIEL GARDNER ſworn.

On Friday the 23d of April, about ten minutes before four o'clock, we were alarmed by the watchman ringing violently at the bell, my partner threw up the window, and the man ſaid the door was open, I immediately haſtened down, when I came into the ſhop, I looked about to ſee what was miſſing, the door was faſtened at night when I went to bed, I caſt my eye out of the door, I perceived the door of the coal cellar bored in two or three places, and a board adjoining was wrenched up, then I went to the cellar door, I found that open, it was bored through in the middle way, ſo that a hand might go though to unbolt the door, I went back into the ſhop, and I found ſome things on the counter was gone which I had folded up with my own hands the night before, we made a ſearch to ſee; whilſt we was at the door, up came two of the patrol and a Smithfield drover, and ſaid, we have got the thief and the things, and that they were at St. Sepulchre's watch-houſe, and if I would go I might ſee him there; both me and my partner went, we ſaw Mr. Amey, Mr. Roberts, the conſtable, and the conſtable of the night; the priſoner at the bar was in cuſtody, and the things there were mine; this is all I know of my own knowledge.

ROBERT BEAN ſworn.

I was coming from Chick-lane through a court, I had information from a drover that there was a man gone by with a bundle of linen, we purſued him down Snow-hill, but we miſſed him, returning back we found him in Green Dragon-court, packing up a bundle of cottons and linens.

Court. Whereabouts was he in the court?—The court goes in narrow, and then grows wider, he was in the right-hand corner, the bundle was on the ground, he was tying it round with a piece of linen, I aſked him what he had got there, he ſaid linen, he ſaid he was going to Red Lion-ſquare; I aſked him where he got it from, he ſaid from on board a ſhip; I aſked him from whoſe ſhip, he ſaid a ſloop, upon that I took him into cuſtody; the watchman took a large augur out of his pocket, concealed under his coat, we took him to the watch-houſe, there were two bundles in the court of handkerchiefs, and a table-cloth was found in his pocket, and the key of a pin of a window.

WILLIAM BELDHAM ſworn.

I am ſervant to Mr. Hall, lamb butcher, I was ſtanding at Mr. Wildman's penns in Smithfield on Friday morning, I ſaw the priſoner come from Long-lane with the bundle upon his back, and another in his hand, he paſſed me, I looked at him and ſaid, what have you got here? he ſaid ſome cloth, I followed him, he went down Cow-lane, I met a patrol and we run after him, but we over run him, and we turned round and came back again, and ſearched the court, and we found him.

——— ALEXANDER ſworn.

I am the watchman, I heard the cry of ſtop him, ſtop him! I heard one of the drovers ſay, I am ſure he is up one of the courts; I went in and found the priſoner in one corner, I took this augur out of his pocket, I aſked him what it was for, he ſaid he had been boaring ſome bungholes, the patrols came up and took him.

WILLIAM DILLOW ſworn.

I was going along and I met this man, ſays he, I am come from on board a ſhip, you may go with me, I am going to Red-Lyon Square.

JOHN ANDREWS ſworn.

The priſoner came to my maſter on Thurſday laſt, about four in the evening, and ſaid he came to borrow a borer, my maſter would not lend it him at firſt, at laſt he conſented, and I gave it into his hands, I ſhould know it again; that is the borer; the priſoner came in another Cooper's name that we had lent a borer to ſeveral times.

SAMUEL ROBERTS ſworn.

I am one of the wardens belonging to Saint Sepulchre's, I found a table cloth in his pocket, and the key of the window, and ſomething that looks like a watchmaker's tool, it is hard ſteel and will cut glaſs almoſt like a diamond, but it will not laſt ſo long; I marked the table cloth, the key, and the inſtrument, and gave them to the Conſtable to carry before the Magiſtrate, I am ſure they are the ſame.

THOMAS AVEY ſworn.

I am a Conſtable, I have the things here, theſe are the ſame things committed to my charge, and brought to the watch-houſe.

(Produces the things, which are depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I went down Long-lane, and I ſaw theſe things lay there, and I picked them up, and as I was going acroſs Smithfield, Dinmore ſaid theſe things are mine, ſays I, what ſhould they be yours for, and becauſe I would not give him them he went and got a patrol and took me up.

Court to Gardner. Whoſe houſe is this?—It is mine originally, but during the partnerſhip it is jointly each partner's, we ſhare it, they are two houſes, I live in one and my partner in the other.

Which houſe does the ſhop or warehouſe belong to?—It is the under part of both houſes, both turn into one.

Do you pay for the two houſes ſeparately or jointly?—Jointly during the term of the partnerſhip.

Then the houſe is the houſe of the partnerſhip?—Yes, as well as the goods.

Your partner lives in it as well as you.

Yes, he occupies the further part on one ſide.

Court to the Proſecutor. Was there any day light in the morning when you was firſt alarmed?—Yes, there was a little, it was about ten minutes or a quarter before four o'clock.

Court to Beldam. When you firſt ſaw the priſoner at Smithfield in the morning about what time was it?—About half paſt three.

Was it any light?—The day began to break.

GUILTY Death.

Proſecutor. My Lord, he has a poor hard-working honeſt father and mother, and I could wiſh to recommend him to mercy, that he might be ſent out of the kingdom.

Court. I think it a very bad caſe, I approve of your humanity in the recommendation, but I do not think that I as a Judge can concur in it.

Tried by the firſt London Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

437. AQUILLA BECK was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 14th of April 4s. in monies numbered, the monies of John Sarton.

GEORGE EDWARDS ſworn.

I am ſixteen laſt Auguſt, I ſaw the priſoner ſtealing ſilver out of our till, I ſaw him put his hand in while my hand was in, and I ſaw the ſilver in his hand before he could put it in his pocket; he came in for ſome cheeſe and another man came in with him, laſt Wedneſday week, the 14th of this month, and they aſked me if I ſold cheeſe, I told them yes, and they aſked for a pound, and they ſaid ſomething to one another, and the other man went out, then this man wanted ſome butter, and I weighed it and he chucked down a ſhilling, and I gave him ſixpence, and he deſired me to give him a thinner ſixpence for he wanted to mend China with it, and I was going to give him a crooked ſhilling, and I put it down again, and before I could get my hand out he put his hand in and took out four ſhillings, and more than that with the crooked ſhilling among them, there were more than four ſhillings loſt, I am ſure of four ſhillings, I aſked him for it and he called me a little rogue and ſaid he had not got it, I aſked him for it again, and he ſaid I was a little rogue again, then I called our maid and our lodger, and then I went for the Conſtable and my maſter, and then the priſoner pulled out a ſhilling that was crooked up on one ſide, then he pulled out about fourteen or fifteen ſhillings out of his breeches pocket, and this crooked ſhilling was among them, it is crooked and ſeems as if it had been hoarded, the Conſtable has it.

What did not you aſk him for all he had?—I did, and he ſaid he had none, and I picked out this ſhilling from all the reſt.

Priſoner. He ſaid before the Juſtice that I took no more than one.

WILLIAM HUMMERSTON ſworn.

I am a Conſtable, I apprehended the priſener, and there was this ſhilling which the boy owned directly.

(The ſhilling depoſed to.)

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I came to this ſhop for butter, and I gave the lad a ſhilling, and he gave me a bad ſixpence, and I refuſed it, and he gave me the ſhilling back again, then he ſaid I had a crooked ſhilling of his, and I pulled out my ſilver and he claimed that ſhilling, and he ſaid before the Alderman I took only one ſhilling.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt London Jury, before Mr. RECORDER.

438. JOHN LANE was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 10th of April, one pair of white ſilk ſtockings, value 5s. the property of Thomas Ovey.

THOMAS OVEY ſworn.

The priſoner broke my ſhop window and ſtole a pair of white ſilk ſtockings, on Saturday the 10th of April, about nine in the morning, a little after I ſaw him and another go by ſeveral times, I found the window was cut, I called one of my men and deſired he would come down to aſſiſt me in watching, which he did, the window appeared to be cut by a knife being run into the putty and twiſted, which made the window hollow, the glaſs was not out when I ſaw it, it was only then broken, I ſaw my man run out and I after him, and overtook him, and ſaw the ſtockings on the ground, and the man picked them up, I know the ſtockings.

—— GOLDSMITH ſworn.

I was not in the ſhop the time the window was cut, I was up ſtairs at breakfaſt, Mr. Ovey called me down ſtairs, and I ſaw the window was cut, I ſtood at the bottom of the ſtairs, and while I was looking in, a boy whom I ſuppoſe to belong to the priſoner, came and looked into the ſhop, and went and ſtood cloſe by the window were it was cut, the priſoner came and made a ſnatch at the window, I could not tell what he had taken, I immediately run out after him, and when I had got two or three doors from him I ſaw him throw the ſtockings away, I picked up the ſtockings after Mr. Ovey come up.

Were thoſe you picked up the ſame he threw away?—Yes, I gave them to the Conſtable.

William March produced the Stockings which were depoſed to.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was coming down Fleet-ſtreet, and a man followed me in blue, and I run after him, and he threw down a pair of ſtockings I did not know who it was, and a gentleman took me, and ſo becauſe I would not let the gentleman have it, I took it aſide.

SARAH LANE ſworn.

The priſoner is my own ſon, his maſter was a Wool-comber and he has failed, I could not find him for three or four days, his father died the 14th of laſt Auguſt; he has been a very good lad till this affair happened.

THOMAS MUMFORD ſworn.

I have known him from a little boy, I never heard any thing bad of him before.

—— MUMFORD ſworn.

I have known him for theſe 13 years, he had a very good character.

GUILTY.

439. JOHN MOSELEY aged fifteen years, was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 20th of March laſt, one ſilk handkerchief, value 2s. the property of John Baker.

JOHN BAKER ſworn.

On Saturday the 20th of March between two and three in the afternoon, I was walking along Fleet-ſtreet, one Mr. Stapleton that happened to know me was walking behind me, came and told me I had loſt my handkerchief, and I found it was gone, and he pointed to the priſoner, I immediately laid hold of him by the collar, I ripped open his waiſtcoat immediately, and found the handkerchief between the waiſtcoat and ſhirt, I am ſure it is my handkerchief, the Conſtable has it, there was a B upon it.

JOHN STAPLETON ſworn.

As I was returning from the Temple, I ſaw the priſoner watching ſome people, and I ſaw him turn ſhort round after Mr. Baker, and he put his hand into his pocket, and took his handkerchief out, and put it under his coat, I informed Mr. Baker, and we went acroſs the way after the priſoner, Mr. Baker opened his coat and waiſtcoat, and found the handkerchief upon him, I am quite ſure I ſaw him take the handkerchief, I ſaw it found upon him.

Priſoner. I have nothing to ſay.

WILLIAM BROWN ſworn.

I am a Patten maker, I have known him about twelve years, his father is a Caſtor and caſts buckles, I take the boy to be about fifteen, I never knew any harm of him before.

GUILTY.

440. SAMUEL MOBBS was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 7th of April, one cotton handkerchief, value 1s. 6d. the property of John Evans.

JOHN EVANS ſworn.

On the 7th of this month I loſt my handkerchief in High-ſtreet, St. Giles's, at a quarter paſt three in the afternoon; I ſaw the priſoner at the bar with two unhappy girls as I think, coming out of a publick-houſe in High-ſtreet, I thought he looked very ſuſpicious, I put my hand in my pocket, in order to ſecure my pocket, and in about a minute he came running by me, and I found his hand in my pocket.

Was your handkerchief in that pocket, or had you taken it out?—I believe not, he took my handkerchief out, and he ſhook his hand at me, I followed him down a little way, and he whipped into a publick-houſe, I had my gold watch and a great deal of money, I was afraid to go after him.

Did you ſay he ſhook the handkerchief at you?—He did my Lord, by way of ridicule, or to let the two girls ſee he had taken it, I ſaw him go into a publick-houſe, I cannot tell the name or the ſign, I went and got ſome aſſiſtance, and came to take him, and the women ſaid to me, the perſon you want is not here, I looked round backwards and forwards, and I ſaw him through a glaſs door ſtuck up between two water butts in the yard, upon that I and three more went round and took him to Juſtice Walker's.

Did you ever find your handkerchief?—No.

Are you quite ſure he is the man you ſaw with your handkerchief in his hand?—Yes, when he was taken before Juſtice Walker, they called him by his name, I knew him well.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

I was going through St. Giles's, and I ſaw that gentleman and I walked by him, I went to the publick-houſe to have a pint of beer, I went backwards, and this gentleman and ſome others came and took me to Juſtice Walker, he wanted to value the handkerchief at five ſhillings, and the Juſtice would not let him, then he wanted to value it at two ſhillings and ſixpence, then at one ſhilling and ſixpence.

Have you any friends to ſpeak for you to ſhew that you are an honeſt man?—No.

What way of life are you in?—I am a plaiſterer.

GUILTY

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Baron EYRE.

441. JOHN RUSSELL was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 15th of March laſt, one copper ſaucepan, value 2s. the property of Richard Neathercot, and a check apron, value 2d. the property of Elizabeth Atkins.

RICHARD NEATHERCOT ſworn.

I loſt a copper ſaucepan out of my dwelling houſe, I let a room ready furniſhed to Atkins, I keep a public-houſe, and ſhe left the door of her room open, and I ſaw the priſoner come down, and I aſked him what he had got under his great coat, and he ſaid what is that to you, and I ſtopped him, and I took him into the tap-room, and under his great coat he had a large ſaucepan, wrapt up in this woman's apron; this is my ſaucepan.

ELI-

ELIZABETH ATKINS ſworn.

I went down in a hurry, and I forgot to faſten my door, and this ſaucepan ſtood by the cloſet door, and the apron laid upon the table; this is my apron, and this is my landlord's ſaucepan.

You did not deliver any of them to this man?——I was below ſtairs.

PRISONER's DEFENCE.

The man that ſent me up ſtairs for the ſaucepan, told me he lived with this woman, the door was quite open, and the ſaucepan ſtood by the jam of the door, and he deſired me to hand it down to him, I was in liquor, and I did not know but the man was right, he ſaid he would pawn them for a pot of beer, as he could not find this woman at home to get ſome money.

What are you?—I have been at ſea twenty years.

Court. After going to ſea ſo long, how can you ſubmit to be ſuch a petty, paltry thief?—I know nothing about thieving.

Proſecutor. This man had a man waiting at the door to take the property, and he brought it down, and I charged the conſtable to take the other man, and he refuſed; I took hold of this man, and when I took him into the tap-room, he knocked two conſtables down, and we were obliged to put him in a cart and tie him down.

Court. Have you any body to ſpeak for you?—No.

Court. I ſuppoſe if you was to have any favour ſhewn you, the conſequence would be, you would abuſe it; it is a ſcandalous thing in an old man at your time of life.

Priſoner. My Lord, indeed it is not my fault, I did not know it was for any thievery.

Can you find any body that can recommend you, or that will be anſwerable for your behaviour for the future?—I have no friends.

GUILTY.

Tranſported for ſeven years.

Tried by the Firſt Middleſex Jury, before Mr. Baron EYRE.

442. THOMAS SMITH and JOHN STEVENS were indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing on the 13th of March laſt, fifty-ſix yards of printed cotton, value 5l. 12s. the property of Richard Huſſey.

RICHARD HUSSEY ſworn.

I am a linen-draper in Ruſſell-court, on the 13th of March my oppoſite neighbour informed me that two men had ſtole ſomething from under the window, I had a cuſtomer, and I could not go out, in a few minutes after I heard them cry ſtop thief, in a few minutes after I ran out, and the priſoner Smith run away with the two pieces of cotton in his apron, and I ſaw him throw them out of his apron, I run after him, and he drew a ſtick out of his coat with a large knob, and ſtruck at every perſon that was like to be in his way to ſtop him, particularly at a child he ſtruck at, that was likely to be in his way; I was out of breath, I could run no further, he was brought back to my ſhop.

Are you ſure the perſon that was brought back was the man that you ſaw?—That I poſitively ſwear to, he is the man.

Had he the ſame clothes on?——It is ſo like, I believe it is the ſame.

(The cotton depoſed to.)

How near was he to your ſhop when he dropped them?—Ten or twelve yards, he went towards Henrietta-ſtreet, and turned down a little court.

Do you know any thing of the other man?—Nothing at all, when I returned, he was in cuſtody.

Court. Is the bludgeon in Court?——The conſtable has it, but has not brought it.

Priſoner. It was only a penny ſtick.

Conſtable. It was a holly ſtick, with a hook at the top.

Jury. Was it a walking ſtick?—Yes.

STEPHEN GENNON ſworn.

I live oppoſite Mr. Huſſey; on Saturday afternoon, about a quarter to five the two priſoners came up to his door, and looked at his goods, they were under the ſhop board, they pulled at them, but they were tied, and they went away, my man in the ſhop told me of it, I told him I ſaw it myſelf, and in about five minutes after they returned, the man in the jacket, Stevens, took out a knife and cut the ſtring, they were gone ſome time, I am almoſt poſitive they went to buy a knife, I am a cutler by trade, and I am ſure they went to buy a knife, for the knife found on them never had been uſed before; when they had cut the ſtring, the milk-woman came to the proſecutor's door, and prevented them carrying them off then; while they were gone I called out to my oppoſite neighbour, and told him to be upon his guard, for they would certainly be there again preſently, as they had been once and tried the goods, and a ſecond time, and cut the ſtring, in about three or four minutes they paſſed the door, and came where the goods were; they went up cloſe to the goods, and Stevens took the goods from the bulk, and put them into the apron of the other, and walked off with them; this I ſaw. The proſecutor and his ſervants went out when they heard the cry of ſtop thief, the priſoners run down a little alley, and I purſued Stevens, and Mr. Huſſey purſued the other; in a few minutes the mob brought the other man to the door; I am ſure to both the priſoners, poſitively ſo, I ſaw them four times in the whole.

JOHN FOURNEAUX ſworn.

I apprehended the priſoners, I ſearched Stevens, and found this knife in his right-hand pocket.

PRISONER STEVENS's DEFENCE.

Coming through the court at this time, I ſtood ſtill, and this gentleman came up and catched hold on me.

Court. Then you are an innocent perſon and happened to be walking by?——Yes.

Who is your maſter?——I work for Mr. Hale, in Red-croſs-ſtreet; I drive a dray for him.

PRISONER SMITH's DEFENCE.

I was coming through Ruſſel-court, a man chucked me two pieces of cotton into my apron, but it was not this other priſoner.

Court. He happened to chuck ſome cotton, and you happened to catch it?—Yes.

Court. You never had that happen to you before?——No.

THOMAS SMITH, otherwiſe HAINES, } GUILTY.
JOHN STEVENS, }

---

443. JOHN KING was indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing, on the 18th day of April, one man's box great coat, value 18s. one linen towel, value 6d. the property of George Vanſittart, Eſq;

GEORGE GRAVES ſworn.

I am coachman to Mr. Vanſittart, this box coat was taken away laſt Sunday night, the 18th of this month, from the ſtable, it was hanging on a peg; I never knew the priſoner before; I ſaw my coat not a quarter of an hour before I miſſed it, it was a little before twelve at night, he got into the ſtable with a key; the poſt-boy came in with the carriage and ſaw the coat; this is my property; I locked the ſtable door and went to bed.

A WITNESS ſworn.

I left the ſtable about five minutes, and I heard ſomebody come down the yard, I got up, and I opened the door gently, and I ſaw a man open Mr. Vanſittart's door, I heard ſome hay rattle, and I watched him; I ſaw him go in, and I called aſſiſtance; I went in and he was behind the door; he ſaid he came to lay down; while we ſtood round him, I ſaw him throw ſomething away, this is the key we found among the litter, on the Tueſday after we found another key among the dung, which is this, we found it cleaning the ſtable, it had not been totally cleaned out ſince the fact.
